DICTIONARY

OF THE

ENGLISH LANGUAGE;

IN WHICH

THE WORDS ARE DEDUCED FROM THEIR ORIGINALS; AND ILLUSTRATED IN THEIR DIFFERENT SIGNIFICATIONS, BY EXAMPLES FROM THE BEST WRITERS:

TOGETHER WITH

A History of the Language, and an English Grammar.

By SAMUEL JOHNSON, LL.D.

Cum tabulis animum censoris sumet honesti:
Audebit quæcunque parum splendoris habebunt,
Et sine pondere erunt, et honore indigna ferentur,
Verba movere loco; quamvis invita recedant,
Et versentur adhuc intra penetralia Vestæ:
Obscurata diu populo bonus eruet, atque
Proferet in lucem speciosa vocabula rerum,
Quæ priscis memorata Catonibus atque Cethegis, Nunc situs informis premit et deserta vetustas. HORACE.

WITH NUMEROUS CORRECTIONS,

AND WITH THE ADDITION OF SEVERAL THOUSAND WORDS, AS ALSO WITH ADDITIONS TO THE HISTORY OF THE LANGUAGE, AND TO THE GRAMMAR, DICTIONARY

ENGLISH LANGUAGE.

Where this mark * follows the word, it signifies that such word is not to be found in the Dictionary of Dr. Johnson.

Where this mark † follows the word, it signifies that addition or alteration is made in respect either to the etymology, or definition, or example, of the word given by Dr. Johnson.

F A B

F, † A consonant generally reckoned by authors, and admitted by Scaliger, among the semi-vowels, and according to that opinion distinguished in the enumeration of the alphabet by a name beginning with a vowel, which yet has so far the nature of a mute, that it is easily pronounced before a liquid in the same syllable. It has in English an invariable sound, (except in the preposition of, where it is pronounced like v.) formed by compression of the whole lips and a forcible breath. Its kindred letter is V, which, in the Icelandick alphabet, is only distinguished from it by a point in the body of the letter.

This letter is derived to us from the Romans, who adopted it from the Æolians; among whom it is called digamma. See DIGAMMA.

FA* [In music.] One of the notes or syllables, invented by Guido Aretine, to mark the fourth sound of the modern scale of music; do or ut, re, mi, fa.

O, these eclipses do portend these divisions!
fa, sol, la, mi! Shakspeare, K. Lear.

FABA*CEOUS. adj. [fabaceus, Latin.] Having the nature of a bean. Dict.

FA'BLE. n. s. [fable, Fr. fabula, Lat.]

1. A feigned story intended to enforce some moral precept.

Jotham's fable of the trees is the oldest extant, and as beautiful as any made since. Addis. Spect.

VOL. II.

F A B

2. A fiction in general.

Triptolemus, so sung the nine,
Strew'd plenty from his cart divine;
But, spite of all those fable makers,
He never sow'd on Almaign acres. Dryden.

Palladius coming to die somewhere in the north part of Britain, may seem to give some kind of countenance to those fables that make him to have lived many years among the Scots. Lloyd.

3. A vicious or foolish fiction.

But refuse profane and old wives' fables.

1 Tim. iv. 7.

4. The series or contexture of events which constitute a poem epick or dramatick.

The moral is the first business of the poet: this being formed, he contrives such a design or fable as may be most suitable to the moral.

Dryden, Dufresnoy.

The first thing to be considered in an epick poem is the fable, which is perfect or imperfect, according as the action, which it relates, is more or less so. Addison, Spect.

5. A lie; a vicious falsehood. This sense is merely familiar.

It would look like a fable to report that this gentleman gives away a great fortune by secret methods. Addison.

To FA'BLE.† v. n. [old Fr. fabler; Lat. fabello.]

1. To feign; to write not truth but fiction.

That Saturn's sons receiv'd the three-fold reign
Of heav'n, of ocean, and deep hell beneath,
Old poets mention, fabling. Prior.

Vain now the tales which fabling poets tell,
That war'n'g conquest still desires to rove!
In Marlbro's camp the goddess knows to dwell. Pr.

F A B

2. To tell falsehoods; to lie.

He fables not; I hear the enemy. Sh. Hen. VI.

To say verity, and not to fable;

We are a merry rout, or else a rabble,
Or company, or, by a figure, chorus,
That for thy dignity will dance a morris.

Beaumont, and Fl. Two Noble Kinsmen.

She fables not; I feel that I do fear

Her words set off by some superior power.

Milton, Comus.

To FA'BLE. v. a. To feign; to tell falsely.

We mean to win,

Or turn this heav'n itself into the hell
Thou fablest. Milton, P. L.

Ladies of th' Hesperides, they seem'd

Fairer than feign'd of old, or fabl'd since

Of fairy damsels met in forest wide,

By knights. Milton, P. L.

FA'BLED. adj. [from fable.] Celebrated in fables.

Hail, fabled grotto! hail, Elysian soil!

Thou fairest spot of fair Britannia's isle! Tickell.

FA'BLER.† n. s. [from fable; old Fr. fableor.] A dealer in fiction; a writer of feigned stories; "a teller of fables."

Huloet.

The courtier ought to give credit neither to funeral sermons, nor to Gallobelgicus, or other such idle fablers. Stafford's Niobe, (1611,) p. 20.

The bold legends of lying fablers.

By. Hall, Rem. p. 130.

To FA'BRICATE.† v. a. [fabricor, Lat.]

1. To build; to construct; to frame.

Cockerham.

New fancied and new fabricated republics.

Burke, Lett. to a Noble Lord.

2. To forge; to devise falsely. This sense is retained among the Scottish lawyers; for when they suspect a paper to be forged, they say it is fabricated.

FABRIC'ATION, n. s. [from fabricate.] The act of building; construction.

This fabrication of the human body is the immediate work of a vital principle, that formeth the first rudiments of the human nature.

FABRICATOR,* n. s. [Lat. fabricator; old Fr. fabricateur.] One who builds, constructs, or frames. Cotg. and Sherwood.
The Almighty fabricator of the universe doth nothing in vain. Howell, Lett. iii. 9.

The translator or fabricator of the works of Ossian. Mason on Church Music, p. 191.

FABRICK,† n. s. [fabric or fabrique, old Fr. fabrica, Lat.]

1. A building; an edifice.

There must be an exquisite care to place the columns, set in several stories, most precisely one over another, that so the solid may answer to the solid, and the vacuities to the vacuities, as well for beauty as strength of the fabrick. Watton.

2. Any system or compages of matter; any body formed by the conjunction of dissimilar parts.

Still will ye think it strange,
That all the parts of this great fabrick change;
Quit their old station and primeval frame. Prior.

TO FABRICK,† v. a. [from the noun.]
To build; to form; to construct.

The discipline of Geneva, framed and fabricked already to our hands. Milton, Areopagitica.

Show what laws of life
The cheese inhabitants observe, and how Fabrick their mansions. Philips.

FABRILE,* adj. [old Fr. fabrile; Lat. fabrilis.] Of stone or timber; belonging to the craft of a smith, mason, or carpenter. Cotgrave.

FABULIST,† n. s. [fabuliste, French.]
A writer of fables.

They come in lamely, with their mouldy tales out of Boccaccio, like stale Tabarine, the fabulist.

For the most part, when better evidence falls us, we lay the crime to the charge of Fortune, who very fitly by the fabulist is represented with a great complaint in her mouth upon that occasion.

Dudley, Ld. North, Light to Par. (1682), p. 93.
Quitting Æsop and the fabulist, he copies Boccace. Crozal.

Our bard's a fabulist, and deals in fiction. Garr.

FABULOSITY,† n. s. [fabulosité, old Fr. fabulositas, Lat.] Fulness of feigned stories; fabulous invention. Huloet.

In their fabulosity they report, that they had observations for twenty thousand years.

Abbot, Descript. of the World.

FABULOUS, adj. [fabulosus, Lat.] Feigned; full of fables, invented tales.

A person terrified with the imagination of spectres, is more reasonable than one who thinks the appearance of spirits fabulous and groundless.

Addison, Spect.

FABULOUSLY,† adv. [from fabulous.] In fiction; in a fabulous manner.

These gods [Hymen, Comus, Hebe, &c.] so fabulously and foolishly made—they did celebrate in hymns. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 667.

Figuring the place from whence, as I have been, not fabulously, informed, the honourable family of the Radcliffs first took their name.

B. Jonson, Masques at Court.
Giants—fabulously supposed begotten by spirits upon Dioclesian's or Dannaus' daughters.

Seldon on Drayton's Polygl. S. 8.

There are many things fabulously delivered, and are not to be accepted as truths. Brown, Vulg. Err.

Invention of fables. Sherwood.

The fabulousness of the heroical age of Greece. Stillingfleet, Orig. Sac. i. 6.

His [Boethius's] history is written with elegance and vigour, but his fabulousness and credulity are justly blamed. Johns, Journey W. Islands.

FABURDEN,* n. s. [Fr. fauxbourdon.] In music, simple counterpoint.

The fresh descant, pricksong, counterpoint, and faburden.

Bale on the Revel. (1550), p. iii. B. b. 8.

FACADE,* n. s. [French.] Front. A word of late much used in speaking of buildings.

King Henry the Seventh—standing at the façade or western portal of a Gothic church. Watton.

FACE, n. s. [face, Fr. from facies, Lat.]

1. The visage.

The children of Israel saw the face of Moses, that the skin of Moses's face shone. Exod. xxxiv. 35.

A man shall see faces, which, if you examine them part by part, you shall never find good; but take them together, are not uncomely. Bacon.

From beauty still to beauty ranging,
In ev'ry face I found a dart. Addison, Spect.

2. Countenance; cast of the features; look; air of the face.

Kick out we set the best face on't we could. Dryden, Virg.

Seiz'd and ty'd down to judge, how wretched I!
Who can't be silent, and who will not lye:
To laugh, were want of goodness and of grace;
And to be grave, exceeds all power of face. Pope.

3. The surface of any thing.

A mist watered the whole face of the ground. Gen. ii. 6.

4. The front or forepart of any thing.

The breadth of the face of the house, towards the East, was an hundred cubits. Exek. xii. 14.

5. Visible state of affairs.

He look'd and saw the face of things quite chang'd,
The brazen throat of war had ceas'd to roar;
All now was turn'd to jollity and game,
To luxury and riot, feast and dance. Milton, P. L.

This would produce a new face of things in Europe. Addison.

6. Appearance; resemblance; look.

Keep still your former face, and mix again
With these lost spirits; run all their mazes with 'em; B. Jonson.

For such are treasons. B. Jonson.
At the first shock, with blood and powder
stain'd,
Nor heav'n, nor sea, their former face retain'd;
Fury and art produce effects so strange,
They trouble nature, & her visage change. Waller.

His dialogue has so much the face of probability, that some have mistaken it for a real conference. Baker.

7. Presence; sight; state of confrontation.

Ye shall give her unto Eleazar, and one shall slay her before his face. Numb. xix. 3.

Jove cannot fear; then tell me to my face,
That I of all the gods am least in grace. Dryden, Iliad.

8. Confidence; boldness; freedom from bashfulness or confusion.

They're thinking by his face,
That in our thoughts that they have courage;
But 'tis not so. Shakespeare, Jul. Cæs.

How many things are there which a man cannot, with any face or comeliness, say or do himself?

A man can scarce allege his own merits with modesty, much less extol them: a man cannot sometimes brook to supplicate or beg. Bacon.

You'll find the thing will not be done
With ignorance and face alone. Hudibras.

You, says the judge to the wolf, have the face to challenge that which you never lost; and you, says he to the fox, have the confidence to deny that which you have stolen. L'Estrange.

This is the man that has the face to charge others with false citations. Tillotson, Preface.

9. Distortion of the face.

Shame itself!

Why do you make such faces? Shakesp. Macbeth.

FACE TO FACE. [An adverbial expression.]

Addison on the War.

They are as loth to see the fires kindled in Smithfield as his lordship; and, at least, as ready to face them under a popish persecution. Swift.

2. To oppose with impudence; commonly with down.

Here's a villain that would face me down.
He met me on the mart. Shakesp. Com. of Err.

We trap'd him the state, and fac'd it down.
With plots and projects of our own. Hudibras.

Because he walk'd against his will,
He fac'd 'em down that he stood still. Prior.

3. With out also, which Dr. Johnson has omitted to notice.

Now, face out your matter with a card of ten. Bale, Lett. a Course, &c. (1543), p. 59.

A mad-cap ruffian, and a swearing Jack,
That thinks with oaths to face the matter out. Shakespeare, Tam. of the Shrew.

FA'CILE. adj. [facile, French; facilis, Latin.]

1. Easy; not difficult; performable or attainable with little labour.

Then also those poets, which are now counted most hard, will be both facile and pleasant.

Milton on Education.

To confine the imagination is as facile a performance as the Goteham's design of hedging in the cuckoo.

Glanville.

By dividing it into parts so distinct, the order in which they shall find each disposed, will render the work facile and delightful.

Evelyn, Kol.

This may at first seem perplexed with many difficulties, yet many things may be suggested to make it more facile and commodious.

Wilkins, Math. Magic.

2. Easily surmountable; easily conquerable.

The facile gates of hell too slightly barr'd.

3. Easy of access or converse; not haughty; not supercilious; not austere.

I meant she should be courteous, facile, sweet,

Hating that solemn view of greatness, pride;

I meant each softest virtue there should meet,

Fit in that softer bosom to reside. B. Johnson.

Raphael now, to Adam's doubt propos'd,

4. Pliant; flexible; easily persuaded to good or bad; ductile to a fault.

Too facile then, thou did'st not much gainsay;

Nay did'st permit, approve, and fair dismiss.

Milton, P. L.

Since Adam and his facile consort Eve

Lost Paradise, deceiv'd by me. Milton, P. L.

Some men are of that facile temper, that they are wrought upon by every object they converse with, whom any affectionate discourse, or serious sermon, or any notable accident, shall put into a fit of religion, which yet usually lasts no longer than till somewhat else comes in their way.

Calamy.

FA'CILELY. * adv. [from facile.] Easily.

Huloei.

Seeing the one might be as facilely imparate as the other.

Ld. Herbert, Hen. VIII. p. 227.

FA'CILENESS. * n. s. [from facile.] Easiness to be persuaded to good or bad.

Alas,

That facile hearts should to themselves be foes,

When others they with facileness befriend!

Beaumont's Psyche, xv. 175.

To FA'CILITATE. v. a. [faciliter, French.]

To make easy; to free from difficulty;

to clear from impediments.

Choice of the likeliest and best prepared metal for the version will facilitate the work.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

They renewed their assault two or three days together, and planted cannon to facilitate their passage, which did little hurt; but they still lost many men in the attempt. Clarendon.

Though perspective cannot be called a certain rule of picture, yet it is a great succour and relief to art, and facilitates the means of execution.

Dryden, Dufresnoy.

What produceth a due quantity of animal spirits, necessarily facilitates the animal and natural motions. Arbutnot on Diet.

A war on the side of Italy would cause a great diversion of the French forces, and faci- litate the progress of our arms in Spain. Swift.

FACILITATION. * n. s. [from facilitate.]

The act of making easy, of freeing from impediments.

A facilitation towards fidelity.

W. Mountague, Dev. Ess. P. i. (1648), p. 118.

Who can believe that they, who first watched the course of the stars, foresaw the use of their discoveries to the facilitation of commerce, or the mensuration of time? Johnson, Ramb., No. 103.

FACIL'ITY. n. s. [facilité, French; facilitas, Latin.]

1. Easiness to be performed; freedom from difficulty.

Yet reason saith, reason should have ability

To hold these worldly things in such proportion,

As let them come or go with even facility. Sidney.

Piety could not be diverted from this to a more commodious business by any motives of profit or facility. Raleigh.

A war upon the Turks is more worthy than upon any other Gentiles, both in point of religion and in point of honour; though facility and hope of success might invite some other choice.

Bacon, Holy War.

2. Readiness in performing; dexterity.

They who have studied have not only learned many excellent things, but also have acquired a great facility of profiting themselves by reading good authors.

Dryden, Dufresnoy.

The facility which we get of doing things, by a custom of doing, makes them often pass in us without our notice.

Locke.

3. Vitious ductility; easiness to be persuaded to good or bad; ready compliance.

Facility is worse than bribery; for bribes come now and then; but if importunity or idle res-spects lead a man, he shall never be without them.

Bacon.

'Tis a great error to take facility for good nature; tenderness without discretion, is no better than a more pardonable folly. L'Estrange.

4. Easiness of access; complaisance; condescension; affability.

He opens and yields himself to the man of business with difficulty and reluctance; but offers himself to the visits of a friend with facility, and all the meeting readiness of appetite and desire.

South.

FACIN'ORIOUS. † See FACINOROUS.

FAC'ING. † n. s. [from To face.]

1. An ornamental covering; that which is put on the outside of any thing by way of decoration.

These offices and dignities were but the facings and fringes of his greatness. Wotton.

A garment which had a border at the bottom, and a facings at the hands of another colour, different from the garment. Dp. Pat. on Gen. xxxvii. 5.

2. Simply, a covering.

Being dug out of a bed of chalk, and belting

the hills far and wide with white, more especially if we suppose some assistance from an artificial facings, they must have been visible at a vast distance. Warton, Hist. of Kildington, p. 67.

FACINOROUS. † adj. [Lat. facinus, facinoris.] In Shakspeare the corrupt spelling of facinorious is found in an old copy of the play, which Dr. Johnson considers as the poet's own mistake in regard to the word. No example of facinorous is given by Dr. Johnson;

but the word about Shakspeare's time was not uncommon. Wicked; atrocious; detestably bad.

'Tis strange, 'tis very strange, that is the brief and the tedious of it; and he is of a most faci- norous spirit, that will not acknowledge it to be the very hand of heaven. Shakespeare, All's well.

The more facinorous malefactors.

Sir G. Buck, Hist. K. Rich. III. p. 28.

Things highly charged with sin, even to a more facinorous and notorious degree.

Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsom. p. 131.

FACINOROUSNESS. n. s. [from facinorous.] Wickedness in a high degree.

FACSIMILE.* n. s. [Latin; an abbreviation of factum simile, i. e. made like.] An exact copy.

You should publish these [exemplars of various modes of writing] in drawings, copied per factum simile. Pownall on Antig. Lett. to Astle, p. 178.

1. A thing done; an effect produced; something not barely supposed or suspected, but really done.

In matter of fact they say there is some credit to be given to the testimony of man; but not in matter of opinion and judgement: we see the contrary both acknowledged and universally practised also throughout the world. Hooker.

As men are not to mistake the causes of these operations, so much less are they to mistake the fact or effect, and rashly to take that for done which is not done. Bacon.

Those effects which are wrought by the percussion of the sense, and by things in fact, are produced likewise in some degree by the imagination: therefore if a man see another eat sour or acid things, which set the teeth on edge, that object tainteth the imagination. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Matter of fact breaks out and blazes with too great an evidence to be denied. South, Serm.

2. Reality; not supposition; not speculation.

If this were true in fact, I do not see any colour for such a conclusion. Addison on the War. Manifest sins, though in speculation they may be separable from war, in reality and fact never fail to attend it. Smalridge.

3. Action; deed.

Unhappy man! to break the pious laws Of nature, pleading in his children's cause: How'er the doubtful fact is understood, 'Tis love of honour and his country's good; The consul, not the father, sheds the blood. Dryden.

FACTION.† n. s. [faction, French; factio, Lat.]

1. A party in a state.

The queen is valued thirty thousand strong; If she hath time to breathe, be well assur'd Her faction will be full as strong as ours.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

He has been known to commit outrages, And cherish factions. Shakespeare, Timon.

By one of Simon's faction murders were committed. 2 Mac. iv. 3.

By the weight of reason I should counterpoise the overbalancing of any factions. King Charles.

2. Tumult; discord; dissension.

There is among you envying, and strife, and dissensions, [in the margin, factions.] 1 Cor. iii. 3. They remained at Newbury in great faction among themselves. Clarendon.

FACTIONARY. n. s. [factionnaire, Fr.] One of a faction; a party man. A word not in use.

Pr'ythee, fellow, remember my name is Menenius; always factionary, of the party of your general. Shakespeare, Coriol.

FACTIONER.* n. s. [from faction.] One of a faction.

All the factioners had entered into such a sedition conspiracy.

Bp. Bancroft, Dangerous Positions, iv. 12.

FACTIONIST.* n. s. [from faction.] One who promotes faction, or discord.

We live with Puritans and opposite factionists, that have the cross of Christ in as great contempt and despite, as ever had Julian or any Pagan.

Mountagu, App. to Cæs. p. 271.

Some busy factionists of the meaner sort.

Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 419.

FACTIOUS. adj. [factieus, Fr.]

1. Given to faction; loud and violent in a party; publicly dissentious; addicted to form parties and raise public disturbances.

He is a traitor; let him to the Tower, And crop away that factious pate of his.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

Be factious for redress of all these griefs.

Shakespeare, Jul. Cæs.

2. Proceeding from public dissensions; tending to public discord.

Grey-headed men and grave, with warriors mix'd,

Assemble; and harangues are heard; but soon

Factious tumults overbore the freedom and honour of the two houses. King Charles.

Why these factious quarrels, controversies, and battles amongst themselves, when they were all united in the same design? Dryden, Jew. Dedic.

FACTIOUSLY. adv. [from factious.] In a manner criminally dissensious or tumultuous.

I intended not only to oblige my friends, but mine enemies also; exceeding even the desires of those that were factiously discontented.

King Charles.

FACTIOUSNESS.† n. s. [from factious.] Inclination to public dissension; violent clamorousness for a party. Sherwood.

The factiousness, disobedience, and disorders of the nonconformists.

Puller, Moderat. Ch. of Eng. p. 499.

FACTITIOUS. adj. [factitious, Lat.] Made by art, in opposition to what is made by nature.

In the making and distilling of soap, by one degree of fire, the salt, the water, and the oil or grease, whereof that factitious concrete is made up, being boiled up together, or easily brought to incorporate.

Boyle.

Hardness wherein some stones exceed all other bodies, and among them the adamant all other stones, being exalted to that degree that art in vain endeavours to counterfeit it; the factitious stones of chymists, in imitation, being easily detected by an ordinary lapidist. Ray on the Creation.

FACTIVE.* adj. [Lat. factus.] Having the power to make.

You are, creator-like, factive, not destructive.

Bacon, Lett. to James I.

FACTOR. n. s. [facteur, Fr. factor, Lat.]

1. An agent for another; one who transacts business for another. Commonly a substitute in mercantile affairs.

Take on you the charge And kingly government of this your land;

Not as protector, steward, substitute,

Or lowly factor for another's gain. Shaks. R. III.

Piercy is but my factor, good my lord, T'engross up glorious deeds on my behalf.

Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

You all three,

The senators alone of this great world,

Chief factors for the gods.

Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleop.

We agreed that I should send up an English factor, that whatsoever the island could yield should be delivered at a reasonable rate.

Raleigh, Apology.

The Scots had good intelligence, having some factors doubtless at this mart, albeit they did not openly trade.

Hayward.

Vile arts and restless endeavours are used by some sly and venomous factors for the old republican cause.

South.

All the reason that I could ever hear alleged, by the chief factors for a general intromission of all sorts, sects and persuasions, into our communion, is, that those who separate from us are stiff and obstinate, and will not submit to the rules and orders of our church, and that therefore they ought to be taken away.

South.

For'd into exile from his rightful throne, He made all countries where he came his own; And viewing monarchs secret arts of sway,

A royal factor for their kingdoms lay.

Dryden.

2. [In arithmetick.] The multiplicator, and multiplicand.

Harris.

FACTORAGE.* n. s. [from factor.] In commerce, wages or commission for agency in purchasing goods.

FACTORSHIP.* n. s. [from factor.] A factory.

Sherwood.

FACTORY.† n. s. [from factor.]

1. A house or district inhabited by traders in a distant country.

The company of stationers in London, are now erecting a factory for books, and a press, among us here.

Alp. Usher's Letters, &c. dat. (1618), p. 64.

2. The traders embodied in one place.

They humbly conceive, that the settlement of chaplains in our British factories, at Smyrna and Aleppo, is allowed by the Turks, as a right due by the law of nations.

Merchants at Leghorn, Pet. to Q. Anne, 1710.

3. A place where any thing is made.

Our corrupted hearts are the factories of the devil, which may be at work without his presence.

Brown, Chr. Mor. i. 20.

FACTOTUM.† n. s. [fac totum, Lat.] It is used likewise in burlesque French.

A servant employed alike in all kinds of business: as Scrub in the Stratagem.

Tip. Art thou the dominus?

Host. Factotum here, sir. B. Jonson, New Inn.

FACTURE.† n. s. [French.] The act or manner of making any thing; workmanship.

Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

There is no doubt but that the facture, and framing, of the inward parts, is as full of difference as the outward.

Bacon on Learning, B. 2.

FAULTY. n. s. [faulx, Fr. factus, Lat.]

1. The power of doing any thing; ability whether corporeal or intellectual.

There is no kind of faculty or power in man, or any creature, which can rightly perform the functions allotted to it without perpetual aid and concurrence of that supreme cause of all things.

Hooker.

Orators may grieve; for in their sides, Rather than heads, their faculty abides. Denham.

Reason in man supplies the defect of other faculties wherein we are inferior to beasts, and what we cannot compass by force we bring about by stratagem.

L'Estrange.

2. Powers of the mind, imagination, reason, memory.

I understand in the prime end Of nature, her the inferior; in the mind And inward faculties, which most excel.

Milton, P. L.

In the ordinary way of speaking, the understanding and will are two faculties of the mind.

Locke.

Neither did our Saviour think it necessary to explain to us the nature of God, because it would be impossible, without bestowing on us other faculties than we possess at present. Swift.

3. Mechanical power.

The fifth mechanical faculty is the wedge used in cleaving wood. Wilkins.

4. [In physic.] A power or ability to perform any action, natural, vital, and animal: by the first they understand that by which the body is nourished, or another like it generated: the vital faculty is that by which life is preserved, and the ordinary functions of the body performed; and the animal faculty is what conducts the operations of the mind. Quincy.

5. A knack; habitual excellence; dexterity.

He had none of those faculties, which the other had, of reconciling men to him. Clarendon.

Our author found out monarchical absolute power in that text, he had an exceeding good faculty to find it himself where he could not show it others. Locke.

He had an excellent faculty in preaching if he were not too refined. Swift.

6 Quality personal; disposition or habit of good or ill.

I'm tradu'd by tongues which neither know My faculties nor person, yet will be The chronicles of my doing. Shaks. Hen. VIII.

7. Natural virtue; efficacy.

He would—in requital ope his leathern scrip, And shew me similes of a thousand names, Telling their strange and vigorous faculties. Milton, Comus.

8. Power; authority.

This Duncan Hath born his faculties so meek, hath been So clear in his great office, that his virtues Will plead like angels. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

9. Privilege; right to do any thing.

Law hath set down to what persons, in what causes, with what circumstances, almost every faculty or favour shall be granted. Hooker.

10. Faculty, in an university, denotes the masters and professors of the several sciences: as, a meeting of the faculty or faculties.

FA'CUND.† adj. [facundus, Latin; facund, old French.] Eloquent. Dict. Nature—

With facunde voice said, Hold your tongues there. Chaucer, Assemb. of Fowls, v. 521.

FA'CUNDITY.* n. s. [Latin, facunditas.] Eloquence. Cockeram.

To FA'DDLE. v. n. [corrupted from To fiddle, or toy with the fingers.] To trifle; to toy; to play. A low word.

FADE.* adj. [French.] Faint; insipid. Tar-water may extract from the clay a fade sweetness, offensive to the palate. Bp. Berkeley on Tar-water.

To FADE.† v. n. [fade, French, insipid, languid, Dr. Johnson says; but it is rather the Latin vado; and the primary sense of fade, formerly written also vade, is to disappear instantaneously; of which Dr. Johnson has taken no notice.]

1. To disappear instantaneously. See also To VADE.

He stands amazed how he thence should fade. Spenser, F. Q. i. v. 15.

It faded on the crowing of the cock. Sh. Ham.

2. To tend from greater to less vigour; to grow weak; to languish.

His imperfect good desires, his fading resolutions. South, Sermon, viii. 51.

3. To tend from a brighter to a weaker colour.

The greenness of a leaf ought to pass for apparent, because soon fading into a yellow, it scarce lasts at all, in comparison of the greenness of an emerald. Boyle on Colours.

The spots in this stone are of the same colour throughout, even to the very edges; there being an immediate transition from white to black, and the colours not fading or declining gradually. Woodward on Fossils.

4. To wither, as a vegetable.

Ye shall be as an oak whose leaf fadeth, and as a garden that hath no water. Is. i. 30.

5. To die away gradually; to vanish; to be worn out.

Where either through the temper of the body, or some other default, the memory is very weak, ideas in the mind quickly fade. Locke.

The stars shall fade away, the sun himself Grow dim with age, and nature sink in years. Addison, Cato.

6. To be naturally not durable; to be transient; easily to lose vigour or beauty.

The glorious beauty on the head of the fat valley shall be a fading flower. Is. xxviii. 4.

The pictures drawn in our minds are laid in fading colours, and, if not sometimes refreshed, vanish and disappear. Locke.

Narcissus' change to the vain virgin shows Who trusts to beauty, trusts the fading rose. Gay, Fab.

To FADE. v. a. To wear away; to reduce to languor; to deprive of freshness or vigour; to wither.

This is a man old, wrinkled, faded, withered; And not a maiden, as thou say'st he is. Shakspeare. His palms, though under weights they did not stand, Still thriv'd; no winter could his laurels fade. Dryden.

Restless anxiety, forlorn despair, And all the faded family of care. Garth, Dispensary.

To FADGE.† v. n. [zepezan, Saxon; fügen, German.]

1. To suit; to fit; to have one part consistent with another.

How will this fadge? my master loves her dearly, And I, poor monster, fond as much on him; And she, mistaken, seems to doat on me. Shaks. Clothes I must get, this fashion will not fadge with me. Beaumont and Fl. Wit without Money.

2. To agree; not to quarrel; to live in amity.

They shall be made, spite of antipathy, to fadge together. Milton, Doct. and Discip. of Divorce. When they thriv'd they never fadge'd, But only by the ears engag'd; Like dogs that snarl about a bone, And play together when they've none. Hudibras.

3. To succeed; to hit.

All this will not fadge! Milton, Reason of Church Gov. B. 1. The fox had a fetch; and when he saw it would not fadge, away goes he presently. L'Estrange.

4. This is a mean word not now used; unless perhaps in ludicrous and low compositions.

FADGE.* n. s. [Sw. fagga, onerare.] A bundle, as of sticks. A northern word.

Craven Dial. and Brockett.

FA'DING.* n. s. [from fade.] Decay; weakness; loss of strength. Sherwood.

FA'DINGNESS.* n. s. [from fading.] Decay; proneness to fade.

The fadingness of beauty is the greatest detector and impeacher of our frailty.

W. Mountague, Dev. Ess. P. II. (1654), p. 231. Since it [joy] was merely earthly, it must needs partake of the fadingness of its original.

Decay of Chr. Piety, (1667), p. 203.

FA'DY.* adj. [from fade.] Wearing away; decaying.

Survey those walls in fady texture clad. Shenstone, Economy, P. III.

FÆ'CAL.* adj. [from fæces.] Denoting excrements; as, "fecal matter."

FÆ'CES. n. s. [Latin.] Excrements; settlings after distillation and infusion. Quincy.

To FAFF.* See To FUFF.

To FA'FFLE.* v. n. [of uncertain etymology; unless a corruption of fumble, which is probable. See To FAMBLE.] To stammer. Barret's Alvearie, 1580, where under the present word reference is made to stammer; and there maffle occurs in the definition. Thus in the north of England faffle and maffle are both used to denote hesitating in speech.

To FAG.† v. n. [fatigo, Latin, or perhaps from the Sw. fagga, onerare. See FADGE.] To grow weary; to faint with weariness.

Medyll thou not ferther, but let hym gone, Make he never so pytouse a mone; For then the fox can fagg and fyne, When he wold faynyst his prey attayne.

Old Poem in Ashmole's Theat. Chem. 1652, p. 159.

Creighton with-held his force till the Italian begun to fag, and then brought him to the ground. Mackenzie's Lives.

To FAG.* v. a.

1. To tire; to weary. A Cumberland word.

2. To beat. A vulgar expression.

FAG.* n. s. [from the verb.] A slave; one who works hard. It is a colloquial expression; nor is fag, either as a verb or substantive in this sense, seriously used by good writers.

From the above teasing and tormenting the junior scholars, has originated the present custom of having fags at Eton school, i. e. little boys who are the slaves of the greater ones. Brand, Popular Antiquities.

Brand, Popular Antiquities.

FAG.* n. s. [perhaps from the Sax. fezan, to join together.] A knot or excrescency in cloth, used in the stat. 4 Edw. IV. c. 1. It is also used for the fringe at the end of a piece of cloth. See FAGED.

FAGE'ND. † n. s. [from fag and end.]

1. The end of a web of cloth, generally made of coarser materials.

2. In naval language, the end of any rope untwisted by frequent usage, which is secured from being further loosened by winding a piece of small line round it.

3. The refuse or meaner part of any thing.

The kitchen, and gutters, and other offices of noise and drudgery, are at the fag-end.

Howell, Lett. (1619), i. ii. 8.

At the worlds fag-end— Fanshawe, Poems, p. 318.

A land — doth lie.

It seems, Mr. Hobbes, by the faq-end of your book Of Body in English, that you have a mind to say your lesson. Wallis, Correct. of Hobbes, p. 1.

When they are the worst of their way, and fixt in the faq-end of business, they are apt to look not kindly upon those who go before them.

Collier on Envy.

FA'GOT. † n. s. [fagot, Welsh and Armoric; fagot, French. Caseneuve pretends that the word comes from the Lat. fagus, a beech-tree, the first fagots being, as he says, made of the wood of this tree. Others think it connected with the Lat. fascicular, a bundle; fascicularia, bundles of wood.]

1. A bundle of sticks bound together for the fire.

About the pile of fagots, sticks and hay,
The bellows raised the newly kindled flame.

Fairfax.

Spare for no fagots, let there be enow;
Place pitchy barrels on the fatal stake.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

Mitres or fagots have been the rewards of different persons, according as they pronounced these consecrated syllables or not. Watts on the Mind.

2. A bundle of sticks for any purpose.

The Black Prince filled a ditch with fagots as successfully as the generals of our times do it with fascines. Addison.

3. A soldier included in the muster-roll, but not really existing.

There were several other counterfeit books upon the upper shelves, which were carved in wood, and served only to fill up the number like fagots in the muster of a regiment.

Addison, Spect. No. 37.

To FA'GOT. v. a. [from the noun.] To tie up; to bundle together.

He was too warm on picking-work to dwell,
But fagoted his notions as they fell,
And if they rhym'd and rattled, all was well.

Dryden, Abs. and Achit.

To FAIL. v. n. [faillir, French; faeln, Welsh. Pezron.]

1. To be deficient; to cease from former plenty; to fall short; to not be equal to demand or use.

The waters fail from the sea, and the flood decayeth and drieth up. Job, xiv. 11.

Wherefore should not strength and might
There fail where virtue fails, or weakest prove
Where boldest, though to fight unconquerable?

Milton, P. L.

Where the credit and money fail, barter alone must do. Locke.

2. To be extinct; to cease; to be no longer produced.

Help, Lord, for the godly man ceaseth; for the faithful fail from among the children of men. Ps. xii. 1.

More angels to create. Milton, P. L.

3. To cease; to perish; to be lost.

By fate the strength of gods
And this empyreal substance cannot fail.

Milton, P. L.

For Titan, by the mighty loss dismay'd,
Among the heavens th' immortal fact display'd,
Lest the remembrance of his grief should fail.

Addison.

4. To die; to lose life.

Had the king in his last sickness fail'd,
Their heads should have gone off.

Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

Both he that helpeth shall fall, and he that is helped shall fall down, and they all shall fail together. Is. xxxi. 3.

5. To sink; to be born down; to come to an end.

Neither will I be always wroth; for the spirit should fail before me. Is. lviii. 16.

His works, which in our fall,
For us created, needs with us must fail,
Dependant made. Milton, P. L.

6. To decay; to decline; to languish.

Let none henceforth seek needless cause to approve

The faith they owe; when earnestly they seek
Such proof, conclude, they then begin to fail.

Milton, P. L.

I perceive

Thy mortal sight to fail: objects divine
Must needs impair and weary human sense.

Milton, P. L.

7. To miss; not to produce its effect.

Consider of deformity not as a sign, which is deceivable, but as a cause which seldom faileth of the effect. Bacon.

All these puissant legions, whose exile
Hath emptied heav'n, shall fail to re-ascend.

Milton, P. L.

This jest was first of th' other house's making,
And, five times try'd, has never fail'd of taking. Dryden.

A persuasion that we shall overcome any difficulties, that we meet with in the sciences, seldom fails to carry us through them. Locke.

He does not remember whether every grain came up or not; but he thinks that very few failed. Mortimer, Husbandry.

8. To miss; not to succeed in a design; to miscarry.

I am enjoyn'd, by oath, if I fail
Of the right casket, never in my life
To woo a maid in way of marriage.

Shakespeare, Merch. of Ven.

At least our envious foe hath fail'd, who thought
All like himself rebellious. Milton, P. L.

In difficulties of state, the true reason of failings
proceeds from failings in the administration.

L'Estrange.

Men who have been busied in the pursuit of the philosopher's stone, have fail'd in their design. Addison, Guardian.

9. To be deficient in duty.

Or Nature fail'd in me, and left some part
Not proof enough such object to sustain.

Milton, P. L.

Endeavour to fulfill God's commands, to repent as often as you fail of it, and to hope for pardon of him. Wake.

To FAIL. † v. a.

1. To desert; not to continue to assist or supply; to disappoint.

The ship was now left alone, as proud lords be when fortune fails them.

Sidney.

So hast thou oft with guile thine honour blent;
But little may such guile thee now avail,
If wanted force and fortune do not much me fail.

Spenser, F. Q.

There shall be signs in the sun, the moon, and the stars, men's hearts failing them for fear.

Luke, xxi. 26.

Nor could the muse defend
Her son; so fail not thou who thee implores.

Milton, P. L.

I laugh, when those who at the spear are bold
And vent'rous, if that fail them, shrink and fear.

Milton, P. L.

Her heart failed her, and she would fain have compounded for her life. L'Estrange.

He presumes upon his parts that they will not fail him at time of need, and so thinks it superfluous labour to make any provision before hand. Locke.

2. Not to assist; to neglect; to omit to help.

Since nature fails us in no needful thing,
Why want I means my inward self to see?

Davies.

3. To omit; not to perform.

The inventive god who never fails his part,
Inspires the wit when once he warms the heart. Dryden.

4. To be wanting to.

There shall not fail thee a man on the throne. 1 Kings, ii. 4.

5. To deceive; to cheat. [A Latinism, fallere.] Obsolete.

So lively and so like, that living sense it fail'd.
Spenser, F. Q. iii. xi. 46.

FAIL. † n. s. [from the verb; old Fr. faillie, a fault.]

1. Miscarriage; miss; unsuccessfulness.

2. Omission; non-performance.

Mark and perform it, seest thou? for the fail
Of any point in't shall not only be Death to thyself, but to thy lewd tongu'd wife. Shakespeare.

He will without fail drive out from before you the Canaanites. Jos. iii. 10.

3. Deficiency; want.

Goodly and gallant shall be false and perjur'd
From thy great fail. Shakespeare, Cymb.

4. Death; extinction.

How groundeth he his title to the crown
Upon our fail? Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

FA'ILANCE.* n. s. [Old Fr. faillance.] Omission; fault.

Our failances and aberrations.

Decay of Chr. Piety, Pref.

FA'ILER.* See FA'ILURE.

FA'ILING. † n. s. [from fail.]

1. Decay.

A trembling heart, and failling of eyes, and sorrow of mind. Deut. xxviii. 65.

2. Deficiency; Imperfection; fault; not atrocious; lapse.

Besides what failings may be in the matter, even in the expressions there must often be great obscurities. Digby.

To failings mild, but zealous for desert;
The clearest head and the sincerest heart. Pope.

Even good men have many temptations to subdue, many conflicts with those enemies which war against the soul, and many failings and lapses to lament and recover. Rogers.

FA'ILURE. † n. s. [from fail.] Formerly the word was failer; which Dr. Johnson has not noticed. "Armour of proof I have not any, wherewith to hide the failers of this undertaking." Pref. to Biblioth. Regia, 1659.

1. Deficiency; cessation.

There must have been an universal failure and want of springs and rivers all the Summer season. Woodward.

2. Omission; non-performance; slip.

He that, being subject to an apoplexy, used still to carry his remedy about him; but upon a time shifting his clothes, and not taking that with him, chanced upon that very day to be surprised with a fit: he owed his death to a mere accident, to a little inadvertency and failure of memory. South.

3. A lapse; a slight fault.

FAIN. † adj. [Icel. feigin, Su. fagna, Goth. faginon, to be glad, to rejoice; Sax. fægnan, the same, and fæg, glad.]

1. Glad; merry; cheerful; fond. It is still retained in Scotland in this sense, Dr. Johnson says. It thus occurs also among the words of our northern counties given by Ray; and was thus formerly in our lexicography: "to be fayne or well pleased," Prompt. Parv. What is rendered fain in one of our translations of the Psalms, is in the other greatly rejoice.

And in her hand she held a mirror bright,
Wherein her face she often viewed fain.

Spenser, F. D.

My lips will be fain when I sing unto thee,
and so will my soul whom thou hast delivered.

Psalms lxxi. 21.

2. Forced; obliged; compelled. [This signification seems to have arisen from the mistake of the original signification in some ambiguous expressions; as "I was fain to do this," would equally suit with the rest of the sentence, whether it was understood to mean I was compelled, or I was glad to do it for fear of worse. Thus the primary meaning seems to have been early lost.]

Every wight to shroud it did constrain,
And this fair couple eke to shroud themselves were fain.

Spenser.

Whoever will hear, he shall find God; whosoever will study to know, shall be also fain to believe.

Hooker.

I was fain to forswear it; they would else have married me to the rotten medlar.

Shakespeare, Mens. for Mens.

When Hildebrand had accursed Henry IV.
there were none so hardy as to defend their lord;
wherefore he was fain to humble himself before Hildebrand.

Raleigh, Essays.

The learned Castilio was fain to make trench-ers at Basle, to keep himself from starving.

Locke.

FAIN. adv. [from the adjective.] Gladly;
very desirously; according to earnest wishes.

Now I would give a thousand furlongs of sea for an acre of barren ground: I would fain die a dry death.

Shakespeare.

Why would'st thou urge me to confess a flame
I long have stifled, and would fain conceal.

Addison, Cato.

Fain would I Raphael's godlike art rehearse,
And show th' immortal labours in my verse.

Addison.

The plebeians would fain have a law enacted to lay all men's rights and privileges upon the same level.

Swift.

To FAIN. v. n. [from the noun.] To wish;
to desire fondly.

Fairer than fairest, in his fainting eye,
Whose sole aspect he counts felicity.

Spenser, Hymn on Love.

To FAINT. † v. n. [Dr. Johnson adopts, with Minshew and Skinner, the French fainer, to fade, to wither, to die, as the origin of our word. Mr. Horne Tooke pronounces faint to be the past participle of the Sax. fyngean, which means,
to grow musty, to spoil, to decay.]

1. To decay; to wear or waste away quickly.

Gilded clouds, while we gaze upon them, faint before the eye, and decay into confusion.

Pope.

The show'ry arch
Delights and puzzles the beholder's eyes,
That views the wat'ry bed with thousand shews
Of painture vary'd; yet unskill'd to tell
Or where one colour rises, or where one faints.

Philips.

2. To lose the animal functions; to sink motionless and senseless.

Their young children were out of heart, and their women and young men fainted for thirst and fell down.

against himself, lest ye be wearied and faint in your minds.

Heb. xii. 3.

7. Not vigorous; not active.

The defects which hindered the conquest, were the faint prosecution of the war, and the looseness of the civil government.

Davies on Ireland.

FAINTHEARTED. adj. [faint and heart.]

Cowardly; timorous; dejected; easily depressed.

Fear not, neither be fainthearted.

Is. vii. 4.

They should resolve the next day as victorious conquerors to take the city, or else there, as faint- hearted cowards, to end their days.

Knolles, Hist. of the Turks.

Now the late fainthearted rout,
O'erthrown and scatter'd round about,
Chac'd by the horror of their fear,
From bloody fray of knight and bear,
Took heart again and fac'd about,
As if they meant to stand it out.

Hudibras.

Villain, stand off! base, groveling, worthless wretches, Mongrels in faction; poor fainthearted
traitors,

Addison, Cato.

FAINTHEARTEDLY. † adv. [from faint- hearted.] Timorously; in a cowardly manner.

to grow faint; a colloquial expression.

FAINTISHNESS. n. s. [from faint.] Weakness in a slight degree; incipient debility.

A certain degree of heat lengthens and relaxes the fibres; whence proceeds the sensation of faint- ishness and debility in a hot day.

Arbuth. on Air.

FAINTLING. adj. [from faint.] Timorous;
feeble-minded. A burlesque or low word.

There's no having patience, thou art such a faindling silly creature.

Arbuth. Hist. of J. Bull.

FAINTLY. adv. [from faint.]

1. Feebly; languidly.

Love's like a torch, which, if secured from blasts,
Will faintly burn; but then it longer lasts:
Expos'd to storms of jealousy and doubt,
The blaze grows greater, but 'tis sooner out.

Walsl.

2. Not in bright colours.

Nature affords at least a glimm'ring light;
The lines, tho' touch'd but faintly, are drawn right.

Pope.

3. Without force of representation.

I have told you what I have seen and heard but faintly; nothing like the image and horror of it.

Shakespeare, K. Lear.

An obscure and confused idea represents the object so faintly, that it doth not appear plain to the mind.

Watts.

4. Without strength of body.

With his loll'd tongue he faintly licks his prey,
His warm breath blows her flix up as she lies.

Dryden.

5. Not vigorously; not actively.

Though still the famish'd English, like pale ghosts,
Faintly besiege us one hour in a month.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

6. Timorously; with dejection; without spirit.

Loth was the ape, though praised, to adventure;
Yet faintly gan into his work to enter.

Spenser, Hubb. Tale.

He faintly now declines the fatal strife;
So much his love was dearer than his life.

Denh.

FAINTNESS. † n. s. [from faint.]

1. Languor; feebleness; want of strength.

As she was speaking, she fell down for faint- ness.

Esd. xv. 15.

If the prince of the lights of heaven, which now as a giant doth run his unwearied courses, should through a languishing faintness begin to stand.

Hooker.

This proceeded not from any violence of pain, but from a general languishing and faintness of spirits, which made him think nothing worth the trouble of one careful thought.

Temple.

2. Inactivity; want of vigour.

This evil proceeds rather of the unsoundness of the counsels, or of faintness in following and effecting the same, than of any such fatal course appointed of God.

Spenser.

3. Timorousness; dejection.

Upon them, that are left alive of you, I will send a faintness into their hearts in the land of their enemies, and the sound of a shaken leaf shall chase them. Levit. xxvi. 36.

Genesis, xxv. 29. Matthew's Transl.
When winter frosts constrain the field with cold,
The fainty root can take no steady hold.

Dryden, Virgil.

The ladies gasp'd, and scarcely could respire;
The breath they drew, no longer air, but fire;
The fainty knights were scorched, and knew not where

To run for shelter; for no shade was near. Dryd.

FAIR.† adj. [æpæp, Saxons; faur, Danish; fager, Goth. Feg, in our northern dialect, is fair.]

1. Beautiful; elegant of feature; handsome. Fair seems in the common acceptance to be restrained, when applied to women, to the beauty of the face.

He only fair, and what he fair hath made,
All other fair like flowers untimely fade. Spenser.
Thou art a fair woman to look upon.

Gen. xii. 11.

2. Not black; not brown; white in the complexion.

I never yet saw man,
But she would spell him backward; if fair fac'd,
She'd swear the gentleman should be her sister;
If black, why nature, drawing of an antick,
Made a foul blot. Shakespeare, Much Ado.

Let us look upon men in several climates; the Ethiopians are black, flat-nosed, and crisp-haired:
the Moors tawny: the northern people large, and fair complexioned. Hale.

3. Pleasing to the eye; excellent or beautiful in general to the eye or mind.

That which made her fairness much the fairer was that it was but an ambassadour of most fair mind. Sidney.

Carry him gently to my fairest chamber,
And hang it round with all my wanton pictures.

Shakespeare.

Thus was he fair in his greatness, and in the length of his branches. Ezek. xxxi. 7.

For as by deprecations wasps proclaim
The fairest fruit, so these the fairest fame. Young.

4. Clear; pure; clean.

in an earthen pan, full of fair water, half a foot
under the water. Bacon.

The table, at the communion time, having a fair
white linen cloth upon it. Rubrick, Commun. Serv.

Even fair water, falling upon white paper or linen, will immediately alter the colour of them, and make it sadder than that of the unwetted parts.

Boyle on Colours.

5. Not cloudy; not foul; not tempestuous.

Fair is foul, and foul is fair;
Hover through the fog and filthy air. Shak. Macb.
Fair weather cometh out of the earth.

Job, xxxvii. 22.

About three of the clock in the afternoon the weather was very fair and very warm. Clarendon.

6. Favourable; prosperous: as, a fair wind.

In vain you tell your parting lover,
You wish fair winds may wait him over. Prior.

7. Likely to succeed.

Yoursell, renowned prince, stood as fair
As any comer I have look'd on yet,
For my affection. Shakespeare, Merch. of Ven.

The Caliphs obtained a mighty empire, which was in a fair way to have enlarged, until they fell out. Raleigh, Essays.

O pity and shame, that they who to live well
Enter'd so fair, should turn aside to tread
Paths indirect, or in the midway faint. Milt. P. L.

8. Equal; just.

The king did so much desire a peace, that no man need advise him to it, or could divert him from it, if fair and honourable conditions of peace were offered to him. Clarendon.

9. Not effected by any insidious or unlawful methods; not foul.

After all these conquests, he passed the rest of his age in his own native country, and died a fair and natural death. Temple.

10. Not practising any fraudulent or insidious arts; as, a fair rival, a fair disputant.

Virtuous and vicious every man must be,
Few in th' extreme, but all in the degree;
The rogue and fool by fits is fair and wise,
And ev'n the best, by fits, what they despise. Pope.

11. Open; direct.

For still, methought, she sung not far away;
At last I found her on a laurel spray:
Close by my side she sat, and fair in sight,
Full in a line, against her opposite. Dryden.

12. Gentle; mild; not compulsory.

All the lords came in, and being by fair means wrought thereunto, acknowledged king Henry.

Spenser on Ireland.

For to reduce her by main force,
Is now in vain; by fair means worse. Hudibras.

13. Mild; not severe.

Not only dost degrade them, or remit
To life obscur'd, which were a fair dismissal;
But throw'st them lower than thou did'st exalt them high. Milton, S. A.

14. Pleasing; civil.

Good sir, why do you start, and seem to fear Things that do sound so fair? Shaksp. Macbeth.
When fair words and good counsel will not prevail upon us, we must be frighted into our

15. Equitable; not injurious.

His doom is fair,
That dust I am, and shall to dust return.

Milton, P. L.

16. Commodious; easy.

Hereby, upon the edge of yonder coppice,
A stand where you may make the fairest shoot.

Shakespeare.

I looked for the jugular veins, opened the fairest, and took away a dozen ounces of blood.

Wiseman.

17. Liberal; not narrow.

He through his virtue was as free from greediness,
as through his fair livelihood far from neediness.

Carew.

FA'IR. adv. [from the adjective.]

1. Gently; decently; without violence.

He who fair and softly goes steadily forward, in a course that points right, will sooner be at his journey's end, than he that runs after every one, though he gallop. Locke.

2. Civilly; complaisantly.

Well, you must now speak Sir John Falstaff fair. Shakespeare.

One of the company spoke him fair, and would have stop't his mouth with a crust. L' Estrange.

In this plain fable you th' effect may see
Of negligence, and fond credulity;
And learn besides of flatterers to beware,
Then most pernicious when they speak too fair. Dryden.

His promise Palamon accepts, but pray'd
To keep it better than the first he made;
Thus fair they parted till the morrow's dawn;
For each had laid his plighted faith to pawn. Dryden.

Kalib ascend, my fair spoke servant rise,
And sooth my heart with pleasing prophecies.

Dryden.

This promised fair at first. Addison on Italy.

3. Happily; successfully.

O, princely Buckingham, I'll kiss thy hand,
In sign of league and amity with thee:
Now fair befall thee and thy noble house!
Thy garments are not spotted with our blood.

Shakespeare, Rich. III.

4. On good terms.

There are other nice, though inferior cases, in which a man must guard, if he intends to keep fair with the world, and turn the penny.

Collier on Popularity.

FA'IR.† n. s.

1. A beauty; elliptically, a fair woman.

Of sleep forsaken, to relieve his care,
He sought the conversation of the fair.

Dryden, Fab.

Gentlemen who do not design to marry, yet pay their devoirs to one particular fair. Spectator.

2. Honesty; just dealing.

I am not much for that present; we'll settle it between ourselves: fair and square, Nic, keeps friends together. Arbutnot.

3. Fairness, applied to things. Not now
in use.

As the green meads, whose native outward fair
Breathes sweet perfumes into the neighbour air.

Marston, Satires.

4. Fairness, applied to persons. Obsolete.

Pope changed the word, in the first of the following passages, without authority, to face.

Let no face be kept in mind,
But the fair of Rosalind. Shak. As you like it.

My decay'd fair

A sunny look of his would soon repair.

Shakespeare, Com. of Err.

FA'IR.† n. s. [old Fr. fiere; modern foire;

ferie, or forum, Lat.] An annual or stated meeting of buyers and sellers; a time of traffic more frequented than a market. The privilege of holding fairs in England is granted by the king.

With silver, iron, tin, and lead they traded in thy fairs. Ezek. xxvii. 12.

His corn, his cattle, were his only care,
And his supreme delight a country fair. Dryd.

The ancient Nundina, or fairs of Rome, were kept every ninth day: afterwards the same privileges were granted to the country markets, which were at first under the power of the consuls.

Arbutnot on Coins.

FA'IRING. n. s. [from fair.] A present given at a fair.

Sweetheart, we shall be rich ere we depart,
If fairings come thus plentifully in.

Shakespeare, Lov. Lab. Lost.

Like children that esteem every trifle, and prefer a fairing before their fathers. B. Jonson.

Now he goes on, and sings of fairs and shows;
For still new fairs before his eyes arise:
How pedlars stalls with glittering toys are laid,
The various fairings of the country maid.

Gay, Pastorals.

FA'IRISH.* adj. [from fair.] Reasonably fair; passable; so so.

Cotgrave in V. Bellastre.

FA'IRLY.† adv. [from fair. Sax. æpæplice.]

1. Beautifully: as, a city fairly situated.

2. Commodiously; conveniently; suitably to any purpose or design.

Pass away thou inhabitant of Saphir, [in the margin, thou that dwellest fairly.] Micha, i. 11.

Waiting till willing winds their sails supply'd,
Within a trading town they long abide,
Full fairly situate on a haven's side. Dryden.

3. Honestly; justly; without shift; without fraud; not foully.

There is due from the judge to the advocate some commendation and gracing where causes are fairly pleaded. Bacon.

To the first advantages we may fairly lay claim; I wish we had as good a title to the latter. Atterbury.

It is a church of England man's opinion, that the freedom of a nation consists in an absolute unlimited legislative power, wherein the whole body of the people are fairly represented, and in an executive duly limited. Swift.

4. Ingeniously; plainly; openly.

The stage how loosely does Astrea tread,
Who fairly puts all characters to bed! Pope.

5. Candidly; without sinistrous interpretations.

As I interpret fairly your design,
So look not with severer eyes on mine. Dryden, Aurengzebe.

6. Without violence to right reason.

Where I have enlarged them, I desire the false critics would not always think that those thoughts are wholly mine; but that either they are secretly in the poet, or may be fairly deduced from him. Dryden.

This nutritious juice being a subtile liquor, scarce obtainable by a human body, the serum of the blood is fairly substituted in its place. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

7. Without blots.

Here is th' indictment of the good lord Hastings, Which in a set hand fairly is engross'd. Shakspeare, Rich. III.

8. Completely; without any deficiency.

All this they fairly overcame, by reason of the continual presence of their king. Spenser on Irel.

Let them say, 'tis grossly done; so it be fairly done, no matter. Shaks. Mer. W. of Windsor.

Our love is not so great, Hortensio, but we may blow our nails together, and fast it fairly out. Shakspeare, Tam. of the Shrew.

9. Softly; gently.

But sober Guyon hearing him so rayle,
Though somewhat moved in his mighty heart,
Yet with strong reason master'd passion fraile,
And passed fairly forth. Spens. F. Q. ii. vi. 40.
But here she comes; I fairly step aside,
And hearken, if I may, her business here. Milton, Comus.

FA'IRNESS.† n. s. [from fair, Sax. prægen-ner.]

1. Beauty; elegance of form.

That which made her fairness much the fairer, was that it was but a fair ambassador of a most fair mind, full of wit, and a wit which delighted more to judge itself than to show itself. Sidney.

2. Honesty; candour; ingenuity.

There may be somewhat of wisdom, but little of goodness or fairness in this conduct. Atterbury, Serm. Pref.

3. Clearness; not foulness; as "fairness of weather."

FAIRSPÖKEN.† adj. [from fair and speak.]
Bland and civil in language and address.

Arius, a priest in the church of Alexandria, a sublewd and a marvellous fairspoken man, but discontented that he should be placed before him in honour, whose superior he thought himself in desert, because through envy and stomach prone unto contradiction. Hooker.

From his cradle
He was a scholar, and a ripe and good one,
Exceeding wise, fairspoken. Sh. K. Hen. VIII.

These his fairspoken words shall be here fairly confronted. Milton, Eiconoclastes.

He is one of the fairspoken swordmen that David speaks of, "whose words are softer than butter, and yet are they very swords." Hammond, Works, iv. 470.

FA'IRY.† n. s. [pephð, Saxon; fee, French. "Ab ēpa, terra, fit & pēga Macedonium dialecto; unde ἐπεφ, ἐπεφ, & Romanis inferi, qui Scoto-Saxonibus dicuntur feries, nostratq; vulgo corruptius fairies, κατὰ φύσιν δαίμονες, sive dii manes." Baxter's Glossary. So far Dr. Johnson. But the Sax. pephð will not apply in the sense of a spirit to these pretended beings; for it means the mind or soul. Perhaps the old Fr. faerie, a fantom, a spectre, is the parent of our word. The French word is sometimes written flerie, and Borel derives it from the ancient fée, a nymph, and also a divineress. The French have likewise the old verb faer, to enchant. See Lacombe and Roquefort. Probably from the Lat. fatuor. "Par feerie," says Cotgrave, is "by appointment of the fairies;" which also he renders fatal and destined. Some indeed suppose the Latin fatum to be the etymon; whence fata, in Italian, a fairy, witch, or enchantress; and the low Lat. fada, a kind of demon. The French fae or fee is also found to have been used for a diviner or enchanter. The Irish faidh is a foreteller, a prophet. Fairy has been, after all, considered as derived from the east, that is, from the peri, the imaginary beings of the Persians. See ELF and FAX.]

1. A kind of fabled beings supposed to appear in a diminutive human form, and to dance in the meadows, and reward cleanliness in houses; an elf; a fay.

Nan Page, my daughter, and my little son,
And three or four more of their growth, we'll dress
Like urchins, ouphes, and fairies, green and white. Shakspeare.

Then let them all encircle him about,
And fairylike too pinch the unclean knight;
And ask him, why, that hour of fairy revel,
In their so sacred paths he dares to tread
In shape prophane. Shaks. Mer. W. of Windsor.

By the idea any one has of fairies, or centaurs, he cannot know that things, answering those ideas, exist. Locke.

Fays, fairies, genii, elves, and demons, hear! Pope.

2. Enchantress. Warburton.

To this great fairy I'll commend thy acts,
Make her thanks bless thee. Shaks. Ant. and Cleop.

FA'IRY. adj.

1. Given by fairies.

Be secret and discreet; these fairy favours
Are lost when not conceal'd. Dryd. Span. Friar.
Such borrow'd wealth, like fairy money, though it were gold in the hand from which he received it, will be but leaves and dust when it comes to use. Locke.

2. Belonging to fairies.

This is the fairy land; oh, spite of spigits.
We talk with goblins, owls, and elvish spigits. Shakspeare.

FA'IRYLIKE.* adj. Imitating the practice of fairies.

Let them all encircle him about,
And, fairylike, to pinch the unclean knight. Shaks. Mer. W. of Windsor.

FA'IRYSTONE. n. s. [fairy and stone.] A stone found in gravel pits.

FA'ISIBLE.* See FEASIBLE.

FAITH.† n. s. [foi, French; fede, Italian; fides, Latin. So Dr. Johnson traces our word. Mr. Horne Tooke asserts, that it is the third person singular of the indicative of the Sax. verb fægan, to engage, to covenant, viz. fægð; and that our word was formerly written faieðh, which indeed was common enough. Others consider it as connected with the Greek πειθω, persuasion, belief.]

1. Belief of the revealed truths of religion.

The name of faith being properly and strictly taken, it must needs have reference unto some uttered word, as the object of belief. Hooker.

Faith, if it have not works, is dead. Jam. ii. 17.
Vision in the next life is the perfecting of that faith in this life, or that faith here is turned into vision there, as hope into enjoying. Hammond, Pract. Catechism.

Then faith shall fail, and holy hope shall die;
One lost in certainty, and one in joy. Prior.

2. The system of revealed truths held by the Christian church; the credenda.

Felix heard Paul concerning the faith. Acts, xxiv. 24.
This is the catholic faith. Ath. Creed, Com. Pr.

3. Trust in God.

Faith is an entire dependence upon the truth, the power, the justice, and the mercy of God; which dependence will certainly incline us to obey him in all things. Swift.

4. Tenet held.

Which to believe of her,
Must be a faith, that reason, without miracle,
Should never plant in me. Shaks. K. Lear.

5. Trust in the honesty or veracity of another.

6. Fidelity; unshaken adherence.

Her falling, while her faith to me remains,
I should conceal. Milton, P. L.

7. Honour; social confidence.

For you alone
I broke my faith with injur'd Palamon. Dryden, Knight's Tale.

8. Sincerity; honesty; veracity.

Sir, in good faith, in mere verity. Sh. K. Lear.
They are a very forward generation, children in whom is no faith. Deut. xxxii. 20.

9. Promise given.

I have been forsworn,
In breaking faith with Julia whom I lov'd. Shaks.

FAITH.* adv. A colloquial expression, meaning in truth, verily, on my faith.

Faith, like enough. Beaumont and Fl. Maid's Tr.

FA'ITHBREACH. n. s. [faith and breach.]

Breach of fidelity; disloyalty; perfidy.

Now minutely revolts upbraid his faithbreach;
Those he commands, move only in command,
Nothing in love. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

FA'ITHED. adj. [from faith.] Honest; sincere. A word not in use.

Thou bastard! would the reposal
Of any trust, virtue, or worth in thee,
Make thy words faith'd. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

FA'ITHFUL.† adj. [faith and full.]

1. Firm in adherence to the truth of religion.

To the saints which are at Ephesus, and the faithful in Christ Jesus. Eph. i. 1.
Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life. Rev. ii. 10.

2. Of true fidelity; loyal; true to the allegiance or duty professed.

I have this day receiv'd a traitor's judgement,
And by that name must die; yet, heav'n bear witness,
And, if I have a conscience, let it sink me,
Ev'n as the axe falls, if I be not faithful.

Shakespeare, Henry VIII.

So spake the seraph Abdiel, faithful found;
Among the faithless, faithful only he. Milt. P. L.

3. Honest; upright; without fraud.

My servant Moses is faithful in all mine house.

Numbers, xii. 7.

4. Observant of compact or promise; true to his contract; sincere; veracious.

Well I know him;
Of easy temper, naturally good;
And faithful to his word. Dryd. Don Sebast.

5. True; worthy of belief; that may confidently be relied on.

It is a faithful saying; for if we be dead with him, we shall also live with him. 2 Tim. ii. 11.

FA'ITHFULLY.† adv. [from faithful.]

1. With firm belief in religion.

Thus shall ye do in the fear of the Lord, faithfully, and with a perfect heart. 2 Chron. xix. 9.

Is hate, not help to me. Milton, S. A.

There fell out a bloody quarrel betwixt the frogs and the mice. L' Etrange.

If it so fall out that thou art miserable for ever, thou hast no reason to be surprised, as if some unexpected thing had happened. Tillotson.

62. To FALL to. To begin eagerly to eat. The men were fashion'd in a larger mould,

The women fit for labour, big and bold;

Gigantic limbs, as soon as work was done,

To their huge pots of boiling pulse would run;

Fall to, with eager joy, on homely food. Dryd. Juven.

63. To FALL to. To apply himself to. They would needs fall to the practice of those virtues which they before learned. Sidney.

I know thee not, old man; fall to thy prayers;

How ill white hairs become a fool and jester!

Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

Having been brought up an idle horseboy, he will never after fall to labour; but is only made fit for the halter. Spenser.

They fell to raising money under pretence of the relief of Ireland. Clarendon.

My lady falls to play: so bad her chance,

He must repair it. Pope.

64. To FALL to. To submit himself to; to go over to.

He that abideth in this city, shall die by the sword, and by the famine, and by the pestilence;

but he that goeth out, and *fall*eth to the Chaldeans that besiege you, he shall live. Jerem. xxi. 9.

65. To FALL under. To be subject to; to become the subject of.

We know the effects of heat will be such as will scarce fall under the conceit of man, if the force of it be altogether kept in. Bacon, N. Hist.

Those things which are wholly in the choice of another, fall under our deliberation.

Bp. Taylor, Rule of living holy.

The idea of the painter and the sculptor is undoubtedly that perfect and excellent example of the mind, by imitation of which imagined form all things are represented, which fall under human sight. Dryden, Dufresnoy.

66. To FALL under. To be ranged with; to be reckoned with.

No rules that relate to pastoral can affect the Georgicks, which fall under that class of poetry which consists in giving plain instructions to the reader. Addison on the Georgicks.

67. To FALL upon. To attack; to invade; to assault.

Auria falling upon these galleys, had with them a cruel and deadly fight. Knolles.

An infection in a town first falls upon children, weak constitutions, or those that are subject to other diseases; but, spreading further, seizes upon the most healthy. Temple.

Man falls upon every thing that comes in his way; not a berry or a mushroom can escape him. Addison, Spect.

To get rid of fools and scoundrels was one part of my design in falling upon these authors. Pope to Swift.

68. To FALL upon. To attempt. I do not intend to fall upon nice philosophical disquisitions about the nature of time. Holder on Time.

69. To FALL upon. To rush against. At the same time that the storm bears upon the whole species, we are falling foul upon one another. Addison.

70. FALL is one of those general words of which it is very difficult to ascertain or detail the full signification. It retains in most of its senses some part of its primitive meaning, and implies either literally or figuratively descent, violence, or suddenness. In many of its senses it is opposed to rise; but in others has no counterpart, or correlative.

To FALL. v. a.

1. To drop; to let fall.

To-morrow in the battle think on me,

And fall thy edgeless sword, despair and die. Shakspeare, Rich. III.

If that the earth could teem with woman's tears,

Each drop, she falls, would prove a crocodile. Shakspeare, Othello.

Draw together;

And when I rear my hand, do you the like,

To fall it on Gonzalo. Shakspeare, Tempest.

I am willing to fall this argument: 'tis free for every man to write or not to write in verse, as he thinks it is or is not his talent, or as he imagines the audience will receive it. Dryden.

2. To sink; to depress: the contrary to raise.

If a man would endeavour to raise or fall his voice still by half notes, like the stops of a lute, or by whole notes alone without halves, as far as an eight, he will not be able to frame his voice unto it. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

3. To diminish; to let sink: opposed to raise.

Upon lessening interest to four per cent. you fall the price of your native commodities, or less sen your trade, or else prevent not the high use. Locke.

4. To *ye*an; to bring forth. They, then conceiving, did in yeanning time

Fall party-colour'd lambs, and those were Jacob's. Shakspeare.

FALL. v. s. [from the verb.]

1. The act of dropping from on high. High o'er their heads a mouldering rock is plac'd,

That promises a fall, and shakes at every blast. Dryden, Æn.

2. The act of tumbling from an erect posture.

I saw him run after a gilded butterfly; and when he caught it, he let it go again, and after it again; and over and over he comes, and up again, and caught it again; or whether his fall enraged him, or how it was, he did so set his teeth, and did tear it. Shakspeare, Coriol.

3. The violence suffered in dropping from on high.

My son coming into his marriage-chamber, happened to have a fall, and died. 2 Esdr. x. 48.

Spirit of wine, mingled with common water, if the first fall be broken, by means of a sop, or otherwise, stayeth above; and if once mingled, it severeth not again, as oil doth. Bacon, Physical Remains.

A fever or fall may take away my reason. Locke.

Some were hurt by the falls they got by leaping upon the ground. Swift, Gulliver's Travels.

4. Death; overthrow; destruction incurred.

Whom I myself struck down. Shaks. Macbeth.

Our fathers were given to the sword, and for a spoil, and had a great fall before our enemies. Judith, viii. 9.

I will begin to pray for myself and for them;

for I see the falls of us that dwell in the land. 2 Esdr. viii. 17.

5. Ruin; dissolution. Paul's, the late theme of such a muse, whose flight

Has bravely reach'd and soar'd above thy height;

Now shalt thou stand, though sword, or time, or fire,

Or zeal more fierce than they, thy fall conspire. Denham.

6. Downfall; loss of greatness; declension from eminence; degradation; state of being deposed from a high station; plunge from happiness or greatness into misery or meanness, or from virtue to corruption. In a sense like this we say the fall of man, and the fall of angels.

Her memory served as an accuser of her change,

and her own handwriting was there to bear testimony against her fall. Sidney.

Perhaps thou talk'st of me, and dost enquire

Of my restraint; why here I live alone;

And pitiest this my miserable fall. Dun. Civ. Wars.

He, careless now of int'rest, fame, or fate,

Perhaps forgets that Oxford e'er was great;

Or deeming meanest what we greatest call,

Beholds these glorious only in thy fall. Pope to Parnell.

7. Declension of greatness, power, or dominion.

Till the empire came to be settled in Charles the Great, the fall of the Romans huge dominion concurring with other universal evils, caused those times to be days of much affliction and trouble

throughout the world. Hooker.

8. Diminution; decrease of value.

That the improvement of Ireland is the principal cause why our lands in purchase rise not,

as naturally they should, with the fall of our interest, appears evidently from the effect the fall of interest hath had upon houses in London. Child.

9. Declination or diminution of sound; cadence; close of music.

That strain again; it had a dying fall:

O, it came o'er my ear, like the sweet South

That breathes upon a bank of violets,

Stealing and giving odours. Shakspeare, Tw. Night.

How sweetly did they float upon the wings

Of silence, through the empty-vaulted night,

At every fall smoothing the raven down

Of darkness till it smil'd! Milton, Comus.

10. Declivity; steep descent.

Waters when beat upon the shore, or strained, as the falls of bridges, or dashed against themselves by winds, give a roaring noise.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

11. Cataract; cascade; rush of water down a steep place.

There will we sit upon the rocks,
And see the shepherds feed their flocks

By shallow rivers, to whose falls

Melodious birds sing madrigals.

Shakespeare.

A whistling wind, or a melodious noise of birds among the spreading branches, or a pleasing fall of water running violently, these things made them to swoon for fear.

Wisdom, xvii. 18.

Down through the crannies of the living walls

The crystal streams descend in murmur'g falls.

Dryden, Virg.

The swain, in barren deserts, with surprize

Sees lilies spring, and sudden verdure rise;

And starts, amidst the thirsty wilds, to hear

New falls of water murmur'g in his ear.

Pope, Messiah.

Now, under hanging mountains,

Beside the falls of fountains,

He makes his moan;

And calls her ghost,

For ever, ever, ever lost!

Pope, St. Cecilia.

12. The outlet of a current into any other water.

Before the fall of the Po into the gulph, it receives into its channel considerable rivers.

Addison, Italy.

13. Autumn; the fall of the leaf; the time when the leaves drop from the trees.

What crowds of patients the town-doctor kills,
Or how last fall he rais'd the weekly bills.

Dryden, Juv.

14. Any thing that comes down in great quantities.

Upon a great fall of rain the current carried away a huge heap of apples.

L'Estrange.

15. The act of felling or cutting down: as, the fall of timber.

16. A part of the female dress, in former times; a kind of veil, according to Cotgrave, "worn by nuns and widows of the better sort." [faïlle, French.] Obsolete.

There is such a deal of pinning these ruffs,
When the fine clean fall is worth all.

Marston, Malcontent.

FALLA'CIOUS.† adj. [fallax, Latin; fallacicus, French; or rather fallastiosus, Latin.]

1. Producing mistake; sophistical. It is never used of men, but of writings, propositions, or things.

The Jews believed and assented to things neither evident nor certain, nor yet so much as probable, but actually false and fallacious; such as the absurd doctrines and stories of their rabbies.

South, Serm.

2. Deceitful; mocking expectation.

The force of that fallacious fruit,

That with exhilarating vapour bland

About their spirits had play'd, and inmost pow'rs

Made err, was now exhal'd.

Milton, P. L.

False philosophy inspires

Fallacious hope.

Milton, P. L.

FALLA'CIOUSLY. adv. [from fallacious.]

Sophistically; with purpose to deceive; with unsound reasoning.

We shall so far encourage contradiction, as to promise not to oppose any pen that shall fallaciously refute us.

Brown.

We have seen how fallaciously the author has stated the cause, by supposing that nothing but unlimited mercy, or unlimited punishment, are the methods that can be made use of.

Addison.

FALLACIOUSNESS. n. s. [from fallacious.]

Tendency to deceive; inconclusiveness.

FALLACY.† n. s. [fallacia, Latin; fallace, French.]

Our own word was at first fallace or fallas. "Through coverture of his fallas." Gower, Conf. Am. B. l. Sophism; logical artifice; deceit; deceitful argument; delusory mode of ratiocination.

Most princes make themselves another thing from the people by a fallacy of argument, thinking themselves most kings when the subject is most basely subjected.

Sidney.

Until I know this sure uncertainty,

I'll entertain the favour'd fallacy, Sh. Com. of Err.

It were a mere fallacy, and mistaking to ascribe that to the force of imagination upon another body, which is but the force of imagination upon the proper body.

Bacon.

All men, who can see an inch before them, may easily detect gross fallacies.

Dryden.

FALLAX. * n. s. [Latin.] A term

formerly used by disputants; cavillation.

To utter the matter plainly without fallax or cavillation. Abp. Crammer to Bp. Gardiner, p. 240.

This appearance, though it seem of strength rather logical than rhetorical, yet is very often of the fallax.

Bacon.

FALLENCY. * n. s. [Lat. fallens.] Mistake; error.

Alexander and Felinus do assign five fallencies unto these rules. Hayward, Answ. to Doleman, c. 4.

Socius sets down eight hundred and two fallencies, (that's the word of the law,) concerning the contestation of suits and actions at law.

Bp. Taylor, Duct. Dub. Pref. p. ix.

FALLER. * n. s. [from fall.] One who falls.

He made many to fall [in the margin, multiplied the faller.]

Jerem. xlv. 16.

FALLIBI'LITY. n. s. [from fallible.] Liability to be deceived; uncertainty; possibility of error.

There is a great deal of fallibility in the testimony of men; yet some things we may be almost as certain of as that the sun shines, or that five twenties make an hundred.

Watts.

FALLIBLE. adj. [fallio, Latin.] Liable to error; such as may be deceived.

Do not falsify your resolution with hopes that are fallible; to-morrow you must die.

Shaks. Meas. for Meas.

He that creates to himself thousands of little hopes, uncertain in the promise, fallible in the event, and depending upon a thousand circumstances, often fail his expectations.

Bp. Taylor.

Our intellectual or rational powers need some assistance, because they are so frail and fallible in the present state.

Watts.

FALLIBLY. * adv. [from fallible.] In a fallible manner.

Huloet.

FALLING.† } n. s. [from fall.]

FALLING in. }

1. Indenting opposed to prominence.

It shows the nose and eyebrows, with the several prominences and fallings in of the features, much more distinctly than any other kind of figure.

Addison on Medals.

2. That which falls.

'Tis the beggar's gain

To glean the fallings of the loaded wain.

Dryden, Hind and Panther.

FALLING away. * n. s. Defection; apostasy.

That day shall not come, except there come a falling away first.

2 Thess. ii. 3.

FALL'ING down. * n. s. Prostration.

FALL'ING off. * n. s.

1. Declension from virtue to vice.

O, Hamlet, what a falling-off was there! Shaks.

2. In naval language, the direction or movement of the ship's head to leeward of the point whither it was lately directed, particularly when she sails near the wind, or lies by.

Chambers.

FALL'INGSICKNESS. n. s. [fall and sickness.]

The epilepsy; a disease in which the patient is without any warning deprived at once of his senses, and falls down.

Did Caesar swoon? — He fell down in the market-place, and foam'd at mouth, and was speechless. — He hath the falling-sickness.

Shakspeare, Jul. Cæs.

The dogfisher is good against the falling-sickness.

Walton's Angler.

FALLO'PIAN. * adj. [from Fallopio, a physician of Modena, the reputed discoverer of what are called the Fallopiian tubes.] Belonging to two ducts arising from the womb, usually called tubes.

FALLOW. adj. [palepe, Saxon.]

1. Pale red, or pale yellow.

How does your fallow greyhound, sir?

I heard say, he was out-run at Cotsale. Shaks.

The king, who was excessively affected to hunting, had a great desire to make a great park for red as well as fallow deer between Richmond and Hampton-court.

Clarendon.

2. Unsowed; left to rest after the years of tillage. [Supposed to be so called from the colour of naked ground.]

The ridges of the fallow field by traversed, so as the English must cross them in presenting the charge.

Hayward.

3. Plowed, but not sowed; plowed as prepared for a second aration.

Her predecessors, in their course of government, did but sometimes cast up the ground; and so leaving it fallow, it became quickly overgrown with weeds.

Howell, Vocal Forest.

4. Unplowed; uncultivated.

Her fallow lees

The darnel, hemlock, and rank fumitory,
Doth root upon.

Shakspeare, Hen. V.

5. Unoccupied; neglected.

Shall saints in civil bloodshed wallow

Of saints, and let the cause lie fallow? Hudibras.

FALLOW. n. s. [from the adjective.]

1. Ground plowed in order to be plowed again.

The plowing of fallows is a benefit to land.

Mortimer, Husbandry.

The best ploughs to plow up Summer fallow with.

Mortimer.

2. Ground lying at rest.

Within an ancient forest's ample verge,
There stands a lonely but a healthful dwelling,
Built for convenience, and the use of life;
Around it fallows, meads, and pastures fair,
A little garden, and a limpid brook,
By nature's own contrivance seems dispos'd.

Rowe, Jane Shore.

To FALL'OW.† v. n.

1 To plow in order to a second plowing.

2 To fade; to grow yellow. Obsolete.

There both roses of red blee,

And lily, likeful for to see;

They falloweth never day ne night.

Old Norman-Sax. Poem, printed by Ellis, i. 89.

FALLOW-FINCH. * n. s. A name of the ænanthe or wheat-ear.

FALLOWING.* n. s. [from fallow.] The act of plowing, in order to a second plowing.

Begin to plow up fallows; this first fallowing ought to be very shallow. Mortimer, Husbandry.

Fallowing is the principal operation, by which exhausted lands are restored to fertility.

Kirwan, Manures, p. 22.

FALLOWNESS, n. s. [from fallow.] Barrenness; an exemption from bearing fruit.

Like one, who, in her third widowhood, doth profess

Herself a nun, ty'd to retiredness,
So' affects my muse now a chaste fallowness.

Donne, Poems, p. 150.

FALSARY.* n. s. [old Fr. falsaire, Lat. falsarius.] A falsifier of evidence.

Alike you calumniate, when you make Mr. Mason a falsary, as though he had cited some unauthentic records.

Sheldon, Miracles of Ant. (1616), p. 133.

FALSE.† adj. [Sax. falre, fals, fauls, faulse, Celt. and old Fr.; falsus, Lat.]

1. Not morally true; expressing that which is not thought.

Innocence shall make

False accusation blush, and tyranny
Tremble at patience. Shakespeare, Wint. Tale.

There are false witnesses among men. L'Estr.

2. Not physically true; conceiving that which does not exist.

For how can that be false, which ev'ry tongue
Of ev'ry mortal man affirms for true?

Which truth hath in all ages been so strong,
As loadstone like, all hearts it ever drew.

Davies.

A farce is that in poetry which grotesque is in a picture: the persons and action of a farce are all unnatural, and the manners false; that is, inconsistent with the characters of mankind.

Dryden, Dufresnoy.

3. Succedaneous, supposititious.

Take a vessel, and make a false bottom of coarse canvass: fill it with earth above the canvass.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

4. Deceiving expectation; not solid; not sound.

He fell, as a huge rocky cliff,
Whose false foundation waves have wash'd away,
With dreadful poise is from the main land left.

Spenser, F. Q.

When that flood in its own depth was drown'd,
It left behind it false and slipp'ry ground. Dryd.
The heart of man looks fair, but when we come to lay any weight upon't, the ground is false under us.

L'Estrange.

5. Not agreeable to rule, or propriety.

Now, fy upon my false French; by mine honour, in true English, I love thee, Kate.

Shakespeare, Hen. V.

6. Not honest; not just.

The true prince may, for recreation, prove a false thief; for the poor abuses of the times want countenance.

Shakespeare.

Men are sponges, which, to pour out, receive;
Who know false play, rather than lose, deceive.

Donne.

7. Treacherous; perfidious; traitorous; deceitful; hollow.

I grant him bloody,
Luxurious, avaricious, false, deceitful,
Sudden, malicious, smacking of ev'ry sin
That has a name. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

False of heart, light of ear, bloody of hand.

Shakespeare.

A man to whom he had committed the trust of his person, in making him his chamberlain; this man, no ways dignified, no ways discontent, no ways put in fear, turns false unto him.

Bacon, Hen. VII.

So hast thou cheated Theseus with a wile,
Against thy vow, returning to beguile
Under a borrow'd name; as false to me,
So false thou art to him who set thee free. Dryd.

The ladies will make a numerous party against him, for being false to love, in forsaking Dido.

Dryden, Virgil.

8. Counterfeit; hypocritical; not real: as a false diamond.

False tears true pity moves; the king commands
To loose his fethers. Dryden, Zen.

9. In all these senses true is the word opposed.

FALSE. adv. Not truly; not honestly; not exactly; falsely.

What thou would'st highly,
That thou would'st to holily; would'st not play false,
And yet would'st wrongly win. Shaksp. Macb.

To FALSE.† v. a. [falsar, old Fr. falsare, Ital. and Lat.]

1. To violate by failure of veracity.

Is't not enough that to this lady mild,
Thou falsest hast thy faith with perjury?

Spenser, F. Q.

'Tis gold

Which buys admittance; oft it doth; yea, and makes Diana's rangers false themselves. Shaksp. Cym.

2. To deceive.

Fair seemly pleasure each to other makes,
With goodly purposes there as they sit;
And in his false fancy he her takes
To be the fairest thing that lived yet. Spens. F. Q.
With a false sorry jest. Watson, Sonn. 32.

3. To defeat; to balk; to evade.

But, Guyon, in the heat of all his strife,
Was wary wise, and closely did await
Avantage, whilst his foe did rage most rife;
Sometimes thwart, sometimes he strook him straight,
And fals'd off his blows, t'illude him with such bait. Spenser, F. Q.

4. This word is now out of use.

FALSEFACED.* adj. [false and face.] Hypocritical; deceitful.

When drums and trumpet shall
I' the field prove flatterers, let courts and cities be Made all of falsefac'd soothing! Shaksp. Coriol.

FALSEHEART.* adj. [false and heart.] Perfidious. See FALSEHEARTED.

I am thy king, and thou a falseheart traitor.

Shakespeare, K. Hen. VI. P. II.

FALSEHEARTED.† adj. [false and heart.] Treacherous; perfidious; deceitful; hollow.

The traitorous or treacherous, who have mislead others, are severely punished; and the neutrals and falsehearted friends and followers, who have started aside like a broken bow, he noted.

Bacon, Advice to Villiers.

Our faithless nephew, that falsehearted peer.

Mir. for Mag. p. 576.

A factious or falsehearted army.

Hammond, Works, iv. 572.

FALSEHEARTEDNESS.* n. s. [from falsehearted.] Perfidiousness; deceitfulness.

There was no hypocrisy or falseheartedness, no artifice or design in all this. Stillingfl. Works, i. 521.

FALSEHOOD, n. s. [from false.]

1. Want of truth; want of veracity.

Artificer of fraud: he was the first
That practis'd falsehood under saintly show.

Milton, P. L.

All deception in the course of life is, indeed, nothing else but a lie reduced to practice, and falsehood passing from words to things. South.

2. Want of honesty; treachery; deceitfulness; perfidy.

Nothing wants, but that thy shape,
Like his, and colour serpentine, may show
Thy inward fraud, to warn all creatures from thee
Henceforth; lest that too heav'nly form, pretended
To hellish falsehood, snare them. Milton, P. L.

3. A lie; a false assertion.

In your answers there remains falsehood.
Job, xxi. 34.

4. Counterfeit; imposture.

For no falsehood can endure
Touch of celestial temper, but returns
Of force to its own likeness. Milton, P. L.

FALSELY.† adv. [from false.]

1. Contrarily to truth; not truly.

Simon and Levi spake not only falsely but insidiously, nay hypocritically, abusing proselytes and religion. Gov. of the Tongue.

Already were the Belgians on our coast,
Whose fleet more mighty every day became
By late success, which they did falsely boast,
And now by first appearing seem'd to claim.

Dryden, Ann. Mir.

Tell him, I did in vain his brother move,
And yet he falsely said he was in love;
Falsely; for had he truly lov'd, at least,
He would have giv'n one day to my request.

Dryden, Auzengzebe.

Such as are treated ill, and upbraided falsely, find out an intimate friend that will hear their complaints, and endeavour to sooth their secret resentments. Addison, Spect.

2. Erroneously; by mistake.

He knows that to be inconvenient which we falsely think convenient for us. Smatridge, Sermon.

3. Perfidiously; treacherously; deceitfully.

Nor has Coriolanus
Deserv'd this so dishonour'd rub, laid falsely
I' the plain way of his merit. Shakespeare, Cor.

FALSENESS.† n. s. [from false.]

1. Contrariety to truth.

Pr'ythee speak;
Falseness cannot come from thee, for thou look'st
Modest as justice. Shakespeare, Pericles.

2. Want of veracity; violation of promise.

Suppose the reverse of virtue were solemnly enacted, and the practice of fraud and rapine, and perjury and falseness to a man's word, and all vice were established by a law, would that which we now call vice gain the reputation of virtue, and that which we now call virtue grow odious to human nature? Tillotson.

3. Duplicity; deceit; double dealing.

Piety is opposed to hypocrisy and insincerity, and all falseness or ffulness of intentions, especially to personated devotion. Hem. on Fund.

4. Treachery; perfidy; traitorousness.

King Richard might create a perfect guess,
That great Northumberland, then false to him,
Would of that seed grow to a greater falseness.

Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

The prince is in no danger of being betrayed by the falseness, or cheated by the avarice of such a servant. Rogers.

FALSER. n. s. [from false.] A deceiver; an hypocrite. Now obsolete.

Such end had the kid; for he would warn'd be
Of craft, coloured with simplicity;
And such end, perdie, does all them remain,
That of such false friendship been fain.

Spenser, Shep. Cal. May.

FALSETTO.* [Ital.] A musical term; a feigned voice.

The mock heroick falsetto of stupid tragedy.
Burke on a Regicide Peace.

FALSIFIABLE.† adj. [old Fr. falsifiable.] Liable to be counterfeited or corrupted.

Cotgrave.

FALSIFICATION. n. s. [falsification, Fr. from falsify.]

1. The act of counterfeiting any thing so as to make it appear what it is not.

Concerning the word of God, whether it be by misconstruction of the sense, or by falsification of the words, wittingly to endeavour that any thing may seem divine which is not, is very plainly to abuse, and even to falsify Divine evidence, which injury, offered but unto men, is most worthily counted heinous.

Hooker.

To counterfeit the dead image of a king in his coin is an high offence; but to counterfeit the living image of a king in his person, exceedeth all falsifications; except it should be that of a Mahomet, that counterfeits Divine honour. Bacon.

2. To counterfeit.

The poet invents this fiction to prevent posterity from searching after this isle, and to preserve his story from detection of falsification.

Broome.

FA'LSIFICATOR.* n. s. [Lat. falsificator.] A falsifier.

He discovereth a malign itch to have made me a falsificator like himself.

Ep. Morton, Discharge, &c. p. 175.

FA'LSIFIER.† n. s. [from falsify.]

1. One that counterfeits; one that makes any thing to seem what it is not. Huloet.

That punishment which is appointed for the forgers and falsifiers of the king's coin.

Ascham, Toxophil. B. 1.

It happens in theories built on too obvious or too few experiments, what happens to falsifiers of coin; for counterfeit money will endure some one proof, others another, but none of them all proofs.

Boyle.

2. A liar; one that contrives falsehoods.

Boasters are naturally falsifiers, and the people, of all others, that put their shams the worst together.

L'Estrange.

TO FA'LSIFY.† v. a. [falsifier, French.]

1. To counterfeit; to forge; to produce something for that which in reality it is not.

We cannot excuse that church, which through corrupt translations of Scripture, delivereth, instead of divine speeches, any thing repugnant unto that which God speaketh; or, through falsified additions, propoeth that to the people of God as Scripture which is in truth no Scripture.

Hooker.

The Irish bards use to forge and falsify every thing as they list, to please or displease any man.

Spenser on Ireland.

Falsifying the balances by deceit. Amos, viii. 5.

2. To confute; to prove false.

Our Saviour's prophecy stands good in the destruction of the temple, and the dissolution of the Jewish economy, when Jews and Pagans united all their endeavours, under Julian the apostate, to baffle and falsify the prediction. Add.

3. To violate; to break by falsehood.

It shall be thy work, thy shameful work, which is in thy power to shun, to make him live to see thy faith falsified, and his bed defiled.

Sidney.

He suddenly falsified his faith, and villainously slew Selymes the king, as he was bathing himself, mistrusting nothing less than the falsehood of the pirate.

Knolles, Hist.

This superadds treachery to all the other pestilential ingredients of the crime; 'tis the falsifying the most important truths.

Decay of Piety.

4. To pierce; to run through.

His crest is rash'd away, his ample shield Is falsify'd, and round with jav'ins fill'd.

Dryden, Æneid.

Of this word Dryden writes thus: My friends quarrelled at the word falsified, as an innovation in our language. The fact is confessed; for I remember not to have read it in any English author; though perhaps it may be found in Spenser's Fairy Queen. But suppose it be not there; why am I forbidden to borrow from the Italian, a polished language, the word which is wanting in my native tongue? Horace has given us a rule for coining words, si Græco fonte cadant, especially when other words are joined with them which explain the sense. I used the word falsify, in this place, to mean that the shield of Turnus was not of proof against the spears and javelins of the Trojans, which had pierced it through and through in many places. The words which accompany this new one, make my meaning plain:

Ma si l'Usbergo d'Ambi era perfetto,
Che mai poter falsarlo in nessun canto.

Ariosto, cant. xxvi.

Falsar cannot otherwise be turned than by falsified: for his shield was falsed, is not English. I might indeed have contented myself with saying his shield was pierced, and bored, and stuck with javelins.

Dryden.

Dryden, with all this effort, was not able to naturalise the new signification, which I have never seen copied, except once by some obscure nameless writer, and which indeed deserves not to be received.

Johnson.

The word certainly deserves not to be received in this sense; but it appears to have been a phrase of the fencing-school for thrust, from a passage in Beaumont and Fletcher, which Dryden probably had once noticed, (for he had the highest opinion of the language of these dramatists,) but had forgotten. Dr. Johnson says, that he had once seen the word copied; but he was not aware that Dryden himself was a copier.

How can he stand

Upon his guard who's hath fidlers in his head,
To which his feet must ever be a dancing?
Beside a falsify may spoil his cringe,
Or making of a leg, in which consists
Much of his court-perfection.

Beaumont and Fletcher, Coronation.

TO FA'LSIFY. v. n. To tell lies; to violate truth.

This point have we gained, that it is absolutely and universally unlawful to lie and falsify. South.

FA'LSITY.† n. s. [faulseté, old French; falsitas, Latin.]

1. Falsehood; contrariety to truth.

Neither are they able to break through those errors, wherein they are so determinately settled, that they pay unto falsity the whole sum of whatsoever love is owing unto God's truth.

Hooker.

Can you on him such falsities obtrude?

And as a mortal the most wise delude? Sandys.

Probability does not make any alteration, either in the truth or falsity of things; but only imports a different degree of their clearness or appearance to the understanding. South.

2. A lie; an error; a false assertion or position.

By falsities and lies the greatest part

Of mankind they corrupted. Milton, P. L.

That Danubius ariseth from the Pyrenean hills, that the earth is higher towards the North, are opinions truly charged on Aristotle by the restorer of Epicurus, and all easily confutable falsities.

Glanville, Scopsis.

TO FA'LTHER. v. n. [faltar, to be wanting, Spanish, vaulttur, a stammerer, Ice-landick, which is probably a word from the same radical.]

1. To hesitate in the utterance of words.

With faltering tongue, and trembling ev'ry vein,
Tell on, quoth she. Spenser, F. Q.

The pale assistants on each other star'd;
With gaping mouths for issuing words prepar'd;
The still-born sounds upon the palate hung,
And dy'd imperfect on the falt'ring tongue. Dryden.

He changes, gods! and falters at the question:
His fears, his words, his looks declare him guilty.

South.

2. To fail in any act of the body.

This earth shall have a feeling; and these stones
Prove armed soldiers, ere her native king
Shall falter under foul rebellious arms.

Shakspeare, Rich. II.

He found his legs falter. Wiseman, Surgery.

3. To fail in any act of the understanding.

How far ideots are concerned in the want or weakness of any or all faculties, an exact observation of their several ways of faltering would discover.

Locke.

TO FA'LTHER. v. a. To sift; to cleanse.

This word seems to be merely rustick or provincial.

Barley for malt must be bold, dry, sweet, and clean faltered from foulness, seeds and oats

Mortimer, Husbandry.

FA'LTHERING.* n. s. [from falter.] Feebleness; deficiency.

The deliquium and faltering of our spirits, the violence and torment of bodily pains.

Killingbeck's Serm. p. 238.

FA'LTHERINGLY. adv. [from falter.] With hesitation; with difficulty; with feebleness.

TO FA'MBLE.† v. a. [Goth. fimbul, stuttering; Danish, fambler.] To hesitate in the speech. This word I find only in Skinner, Dr. Johnson says; but it is in Sherwood's old dictionary, viz. "to fumble with the mouth, beguayer," i. e. to speak imperfectly; as also with its descendants, "a fumbling," and "a fambler." Cotgrave also renders beguayer, "to fumble, to muffle in the mouth, to speak as a child that but begins to speak." And this strengthens my opinion, that our northern word fuffle is a corruption of the present. See TO FAFFLE.

1. Celebrity; renown.

The house to be builded for the Lord must be exceeding magnifical, of fame and of glory throughout all countries.

1 Chron. xxii. 5.

The desire of fame will not suffer endowments to lie useless.

Addison, Spect.

What is this fame, for which we thoughts employ,

The owner's wife, which other men enjoy? Pope.

2. Report; rumour.

We have heard the fame of him, and all that he did in Egypt.

Jos. ix. 9.

I shall shew what are true fames.

Bacon.

TO FAME.* v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To make famous.

Your second birth

Will fame old Lethe's flood.

B. Jonson, Masque of Christmas.

Pr'ythee who fames thee?

Beaumont and Fletcher, King and no King.

2. To report.

That Richard — should fame king Edward the fourth a bastard. Sir G. Buck, Hist. K. R. III. p. 82.

FA'MED. part. adj. [from fame.] Renowned; celebrated; much talked of.

He is fam'd for mildness, peace and prayer.

Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

He purposes to seek the Clarian god,
Avoiding Delphos his more fam'd abode,
Since Phlegian robbers made unsafe the road.

Dryden.

Aristides was an Athenian philosopher, famed for his learning and wisdom; but converted to Christianity.

Addison.

FA'MELESS.† adj. [from fame.] Having no fame; without renown.

May he die fameless and forgot.

Beaum. and Fl. Bouduca.

Then let me, fameless, love the fields and woods,
The fruitful water'd vales and running floods.

May, Virgil.

FAMILIAR.† adj. [familiaris, Latin.]

1. Domestic; relating to a family.

They range familiar to the dome.

Pope.

2. Affable; not formal; easy in conversation.

Be thou familiar, but by no means vulgar.

Shakspeare, Hamlet.

Be not too familiar with Poin; for he misuses thy favours so much, that he swears thou art to marry his sister Nell.

Shakspeare.

3. Unceremonious; free, as among persons long acquainted.

Kalandar straight thought he saw his niece Parthenia, and was about in such familiar sort to have spoken unto her; but she, in grave and honourable manner, gave him to understand that he was mistaken.

Sidney.

4. Well known; brought into knowledge by frequent practice or custom.

I see not how the Scripture could be possibly made familiar unto all, unless far more should be read in the people's hearing than by a sermon can be opened.

Hooker.

Let us choose such noble counsel,
That war, or peace, or both at once, may be,
As things acquainted and familiar to us.

Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

Our sweet

Recess, and only consolation left,

Familiar to our eyes.

Milton, P. L.

One idea which is familiar to the mind, connected with others which are new and strange, will bring those new ideas into easy remembrance.

Watts on the Mind.

5. Well acquainted with; accustomed; habituated by custom.

Or chang'd at length, and to the place conform'd,
In temper and in nature, will receive

Familiar the fierce heat, and void of pain. Mil. P. L.

The senses at first let in particular ideas, and the mind, by degrees, growing familiar with some of them, they are lodged in the memory, and names got to them.

Locke.

He was amazed how so impotent and groveling an insect as I, could entertain such inhuman ideas, and in so familiar a manner, as to appear wholly unmoved at all the scenes of blood and desolation.

Swift, Gulliver's Travels.

Patient permit the sadly-pleasing strain;

Familiar now with grief, your tears refrain.

Pope, Odyssey.

6. Common; frequent.

To a wrong hypothesis, may be reduced the errors that may be occasioned by a true hypothesis, but not rightly understood: there is nothing more familiar than this.

Locke.

7. Easy; unconstrained.

He unreins

His muse, and sports in loose familiar strains.

Addison.

8. Too nearly acquainted.

VOL. II.

A poor man found a priest familiar with his wife, and because he spake it abroad and could not prove it, the priest sued him for defamation.

Camden.

9. Often applied, in the Bible, to spirits; supposed by some to allude to those who imposed on mankind by pretending to have a spirit or demon speaking from within their bodies.

Thy voice shall be as of one that hath a familiar spirit.

Isaiah, xxix. 4.

FAMILIAR. n. s.

1. An intimate; one long acquainted.

The king is a noble gentleman and my familiar.

Shakspeare.

When he finds himself avoided and neglected by his *familiar*s, this affects him.

Rogers.

2. A demon supposed to attend at call.

Love is a familiar; there is no evil angel but love.

Shakspeare.

FAMILIARITY. n. s. [familiarité, French; from familiar.]

1. Easiness of conversation; omission of ceremony; affability.

2. Acquaintance; habitude.

We contract at last such an intimacy and familiarity with them, as makes it difficult and irksome for us to call off our minds.

Atterbury.

3. Easy intercourse.

They say any mortals may enjoy the most intimate familiarities with these gentle spirits. Pope.

TO FAMILIARIZE.† v. a. [familiarizer, Fr.]

1. To make familiar; to make easy by habitude; to make common.

Being familiarized to it, men are not shocked at it.

Butler, Analogy of Religion.

Wethamstede, the learned and liberal abbot of St. Alban's, being desirous of familiarising the history of his patron saint to the monks of his convent.

Warton, Hist. of E. P. ii. 53.

2. To bring down from a state of distant superiority.

The genius smiled upon me with a look of compassion and affability that familiarized him to my imagination, and at once dispelled all fear and apprehensions.

Addison, Spect.

FAMILIARLY. adv. [from familiar.]

1. Unceremoniously; with freedom like that of long acquaintance.

Because that I familiarly sometimes

Do use you for my fool, and chat with you,

Your sawciness will jest upon my love.

Shakspeare, Com. of Err.

He talks as familiarly of John of Gault as if he had been sworn brother to him; and I'll be sworn he never saw him but once in the Tiltyard, and then he broke his head.

Shakspeare.

The Governour came to us, and after salutations, said familiarly, that he was come to visit us, and called for a chair and sat him down.

Bacon, New Atlantis.

2. Commonly; frequently: with the unconcernedness or easiness of long custom.

Lesser mists and fogs than those which covered Greece with so long darkness, do familiarly present our senses with as great alterations in the sun and moon.

Raleigh, History.

3. Easily; without solemnity; without formality.

Horace stills charms with graceful negligence, And without method talks us into sense; Will, like a friend, familiarly convey The truest notions in the easiest way.

Pope.

FAMILISM.* n. s. [from family.] The tenets of a deluded sect called the family of love, by their artful founder, H.

Nicholas, a Westphalian, who introduced his doctrine into England in the reign of Queen Elizabeth, and occasioned no small confusion, as the history of that reign shews.

We see one tainted with popery,—another with familism; and all these run a madding after their own fancies.

B. Hall, Rem. p. 5.

FAMILIST.* n. s. [from family.]

1. One of the sect called the family of love.

Though the familists, libertines, and anabaptists, stand in opposition to papists; yet the great foul of souls catcheth them all with the same foul birdlime of impure lusts.

Paquot, Heresiology, p. 208.

2. A master of a family.

If you will needs be a familist, and marry, must not the want of issue among your greatest afflictions. Osborn, Advice to a Son, (1658,) p. 70.

FAMILLE. [en famille, French.] In a family way; domestically.

Deluded mortals, whom the great

Chuse for companions tete à tete;

Who at their dinners, en famille,

Get leave to sit when'er you will. Swift.

FAMILY. n. s. [familia, Latin; famille, French.]

1. Those who live in the same house; household.

The night made little impression on myself; but I cannot answer for my whole family; for my wife prevailed on me to take somewhat.

Swift.

2. Those that descend from one common progenitor; a race; a tribe; a generation.

Of Gershon was the family of the Libnites.

Numb. iii. 21.

3. A course of descent; a genealogy.

If thy ancient but ignoble blood

Has crept through scoundrels ever since the flood,

Go and complain thy family is young,

Nor own thy fathers have been fools so long. Pope.

4. A class; a tribe; a species.

There be two great families of things, sulphureous and mercurial, inflammable and not inflammable, mature and crude, oily and watry.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

FA'MINE. n. s. [famine, French; fames, Latin.] Scarcity of food; dearth; distress for want of victuals.

Our castle's strength

Will laugh a siege to scorn: here let them lie,
Till famine and the ague eat them up. Sh. Macb.

Famines have not been of late observed to be rare, partly because of the industry of mankind, partly by those supplies that come by sea, but principally by the goodness of God.

Hale.

This city never felt a siege before,
But from the lake receiv'd its daily store;
Which now shut up, and millions crowded here,
Famine will soon in multitudes appear.

Dryden, Ind. Emp.

TO FA'MISH. v. a. [from fames, Latin; famis, old French.]

1. To kill with hunger; to starve; to destroy by want of food.

What, did he marry me to famish me? Shaks.

The pains of famish'd Tantalus he'll feel,

And Sisyphus that labours up the hill

The rolling rock in vain; and curst Ixion's wheel.

Dryden.

2. To kill by deprivation or denial of any thing necessary to life. Milton uses it with of.

Thin air

Above the clouds will pine his entrails gross,
And famish him of breath, if not of bread.

Milton, P. I.

To FA'MISH. v. n. To die of hunger; to suffer extreme hunger.

You are all resolved rather to die than to famish.
Shakspeare.

FA'MISHMENT.† n. s. [from famish.] The pain of hunger; want of food.
So sore was the famishment in the land.

Gen. xlvii. 13. Mathewe's Trans.

Laugh and be fat, sit all you touch is gold,
Though that food your soul's famishment affords.

Davies, Wil's Pilgrimage, sign. V. 2. b.

Apiclus, thou did'st on thy gut bestow
Full ninety millions, yet when this was spent,
Ten millions still remained to thee; which thou,
Fearing to suffer thirst and famishment,

In poison'd potion drank'st. Hakevill on Prov.

FAMO'SITY. n. s. [from famous.] Renown; celebrity. Dict.

FA'MOUS.† adj. [fameus, French; famosus, Latin.]

1. Renowned; celebrated; much talked of and praised.

Henry the Fifth, too famous to live long;
England ne'er lost a king of so much worth.

Shakspeare, Hen. V.

There rose up before Moses two hundred and fifty princes of the assembly, famous in the congregation, men of renown. Numb. xvi. 2.

She became famous among women; for they had executed judgment upon her. Ezek. xxiii. 10.

Pyreus was only famous for counterfeiting all base things; as earthen pitchers, a scullery, rogues together by the ears, and swine tumbling in the mire; whereupon he was surnamed Rupographus.

Peacham on Drawing.

I shall be nam'd among the famousest
Of women, sung at solemn festivals. Milton, S. A.

Many, besides myself, have heard our famous
Waller own, that he derived the harmony of his numbers from the Godfrey of Bulloign, turned into English by Fairfax. Dryden.

2. It has sometimes a middle signification; and imports fame, whether for good or ill.

Menecears and Menas, famous pirates,
Make the sea serve them. Shaks. Ant. and Cleop.

3. Sometimes, notorious; like the Latin famosus, which has also the sense of infamous.

The death of slaves and famous malefactors.

Tillotson, Sermon on 1 John, iv. 9.

FA'MOUSED.† adj. Renowned; much talked of; famous.

The painful warrior famoused for fight.

Shakspeare, Sonnet, 25.

The wine is indeed the most generous grape of Persia, and famoused all over the Orient.

Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 130.

FA'MOUSLY.† adv. [from famous.]

1. With great renown; with great celebration.

Then this land was famously enriched
With politic grave counsel; then the king
Had virtuous uncles to protect his grace.

Shakspeare, Rich. III.

They looked on the particulars as things famously spoken of, and believed, and worthy to be recorded and read. Grev, Cosm. Sacra.

2. Notoriously.

He had never been praised by Gabriel Harvey for his labour, if therein he had not been so famously absurd.

Nash, Apol. of Pierce Penilesse. (1593.)

FA'MOUSNESS.† n. s. [from famous.] Celebrity; great fame. Sherwood.

Famousness, unattended with endearing causes, is a quality so undesirable, that even infamy and folly can confer it. Boyle, Style of H. Ser. p. 186.

To FA'MULATE.† v. n. [famulor, Latin.]

To serve. This word is in the vocabulary of Cockram. Chaucer has "fä- muler foe," for domestick foe, March. Tale. And the word famulist is in use at Queen's College, in Oxford, for an inferior member of it.

FA'MULIST.* See To FAMULATE.

FAN.† n. s. [fann, Saxon; vannus, Lat.]

1. An instrument used by ladies to move the air and cool themselves.

With scars, and fans, and double change of bravery,

With amber bracelets, beads, with all this knavery.

Shakspeare,

'Tis a sweet walk; and if the wind be stirring,

Serves like a fan to cool. Beaumont & Fl. Kn. of Mal.

Flavia, the least and slightest toy

Can with resistless art employ;

In other hands the fan would prove

An engine of small force in love;

But she, with such an air and mien,

Not to be told or safely seen,

Directs its wanton motions so,

That it wounds more than Cupid's bow;

Gives coolness to the matchless dame,

To every other breast a flame.

Gay.

The modest fan was lifted up no more,

And virgins smil'd at what they blush'd before.

Pope.

2. Any thing spread out like a woman's fan into a triangle with a broad base.

As a peacock and crane were in company, the peacock spread his tail, and challenged the other to shew him such a fan of feathers. L'Estrange.

3. The instrument by which the chaff is blown away when corn is winnowed.

[van, French.]

Faile, strawfork, and rake, with a fan that is strong.

Tusser.

Asses shall eat clean provender, winnowed with the shovel and with the fan. Isaiah, xxx. 24.

In the wind and tempest of fortune's frown,

Distinction with a broad and powerful fan,

Puffing at all, winnows the light away.

Shakspeare, Tr. and Cress.

For the cleansing of corn is commonly used either a wickerfan, or a fan with sails.

Mortimer, Husbandry.

4. Any thing by which the air is moved; wings.

The pris'ner, with a spring, from prison broke;
Then stretch'd his feather'd fans with all his might,

And to the neighb'ring maple wing'd his flight.

Dryden.

5. An instrument to raise the fire.

Nature worketh in us all a love to our own counsels: the contradiction of others is a fan to inflame that love. Hooker.

To FAN. v. a.

1. To cool or recreate with a fan.

She was fanned into slumbers by her slaves.

Spectator.

2. To ventilate; to affect by air put in motion.

Let every feeble humour shake your hearts;
Your enemies, with nodding of their plumes,

Fan you into despair. Shakspeare, Coriol.

The Norwegian banners flout the sky,

And fan our people cold. Shaks. Macbeth.

The air

Floats as they pass, fann'd with unnumber'd plumes:

From branch to branch the smaller birds with song

Solac'd the woods, and spread their painted wings,

Till ev'n. Milton, P. L.

The fanning wind upon her bosom blows;

To meet the fanning wind the bosom rose:

The fanning wind and purling streams continue her repose. Dryden, Cymon and Iphigenia.

Calm as the breath which fans our eastern groves,

And bright, as when thy eyes first lighted up our loves.

Dryden.

And now his shorter breath, with sultry air,
Pants on her neck, and fans her parting hair. Pope.

3. To separate, as by winnowing.

I have collected some few, therein fanning the old, not omitting any. Bacon, Apophthegms.

Not so the wicked; but as chaff, which, fann'd,

The wind drives, so the wicked shall not stand

In judgement. Milton, Ps. i. 11.

FANA'TICAL.* adj. [Latin fanaticus.]

Enthusiastick; wild; mad.

I cannot but earnestly desire, and pray for, an effectual reformation of manners and propagation of the Gospel by all sober and christian methods; but may venture to foretel, without pretending to the spirit of prophecy, that this great work will never be accomplished by an enthusiastick and fanatical head.

By. Lavington, Enth. of Metho. and Papists compared, Pref.

FANA'TICALLY.* adv. [from fanatical.]

In a wild enthusiastick way.

The liberty they pursued was a liberty from order, from virtue, from morals, and from religion; and was neither hypocritically nor fanatically followed. Burke.

FANA'TICALNESS.* n. s. [from fanatical.]

Religious frenzy.

That temper of profaneness, whereby a man is disposed to contemn and despise all religion, how slightly soever men may think of it, is much worse than infidelity, than fanaticness, than idolatry; and of the two 'tis much more eligible for a man to be an honest heathen and a devout idolater, than a profane Christian. Wilk. on Nat. Rel. ii. 1.

FANA'TICISM. n. s. [from fanatic.] Enthusiasm; religious frenzy.

A church whose doctrines are derived from the clear fountains of the Scriptures, whose polity and discipline are formed upon the most uncorrupted models of antiquity, which has stood unshaken by the most furious assaults of popery on the one hand, and fanaticism on the other; has triumphed over all the arguments of its enemies, and has nothing now to contend with but their slanders and calumnies. Rogers.

FANA'TICK. adj. [fanaticus, Latin; fanatique, French.] Enthusiastick; struck with a superstitious frenzy.

Osiris, Isis, Orus, and their train,
With monstrous shapes and sorceries abus'd Fanatick Egypt, and her priests, to seek
Their wand'ring gods disguis'd in brutish forms.

Milton, P. L.

FANA'TICK. n. s. [from the adjective.]

An enthusiast; a man mad with wild notions of religion.

The double armature of St. Peter is a more destructive engine than the tumultuary weapon snatcht up by a fanatic. Decay of Piet.

FA'NCIFUL. adj. [fancy and full.]

1. Imaginative; rather guided by imagination than reason: of persons.

Some fanciful men have expected nothing but confusion and ruin from those very means, whereby both that and this is most effectually prevented. Woodward, Nat. Hist.

2. Dictated by the imagination, not the reason; full of wild images: of things.

What treasures did he bury in his sumptuous buildings? and how foolish and fanciful were they? Hayward.

It would show as much singularity to deny this, as it does a fanciful facility to affirm it.

Garth, Pref. to Ovid.

FA'NCIFULLY.† adv. [from fanciful.] According to the wildness of imagination.

What conceited old man is this, said he, that talks thus fancifully?

More, Antid. against Idolatry, Pref.

FANCIFULNESS. n. s. [from fanciful.]
Addiction to the pleasures of imagination; habit of following fancy rather than reason.

Albertus Magnus, with somewhat too much curiosity, was somewhat transported with too much fancifulness towards the influences of the heavenly motions, and astrological calculations.

Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

FANCY. n. s. [contracted from phantasy, phantasia, Latin; φαντασία, Greek. It should be phantasy.]

1. Imagination; the power by which the mind forms to itself images and representations of things, persons, or scenes of being.

Then to the well-trod stage anon,
If Jonson's learned sock be on,
Or sweetest Shakspeare, Fancy's child,
Warble his native wood-notes wild. Milton, L'All.

In the soul

Are many lesser faculties, that serve Reason as chief: among those fancy next Her office holds; of all external things, Which the five watchful senses represent, She forms imaginations, airy shapes, Which reason joining, or disjoining, frames All what we affirm, or what deny, and call Our knowledge or opinion. Milton, P. L.

Though no evidence affects the fancy so strongly as that of sense, yet there is other evidence, which gives as full satisfaction and as clear a conviction to our reason. Atterbury.

Love is by fancy led about,
From hope to fear, from joy to doubt:
Whom we now a goddess call,
Divinely grac'd in every feature,
Strait's a deform'd, a perjurd creature;
Love and hate are fancy all. Granville.

2. An opinion bred rather by the imagination than the reason.

Men's private fancies must give place to the higher judgment of that church which is in authority over them. Hooker.

A person of a full and ample fortune, who was not disturbed by any fancies in religion. Clarendon.

I have always had a fancy, that learning might be made a play and recreation to children. Locke.

3. Taste; idea; conception of things.

The little chapel called the Salutation is very neat, and built with a pretty fancy. Ad. on Italy.

4. Image; conception; thought.

How now, my lord, why do you keep alone;
Of sorriest fancies your companions making,
Using those thoughts which should indeed have died

With them they think on? Shakspeare, Macbeth.

5. Inclination; liking; fondness.

His fancy lay extremely to travelling.

L'Estrange.

For you, fair Hermia, look you arm yourself,
To fit your fancies to your father's will;
Or else the law of Athens yields you up
To death, or to a vow of single life. Shakspeare.

A resemblance of humour or opinion, a fancy for the same business or diversion, is a ground of affection. Collier.

6. In Shakspeare it signifies love.

Tell me where is fancy bred,
Or in the heart, or in the head?
How begot, how nourished?
It is engender'd in the eyes,
With gazing fed, and fancy dies
In the cradle where it lies. Shaks. Merch. of Ven.

7. Caprice; humour; whim.

True worth shall gain me, that it may be said
Desert, not fancy, once a woman led.

Dryden, Ind. Emp.

The sultan of Egypt kept a good correspondence with the Jacobites towards the head of the Nile, for fear they should take a fancy to turn the course of that river. Arbutnot.

One that was just entr'ing upon a long journey, took up a fancy of putting a trick upon Mercury. L'Estrange.

8. False notion.

The altering of the scent, colour, or taste of fruit, by infusing, mixing, or cutting into the bark or root of the tree, herb, or flower, any coloured, aromatic, or medicinal substance, are but fancies: the cause is, for that those things have passed their period, and nourish not.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

9. Something that pleases or entertains without real use or value.

London-pride is a pretty fancy for borders.

Mortimer.

To FANCY.† v. n. [from the noun.] To imagine; to believe without being able to prove.

The heart fancieth as a woman's heart in travail. Eccius. xxiv. 5.

All are not always bound to hate and punish the true enemies of religion, much less any whom they may fancy to be so: all are always obliged to love its true friends, and to pray for its very enemies. Sprat, Serm.

If our search has reached no farther than simile and metaphor, we rather fancy than know, and are not yet penetrated into the inside and reality of the thing; but content ourselves with what our imaginations furnish us with. Locke.

To FANCY. v. a.

1. To portray in the mind; to image to himself; to imagine.

But he whose noble genius is allow'd,
Who with stretch'd pinions soars above the crowd;
Who mighty thought can clothe with many dress,
He whom I fancy, but can ne'er express. Dryden, Jew.

2. To like; to be pleased with.

Ninus both admiring her judgment and valour, together with her person and external beauty, fancied her so strongly, as, neglecting all princely respects, he took her from her husband. Rat. Hist.

It is a little hard that the queen cannot demolish this town in whatever manner she pleaseth to fancy. Swift.

FANCYFRAMED.* adj. [fancy and framed.]

Created by adj.
He his own fancyframed foe defies;
In rage, "My arms, give me my arms," he cries! Crashaw, Poems, p. 53.

FANCYFREE.* adj. [fancy and free.] Free from the power of love. See the sixth sense of FANCY.

The imperial votaries passed on,
In maiden meditation, fancyfree. Sh. Mids. N. Dr.

FANCYMONGER. n. s. [from fancy.] One who deals in tricks of imagination.

'There is a man haunts the forest, that abuses our young plants with carving Rosalind on their barks; hangs odes upon hawthorns, and elegies on brambles; all, forsooth, deifying the name of Rosalind. If I could meet that fancymonger, I would give him some good counsel; for he seems to have the quotidian of love upon him.

Shaks. As you like it.

FANCYSICK.† adj. [fancy and sick.] One whose imagination is unsound; one whose distemper is in his own mind.

All fancysick she is, and pale of cheer.

'Tis not necessity, but opinion, that makes men miserable; and when we come to be fancysick, there's no cure. L'Estrange.

FAND for found. It is retained in Scotland.

This when as true by trial he out fand,
He bade to open wide his brazen gate. Spenser.

FANDA'NGO.* n. s. [Spanish.] A kind of very lively dance which the Spaniards have learned from the Indians. V. Comon, Dict. Sobrin. Aumentado, Antwerp, 1769. Labat, the French missionary, says it was brought from Guinea by the negroes into the West Indies, and thence into Spain.

Our evening ended with a ball, where we had for the first time the pleasure of seeing the fandango danced. It is odd and entertaining enough, when they execute with precision and agility all the various footings, wheelings of the arms, and crackings of the fingers; but it exceeds in wantonness all the dances I ever beheld.

Swinburne, Trav. through Spain. L. 6.

FANE. n. s. [fane, French; fanum, Latin.] A temple; a place consecrated to religion. A poetical word.

Nor fane, nor capitol,

The prayers of priests, nor times of sacrifice,
Embarms all of fury, shall lift up
Their rotten privilege! Shakspeare, Coriol.

Old Calibe, who kept the sacred fane
Of Juno, now she seem'd. Dryden, Æn.

Yet some to fanes repair'd, and humble rites
Perform'd to Thor and Woden, fabled gods,
Who with their vot'ries in one ruin shar'd. Philips.

A sacred fane in Egypt's fruitful lands,
Hewn from the Theban mountain's rocky womb. Tickell.

The fields are ravish'd from th' industrious swains,
From men their cities, and from gods their fanes. Pope.

FANFARE.* n. s. [French.] A sounding of trumpets, or a coming into the lists with sound of trumpets; hence also any publick bravado, or flourish; any loud-resounding brag, or ostentation. Cotgrave. See FANFARON, which Ménage traces to an Arabick expression.

Fanfare [is] a sort of military air or flourish commonly short and lively, which is performed by trumpets, and imitated by other instruments.

Appendix to Mus. Dict. (1769), p. 20.

FANFARON. n. s. [French, from the Spanish. Originally in Arabick it signifies one who promises what he cannot perform. Ménage.]

1. A bully; a hector.

Virgil makes Aeneas a bold avower of his own virtues, which, in the civility of our poets, is the character of a fanfaron or hector.

Dryden on Dram. Poesy.

2. A blusterer; a boaster of more than he can perform.

There are *fanfaron*s in the trials of wit too, as well as in feats of arms; and none so forward to engage in argument or discourse as those that are least able to go through with it. L'Estrange.

FANFARONADE.† n. s. [fanfaronnade, Fr.]

A bluster; a tumour of fictitious dignity.

The bishop copied this proceeding from the fanfaronade of Monsieur Bouffleurs. Swift.

To FANG.† v. a. [Goth. fang, seizure, Serenius; Sax. fangen, seized, from penzan; Dutch, wangen; Germ. fangen, to seize.] To seize; to gripe; to clutch. To vang is yet used in Devonshire.

Destruction fang mankind! Shakspeare, Timon.
But whilst he this hot humour hugs,
Death fang'd the remnant of his hugs.

Verses cited in Clar. and Whil. comp. 1727. p. 54.

FANG. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. The long tusks of a boar or other animal by which the prey is seized and held; any thing like them.

Here feel we but the penalty of Adam,
The season's difference; as the icy fang
And churlish chiding of the Winter's wind;
Which, when it bites and blows upon my body,
Ev'n till I shrink with cold, I smile and say,
This is no flattery. Shakespeare, As you like it.

Some creatures have overlong or outgrowing teeth, which we call fangs or tusks; as boars, pikes, salmon, and dogs, though less.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Prepar'd to fly,
The fatal fang drove deep within his thigh,
And cut the nerves: the nerves no more sustain
The bulk; the bulk, upro'd falls headlong on the plain. Dryden, Ovid.

Then charge, provoke the lion to the rage
Of fangs and claws, and stooping from your horse, Rivet the panting savage to the ground. Ad. Cato.

2. The nails; the talons.

3. Any shoot or other thing by which hold is taken.

The protuberant fangs of the yuca are to be treated like the tuberoses. Enclyn, Kalendar.

FA'NGED. adj. [from fang.] Furnished with fangs or long teeth; furnished with any instruments of destruction, which can be exercised in imitation of fangs.

My two schoolfellows,
Whom I will trust as I will adders fang'd,
They bear the mandate. Shakespeare, Hamlet.

Not Scythians, nor fierce Dacians, onward rush
With half the speed, nor half so swift retreat:
In chariots, fang'd with scythes, they scour the field,

Drive through our wedg'd battalions with a whirl,
And strew a dreadful harvest on the plain.

Philips, Briton.

FA'NGLE.† n. s. [from penzan, Sax. to attempt. Skinner.] Silly attempt; trifling scheme. It is never used, or rarely, but in contempt with the epithet new;
as, new fangles, new fangleness. So far
Dr. Johnson, who cites no example.
But it is used, without the epithet new,
and in the sense of any trifle; and, as
Mr. Pegge has also observed, may be considered a cant or arbitrary word rather than deduced from the Sax. penzan, or from a fanciful etymon assigned to newfangle. See NEWFANGLED.

There was no feather, no fangle, jem, nor jewel,
—left behind. Greene, Mamillia, (1583.)

A hatred to fangles and the French fooleries of his time. A. Wood, Ath. Or. ii. col. 456.

FA'NGLED. adj. [from fangle.] This word seems to signify gawdy; ridiculously shewy; vainly decorated: new fangled, is therefore new fashioned; dressed out
in new decorations.

Quick wits be in desire new fangled, and in purpose unconstant. Ascham.

A book! oh, rare one!
Be not, as in this fangled world, a garment
Nobler than it covers. Shakespeare, Cym.

FA'NGLESS. adj. [from fang.] Toothless;
without teeth.

The king hath wasted all his rods
On late offenders, that he now doth lack
The very instruments of chastisement;
So that his pow'r, like to a fangless lion,
May offer, but not hold. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

FA'NGOT. n. s. A quantity of wares; as raw silk, &c. containing from one or two hundred weight three quarters.

Dict.

FA'NNEL.† n. s. [from fan, Fr. See FANON.]
A sort of ornament like a scarf, worn about the left arm of a mass-priest when he officiates. Dict.

Item, a suite of vestmentes of blewe velvet,
or frised with needle worke, with albes, stoles,
and fannels agreeable to the same.

Will of Sir T. Pope, Life, p. 338.

FA'NNER.† n. s. [from fan.]

1. One that plays a fan.

I will send unto Babylon fanners that shall fan
her. Jerem. li. 2.

2. A winnower of corn.

FA'NNING.* n. s. [from fan.] Ventilation.

Huloet.

He will be often very agreeably entertained with grateful sounds in the natural musick of birds, the fannings of woods, the purling of streams, or the falls of water.

Coventry, Phil. to Hyd. Conv. 2.

FA'NON.* n. s. [Fr. fanon; low Lat. fano;
Goth. fana; Lat. pannus.]

1. A sort of ornament, worn about the arm of a mass-priest; the fannel. See FANNEL.

Tunics, stoles, fanons, and mitres.

Bale on the Revel. P. li. sign. k. vj. b.

2. A banner; and in blazon, any large bracelet that hangs down in fashion of the maniple, or fanon aforesaid, from the arm. Cotgrave.

FA'NTASIED. adj. [from fantasy.] Filled with fancies or wild imaginations.

As I travell'd hither through the land,
I found the people strangely fantasied.

Shakespeare, K. John.

FA'NTASM.† n. s. [fantasme, old Fr. phan- tasma, Lat. See PHANTASM.] A thing not real, but appearing to the imagination.

FANTA'STICAL.† adj. [fantastique,
FANTA'STICK.] Fr.; from fantasy.

1. Irrational; bred only in the imagination.

The delight that a man takes from another's sin, can be nothing else but a fantastical, preter-natural complacency, arising from that which he really has no feeling of.

South.

2. Subsisting only in the fancy; imaginary.

Present feats

Are less than horrible imaginings:
My thought, whose murder yet is but fantastical,
Shakes so my single state of man, that function
Is smother'd in surmise; and nothing is,
But what is not. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

Men are so possessed with their own fancies, that they take them for oracles; and are arrived to some extraordinary revelations of truth, when indeed they do but dream dreams, and amuse themselves with the fantastick ideas of a busy imagination. Decay of Piety.

3. Unreal; apparent only; having the nature of phantoms which only assume visible forms occasionally. Thus fantas- tical colours are the same as emphat- ical. See EMPHATICAL.

Are ye fantastical, or that indeed

Which outwardly ye shew? Shakespeare, Macbeth.

Many of them [lying wonders] shall be fantas- tical, deceiving the eye like the tricks of jugs-lers. Such were the rods and serpents of Pharaoh's enchanters, which were devoured of Aaron's rod;
because they were but shadows, and his a substance. Shelford's Learned Discourses, p. 307.

An aerial fantastick body. South, Serm. vii. 16.

4. Uncertain; unsteady; irregular.

Nor happiness can I, nor misery feel,
From any turn of her fantastick wheel. Prior.

5. Whimsical; fanciful; capricious; humorous; indulgent of one's own imagination.

They put such words in the mouths of one of these fantastical mind-infected people, that children and musicians call lovers. Sidney.

I'll knit it up in silken strings,
With twenty odd conceited true love knots:
To be fantastick, may become a youth.
Of greater time than I. Shak. Two Gent. of Ver.

Duunvir is provided with an imperious, expensive, and fantastick mistress; to whom he retires from the conversation of a discreet and affectionate wife. Tatler.

We are apt to think your medallists a little fantas- tical in the different prices they set upon their coins, without any regard to the metal of which they are composed. Addison.

FANTA'STICALITY. adv. [from fantastical.]

1. By the power of imagination.

2. Capriciously; humorously; unsteadily.
England is so idly king'd,
Her sceptre so fantastically borne,
By a vain, giddy, shallow, humorous youth,
That fear attends her not. Shakespeare, Hen. V.

3. Whimsically; in compliance with imagination.

One cannot so much as fantastically choose,
even or odd, he thinks not why.

Grew, Cosmol. Sacra.

FANTA'STICALNESS.† n. s. [from fantas-
FANTA'STICKNESS. tical.]

1. Homourousness; mere compliance with fancy.

Vain Delight, thou feeder of my follies
With light fantastickness, be thou in favour!

Beaumont and Fl. Four Plays in One.

2. Whimsicalness; unreasonableness.

I dare not to assume to myself to have put him out of conceit with it, by having convinced him of the fantastickness of it. Tillotson, Preface.

3. Caprice; unsteadiness.

Nor is this corruption happened to the Greek language, as it used to happen to others, either by the law of the conqueror, or inundation of strangers; but it is insensibly crept in by their own supine negligence and fantastickness.

Howell, Lett. ii. 57.

FANTA'STICK.* n. s. A fantastick, conceited, or whimsical person.

A vain fantastick, that takes proud clothes to be part of himself. Dr. Jackson, Works, i. 62.

New-fangled toys, and trimming slight
Which takes our late fantasticks with delight.

Milton, Vac. Exercise.

FANTA'STICKLY.* adv. [from fantastick.]
Irrationally; whimsically.

He is neither too fantastickly melancholy, or too rashly choleric. B. Jonson, Cymth. Revels.

FANTASY. n. s. [fantasie, Fr. phantasia,
Lat. phantasia, Gr.]

1. Fancy; imagination; the power of imagining. See FANCY.

How now, Horatio? you tremble and look pale!
Is not this something more than fantasy?

Shakespeare, Hamlet.

I talk of dreams,

Which are the children of an idle brain,
Begot of nothing but vain fantasy;
Which is as thin of substance as the air,
And more unconstant than the wind.

Shakespeare, Rom. and Jul.

He is superstitious grown of late,
Quite from the main opinion he held once
Of fantasy, of dreams, and ceremonies.

Shakespeare, Jul. Ces.

Go you, and where you find a maid,
That ere she sleep hath thrice her prayer said,
Rein up the organs of her fantasy,
Sleep she as sound as careless infancy. Shaks.

These spirits of sense, in fantasy's high court,
Judge of the forms of objects, ill or well;
And so they send a good or ill report
Down to the heart, where all affections dwell.

Davies.

By the power of fantasy we see colours in a dream, or a mad man sees things before him which are not there.

Newton.

2. Idea; image of the mind.

And with the sug'ry sweet thereof allure,
Chaste ladies' ears to fantasies impure.

Spenser, Hubb. Tale.

3. Humour; inclination.

I would wish that both you and others would cease from drawing the Scriptures to your fantasies and affections.

Whitgift.

To FA'NTASY.* v. a. [from the noun; old Fr. fantasier.] To like; to fancy.
Fantasying, or, having a mind to, a thing.

Hulot.

The king, during his favour, fantasied so much his daughter, that almost all things began to grow out of frame.

Cavendish, Life of Wolsey.

FA'NTOM. n. s. [See PHANTOM.] Something not real, but appearing to the imagination.

FA'NTOM-CORN.* n. s. Lank or light corn. A northern word. Grose, Brockett, &c.

Fantom-corn is corn that has little bulk or solidity in it, as a spirit or spectre.

Ray, N. C. Words, p. 25.

FAP. adj. Fuddled; drunk. It seems to have been a cant word in the time of Shakspeare.

The gentleman had drunk himself out of his five senses; and being fap, sir, was, as they say, cashiered.

Shakspeare.

FA'QUIR.* n. s. [Arab.] A kind of Mahometan religious; a sort of dervish; travelling about, and collecting alms. Written also fakir and fakeer, and usually pronounced with the accent on the last syllable.

Such ill-tim'd gravity, such serious folly,
Might well befit the solitary student,
Th' unpractis'd dervise, or sequester'd faquir.

Johnson, Irene.

FAR.† adv. [Sax. feop, far; feoppe, farther; feoppepe, farthest or farthest; and our comparative was formerly ferrester, as our superlative was ferrest or farrest; "then walked I ferrester," P. Plowman's Crede;—"a vice—farrest from humanity," Sir T. Elyot, Governour; Chaucer, "ferrest," Prol. C. T. fairra, Goth. fara, Icel. to depart, to go away.]

1. To great extent in length.

Pay sacred reverence to Apollo's song,
Lest wrathful the far-shooting god emit
His fatal arrows.

Prior.

2. To a great extent every way. This is less proper.

Vast and great
Is what I love: the far extended ocean
To a little riv'let I prefer.

Prior.

With costly eates Rome stain'd her frugal board;
Then with ill-gotten gold she bought a lord:
Corruption, discord, luxury combin'd,
Down sunk the far fam'd mistress of mankind.

Arbutnot.

From the same lineage stern Æetes came,
[The far fam'd brother of th' enchantress dame.

Pope.

3. To a great distance progressively.

Be factious for redress of all these griefs,
And I will set this foot of mine as far
As who goes farthest.

Shakspeare, Jul. Cæs.

Is it far you ride?

—As far, my lord, as will fill up the time

—'Twixt this and supper. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

Far from that hated face the Trojans fly;

All but the fool who sought his destiny.

Dryden, Æn.

4. Remotely; at a great distance.

In a kingdom rightly ordered, after a law is once published, it presently takes effect far and wide; all states framing themselves thereunto.

Hooker.

And after that long strayed here and there,
Through every field and forest far and near.

Spenser, Hubb. Tale.

Far be it from me to justify the cruelties used towards them, which had their reward soon after.

Bacon, Holy War.

He sent light horsemen into Mesopotamia with a guide, because the country was unto him best known; following not far after himself with all his army.

Knolles.

And yet the lights which in my tower do shine,
Mine eyes, which view all objects near and far,
Look not into this little world of mine.

Davies.

God hath bid dwell far off all anxious cares,
And not molest us; unless we ourselves
Seek them with wandering thoughts, and notions vain.

Milton, P. L.

I have been bunting up and down, far and near,
since your unhappy indisposition, to find out a remedy.

L' Estrange.

The nations far and near contend in choice,
And send the flow'r of war by public voice.

Dryden.

The painted lizard and the birds of prey,
Foes of the frugal kind, be far away. Dryd. Virg.
But from the reading of my book and me,
Be far, ye foes of virtuous poetry!

Who fortune's fault upon the poor can throw,
Point at the tatter'd coat and ragged shoe.

Dryden, Pers.

Far off you view'd them with a longing eye
Upon the topmost branch.

Dryden.

These words are so far from establishing any dominion, that we find quite the contrary. Locke.
Till on the Po his blasted corps was hurl'd,
Far from his country, in the western world.

Addison, Ovid.

5. To a distance.

As far as the East is from the West, so far hath he removed our transgressions from him.

Ps. ciii. 12.

Neither did those that were sent, and travelled far off, undertake so difficult enterprises without a conductor.

Ralegh.

But all in vain! which when he saw, he ceas'd
Contending, and remov'd his tents far off.

Milton, P. L.

I had always a curiosity to look back into the sources of things, and view in my mind, so far as I was able, the beginning and progress of a rising world.

Burnet, Theology.

A lion's hide around his loins he wore;
The well-poiz'd javelin to the field he bore,
Inur'd to blood; the far destroying dart,
And the best weapon, an undaunted heart.

Addison, Ovid.

6. In a great part.

When they were by Jebus the day was far spent.

Judg. xix. 11.

7. In a great proportion; by many degrees. It is commonly used with some word noting the comparative, but Dryden has used it absolutely.

Who can find a virtuous woman? for her price is far above rubies.

Prov. xxxi. 10.

Such a communication passeth far better through the water than air.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Those countries have far greater rivers, and far higher mountains to pour down waters, than any part of the old world.

Bacon, New Atlantis.

The face of war,
In ancient times, doth differ far
From what our fiery battles are.

Waller.

Of negatives we have far the least certainty, and they are usually hardest, and many times impossible to be proved.

Tillotson.

Latin is a more succinct language than the Italian, Spanish, French, or even than the English, which, by reason of its monosyllables, is far the most compendious of them.

Dryden.

The field is spacious I design to sow,
With oxen far unfit to draw the plough.

Dryden.

Besides, he's lovely far above the rest,

With you immortal, and with beauty blest.

Ah! hope not yet to breathe thy native air;

Far other journey first demands thy care.

Pope, Odyssey.

8. To a great height; magnificently. This is perhaps only in Shakspeare.

I do not think

So fair an outward, and such stuff within,
Endows a man but him.

—You speak him far.

—I don't extend him, sir. Shakspeare, Cymb.

9. To a certain point; to a certain degree.

The substance of the service of God, so far forth as it hath in it any thing more than the law of reason doth teach, may not be invented of men, as it is amongst the heathen; but must be received from God himself.

Hooker.

Answer them

How far forth you do like their articles.

Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

Not to resolve, is to resolve; and many times it breeds as many necessities, and engageth as far in some other sort, as to resolve.

Bacon.

Of this I need not many words to declare how far it is from being so much as any part of repentance.

Hammond.

My discourse is so far from being equivalent to the position he mentions, that it is a perfect contradiction to it.

Tillotson.

The custom of these tongues sometimes so far influences the expressions, that in these epistles one may observe the force of the Hebrew conjugations.

Locke on St. Paul's Epistles.

10. FAR off. At a great distance.

For though I fled him angry, yet recall'd
To life prolong'd, and promis'd race, I now
Gladly behold, though but his utmost skirts
Of glory, and far off his steps adore.

Milt. P. L.

11. FAR off. To a great distance.

Cherubick watch, and of a sword the flame
Wide-waving, all approach far off to flight,
And guard all passage to the tree of life.

Milton, P. L.

12. Off is joined with far, when far, noting distance, is not followed by a preposition: as, I set the boat far off; I set the boat far from me.

13. FAR is used often in composition: as, far-shooting, far-seeing.

FAR-ABOUT.* n. s. A going out of the way; a departure from the subject.

What need these far-abouts? They go the shortest cut, who give him [the pope] a temporal power over all the kingdoms of the world!

Fuller, Holy War, p. 280.

FAR-FETCH. n. s. [far and fetch.] A deep stratagem. A ludicrous word.

But Jesuits have deeper reaches,
In all their politic far-fetches;
And from their Coptic priest, Kircherus,
Found out this mystic way to jeer us.

Hudibr.

FAR-FETCHED. adj. [far and fetch.]

1. Brought from places remote.

By his command we boldly cross'd the line,
And bravely fought where southern stars arise:
We trac'd the far-fetch'd gold unto the mine,
And that which brib'd our fathers made our prize.

Dryden.

2. Studiously sought; elaborately strained; not easily or naturally introduced.

For far-fetch'd rhymes make puzzled angels strain,

And in low prose dull Lucifer complain. Smith.
Under this head we may rank those words, which signify different ideas, by a sort of an unaccountable far-fetch'd analogy, or distant resemblance, that fancy has introduced between one thing and another; as when we say, the meat is green when it is half roasted, Watts, Logic.

FAR-FET.* adj. [far and fet, our old word for fetched. Dr. Johnson, in two instances, converted this word into far-fetched, without authority.]

1. Brought from places remote.

Your far-fet viands please not.

Beaum. and Fl. Hon. Man's Fortune.

The far-fet spoil,

Milton, P. R.

2. Studiously sought; elaborately strained. York, with all his far-fet policy.

Shakespeare, K. Hen. VI. P. II.

Metaphors, far-fet, hinder to be understood.

B. Jonson, Discoveries.

FAR-PIERCING. adj. [far and pierce.]

Striking, or penetrating a great way.

Atlas, her sire, to whose far-piercing eye

The wonders of the deep expanded lie;

Th' eternal columns which on earth he rears,

End in the starry vault, and prop the spheres.

Pope, Odyssey.

FARSHOOTING. adj. [far and shoot.] Shooting to a great distance.

Then loud he call'd Æneas thrice by name;

The loud repeated voice to glad Æneas came;

Great Jove, he said, and the far-shooting god,

Inspire thy mind to make thy challenge good.

Dryden, Æneid.

FAR† adj.

1. Distant; remote.

He meant to travel into far countries, until his friend's affection either ceased or prevailed.

Sidney, Arcadin.

But we must beg our bread in climes unknown,

Beneath the scorching or the freezing zone;

And some to far Oaxis shall be sold,

To try the Libyan heat, or Scythian cold.

Dryden, Virgil.

2. It was formerly used not only as an adverb but an adjective with off.

These things seem small and undistinguishable, Like far off mountains turned into clouds. Shaks.

If we may behold in any creature any one spark of that eternal fire, or any far off dawning of God's glorious brightness, the same in the beauty, motion, and virtue of this light may be perceived.

Raleigh, Hist. of the World.

I hear the far-off curfew sound. Milt. Il Pens.

3. From FAR. In this sense it is used elliptically for a far, or remote place.

The Lord shall bring a nation against thee from far, from the end of the earth. Deut. xxvii. 49.

4. Remoter of the two; in horsemanship, the right side of the horse, which the rider turns from him when he mounts.

No true Egyptian ever knew in horses

The far side from the near. Dryden, Cleomenes.

5. It is often not easy to distinguish whether it be adjective or adverb: as, The nations far and near contend in choice.

Dryden.

FAR. n. s. [contracted from farrow.] The offspring of a sow; young pigs.

Sows, ready to farrow at this time of the year,

Are for to be made of and counted full dear;

For now is the loss of the far of the sow

More great than the loss of two calves of the cow.

Tusser.

FARAND.* See FARRAND.

TO FARCE.† v. a. [farcio, Latin, farcer, French.]

1. To stuff; to fill with mingled ingredients. This was formerly a common word in cookery, and is now converted into forced. So farsure was used for stuffing. See Pegge's Forme of Cury.

His tippet was ay farced ful of knives,

And pinnes, for to given fayre wibes.

Chaucer, C. T. Prol.

I should pass the limits of a large book, farced with only testimonies to that end.

Anderson, Expos. on Benedict, (1573,) fol. 33.

What

Broken piece of matter so'er she's about, the name,

Palamon lards it, that she farces every business.

Beaum. and Fl. Two Nob. Kins.

Some used to embalm the belly farced with wine, farced with cassia, myrrh, and other spices.

Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 308.

The first principles of Christian Religion should not be farced with school points and private tenets.

Bp. Sanderson.

2. To extend; to swell out.

'Tis not the balm, the sceptre and the ball,

The sword, the mace, the crown imperial,

The enturbid robe of gold and pearl,

The farced title running 'fore the king.

Shakespeare, Hen. V.

FARCE.† n. s. [Fr. farce, "a fond and dissolute play, comedie, or interlude; also the jig at the end of an interlude, wherein some prettie knaverie is acted; also a pudding, &c. any stuffing in meats." Cotgrave. Some think the theatrical word derived from the culinary one; yet farcer, to laugh, to ridicule, is very old in the French language, from the Celtick farce, mockery.] A dramatick representation written without regularity, and stuffed with wild and ludicrous conceits.

There is yet a lower sort of poetry and painting, which is out of nature; for a farce is that in poetry which grotesque is in a picture; the persons and actions of a farce are all unnatural, and the manners false; that is, inconsistent with the characters of mankind: grotesque painting is the just resemblance of this. Dryden, Dufresnoy.

What should be great you turn to farce. Prior. They object against it as a farce, because the irregularity of the plot should answer to the extravagance of the characters, which they say this piece wants, and therefore is no farce. Gay.

FAR'CEAL. adj. [from farce.] Belonging to a farce; appropriated to a farce.

They deny the characters to be farceal, because they are actually in nature.

Gay, Pref. to the What d'ye Call it.

FAR'CEALLY.* adv. [from farceal.] In a manner suitable only to a farce.

It is not necessary, that in order to do this he should have recourse to images that are farceally low. Langhorne.

FAR'RING.* n. s. [from farce.] The act of stuffing with mixed ingredients.

To make broth and farcing, and that full deity.

Interl. of Jacob and Esau, (1568.)

Wrestling is a pastime which either the Cornishmen derived from Cornueus, their pretended founder, or at least it ministered some stuff to the farcing of that fable. Carew, Surv. of Cornwall.

FAR'CY. n. s. [farcina, Italian; farcin, French.] The leprosy of horses. It is probably curable by antimony.

TO FARDE.* v. a. [French, farder.] To paint; to colour. Cotgrave, and Sherw.

He found that beauty, which he had left innocent, *farde*d and sophisticated with some court-drag. Wilson, Hist. of James I.

There of the *farde*d pot and essenc'd beau, Ferocious, with a Stoick's frown disclose Thy manly scorn. Shenstone, Economy, P. II.

FAR'DEL.† n. s. [fardello, Italian; fardel, old French, Roq. fardeau, modern.] A bundle; a little pack.

Some assayed to swim; some holding fast by the horses, others by spears and other like weapons, many upon *farde*ls and trusses, gat over the river. Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 56. b.

Let us to the king: there is that in this *farde*l will make him scratch his beard. Shaks. W. Tale.

Who would *farde*ls bear,

To groan and sweat under a weary life?

Shakespeare, Hamlet.

TO FAR'DEL.* v. a. [from the noun.] To make up in bundles.

Things, orderly *farde*l'd up under heads, are most portable. Fuller, Holy State, p. 164.

TO FARE.† v. n. [Japan, Saxon; varen, Dutch; furen, Goth; far, a journey, Icel.]

1. To go; to pass; to travel.

At last, resolving forward still to fare,
Until the blust'ring storm is overblown.

Spenser, F. Q.

His spirits pure were subject to our sight,
Like to a man in shew and shape he fares. Fairfax.

So on he fares, and to the border comes.

Sadly they far'd along the sea-beat shore;

Still heav'd their hearts. Pope.

2. To be in any state good or bad.

So bids thee well to fare thy nether friend.

Spenser, F. Q.

A stubborn heart shall fare evil at the last.

Ecclus. iii. 26.

Well fare the hand, which to our humble sight

Presents that beauty. Waller.

So in this throng bright Sacharissa far'd,
Oppress'd by those who strove to be our guard;
As ships, though never so obsequious, fall
Foul in a tempest on their admiral. Waller.

So fares the stag among th' enrag'd bounds;
Repels their force, and wounds returns for wounds.

Denham.

But as a barque, that, in foul weather,
Toss'd by two adverse winds together,
Is bruis'd and beaten to and fro,
And knows not which to turn him to;
So far'd the knight between two foes,
And knew not which of them t' oppose. Hudibras.

If you do as I do, you may fare as I fare.

L'Estrange.

Thus fares the queen, and thus her fury blows
Amidst the crowd. Dryden, Æn.

English ministers never fare so well as in a time of war with a foreign power, which diverts the private feuds, and animosities of the nation.

Addison, Freeholder.

Some are comforted that it will be a common calamity, and they shall fare no worse than their neighbours. Swift.

3. To proceed in any train of consequences good or bad. [Fr. faire.]

Thus it fares when too much desire of contradiction causeth our speeches rather to pass by number than to stay for weight. Hooker.

So fares it when with truth falsehood contends. Milton, P. R.

4. To happen to any one well or ill; with it preceding in an impersonal form

When the hand finds itself well warn'd and cover'd, let it refuse the trouble of feeding the mouth, or guarding the head, till the body be starved or killed, and then we shall see how it will fare with the hand. South.

5. To feed ; to eat ; to be entertained with food.

The rich man fares sumptuously every day. St. Luke, xvii. 19.
Feast your ears with the music awhile, if they will fare so harshly as on the trumpet's sound. Shakespeare, Timon.

Men think they have fares hardly, if, in times of extremity, they have descended so low as to eat dogs ; but Galen delivereth, that, young, fat, and gelded, they were the food of many nations. Brown, Vulg. Err.

FAREWELL.† n. s. [Sax. pape.]

1. Journey ; passage. This is the primary sense, which Dr. Johnson has not at all noticed. See the etymology of the verb.

He straitway
Himself unto his journey can prepare,
And all his armours readie dight that day,
That nought the morrow next mote stay his fare.
Spenser, F. Q. v. x. 16.

2. Price of passage in a vehicle by land or by water. Used only of that which is paid for the person, not the goods.

He found a ship going to Tarshish ; so he paid the fare thereof, and went down into it to go with them unto Tarshish. Jonah, i. 3.

He passage begs with unregarded pray'r,
And wants two farthings to discharge his fare.
Dryden, Juu.

3. The person carried ; another sense unnoticed by Dr. Johnson. This is rather a colloquial expression.

The skiffs—pass each other with incredible ease and agility ; so that the fare runs no risk of being overset. Drummond, Trun. (1744), p. 68.

4. Food prepared for the table ; provisions. [Fr. faire.]

But come, so well refresh'd, now let us play,
As meet is, after such delicious fare. Milton, P. L.

But when the western winds with vital pow'r,
Call forth the tender grass and budding flow'r,
Then, at the last, produce in open air
Both flocks, and send them to their Summer's fare.
Dryden, Juu.

This is what nature's want may well suffice :
He that would more is covetous, not wise :
But since among mankind so few there are,
Who will conform to philosophick fare,
This much I will indulge thee for thy ease,
And mingle something of our times to please.
Dryden, Juu.

Upon his rising up he ordered the peasant to set before him whatever food he had in his house : the peasant brought out a great deal of coarse fare, of which the emperor eat very heartily. Addison, Guardian.

FAREWELL.† adv. [This word is originally the imperative of the verb fare well, or fare you well ; “sis felix, abi in bonam rem ; or bene sit tibi ;” but in time use familiarized it to an adverb, and it is used both by those who go and those who are left. So the Sw. farwel, and the Dutch vaarwel. It may be observed that the accent is placed, both in the adverb and substantive, indifferently on either syllable, as the examples shew. Dr. Johnson places, in both, the accent on the last syllable. But it is well remarked by Mr. Nares that the accent on the first syllable of the substantive, and on the second of the adverb, ought to be the permanent distinction.]

1. The parting compliment ; adieu.

But farewell, king ; sieth thou wilt appear,
Freedom lives hence, and banishment is here.

Whether we shall meet again, I know not,
Therefore our everlasting farewell take ;
For ever, and for ever, farewell, Cassius.
Shakespeare, K. Lear.

Be not amazed, call all your senses to you ;
defend your reputation, or bid farewell to your good life for ever. Shakespeare, Jul. Cas.

An iron slumber shuts my swimming eyes ;
And now farewell, involv'd in shades of night,
For ever I am ravish'd from thy sight.
Dryden, Wvg.

Farewell, says he ; the parting sound scarce fell
From his faint lips, but she replied farewell.
Dryden.

O queen, farewell ! be still possess
Of dear remembrance, blessing still and blest !
Pope, Odys.

2. It is sometimes used only as an expression of separation without kindness.

Farewell the year which threaten'd so
The fairest light the world can shew. Waller.
Treading the path to nobler ends,
A long farewell to love I gave ;
Resolv'd my country and my friends
All that remain'd of me should have. Waller.

3. Its original verbal meaning is preserved when it is used plurally.

Farewell, master Silence : I will not use many words with you : fare you well, gentlemen, both. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

FAREWELL. n. s.

1. Leave ; act of departure.

See how the morning opes her golden gates,
And takes her farewell of the glorious sun.
Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

If chance the radiant sun, with farewell sweet,
Extend his evening beam, the fields revive,
The birds their notes renew, and bleating herds
As in this grove I took my last farewell,
As on this very spot of earth I fell. Dryden.

Before I take my farewell of this subject, I shall advise the author for the future to speak his meaning more plainly. Addison.

2. It is sometimes used as an adjective ; leave-taking.

Several ingenious writers, who have taken their leave of the publick in farewell papers, will not give over so, but intend to appear again ; though perhaps under another form, and with a different title. Spectator.

FARINACEOUS. adj. [from farina, Latin.]

Mealy ; tasting like meal or flower of corn.

The properest food of the vegetable kingdom for mankind, is taken from the farinaceous or mealy seeds of some culmiferous plants ; as oats, barley, wheat, rice, rye, maize, panick, and millet. Arbutnot on Aliments.

FARLIES.* n. s. [æplice, Sax. strange.]

Unusual, unexpected things. Strange sights. Cumberland Dialect. The word occurs in our old poetry, in this sense. Mr. Brockett gives it, among our northern words, with the meaning of trifles.

FARM. n. s. [ferme, French ; feorm, provision, Saxon.]

1. Ground let to a tenant ; ground cultivated by another man upon condition of paying part of the profit to the owner or landlord.

Touching their particular complaint for reducing lands and farms to their ancient rents, it could not be done without a parliament. Hayward.

2. The state of lands let out to the culture of tenants.

The lords of land in Ireland do not use to set out their land in farm, for term of years, to their tenants ; but only from year to year, and some during pleasure. Spenser on Ireland.

It is great wilfulness in landlords to make any longer farms unto their tenants. Spenser.

TO FARM. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To let out to tenants at a certain rent.

We are enforc'd to farm our royal realm,
The revenue whereof shall furnish us
For our affairs in hand. Shakespeare, Rich. II.

2. To take at a certain rate.

They received of the bankers scant twenty shillings for thirty, which the earl of Cornwall farmed of the king. Camden, Rem.

3. To cultivate land.

FARMABLE.* adj. [from farm.] That may be farmed. Sherwood.

FARMER.† n. s. [fermier, French ; or from farm ; Sax. feormep.]

1. One who cultivates hired ground.

Thou hast seen a farmer's dog bark at a beggar, and the creature run from the cur : there thou might'st behold the great image of authority ; a dog's obey'd in office. Shakespeare.

2. One who cultivates ground, whether his own or another's.

Nothing is of greater prejudice to the farmer than the stocking of his land with cattle larger than it will bear. Mortimer.

3. One who rents any thing ; as, farmer of the post-horse duties.

To side with the farmers against the improvement of the revenue. Ld. Halifax.

FARMOST. n. s. [superlative of far.] Most distant ; remotest.

A spacious cave, within its farmost part,
Was hew'd and fashion'd by laborious art,
Through the hill's hollow sides. Dryden, Æn.

FARNESSE. n. s. [from far.] Distance ; remoteness.

Their nearness on all quarters to the enemy, and their farness from timely succour by their friends, have forced the commanders to call forth the uttermost number of able hands to fight. Caveau, Surv. of Cornwall.

FARTICLE.* See FERTICLE.

FA'RO.* n. s. A game at cards.

FARRAGINOUS. adj. [from farrago, Lat.]

Formed of different materials.

Being a confusion of knaves and fools, and a farraginous concurrence of all conditions, tempers, sexes and ages, it is but natural if their determinations be monstrous, and many ways inconsistent with truth. Brown, Vulg. Err.

FARRA'GO.† n. s. [Latin.] A mass formed confusedly of several ingredients ; a medley.

He holds — their causes a farrago,
Or a made dish in court ; a thing of nothing. B. Jonson, Magn. Lady.

I return you my most thankful acknowledgements for that collection, or farrago, of prophecies, as you call them ; — 'specially that of Nostradamus. Howell, Lett. iii. 22.

These, crudely mixed up, made the farrago of the alcoran. Leslie, Truth of Christianity.

FARRAND, or FA'RAND.* n. s. [Probably from fare.] Manner ; custom ; humour. Ray, Grose, Wilbraham's Chesh. Words, and Brockett's N. C. Words.

FA'RRANTLY.* adj. [from fare.] Orderly ; decent ; respectable. Westmoreland Words, and Craven Dial. Comely ; handsome. Ray, and Lancashire Dial. Our old lexicography too, has, in explanation of comly, well farynge in shape. See Wilbraham's Chesh. Gloss.

Bullockar.

FARRIER. n. s. [ferrier, French; ferriarius, Latin.]

1. A shoer of horses.

But the utmost exactness in these particulars belong to farriers, saddlers, smiths, and other tradesmen. Digby.

2. One who professes the medicine of horses.

If you are a piece of a farrier, as every groom ought to be, get sack, or strong-beer to rub your horses. Swift.

To FARRIER. v. n. [from the noun.] To practise physick or chirurgery on horses.

There are many pretenders to the art of farrying and cowlceching, yet many of them are very ignorant. Mortimer.

FARRIERY.* n. s. [from farrier.] The practice of trimming the feet, and curing the diseases, of horses. The farrriers of modern days have dissolved this partnership, applying farrriery merely to shoeing horses, and the more stately term of veterinary art to physicking or healing the sick animal.

FARROW.† n. s. [Sax. færþ, a little pig; Sw. farre; Lat. verres.] A litter of pigs. Pour in sow's blood that hath litter'd Her nine farrow. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

To FARROW. v. a. To bring forth pigs. It is used only of swine.

Sows ready to farrow this time of the year.

The swine, although multiparous, yet being bisulcous, and only cloven-hoofed, is farrowed with open eyes, as other bisulcous animals. Brown. Ev'n her, who did her numerous offspring boast,

As fair and fruitful as the sow that carry'd

The thirty pigs, at one large litter farrow'd.

Dryden, Juv.

FARSANG.* n. s. See PHARSANG.

To FARSE.* To stuff. See To FARSE.

FART. n. s. [æpt, Saxon.] Wind from behind.

Love is the fast

Of every heart;

It pains a man when 'tis kept close;

And others doth offend, when 'tis let loose.

Suckling.

To FART. v. n. [from the noun.] To break wind behind.

As when we a gun discharge,

Although the bore be ne'er so large,

Before the flame from muzzle burst,

Just at the breach it flashes first;

So from my lord his passion broke,

He farted first, and then he spoke,

Swift.

FARTHER. adv. [This word is now generally considered as the comparative degree of far; but by no analogy can far make farther or farthest: it is therefore probable, that the ancient orthography was nearer the true, and that we ought to write further, and furthest, from forth, forther, forthest, þorþon, þorþer, Saxon; the o and u, by resemblance of sound, being first confounded in speech, and afterwards in books.] At a greater distance; to a greater distance; more remotely; beyond; more-over.

To make a perfect judgment of good pictures, when compared with one another, besides rules, there is further required a long conversation with the best pieces. Dryden, Dufresnoy.

They contented themselves with the opinions, fashions and things of their country, without looking any farther. Locke.

FARTHER. adj. [supposed from far, more probably from forth, and to be written further.]

1. More remote.

Let me add a farther truth, that without ties of gratitude, I have a particular inclination to honour you. Dryden.

2. Longer; tending to greater distance.

Before our farther way the fates allow,

Here must we fix on high the golden bough. Dryden, Æn.

FARTHERANCE. n. s. [more properly furtherance, - from further.] Encouragement; promotion.

That was the foundation of the learning I have, and of all the fartherance that I have obtained.

Ascham, Schoolmaster.

FARTHERMORE. adv. [more properly furthermore.] Besides; over and above; likewise.

Farthermore the leaves, body and boughs of this tree, by so much exceed all other plants, as the greatest men of power and worldly ability surpass the meanest. Raleigh, Hist.

To FARTHER. v. a. [more proper To further.] To promote; to facilitate; to advance.

He had furthered or hindered the taking of the town. Dryden.

FARTHEST. adj. Most distant; remotest. Yet it must be withal considered, that the greatest part of the world are they which be farthest from perfection. Hooker.

FARTHEST. adv. [more properly furthest.] See FARTHER.

1. At the greatest distance.

2. To the greatest distance.

FARTHING. n. s. [ƿeopþung, Saxon, from ƿeopþ, four, that is, the fourth part of a penny.]

1. The fourth of a penny; the smallest English coin.

A farthing is the least denomination or fraction of money used in England. Cocker's Arithmetick. Else all those things we toil so hard in,

Would not avail one single farthing. Prior.

You are not obliged to take money not of gold or silver; not the halfpence or farthings of England. Swift.

2. Copper money.

The parish find, 'tis true; but our church-wardens

Feed on the silver, and give us the farthings. Gay.

3. It is used sometimes in a sense hyperbolic: as, it is not worth a farthing; or proverbial.

His son builds on, and never is content,

Till the last farthing is in structure spent. Dryden, Juv.

4. A kind of division of land. Not in use.

Thirty acres make a farthing-land; nine farthings a Cornish acre; and four Cornish acres a knight's fee. Carew.

FARTHINGALE. n. s. [This word has much exercised the etymology of Skinner, who at last seems to determine that it is derived from vertu garde: if he had considered what vert signifies in Dutch, he might have found out the true sense.] A hoop; circles of whalebone used to spread the petticoat to a wide circumference.

With silken coats, and caps, and golden rings, with ruffs, and cuffs, and farthingales, and things. Shakespeare.

Tell me,

What compass will you wear your farthingale?

Shakespeare.

Arthur wore in hall

Round table, like a farthingal. Eudibras.

Some will have it that it portends the downfall of the French king; and observe, that the farthingale appeared in England a little before the ruin of the Spanish monarchy. Addison.

She seems a medley of all ages, With a huge farthingale to swell her fustian stuff, A new commode, a topknot, and a ruff. Swift.

FARTHINGSWORTH. n. s. [farthing and worth.] As much as is sold for a farthing.

They are thy customers; I hardly ever sell them a farthingworth of any thing.

Arbutnot, Hist. of John Bull.

FASCES. n. s. [Latin.] Rods anciently carried before the consuls as a mark of their authority.

The duke beheld, like Scipio, with disdain, That Carthage, which he ruin'd, rise once more; And shook aloft the fascies of the main, To fright those slaves with what they felt before. Dryden.

FASCIA. n. s. [Latin.] A fillet; a bandage.

FASCIATED. adj. [from fascia.] Bound with fillets; tied with a bandage. Dict. FASCIA'TION. n. s. [from fascia.] Bandage; the act or manner of binding diseased parts.

FASCICLE.* n. s. [Lat. fasciculus.] A bundle; a collection.

In the next fascicle you say, that I maintain some things, &c. Dr. Mayne, Sermon, Oxf. 1647, p. 19.

To FASCINATE. v. a. [fascino, Latin.] To bewitch; to enchant; to influence in some wicked and secret manner.

There be none of the affections which have been noted to fascinate or bewitch, but love and envy. Bacon.

Such a fascinating sin this is, as allows men no liberty of consideration. Decay of Piety.

FASCINATION. n. s. [from fascinate.] The power or act of bewitching; enchantment; unseen inexplicable influence.

He had such a crafty and bewitching fashion, both to move pity and to induce belief, as was like a kind of fascination and enchantment to those that saw him or heard him. Bacon.

The Turks hang old rags, or such like ugly things, upon their fairest horses, and other goodly creatures, to secure them against fascination.

Wallar.

There is a certain bewitchery or fascination in words which makes them operate with a force beyond what we can naturally give an account of.

South.

FASCINE. n. s. [French.] A faggot. Military cant.

The black prince passed many a river without the help of pontoons, and filled a ditch with faggots as successively as the generals of our times do with fascines. Addison, Spect.

FA'SCINOUS. adj. [fascinum, Lat.] Caused or acting by witchcraft, or enchantment. Not in use.

I shall not discuss the possibility of fascinous diseases, farther than refer to experiment.

Harvey on Consumptions.

To FASH.* v. a. [old Fr. fascher, to displease, to molest.] To vex; to teize. A word still in use in the north of England.

FA'SHION.† n. s. [facion, Norm. Fr.; façon, Fr.; facies, Latin.]

1. Form; make; state of any thing with regard to its outward appearance.

They pretend themselves grieved at our solemnities in erecting churches, at their form and fashion, at the stateliness of them and costliness, and at the opinion which we have of them. Hooker.

The fashion of his countenance was altered.

St. Luke, ix. 29.

Stand these poor people's friend.

—I will,

Or let me lose the fashion of a man.

Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

2. The make or cut of cloaths.

I'll be at charges for a looking-glass, And entertain a score or two of taylors To study fashions to adorn my body.

Shakespeare, Rich. III.

You, sir, I entertain for one of my hundred; only, I do not like the fashion of your garments.

Shakespeare, K. Lear.

3. Manner; sort; way.

For that I love your daughter In such a righteous fashion as I do, Perforce against all checks, rebukes, and manners, I must advance.

Shakespeare, M. Wives of Windsor.

Pluck Casca by the sleeve, And he will, after his sour fashion, tell you What hath proceeded.

Shaks. Jul. Cas.

The commissioners either pulled down or defaced all images in churches; and that in such unseasonable and unseasoned fashion, as if it had been done in hostility against them.

Hayward.

4. Custom operating upon dress, or any domestick ornaments.

Here's the note

How much your chain weighs to the utmost carat, The fineness of the gold, the chargeful fashion.

Shakespeare.

5. Custom; general practice.

Zelmane again, with great admiration, begun to speak of him; asking whether it were the fashion or no, in Arcadia, that shepherds should perform such valorous enterprises?

Sidney.

Though the truth of this hath been universally acknowledged, yet because the fashion of the age is to call every thing into question, it will be requisite to satisfy men's reason about it.

Tillotson.

No wonder that pastorals are falling into disesteem, together with that fashion of life upon which they were grounded.

Walsh.

It was not easily reconciled to the common method; but then it was the fashion to do such things.

Arbutnot.

6. Manner imitated from another; way established by precedent.

Sorrow so royally in you appears, That I will deeply put the fashion on, And wear it in my heart.

Shakespeare.

7. General approbation; mode.

A young gentleman accommodates himself to the innocent diversions in fashion.

Locke.

His panegyrics were bestowed only on such persons as he had familiarly known, and only at such times as others cease to praise, when out of power, or out of fashion.

Pope.

VOL. II.

8. Rank; condition above the vulgar. It is used in a sense below that of quality.

It is strange that men of fashion, and gentlemen, should so grossly belie their own knowledge.

Ralegh.

9. Any thing worn.

Now, by this maiden blossom in my hand,

I scorn thee, and thy fashion, peevish boy.

Shakespeare, H. VI.

10. The farcy, a distemper in horses; the horses leprosy. A barbarous word.

His horse is posset with the glanders, infected with the fashions, and full of windgalls.

Shakespeare, Tam. of the Shrew.

11. Workmanship; the act of making a thing. A term among artists, particularly those who work in gold and silver; as, so much for the weight, and so much for the fashion.

When he is at the best, the fashion exceeds the worth of his weight.

Overbury, Charact. The Amoris.

To FA'SHION. v. a. [façonner, French, from the noun.]

1. To form; to mould; to figure.

Shakespeare, Jul. Cas.

Did not he that made me in the womb, make him?

And did not one fashion us in the womb?

Job, xxxi. 15.

The graves of the rebellious generations were already fashioned in the clouds, which soon after should swallow up all living creatures.

Ral. Hist.

The rib he form'd, and fashion'd with his hands;

Under his forming hands a creature grew,

Man like, but different sex.

Milton, P. L.

Inability will every one find in himself, who shall go about to fashion in his understanding any simple idea, not received by his senses from external objects, or by reflection from the operations of his mind about them.

Locke.

How could this noble fabrick be design'd,

And fashion'd, by a maker brute and blind?

Could it of art such miracles invent?

And raise a beauteous world of such extent?

Blackmore.

A different toil another forge employs, Here the loud hammer fashions female toys; Each trinket that adorns the modern dame, First to these little artists ow'd its frame.

Gay's Fan.

2. To fit; to adapt; to accommodate.

Laws ought to be fashion'd unto the manners and conditions of the people to whom they are meant, and not to be imposed upon them according to the simple rule of right.

Spenser.

Ne do, I doubt, but that ye well can fashion Yourselves thereto, according to occasion.

Spenser, Hubb. Tale.

Nature, as it grows again tow'rd's earth, Is fashion'd for the journey, dull and heavy.

Shakespeare, Timon.

This cardinal, Though from an humble stock undoubtedly, Was fashion'd to much honour from his cradle.

Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

3. To counterfeit. Not used.

It better fits my blood to be disdain'd of all, than to fashion a carriage to rob love from any.

Shakespeare, Much Ado.

4. To make according to the rule prescribed by custom.

The value of the labour employed about one parcel of silver more than another, makes a difference in their price; and thus fashioned plate sells for more than its weight.

Locke.

FA'SHIONABLE. adj. [from fashion.]

1. Approved by custom; established by custom; modish.

The eminence of your condition will invite gentlemen to the study of nature, and make philosophy fashionable.

Rogers.

'Tis prevailing example that hath now made it fashionable.

Bentley.

2. Made according to the mode.

Rich, fashionable robes her person deck; Pendants her ears, and pearls adorn her neck.

Dryden, Ovid.

3. Observant of the mode.

Time is like a fashionable host, That slightly shakes his parting guest by th' hand; But with his arms outstretch'd as he would fly, Grasps in the comer: welcome ever smiles, And farewell goes out sighing.

Sh. Troil. & Cress.

4. Having rank above the vulgar, and below nobility.

FA'SHIONABLENESS.† n. s. [from fashionable.]

1. Form; state of any thing with regard to its outward appearance. Not noticed by Dr. Johnson.

'Outward fashionableness comes into no account with God; that is only done which the soul doth.

Bishop Hall, Contempl. B. 4.

2. Modish elegance; such appearance as is according to the present custom.

Why should they not continue to value themselves for this outside fashionableness of the taylor or tiewoman's making, when their parents have so early instructed them to do so?

Locke.

A fashionableness which, within a short while, will perhaps be ridiculous.

Boyle, Style of H. Scripture, p. 186.

FA'SHIONABLY. adv. [from fashionable.] In a manner conformable to custom; with modish elegance.

To FAST. v. n. [fastan, Gothick; faetan, Saxon.]

1. To abstain from food.

Our love is not so great, Hortensio, But we may blow our nails together, And fast it fairly out.

Shaks. Tam. of the Shrew.

I had rather fast from all four days than drink so much in one.

Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleop.

We have some meats, and breads, and drinks, which taken by men enable them to fast long after.

Bacon, New Atlantis.

2. To mortify the body by religious abstinence.

When thou fastest, anoint thy head and wash thy face, that thou appear not unto men to fast.
St. Matt. vi. 17.

Last night the very god shew'd me a vision:

I fast and pray for their intelligence. Shaks. Cymb.
FAST. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Abstinence from food.

A thousand men have broke their fasts to-day,
That thou'rt shall dine, unless thou yield the crown.
Shakspeare.

Where will this end? Four times ten days I've pass'd,

Wand'ring this woody maze, and human food
Nor tasted, nor had appetite; that fast
To virtue I impute not, or count part
Of what I suffer here. Milton, P. L.

Happy and innocent were the ages of our forefathers,
who broke their fasts with herbs and roots;
and when they were permitted flesh, eat it only dressed with hunger and fire. Bp. Taylor.

She's gone unkindly, and refus'd to cast
One glance to feed me for so long a fast.
Dryden, Tyrann. Love.

2. Religious mortification by abstinence; religious humiliation.

We humble ourselves before God this day, not merely by the outward solemnities of a fast, but by afflicting our souls as well as bodies for our sins.
Atterbury.

Nor pray'rs nor fasts its stubborn pulse restrain;
Nor tears, for ages, taught to flow in vain. Pope.

FAST.† adj. [Saxon part, firm; & Icel. fastr, the same.]

1. Firm; immovable.

He by his strength setteth fast mountains.
Ps. lxxv. 6.

Last, the sire and his three sons,
With their four wives; and God made fast the door.

I have seen her rise from her bed, take paper, fold it, seal it, and again return to bed: yet all this while in a most fast sleep. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

5. Firm in adherence.

Quick wits be in desire now-fangled; in purpose,
unconstant; light to promise anything,
ready to forget every thing, both benefit and injury;
and thereby neither fast to friend, nor fearful to foe.
Ascham, Schoolmaster.

6. Speedy; quick; swift. [from ffest, Welsh, quick.] It may be doubted whether this sense be not always adverbial.

This work goeth fast on, and prospereth.

Skil comes so slow, and life so fast doth fly,
We learn so little, and forget so much. Davies.
The prince groweth up fast to be a man, and is of a stout and excellent disposition: it would be a stain upon you if you should mislead, or suffer him to be misled. Bacon to Villiers.

7. Fast and loose. Uncertain; variable; inconstant; deceitful.

A rope of fair pearl, which now hiding, now hidden by the hair, did, as it were, play at fast and loose each with other, giving and receiving richness.
Sidney.

If she perceived by his outward cheer,

That any would his love by talk bewray,
Sometimes she heard him, sometimes stopt her ear,
And play'd fast and loose the live-long day. Fairfax.

The folly and wickedness of men, that they
to play fast and loose with God Almighty! L'Estr.
If they cohered, yet by the next conflict with other atoms they might be separated again; and so on in an eternal vicissitude of fast and loose, without ever associating into the huge condense bodies of planets. Bentley.

FAST. adv.

1. Firmly; immoveably.

Bind the boy, which you shall find with me,
Fast to the chair. Shakspeare, K. John.

This love of theirs myself have often seen,
Haply when they have judg'd me fast asleep. Shaks.

2. Closely; nearly. In this sense it is united with some other word, as by, or beside.

Barbarossa left fourteen galleys in the lake; but the tacklings, sails, oars, and ordnance he had laid up in the castle fast by. Knolles, Hist. of the Turks.
Silva's brook that flow'd
Fast by the oracle of God. Milton, P. L.

Let purling streams be in her fancy seen,
And flow'ry meads, and vales of cheerful green;
And in the midst of deathless groves
Soft sighing wishes lie,
And smiling hopes fast by,
And just beyond 'em ever-laughing loves.
Dryden, Tyr. Love.

Fast by the throne obsequious fame resides,
And wealth incessant rolls her golden tides.
Pope, Odyssey.

Well known to me the palace you inquire;
For fast beside it dwells my honour'd sire.
Pope, Odyssey.

Here o'er the martyr-king the marble weeps,
And fast beside him once fear'd Edward sleeps.
Pope.

3. Swiftly; nimbly.

I would give a thousand pound I could run as fast as thou can'st. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.
There streams a spring of blood so fast,
From those deep wounds, as all embur'd the face.
Daniel.

The heaviest muse the swiftest course has gone,
As clocks run fastest when most lead is on. Pope.
You are to look upon me as one going fast out of the world. Swift to Pope.

4. Frequently.

Being tried only with a promise, he gave full credit to that promise, and still gave evidence of his fidelity as fast as occasions were offered.
Hammond, Pract. Catech.

TO FA'STEN. v. a. [from fast.]

squeamish; delicate to a vice; insolently nice.

Reasons plainly delivered, and always after one manner, especially with fine and fastidious minds, enter but heavily and dully.

Bacon, Collect. of Good and Evil.

Let their fastidious vain
Commission of the brain,
Run on and rage, sweat, censure, and condemn,
They were not made for this, less thou for them.

Ben Jonson.

A squeamish fastidious niceness, in meats and drinks, must be cured by starving. L'Estrange.

All hopes, raised upon the promises or supposed kindnesses of the fastidious and fallacious great ones of the world, shall fail. South, Sermon.

FASTIDIOUSLY. adv. [from fastidious.]
Disdainfully; contemptuously; squeamishly.

Their sole talent is pride and scorn: they look fastidiously, and speak disdainfully, concluding, if a man shall fall short of their garbure at their knees and elbows, he is much inferior to them in the furniture of his head. Gov. of the Tongue.

FASTIDIOUSNESS.* n. s. [from fastidious.]
Squeamishness; disdainfulness.

Less licentious and more discerning times (which may be, perhaps, approaching,) will repair the omissions and fastidiousness of the present, by an eminent gratitude to the names of those, that have laboured to transmit to others, in the handsomest dress they durst give them, the truths themselves most valued.

Boyle, Style of Holy Scripture, p. 202.

FATIGATE.† } adj. [fastigatus, Lat.]
FATIGATED. } Roofed; narrowed up to the top. Dich.

fastness and fulness of the flesh.

Smith, Portr. of Old Age, p. 117.

2. Firmness: firm adherence.

Such as might doubt they had given the king distaste, did contend by their forwardness and confidence to shew it was but their fastness to the former government, and that those affections ended with the time. Bacon, Beg. H. Gr. Brit.

3. Strength; security.

His own wily wit —

And eke the fastness of his dwelling-place,
 Both unassailable, gave him great aid.

Spenser, F. Q. v. ix. 5.

All the places are cleared, and places of fastness laid open, which are the proper walls and castles of the Irish, as they were of the British in the times of Agricola. Davies on Ireland.

The foes had left the fastness of their place,
 Prevail'd in fight, and had his men in chase.

Dryden, Æn.

4. A strong place; a place not easily forced.

Not far off should be Roderigo's quarter,

For in this fastness, if I be not cozen'd,
 He and his outlaws live. Beaumont and Fl. The Pilg.

 the fattest, I think, I'the forest. Sh. M. W. of Win.

Let our wives

Appoint a meeting with this old fat fellow. Shak.

'Tis a fine thing to be fat and smooth. L' Estr.
 Spare diet and labour will keep constitutions, where this disposition is the strongest, from being fat: you may see in an army forty thousand footsoldiers without a fat man; and I dare affirm, that by plenty and rest twenty of the forty shall grow fat. Arbutnot on Aliments.

2. Coarse; gross. [fat, French.]

We're hurry'd down

This lubric and adult'rate age;
 Nay, added fat pollutions of our own,
 T' increase the steaming ordures of the stage.

Dryden.

 WITTED.

O souls! in whom no heavenly fire is found,
Fat minds, and ever-grow'ing on the ground.

Dryden, Persius.

There is little or no sense in the fat parts of any creature: hence the ancients said of any dull fellow, that he had a fat wit.

Johnston's Holy David clear'd, &c. 1706, p. 257.

4. Wealthy; rich.

Some are allured to law, not on the contemption of equity, but on the promising and pleasing thoughts of litigious terms, fat contentions, and flowing fees. Milton.

These were terrible alarms to persons grown fat and wealthy by a long and successful imposture.

South.

A fat beneficence is that which so abounds with an estate and revenues, that a man may expend a great deal in delicacies of eating and drinking.

Ayliffe, Parergon.

FAT. n. s. An oily and sulphureous part of the blood, deposited in the cells of the membrana adiposa, from the innumerable little vessels which are spread amongst them. The fat is to be found immediately under the skin, in most parts of the body. There are two sorts of fat: one yellow, soft, and lax, easily melted; another firm, white, brittle, and not so easily melted, called suet or tallow. Some reckon the marrow of the bones for a third sort of fat. Quincy.

In this ointment the strangest and hardest ingredients to come by, are the moss upon the skull of a dead man unburied, and the fats of a boar and a bear killed in the act of generation.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

This membrane separates an oily liquor called fat: when the fibres are lax, and the aliment too redundant, great part of it is converted into this oily liquor. Arbutnot on Aliments.

To FAT. v. a. [from the noun.] To make fat; to fatten; to make plump and seizeth the heart or organs of breathing, fatal.

Arbutnot on Diet.

2. Proceeding by destiny; inevitable; necessary.

Others delude their trouble by a graver way of reasoning, that these things are fatal and necessary, it being in vain to be troubled at that which we cannot help. Tillotson.

3. Appointed by destiny.

It was fatal to the king to fight for his money;
 and though he avoided to fight with enemies abroad, yet he was still enforced to fight for it with rebels at home. Bacon, Hen. VII.

It was Still fatal to stout Hudibras,

 In all his feats of arms, when least
 He dreamt of it to prosper best. Hudibras.

Behold the destin'd place of your abodes;
 For thus Anchises prophecy'd of old,
 And thus our fatal place of rest foretold.

Dryden, Æn.

O race divine;

For beauty still is fatal to the line. Dryden.

FATALISM.* n. s. [from fatal; Fr. fatal-isme.] The doctrine of those who maintain that all things happen by necessity.

Have not fatalism and Sadducism gained ground during the general passion for the corpuscularian and mechanical philosophy, which hath prevailed for about a century? Dr. Berkeley, Siris, § 331.

Our poet, it must be confessed, left several passages so expressed, as to be favourable to fatalism and necessity. Dr. Warton, Essay on Pope.

FATALIST.* n. s. [from fate; Fr. fatal-iste.] One who maintains that all things happen by inevitable necessity.

1. Predetermination; predetermined order or series of things and events; pre-ordination of inevitable causes acting invincibly in perpetual succession.

The stoicks held a fatalité and a fixed unalterable course of events; but then they held also,
 that they fell out by a necessity emergent from and inherent in the things themselves, which God himself could not alter. South.

2. Decree of fate.

By a strange fatalité men suffer their dissenting to be drawn into the stream of the present vogue.

King Charles.

All the father's precaution could not secure the son from the fatalité of dying by a lion. L' Estr.

3. Tendency to danger; tendency to some great or hazardous event.

Seven times seven, or forty-nine, nine times nine, or eighty-one, and seven times nine, or the years sixty-three, is conceived to carry with it the most considerable fatalité. Brown, Vulg. Err.

FATALLY. adv. [from fatal.]

1. Mortally; destructively; even to death.

The stream is so transparent, pure and clear,
 That had the self-cannor'd youth gaz'd here,
 So fatally deceiv'd he had not been,
 While he the bottom, not his face had seen. Denh.

'Tis the procession of a funeral vow,
Which cruel laws to Indian wives allow,
When fatally their virtue they approve;
Chearful in flames, and martyrs of their love.

Dryden, Aurengzebe.

2. By the decree of fate: by inevitable and invincible determination.

To say that the world was made casually by the concurrence of atoms, is to affirm that the atoms composed the world mechanically and fatally, only they were not sensible of it.

Bentley.

Shakespeare, Hen. V.

FATE.† n. s. [fat, old French; fatum, Latin; from fari, to pronounce; fatum Dei, the will or decree of God. "In using the terms fate, decree, or destiny, we speak after the manner of men; for it being customary with us, whenever we resolve upon some distant work, to declare our intentions to persons under our influence, who may assist in completing it, and to fix a determination in our minds which may render us vigorous, and keep us watchful in the prosecution, we conceive of God as making the like declared or mental determination with regard to every spot he comprises within the plan of his Providence." Search's Freewill, Foreknowledge, and Fate, 1763, p. 208.]

1. Destiny; an eternal series of successive causes.

Necessity or chance

Approach not me, and what I will is fate.

Milton, P. L.

There is a necessity in fate

Why still the brave bold man is fortunate. Dryden.

You must obey me soon or late

Why will you vainly struggle with your fate?

Dryden.

When empire in its childhood first appears,
A watchful fate o'ersees its rising years. Dryden.

Random chance or wilful fate

Guides the shaft from Cupid's bow. A. Philips.

2. Event predetermined.

Tell me what fates attend the duke of Suffolk?—
By water shall he die and take his end. Shaks.

3. Death; destruction.

Viewing a neighbouring hill, whose top of late
A chapel crown'd, till in the common fate
Th' adjoining abbey fell. Denham.

Looking, he feeds alone his famish'd eyes;
Feeds ling'ring death, but looking not, he dies;
Yet still he chose the longest way to fate,

Waiting at once his life and his estate. Dryden.

Courage uncertain dangers may abate;
But who can bear th' approach of certain fate!

Dryden.

The whizzing arrow sings,

And bears thy fate, Antinous, on its wings.

Pope.

4. Cause of death.

With full force his deadly bow he bent,
And fate'd fates among the mules and sumpters sent. Dryden.

FA'TED. adj. [from fate.]

1. Decried by fate.

She fled her father's rage, and with a train Driven by the southern blast was fated here to reign. Dryden.

2. Determined in any manner by fate.

Her awkward love indeed was oddly fated;
She and her Polly were too near related. Prior.

3. Endued with any quality by fate. This structure used by Dryden is unusual.

Bright Vulcanian arms,

Fated from force of steel by Stygian charms,
Suspended shone on high. Dryden, Æn.

4. Invested with the power of fatal determination. Peculiar to Shakspeare.

Thy fated sky

Gives us free scope. Shakspeare.

FA'THER.† n. s. [fæðer, Saxon. This word is found likewise in the Persian language, Dr. Johnson says. The northern languages give fader, vader, or fater, which lead to the Lat. pater, and Gr. πατήρ; and the Persian word is pader. The Goth. fadrein signifies parents.]

1. He by whom the son or daughter is begotten.

Father is a notion superinduced to the substance, or man, and refers only to an act of that thing called man, whereby he contributed to the generation of one of his own kind. Locke.

Son of Bensalem, thy father saith it; the man by whom thou hast breath and life speaketh the word. Bacon.

He shall forget

Father and mother, and to his wife adhere.

Milton, P. L.

2. The first ancestor.

It was said

It should not stand in thy posterity;

But that myself should be the root and father

Of many kings. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

Abraham is the father of us all. Rom. iv. 16.

3. The appellation of an old man.

A poor blind man was accounted cunning in prognosticating weather: Epsom, a lawyer, said in scorn, Tell me, father, when doth the sun change? The old man answered, when such a wicked lawyer as you goeth to heaven. Camden.

4. The title of any man reverend for age, learning, and piety.

You shall find one well accompanied

With reverend fathers and well learned bishops.

Shakspeare, Rich. III.

5. One who has given original to any thing good or bad.

Jubal was the father of all such as handle the harp and organ. Gen. iv. 21.

Father of verse.

Pope.

6. The ecclesiastical writers of the first centuries.

Men may talk of the fathers, and magnify the fathers, and seem to make the authority of the fathers next to infallible; and yet expose them to contempt. Stillfleet.

7. One who acts with paternal care and tenderness.

I was a father to the poor. Job, xxix. 16.

He hath made me a father to Pharaoh, and lord of all his house. Gen. xlv. 8.

8. The title of a popish confessor, particularly of a Jesuit.

Formal in apparel,

In gait and countenance surely like a father.

Shakspeare.

There was a father of a convent, very much renowned for his piety and exemplary life; and as persons under any great affliction applied themselves to the most eminent confessors, our beautiful votary took the opportunity of confessing herself to this celebrated father. Addison.

9. The title of a senator of old Rome.

From hence the race of Alban fathers come,
And the long glories of majestic Rome.

Dryden, Virg.

10. The appellation of the first person of the adorable Trinity.

The eternal Son of God esteemed it his meat and drink to do the will of his Father, and for his obedience alone obtained the greatest glory.

Bp. Taylor, Rule of living holy.

11. The compellation of God as Creator.

We have one Father, even God.

St. John, viii. 41.

Almighty and most merciful Father.

Common Prayer.

FA'THER-IN-LAW. n. s. [from father.] The father of one's husband or wife.

I must make my father-in-law a visit with a great train and equipage. Addison, Spect.

To FA'THER. v. a.

1. To take; to adopt as a son or daughter.

Ay, good youth,

And rather father thee than master thee.

Shakspeare, Cym.

2. To supply with a father, of certain qualities.

I am no stronger than my sex,

Being so father'd and so husbanded.

Shakspeare, Jul. Cæs.

How light and portable my pain seems now,
When that which makes me bend makes the king bow!

He childed as I father'd. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

3. To adopt a composition.

Men of wit,

Often father'd what he writ.

Swift.

4. To ascribe to any one as his offspring, or production: with on.

And lest we seem to father any thing upon them more than is their own, let them read.

Hooker.

My name was made use of by several persons, one of which was pleased to father on me a new set of productions. Swift.

Magical relations comprehend effects derived and fathered upon hidden qualities, whereof, from received grounds of art, no reasons are derived.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

FA'THERHOOD. n. s. [from father.] The character of a father, the authority of a father.

Who can abide, that against their own doctors, both of the middle and latest age, six whole books should by their fatherhoods of Trent be, under pain of a curse, imperiously obtruded upon God and his church? Bp. Hall.

We might have had an entire notion of this fatherhood, or fatherly authority. Locke.

FA'THERLESS.† adj. [Sax. fæðerleas.]

1. Wanting a father; destitute of a father.

Ye shall not afflict any widow, or fatherless child. Ex. xxii.

Our fatherless distress was left unmoan'd;
Your widow dolours likewise be unwept.

Shakspeare, Rich. III.

The fatherless hath no friend.

Sandys.

He caught his death the last county sessions, where he would go to see justice done to a poor widow woman and her fatherless children.

Addison, Spect.

2. Wanting authority.

There's already a thousand fatherless tales amongst us.

Beaumont and Fl. Philaster.

FA'THERLINESS.† n. s. [from father.] The tenderness of a father; parental kindness.

Sherwood.

FA'THERLY. adj. [from father.] Paternal; like a father; tender; protecting; careful.

Let me but move one question to your daughter,
And, by that fatherly and kindly power
That you have in her, bid her answer truly. Shak.

The part which describes the fire, I owe to the piety and fatherly affection of our monarch to his suffering subjects. Dryden.

FAT'HERLY.† adv. In the manner of a father.

There goeth our good shepherd from us, that so faithfully hath taught us, so fatherly hath cared for us. Fos. Acts and Mon. of Dr. R. Taylor.

Thus Adam, fatherly displeas'd :

O execrable son ! so to aspire

Above his brethren ! Milton, P. L.

FAT'HTOM.† n. s. [fæbēm, fæðin, Saxon ;
Teut. vadem ; our own word was formerly written fudom.]

1. A measure of length containing six foot, or two yards ; the space to which a man can extend both arms.

The extent of this fathom, or distance between the extremity of the fingers of either hand upon expansion, is equal unto the space between the sole of the foot and the crown. Brown.

The arms spread cross in a straight line, and measured from the end of the long finger on one hand, to that of the other, a measure equal to the stature, is named a fathom. Holder.

2. It is the usual measure applied to the depth of the sea, when the line for sounding is called the fathomline.

Dive into the bottom of the deep,
Where fathom-line could never touch the ground.
Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

3. Reach ; penetration ; depth of contrivance ;
compass of thought.

Another of his fathom they have none
To lead their business. Shakspeare, Othello.

You have blown his swoln pride to that vastness,
As he believes the earth is in his fathom.
Beaumont and Fl. The Prothetess.

TO FA'THOM.† v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To encompass with the arms extended or encircling.

2. To reach ; to master.
Leave, leave to fathom such high points as these ;
Nor be ambitious, ere the time, to please.
Dryden, Pers.

3. To sound ; to try with respect to the depth.

'Tis too strong for weak heads to try the heights and fathom the depths of his flights.

Our depths who fathoms. Pope.

4. To penetrate into ; to find the bottom or utmost extent : as, I cannot fathom
his design.

But juster fates denied ; nor would
Another land that genius hold,
As could beyond all wonder hurl'd,
Fathom the intellectual world.

J. Hall, Poems, (1646), p. 41.

FA'THOMER.* n. s. [from fathom.] One who is employed in fathoming.

Sherwood.

FA'THOMLESS.† adj. [from fathom.]

1. That of which no bottom can be found.
God, in the fathomless profound,
Hath all his choice commanders drown'd.

Sandys, Paraphr. Exod. xv. (1648.)

You will be swallow'd up, horse and man, into a fathomless lake of ill-scented mire.

More, Antid. against Idolatry, Pref.

2. That of which the circumference cannot be embraced.

Will you with counters sum

The vast proportion of his infinite ;

And buckle in a waste most fathomless,

With spans and inches so diminutive

As fears and reasons ? Shaks. Troil. and Cress.

FAT'IDICAL.† adj. [fatidicus, Latin ; fatidique, Fr.] Prophetic ; having the power to foretell future events.

The oak, of all other trees only fatidical, told them what a fearful unfortunate business this would prove. Howell, Voc. For.

If it be true, what the ancients write of some trees, that they are fatidical, these come to foretell, at leastwise to wish you, as the season invites me,
a good new-year. Howell, Lett. iv. 37.

Fatidical voices, delivered by none knows whom, apparitions of ghosts, ominations by words.

Spenser on Prodigies, p. 102.

gives fatness.

The wind was west, on which the philosopher bestowed the encomium of fatner of the earth.
Arbutnot.

FA'TNESS.† n. s. [from fat. Sax. fætnýrje.]

1. The quality of being fat, plump, or full-fed.

2. Fat ; grease ; fulness of flesh.

And by his side rode loathsome gluttony,

Deformed creature, on a filthy swine ;

His belly was upblown with luxury,

And eke with fatness swollen were his eyes.

Spenser, F. Q.

3. Unctuous or greasy matter.

Earth and water, mingled by the help of the sun, gather a nitrous fatness. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

4. Oleaginousness ; sliminess ; unctuousness.

But the olive-tree said unto them, Should I leave my fatness, wherewith by me they honour God and man, and go to be promoted over the trees ?

Judges, ix. 9.

By reason of the fatness and heaviness of the ground, Egypt did not produce metals, wood, pitch, and some fruits. Arbutnot.

5. Fertility ; fruitfulness.

God give thee of the dew of heaven, and the fatness of the earth, and plenty of corn and wine.
Gen. xxvii. 28.

6. That which causes fertility.

When around

The clouds drop fatness, in the middle sky

The dew suspended staid, and left unmoist

The execrable glebe. Philips.

Vapours and clouds feed the plants of the earth with the balm of dews and the fatness of showers.
Bentley.

TO FA'TTEN.† v. a. [Sax. fættian.]

1. To feed up ; to make fleshy ; to plump with fat.

Frequent blood-letting, in small quantities,
often increaseth the force of the organs of digestion,
and fatteneth and increaseth the distemper.
Arbutnot on Diet.

2. To make fruitful.

Town of stuff to fatten land. Lib. Londinensis.
Dare not, on thy life,

Touch ought of mine ;

This falchion else, not hitherto withstood,

These hostile fields shall fatten with thy blood.

Dryden.

3. To feed grossly ; to encrease.

Obscene Oronotes

Conveys his wealth to Tyber's hungry shores,

And fattens Italy with foreign whores.

Dryden, Juv.

TO FA'TTEN. v. n. [from fat.] To grow fat ; to be pampered ; to grow fleshy.

All agree to spoil the publick good,
And villains fatten with the brave man's labour.

Otway.

Apollo check'd my pride, and bad me feed
My fat'ning flocks, nor dare beyond the reed.

Dryden.

Yet then this little spot of earth well till'd,
A num'rous family with plenty fill'd,
The good old man and thrifty housewife spent
Their days in peace, and fatten'd with content ;
Enjoy'd the dregs of life, and liv'd to see
A long-descending healthful progeny.

Dryden, Juv.

Tigers and wolves shall in the ocean breed,
The whale and dolphin fatten on the mead,
And every element exchange its kind,
When thriving honesty in courts we find.

Granville.

FA'TTENER.* See FATNER.

FA'TTINESS.* n. s. [from fatty.] Grossness ;
fulness of flesh. Sherwood.

FA'TTISH.* adj. [from fat.] Inclining to fatness. Sherwood.

FA'TTY. adj. [from fat.] Unctuous ; oleaginous ;
greasy ; partaking of the nature of fat.

The like cloud, if oily or fatty, will not discharge; not because it sticketh faster, but because air preyeth upon water, and flame and fire upon oil.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

The gourd

And thirsty cucumber, when they perceive Th' approaching olive, with resentment fly Her fatty fibres, and with tendrils creep Diverse, detesting contact.

Philips.

The common symptoms of the murietick scurvy are, a saline taste in the spittle, and a lividurary, sometimes with a fatty substance like a thin skin atop.

Arbutnot on Aliments.

FATUOUS.† adj. [fatuus, Latin.]

1. Stupid; foolish; feeble of mind.

In the same instant that I feel the first attempt of the disease, I feel the victory; in the twinkling of an eye I can scarce see; instantly the taste is insipid and fatuus. Donne, Devot. (1635.) p. 25.

We pity or laugh at those fatuus extravagants, while yet ourselves have a considerable dose of what makes them so.

Glanville.

2. Impotent; without force; illusory; aluding to an ignis fatuus.

And when that flame finds combustible earth, Thence fatuus fires and meteors take their birth.

FAULT.† n. s. [old Fr. faute, Lacombe, 1460; faulte, Cotgrave; faute and faul, modern; the third person singular of the indicative of the verb falloir, it falls, faul, i. e. fallit. So the Span. faltar means to be deficient. The Teut. faute, and the Su. Goth. faat, also signify defect. Dr. Johnson thinks that the l in our word is sometimes sounded, and sometimes mute; and that it is in conversation generally suppressed. This I conceive to be not the case; no person of tolerable education would expose himself to the charge of ignorance or affectation by leaving out the l in the pronunciation of fault.]

1. Offence; slight crime; somewhat liable to censure or objection.

The prophet chuseth rather to charge them with the fault of making a law unto themselves, than the crime of transgressing a law which God had made.

He finds no fault with their opinion about the true God, but only that it was not clear and distinct enough.

Stillingsfleet.

He that but conceives a crime in thought,

Contracts the danger of an actual fault;

Then what must he expect that still proceeds

To commit sin, and work up thoughts to deeds?

Dryden.

If you like not my poem, the fault may possibly be in my writing; but more probably 'tis in your morals, which cannot bear the truth of it.

Dryden.

They wholly mistake the nature of criticism, who think its business is principally to find fault.

Dryden.

To be desirous of a good name, and careful to do every thing, that we innocently may, to obtain it, is so far from being a fault, even in private persons, that it is their great and indispensable duty.

Atturbury.

Before his sacred name flies ev'ry fault,

And each exalted stanza teems with thought.

Pope.

Which of our thrum-cap'd ancestors found fault, For want of sugar-tongs or spoons for salt?

King.

Being void of all friendship and enmity, they never complain, nor find fault with the times.

Swift.

2. Defect; want; absence.

I could tell to thee, as to one it pleases me, for fault of a better, to call my friend, I could be sad, and sad indeed too.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

3. Puzzle; difficulty: as, the enquirer is at a fault.

We are not only at a fault, in the hunters' term; but at a rest, as if we were playing at tennis.

Sir H. Wotton, Lett. Rem. p. 550.

4. Misfortune. Not now in use.

Bowd. You are lit into my hands, where you are like to live.

Marina.

The more my fault,

To 'scape his hands, where I was like to die.

Shakespeare, Pericles.

TO FAULT. v. n. [from the noun.] To be wrong; to fail.

Which moved him rather in eclogues than otherwise to write, minding to furnish our tongue in this kind wherein it fauteith.

E. K. on Spenser's Shep. Cal.

TO FAULT.† v. a. To charge with a fault; to accuse.

For that I will not fault thee,

But for humbleness exalt thee.

Old Song.

Whom should I fault? Bp. Hall, Sat. I. 2.

For which only [bodily uncleanness] had they dismissed their wives, our Saviour had neither faulted their gloss nor their practice.

Bp. Hall, Cases of Cons. iv. 2.

That which is to be faulted in this particular is, when the grief is immoderate and unreasonable.

Bp. Taylor, Holy Dying, v. § 8.

God's house is abused by them which bring hither hawks and dogs, which is faulted in our church-homily.

Shelford's Learned Discourses, (1635,) p. 54.

FA'ULTER.† n. s. [from fault.] An offender; one who commits a fault.

Then she, Behold the faultier here in sight; This hand committed that supposed offence.

Fairfax.

With my sweet words I could the King persuade,

And make him pause, and take therein a breath, Till I, with suit, the faultier's peace had made.

Mir. for Mag. p. 499.

TO FA'ULTER.* See TO FALTER.

FA'ULTFINDER.† n. s. [fault and find.] A censurer; an objector.

Other pleasant faultfinders, who will correct the verb before they understand the noun.

Sidney, Def. of Poety.

Be thou no sharp faultfinder, but an admonisher without upbraiding.

Transl. of Bullinger's Serm. p. 241.

FA'ULTFUL.* adj. [fault and full.] Full of crime.

So fares it with this faultful lord of Rome.

Shakespeare, Rape of Lucrece.

FA'ULTILY.† adv. [from faultily.] Not rightly; improperly; defectively; erroneously.

Sherwood.

The former impression was exhausted, and very faultily printed.

Abp. Cranmer. Pref. to the Bible.

FA'ULTINESS.† n. s. [from faultily.]

1. Badness; vitiousness; evil disposition.

When her judgement was to be practised in knowing faultiness by his first tokens, she was like a young fawn, who coming in the wind of the hunters, doth not know whether it be a thing or no to be eschewed.

Sidney.

2. Delinquency; actual offences.

The inhabitants will not take it in evil part, that the faultiness of their people heretofore is laid open.

Hooker.

3. Imperfection; defect; unfitness for use.

If these objections are just, what have I done but discovered the faultiness of a commodity, which Mr. Warburton had put off upon them, and they were, though innocently, putting off upon the publick, for good ware?

Edwards, Can. of Criticism. Pref.

FA'ULTLESS. adj. [from fault.] Exempt from fault; perfect; completely excellent.

Where for our sins he faultless suffered pain, There where he died, and where he liv'd again.

Fairfax.

Who durst thy faultless figure thus deface!

Dryden, Æn.

Whoever thinks a faultless piece to see, Thinks what ne'er was, or is, nor e'er shall be.

Pope.

FA'ULTLESSNESS.* n. s. [from faultless.] The state of being perfect.

FA'ULTY. adj. [faultif, French, from fault.]

1. Guilty of a fault; blameable; criminal; not innocent.

The king doth speak as one which is faulty.
2 Sam. xiv. 13.

Can thus

The image of God in man, created once
So goodly and erect, though faulty since!
To such unsightly sufferings be debas'd?

Milton, P. L.

2. Wrong; erroneous.

The form of polity by them set down for perpetuity, is three ways faulty; faulty in omitting some things which in Scripture are of that nature, as, namely, the difference that ought to be of pastors, when they grow to any great multitude; faulty in requiring doctors, deacons, and widows, as things of perpetual necessity by the law of God, which in truth are nothing less; faulty also in urging some things by Scripture mutable, as their lay elders.

Hooker.

3. Defective; bad in any respect; not fit for the use intended.

By accident of a faulty helmet that Parker had on, he was stricken into the mouth at the first course, so that he died presently.

Bacon, Hen. VII.

FAUN.* n. s. [Lat. Faunus.] A sort of inferior heathen deity, pretended to inhabit the woods.

Fauns, or sylwans, be of poets feigned to be gods of the wood.

E. K. on Spenser's Shep. Calendar.

Rough Satyrs danc'd, and Fauns with cloven heel

From the glad sound would not be absent long.

Milton, Lycidas.

FA'UNIST.* n. s. [from faun.] One who attends to rural disquisitions; a naturalist. Modern.

Some future faunist, a man of fortune, will, I hope, extend his visits to Ireland; a new field to the naturalist.

White's Selborne, p. 107.

TO FA'VOUR.† v. a. [faveo, Lat.]

1. To support; to regard with kindness; to be propitious to; to countenance.

Of all the race of silver-winged flies
Was none more favourable, nor more fair,
Whilst Heaven did favour his felicities,
Than Clarion, the eldest son and heir
Of Muscarol.

Spenser, Muioptomos.

The self-same gods that arm'd the queen of Troy,

May favour Tamora the queen of Goths.

Titus Andronicus.

Men favour wondrous.
Fortune so favoured him, that the town at his first coming surrendered unto him.

Knoles, Hist. of the Turks.

The good Æneas am I call'd; a name,
While fortune favour'd, not unknown to fame.

Dryden.

Oh happy youth! and favour'd of the skies,
Distinguish'd care of guardian deities.

Pope, Odys.

2. To assist with advantages or conveniences.

No one place about it is weaker than another, to favour an enemy in his approaches.

Addison, Whig-Examiner.

3. To resemble in feature.

The porter owned that the gentleman favoured his master.

Spectator.

4. To resemble in any respect.

The complexion of the element
Is favour'd like the work we have in hand,
Most bloody, fiery, and most terrible.

Shakespeare, Jul. Cæs.

5. To conduce to; to contribute.

FA'VOUR. n. s. [favor, Lat. faveur, Fr.]

1. Countenance; kindness: kind regard;

propitious aspect: with of before the favourer.

It pleas'd your majesty to turn your looks
Of favour from myself, and all our house.

Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

The child Samuel was in favour, both with the Lord and also with men.

1 Sam. ii. 26.

They got not the land by their own sword; but thy right hand and thine arm, and the light of thy countenance, because thou hast a favour unto them.

Psalms xlv. 3.

His dreadful navy, and his lovely mind,
Gave him the fear, and favour of mankind.

Waller.

This favour, had it been employed on a more deserving subject, had been an effect of justice in your nature; but, as placed on me, is only charity.

Dryden, Aurengz. Pref.

2. Support; defence; vindication; inclination to favour: with of before the thing favoured.

The pleasures which these Scriptures ascribe to religion, are of a kind very different from those in favour of which they are here alleged.

Rogers.

At play, among strangers, we are apt to find our hopes and wishes engaged on a sudden in favour of one side more than another.

Swift.

They were invited from all parts for the use of kings, princes, and ministers. And, in short, the favour of learning was the humour and mode of the age.

Temple.

3. Kindness granted; benevolence shewn.

All favours and punishments passed by him, all offices and places of importance were distributed to his favourites.

Sidney.

The race is not to the swift, nor yet favour to men of skill.

Eccl. ix. 11.

O, my royal master!

The gods, in favour to you, made her cruel.

A. Phillips.

4. Lenity; mildness: mitigation of punishment.

I could not discover the lenity and favour of this sentence; but conceived it rather to be rigorous than gentle.

Swift.

5. Leave; good will; pardon.

Worthy Macbeth, we stay upon your leisure.
— Give me your favour; my dull brain was wrought
With things forgot.

Shakespeare.

Yet ere we enter into open act,
With favour, 'twere no loss if't might be inquir'd
What the condition of these arms would be.

B. Jonson.

Come down, said Reynard, let us treat of peace:
A peace, with all my soul, said Chanticleer;
But, with your favour, I will treat it here.

Dryden.

6. Object of favour; person or thing favoured.

All these his wond'rous works, but chiefly man,
His chief delight and favour; him, for whom
All these his works so wond'rous he ordain'd.

Milton, P. L.

7. Something given by a lady to be worn.

And every one his love suit will advance
Unto his several mistress, which they'll know
By favours several which they did bestow.

It is received that it helpeth to continue love, if one wear the hair of the party beloved; and perhaps a glove, or other like favour, may as well do it.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

A blue ribband tied round the sword-arm, I conceive to be the remains of that custom of wearing a mistress's favour on such occasions of old.

Spectator.

8. Any thing worn openly as a token.

Here, Fluellen, wear thou this favour for me, and stick it in thy cap.

Shakespeare, Hen. V.

9. Feature; countenance. It is now little used.

That is only suitable in laying a foul complexion upon a filthy favour, setting forth both in sluttishness.

Sidney.

Young though thou art, thine eye

Hath staid upon some favour that it loves. Shaks.
Disseat thy favour with an usurped beard.

Shakespeare, Othello.

There's no goodness in thy face: if Antony
Be free and healthful, why so tart a favour
To trumpet such good tidings?

Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleop.

Yet well I remember
The favours of these men: were they not mine?
Did they not sometime cry, all hail! to me?

Shakespeare, Rich. II.

A youth of fine favour and shape.

By their virtuous behaviour they compensate the hardness of their favours, and by the pulchritude of their souls, make up what is wanting in the beauty of their bodies.

Ray.

FA'VOURABLE. adj. [favorable, French; favorabilis, Latin.]

1. Kind; propitious; affectionate.

Famous Plantagenet! most gracious prince,
Lend favourable ear to our requests.

Shakespeare, Rich. III.

2. Palliative; tender; averse from censure.

None can have the favourable thought,
That to obey a tyrant's will they fought.

Dryd. Juv.

3. Conducive to; contributing to; propitious.

Temple.

4. Accommodate; convenient.

Many good officers were willing to stay there, as a place very favourable for the making lives of men.

Clarendon.

5. Beautiful; well favoured; well featured. Obsolete.

Of all the race of silver-winged flies
Which do possess the empire of the air,
Was none more favourable, nor more fair,—
Than Clarion, the eldest son and heir
Of Muscarol.

Spenser, Muioptomos.

FA'VOURABLENESS.† n. s. [from favourable.] Kindness; benignity. Sherwood.

To the favourableness of your ladyship's censure.—be pleased to add the favour of your opinion.

Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsom, p. 198.

FA'VOURABLY. adv. [from favourable.]

Kindly; with favour; with tenderness; with kind regard.

Touching actions of common life, there is not any defence more favourably heard than theirs who allege sincerely for themselves, that they did as necessity constrained them.

Hooker.

She goeth about seeking such as are worthy of her, and sheweth herself favourably unto them in the ways.

Wisd. vi.

The violent will condemn the character of Absalom, as either too favourably or too hardly drawn.

Dryden.

We are naturally inclined to think favourably of those we love.

Rogers.

FA'VOURED.† participial adj. [from favour.]

1. Regarded with kindness.

Oft with some favour'd traveller they stray,
And shine before him all the desert way.

Pope, Odyssey.

2. Featured. See the ninth sense of the substantive favour. Always conjoined with well or ill. Dr. Johnson says, citing only Spenser, and the Bible. But this is not exclusively the case, as the other example, which I add, will shew, and which indeed exhibits a word still common in conversation.

Of her there bred

A thousand young ones which she daily fed;
Sucking upon her poisonous dugs, each one
Of sundry shape, yet all ill-favoured. Spens. F. Q.
The ill-favoured and lean-fleshed kine did eat up the seven well-favoured and fat kine.

Genesis, xli. 4.

Bridget Howd'ye, late servant to the lady Fardingle, a short, thick, lively, hard-favoured wench.

Tatler, No. 245.

FA'VOUREDLY. adv. [from favoured.] Always joined with well or ill, in a fair or foul way; with good or bad appearance.

FA'VOUREDNESS. * n. s. [from favoured.] Usually joined with well or ill; appearance.

Thou shalt not sacrifice unto the Lord thy God any bullock or sheep, wherein is blemish or an evil-favouredness. Deut. xvii. 1.

FA'VOURER. n. s. [from favour.] One who favours; one who regards with kindness or tenderness; a well wisher; a friend.

If we should upbraid them with irreligious, as they do with superstitious favourers, the answer which herein they would make us, let them apply unto themselves. Hooker.

Do I not know you for a favourer
Of this new sect? ye are not sound.

Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

Being now a favourer to the Briton.

Shakespeare, Cymb.

Conjure their friends they had, labour for more, Solicit all reputed favourers. Daniel, Civil Wars.

All the favourers of magic were the most profest and bitter enemies to the Christian religion.

Addison.

FA'VOURESS. * n. s. [from favour.] She who countenances, or supports, or regards with kindness. Not used.

The lady Margaret Alençon, a principal favourer of the protestant religion.

Dr. Hakewell's Answ. to Dr. Carrier, 1616, p. 184.

FA'VOURITE. † n. s. [favori, favorit, Fr. favorita, Ital.]

1. A person or thing beloved; one regarded with favour; any thing in which pleasure is taken; that which is regarded with particular approbation or affection.

A favourite has no friend. Gray.

2. One chosen as a companion by a superior; a mean wretch whose whole business is by any means to please.

All favours and punishments passed by him, all offices and places of importance were distributed to his favourites. Sidney.

I was a Thessalian gentleman, who, by mischance, having killed a favourite of the prince of that country, was pursued so cruelly, that in no place but by favour or corruption they would obtain my destruction. Sidney.

The great man down, you mark, his fav'rite, flies;

The poor advance'd, makes friends of enemies.

Shakespeare, Hamlet.

Bid her steal into the plashed bower,
Where honeysuckles, ripen'd by the sun,
Forbid the sun to enter; like to favourites,
Made proud by princes that advance their pride
Against that power that bred it. Shakespeare.

Nothing is more vigilant, nothing more jealous than a favourite, especially towards the waining time, and suspect of satiety. Watson.

This man was very capable of being a great favourite to a great king.

Clarendon.

What fav'rites gain, and what the nation owes,
Fly the forgetful world. Pope.

FA'VOURITE. * adj. Beloved; regarded with favour. The two following examples stand in Dr. Johnson's Dictionary as illustrations of the substantive; and of the adjective no notice is taken.

Every particular master in criticism has his favourite passages in an author. Addison, Spect.

So fathers speak, persuasive speech and mild!
Their sage experience to the favourite child.

Pope, Odyssey.

FA'VOURITISM. * n. s. [from favourite.] Exercise of power by favourites.

A plan of favouritism for our executory government is essentially at variance with the plan of our legislature.

Burke, Thoughts on the Pres. Discontents.

FA'VOURLESS. adj. [from favour.]

1. Unfavoured; not regarded with kindness; having no patronage; without countenance.

2. Unfavouring; unpropitious.

Of that Goddess I have sought the sight,
Yet no where can her find; such happiness
Heaven doth me envy, and fortune favourless.

Spenser, F. Q.

FA'USEN. n. s. A sort of large eel.

He left the waves to wash;

The wave sprung entrails, about which fausens and other fish

Did shole. Chapman, Iliads.

FA'USSEBRAYE. n. s. A small mount of earth, four fathom wide, erected on the level round the foot of the rampart, to fire upon the enemy, when he is so far advanced that you cannot force him back; and also to receive the ruins which the cannons make in the body of the place. Harris.

FA'UTOR. n. s. [Lat. fauteur, Fr.] Fa- vourer; countenancer; supporter.

I am neither author or fautor of any sect: I will have no man addict himself to me; but, if I have any thing right, defend it as truth's, not mine. B. Jonson.

The new mountain in the Lucrine lake, which is alleged by the fautors of this opinion, as an instance in behalf of it, was not raised thus.

Woodward.

FA'UTRESS. n. s. [fautrix, Lat. fautrice, Fr.] A woman that favours, or shows countenance.

It made him pray, and prove

Minerva's aid his fautress still. Chapman, Iliads.

He comes from banishment to the fautress of liberty, from the barbarous to the polite.

Garth, Dedic. to Ovid.

FAWN. † n. s. [faon, Fr. from fan, in old Fr. a child probably from infans, Latin, Dr. Johnson says. Fan is the old French word for a fawn itself, or for the young of any beast. V. Cotgrave in FAN. Borel derives it from infans.] A young deer.

Looking my love, I go from place to place,
Like a young fawn that late hath lost the hind;
And seek each where, where last I saw her face,
Whose image yet I carry fresh in mind.

Spenser, Sonnets.

The buck is called the first year a fawn, the second year a pricket. Shaks. L. Lab. Lost.

The colt hath about four years of growth; and so the fawn, and so the calf. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Who for thy table feeds the wanton fawn,
For him as kindly spreads the flow'ry lawn. Pope.

TO FAWN. * v. n. [Fr. faonner.] To bring forth a fawn. Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

The does then do fawn.

Bullock, in V. Fencemouth.

TO FAWN. † v. n. [of uncertain original; perhaps a contraction of the French fan-fan, a term of fondness for children, Dr. Johnson says; but it is perhaps from the Sax. fægnan, which bears the meaning of to speak fair, to wheedle.]

1. To court by frisking before one; as a dog.

The dog straight fawned upon his master for old knowledge. Sidney.

Holding Corioli in the name of Rome,
Even like a fawning greyhound. Shaks. Coriol.

2. To court by any means. Used by animals.

Instead thereof he kiss'd her weary feet,
And lick'd her lily hands with fawning tongue,
As he wrong'd innocence did weat. Spens. F. Q.

Is it not strange that a rational man should worship an ox? that he should fawn upon his dog? bow himself before a cat? and adore leeks and garlic? South.

3. To court servilely.

My love, forbear to fawn upon their frowns;
What danger or what sorrow can befall thee,
So long as Edward is thy constant friend?

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

And thou, sly hypocrite, who now would'st be Patron of liberty, who more than thou
Once fawn'd d, and cring'd, and servilely ador'd Heav'n's awful monarch? Milton, P. L.

Whom Ancoo follows with a fawning air;
But wain within, and proudly popular. Dryd. Æn.

Dext'rous the craving fawning crowd to quit,
And pleas'd to 'scape from flattery to wit. Pope.

FAWN. † n. s. A servile cringe: low flattery.

You will rather shew our gentle lows
How you can frown, than spend a fawn upon them

For the inheritance of their loves. Shaks. Coriol.

Thanks, Horace, for thy free and wholesome sharpness,

Which pleaseth Cæsar more than servile fawns.

B. Jonson, Poetaster.

FA'WNER. † n. s. [from fawn.] One that fawns; one that pays servile courtship.

Our talking is trustless, our cares do abound;
Our fawners deem'd faithful, and friendship a foe. Mir. for Mag. p. 85.

By softness of behaviour we have arrived at the appellation of fawners. Spectator.

FA'WNING. * n. s. [from fawn.] Gross or low flattery; the act of servilely cringing.

Low-crook'd curt'sies, and base spaniel faw- ning. Shakespeare, Jul. Cæs.

Clowns' fawnings are a horse's salutations.

B. Jonson, Staple of News.

The fawnings and the wiles of court.

Feltham, Disc. on Eccles. ii. 11.

He that hath —
Despised the fawnings of a future greatness.

Massinger, Renegado.

FA'WNINGLY. † adv. [from fawn.] In a cringing servile way.

He that so fawningly enticed the soul to sin,
will now as bitterly upbraid it for having sinned.

South, Sermon ix. 28.

FA'XED. † adj. [from fæx, Sax. hair.] Hairy. Bailey gives fæx for hair.

They could call a comet a fæx star, which is all one with stella crinita, or cometa.

Camden, Rem.

FAY. † n. s. [fée, Fr. See FAIRY.]

1. A fairy; an elf.

And the yellow-skirted fays
Fly after the night-steeds,
Leaving their moon-lov'd maze. Milton, Ode Nat.

The bards' songs suppose, that after the battle of Camlan in Cornwall, where traitorous Mordred was slain, and Arthur wounded, Morgan le Fay, a great elfin lady, conveyed the body hither to cure it.

Selden on Drayton's Polyolb. S. 3.

Ye sylphs and sylphids, to your chief give ear;
Fays, fairies, genii, elves, and demons hear!

Pope.

From her, [the Persian peri, Merjan,] we may fairly derive Ariosto's "la fata Morgana;"—from her likewise we may derive our Morgan le Faye, the patroness of Arthur in romantic lore, and his conductress to the land of Faery:

Hole on the Arab. Nights' Entert. p. 15.

2. Faith. [Fr. foy, fay; Span. fe.] Wholly obsolete.

Their ill 'haviour garres men missay,
Both of their doctrine and their fay.

Spenser, Shep. Cal.

TO FAY.* v. a. [Su. Goth. feia, to cleanse.]

To cleanse, as a ditch or a pond. Wilbraham's Chesh. Gloss. To cast up, to cleanse, to remove earth. Craven Dialect. Sometimes written fey. See TO FEY. The substantive fey is also loose earth. See Craven Dial. in V. and in FAUF. and Ray in FEY.

FE'ABERRY. n. s. [grossularia, Lat.] A gooseberry.

Dict.

TO FEAGUE.† v. a. [Gower uses To feige, for to censure; fegen, Germ. to sweep; fijken, Dutch, to strike.] To whip; to chastise; to beat.

When a knotty point comes, I lay my head close to it, with a snuff-box in my hand; and then I fenge it away i' faith.

Duke of Buckingham, Rehearsal.

FE'AL.* adj. [feel, Norm. French, "feel et leal," faithful and loyal, Kelham; later Fr. feal.] Faithful. Not now in use among the English; but still, I believe, among the Scotch.

The tenants by knights' service used to swear to their lords to be feal and leal, i. e. faithful and loyal.

Chambers.

TO FEAL.* v. a. [Teut. helan, Icel. fel, occulto. Craven Dial.] To hide; to conceal. A northern word.

He that feals can find.

Grose.

FE'ALTY.† n. s. [fealty, old Fr. of the eleventh century; fedelta, Ital. fidelitas, Lat.] Duty due to a superior lord; fidelity to a master; loyalty.

I am in parliament pledge for thy truth,
And lasting fealty to the new-made king.

Shakespeare, Rich. III.

Let my sovereign

Command my eldest son, nay all my sons,
As pledges of my fealty and love. Shaks. Hen. IV.

Man disobeying,

Disloyal, breaks his fealty, and sins
Against the high supremacy of Heaven.

Milton, P. L.

Each bird and beast behold
After their kinds: I bring them to receive
From thee their names, and pay thee fealty
With low subjection.

Milton, P. L.

Whether his first design be to withdraw
Our fealty from God, or to disturb Conjugal love.

Milton, P. L.

FEAR.† n. s. [Goth. faurhtan, to fear; faurthei, fear; Teut. var, fear; Norm. Fr. fear, fear; Swed. fara, danger; Icel. far, sorrowful.]

1. Dread; terror; painful apprehension of danger.

Fear is an uneasiness of the mind,
upon the thought of future evil likely to befall us.

Locke.

Trembling fear still to and fro did fly,
And found no place where safe she shrowd him might.

Spenser, F. Q.

For fear was upon them, because of the people of those countries.

Esra, iii. 3.

Behold me in my sex; I am no soldier;
Tender, and full of fears, our blushing sex is,
Unhardened with relentless thoughts.

Beaumont and Fl. Knight of Malta.

What then remains? Are we depriv'd of will?
Must we not wish, for fear of wishing ill?

Dryden, Juv.

Fear, in general, is that passion of our nature whereby we are excited to provide for our security upon the approach of evil.

Rogers.

2. Awe; dejection of mind at the presence of any person or thing; terror impressed: with of before that which impresseth.

And the fear of you, and the dread of you shall be upon every beast.

Gen. ix. 2.

3. Anxiety; solicitude.

The principal fear was for the holy temple.

2 Mac. xv. 18.

4. That which causes fear.

Still, as he fled, his eye was backward cast,
As if his fear still follow'd him behind.

Spenser, F. Q. i. ix. 21.

I will mock when your fear cometh, when your fear cometh as desolation.

Prov. i. 26.

Antony, stay not by his side:
Thy demon, that's the spirit that keeps thee, is Noble, courageous, high, unmatchable,
Where Cesar's is not; but near him, thy angel
Becomes a fear, as being o'erpower'd.

Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleop.

5. The object of fear.

Except the God of Abraham and the fear of Isaac had been with me,

Gen. xxxi. 42.

6. Something hung up to scare deer by its colour or noise.

He who fleeth from the noise of the fear shall fall into the pit, and he that cometh up out of the midst of the pit shall be taken in the snare.

Is. xxiv. 18.

FEAR.† n. s. [joepa, Saxon.] A companion. Obsolete. The true word is fere. But Spenser occasionally writes it with the a. See FERE.

TO FEAR.† v. a. [See the etymology of the noun.]

1. To dread; to consider with apprehensions of terror; to be afraid of.

Now, for my life, Hortensio fears his widow.

—Then never trust me if I be afraid.

—You are very sensible, yet you miss my sense;
I mean Hortensio is afraid of you.

Shakespeare, Tam. of the Shrew.

To fear the foe, since fear oppresseth strength,
Gives, in your weakness, strength unto your foe.

Shakespeare, Rich. II.

There shall rise up a kingdom, and it shall be feared above all the kingdoms before it.

2 Esdr. xii. 13.

When I view the beauties of thy face,
I fear not death, nor dangers, nor disgrace.

Dryden.

2. To fright; to terrify; to make afraid. [Ort. Vocab. 1514, terrifico.]

Let not worldly shame fear us to wepe for our synnes.

Bp. Fisher, Ps. 33.

Carew.

We must not make a scarecrow of the law,
Setting it up to fear the birds of prey.

Shakespeare, Meas. for Meas.

Some, sitting on the hatches, would seem there,
With hideous gazing, to fear away fear.

Donne.

3. To reverence.

Barret.

There is forgiveness with thee, that Thou mayest be feared.

Psalms cxxx. 4.

TO FEAR. v. n.

1. To live in terror; to be afraid.

Well you may fear too far, sir,—

—Safer than trust too far:

Let me still take away the harms I fear,

Not fear still to be taken.

Shakespeare, K. L.

If any such be here, if any fear

Less for his person than an ill report;

If any think brave death outweighs bad life.

Shakespeare, Coriol.

2. To be anxious.

Then let the greedy merchant fear

For his ill-gotten gain;

And pray to Gods that will not hear,

While the debating winds and billows bear

His wealth into the main.

Dryden, Horace.

See, pious king, with diff'rent strife,

Thy struggling Albion's bosom torn:

So much, she fears for William's life,

That Mary's fate she dare not mourn.

Prior.

FE'ARFUL. adj. [fear and full.]

1. Timorous; timid; easily made afraid.

Them that are of a fearful heart. Isaiah, xxxv. 4.

2. Afraid. It has of before the object of fear.

Psalms cxxxix. 14.

FE'ARFULNESS.† n. s. [from fearful.]

1. Timorousness; habitual timidity.

O Egelred, the fruit of fearfulness,
Of riot thou the right reward dost reap;
But if thou wilt avoid this wretchedness,
Be wise, and look about before thee leap.

Mir. for Mag. p. 240.

The Jews themselves thought nothing fit to be a murderer of this kind but a devil, and a she-one too; that the fearfulness of the sex might dispose to more unruly and more barbarous resolutions of inhumanity.

Gregory, Posthuma, p. 97.

2. State of being afraid; awe; dread.

Is it credible that the acknowledgement of our own unworthiness, our professed fearfulness to ask any thing, otherwise than only for his sake to whom God can deny nothing, that this should be noted for a popish error?

Hooker.

A third thing that makes a government justly despised, is fearfulness of and mean compliances with bold popular offenders.

FE'ARLESS.† adj. [from fear.] Free from fear; intrepid; courageous; bold; with of before the subject. Warburton has once used it in the sense of unfeared. See HONOURLESS.

From the ground she fearless doth arise,
And walketh forth without suspect of crime.

Spenser, F. Q.

The flaming seraph, fearless, though alone
Encompass'd round with foes, thus answer'd bold.

Milton, P. L.

A nation, whose distinguishing character it is to be more fearless of death and danger than any other.

Temple.

FE'ARLESSLY. adv. [from fearless.] Without terror; intrepidly.

'Tis matter of the greatest astonishment to observe the stupid, yet common boldness of men, who so fearlessly expose themselves to this most formidable of perils.

Decay of Piety.

FE'ARLESSNESS. n. s. [from fearless.] Exemption from fear; intrepidity; courage; boldness.

He gave instances of an invincible courage, and fearlessness in danger.

Clarendon.

FEASIB'ILITY. n. s. [from feasible.]

1. Practicability.
2. A thing practicable.

Men often swallow falsities for truths, dubiosities for certainties, possibilities for feasibilities, and things impossible for possibilities themselves.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

FE'ASIBLE.† adj. [faissible, French.] Our own word was formerly written faissible; and sometimes feasible, as by Barret; probably in conformity to the Lat. etymon, facio, to do.] Practicable; such as may be effected; such as may be done.

Things are feasible in themselves; else the eternal wisdom of God would never have advised, and much less have commanded them.

South.

FE'ASIBLE.* n. s. Whatever is practicable. We conclude many things impossible, which yet are easy feasibles.

Glantville, Scopsia.

FE'ASIBLENESS.* n. s. [from feasible.] Practicability.

Let us inquire into the faissibleness of this great improvement of our holy and Christian diligence.

Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 271.

They have not yet convinced the world of the feasibleness and truth of their propositions, by any manifest transcriptions of them upon their lives.

South, Sermon, vii. 115.

You have convinced me of the feasibleness, as well as the excellency, of that kind of conversation.

Goodman, Wint. Ev. Conf. P. I.

FE'ASIBLY. adv. [from feasible.] Practicably.

FEAST.† n. s. [feast, old French, of the tenth century; feste, modern; festum, Lat.]

1. An entertainment of the table; a sumptuous treat of great numbers.

Here's our chief guest. If he had been forgotten,

It had been as a gap in our great feast.

Shakespeare, Macbeth.

On Pharaoh's birthday he made a feast unto all his servants.

Gen. xl. 20.

The lady of the leaf ordain'd a feast;
And made the lady of the flow'r her guest;
When lo! a bow'r ascended on the plain,
With sudden seats ordain'd, and large for either train.

Dryden.

2. An anniversary day of rejoicing either on a civil or religious occasion. Opposed to a fast.

This day is call'd the feast of Crispian.

Shakespeare, Hen. V.

3. Something delicious to the palate.

Many people would, with reason, prefer the gripping of an hungry belly to those dishes which are a feast to others.

Locke.

TO FEAST. v. n. [from the noun.] To eat sumptuously; to eat together on a day of joy.

Richard and Northumberland, great friends,
Did feast together.

Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

FE'ASTFUL.† adj. [feast and full.] This was a word in use at least a century before Milton wrote, from whose poetry Dr. Johnson cites his earliest example.]

1. Festive; joyful.

They constitute also a feastful daie to the honour and worship thereof.

Bale on the Revel. P. III. (1550.) sign. ii.

Our solemn feastful day.

Alph. Parker, Transl. of the Psalms, p. 234.

The virgins also shall on feastful days
Visit his tomb with flowers, only bewailing
His lot unfortunate in nuptial choice,
From whence captivity and loss of eyes. Milt. S. A.

Therefore be sure

Thou, when the bridegroom with his feastful friends
Passes to bliss at the mid hour of night,
Hast gain'd thy entrance, virgin wise and pure.

Milton, Sonnet.

2. Luxurious; riotous.

The suitor train

Who crowd his palace, and with lawless pow'r
His herds and flocks in feastful rites devour.

Pope, Odyssey.

FE'ASTING.* n. s. [from feast.] An entertainment; a treat.

But these very grievously afflicted them, who they had received with Feastings. Wisdom, xix. 16.

FE'ASTRITE. n. s. [feast and rite.] Custom observed in entertainments.

His hospitable gate,

Unbar'd to all, invites a numerous train
Of daily guests; whose board with plenty crown'd,
Revives the feastrites old.

Philips.

FEAT.† n. s. [feat, Norm. French, done, deed, Kelham; fait, modern; factum, Latin.]

1. Act; deed; action; exploit.

Pyrocles is his name, renowned far

For his bold feats and hardy confidence;

Full oft approved in many a cruel war. Spens. F. Q.

Tarquin's self he met,

And struck him on his knee; in that day's feats,
When he might act the woman in the scene,

He prov'd th' best man i' th' field. Shaks. Coriol.

Our soldiers are men of strong heads for action, and perform such feats as they are not able to express.

Addison, Spect.

2. A trick; an artful, festive, or ludicrous performance.

The joints are more supple to all feats of activity and motion in youth than afterwards.

Bacon, Essays.

FEAT.† adj. [fait, bien fait, French; "homo factus ad unguem," Lat. So far Dr. Johnson. But the Su. Goth. fatt, apt, ready, may be also considered as the parent of the word before us.]

The tender stalks on high. Spenser, Prothalam.

FE'ATHER. n. s. [reðer, Saxon; feder, German.]

1. The plume of birds.

Look as I blow this feather from my face.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

The brave eagle does with sorrow see

The forest wasted, and that lofty tree,

Which holds her nest, about to be o'erthrown,

Before the feathers of her young are grown;

She will not leave them, nor she cannot stay,

But bears them boldly on her wings away. Waller.

When a man in the dark presses either corner of his eye with his finger, and turns his eye away from his finger, he will see a circle of colours like those in the feathers of a peacock's tail. Newt. Opt.

I am bright as an angel, and light as a feather.

Swift.

2. Kind; nature; species: from the proverbial expression, birds of a feather; that is, of a species.

Clifford and the haught Northumberland,
And of their feather many more proud birds,
Have wrought the easy-melting king, like wax.
Shakespeare, Hen. VI.
I am not of that feather to shake off
My friend, when he most needs me, Shaks. Timon.

3. An ornament; an empty title.

4. [Upon a horse.] A sort of natural frizzling of hair, which, in some places, rises above the lying hair, and there makes a figure resembling the tip of an ear of corn. Farrier's Dict.

To FEATHER.† v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To dress in feathers.
2. To fit with feathers.
3. To tread as a cock.

them about.
A featherdriver had the residue of his lungs filled with the fine dust or down of feathers.

Derham, Physico-Theol.

FEATHERED.† adj. [from feather.]

1. Clothed with feathers.

I saw young Harry with his beaver on,
His cuisses on his thighs, gallantly arm'd,
Rise from the ground like feather'd Mercury.
Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

So when the new-born phoenix first is seen,
Her feather'd subjects all adore their queen. Dryd.
Dark'ning the sky, they hover o'er and shroud
The wanton sailors with a feather'd cloud. Prior.
Then ships of uncouth form shall stem the tide,
And feather'd people crowd my wealthy side. Pope.
Vultures, harpies, ravens, cormorants, and,
among many other feathered creatures, several little winged boys perch upon the middle arches.
Addison, Spect.

2. Fitted with feathers; carrying feathers.
An eagle had the ill hap to be struck with an arrow, feather'd from her own wing. L' Estrange.
Not the bow they bend, nor boast the skill
To give the feather'd arrow wings to kill.
Pope, Odyssey.

3. Swift; winged, like an arrow.

Like shuttles through the loom, so swiftly glide
My feather'd hours. Sandys, Job, p. 12.
Nor think this while our feather'd minutes may Fall under measure; Time itself can stay.
Cleveland, Poems, &c. p. 43.

4. Smoothed, like down or feathers.

As if it were a sign of godliness, and a mark of God's favourites, to be affected with nonsense, feathered with soft and delicate phrases, and pointed with pathetic accents! Scott's Works, ii. 124.

FEATURE.† n. s. [feiture, old French.]

1. The cast or make of the face.

Report the feature of Octavia, her years. Shaks.
2. Any lineament or single part of the face.

Though ye be the fairest of God's creatures,
Yet think that death shall spoil your goodly features.
Spenser.

We may compare the face of a great man with the character, and try if we can find out in his looks and features, the haughty cruel, or unmerciful temper that discovers itself in the history.
Addison on Medals.

Though various features did the sisters grace,
A sister's likeness was in every face. Addison, Ovid.

3. The whole turn of the body; the fashion; the make.

She also doff'd her heavy habergeon
Which the fair feature of her limbs did hide.
Spenser, F. Q.

4. Workmanship.

Here they [the witches] speak as if they were creating some new feature, which the devil persuades them to be able to do often, by the pronouncing of words, and pouring out of liquors on the earth.

B. Jonson, his own Notes on his Masques.

To FEATURE.† v. a. To resemble in countenance; to favour. Dr. Johnson cites, as an illustration of this word, the passage which I have given to the verb feat; the true word being feated; and featured an unwarrantable alteration.

FEATURED.* adj. [from feature.]

1. Having handsome features.

How wise, how noble, young, how rarely featured. Shakespeare, Much Ado.

Rich thou art, featured thou art, feared thou art. Greene, Farewell to Folly, (1617.)

The act of making fruitful or prolific.

She requested these plants as a medicine of fecundation, or to make her fruitful.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

To FECUNDIFY. v. a. To make fruitful; to make prolific. Dict.

FECUNDITY. n. s. [from fecund; fécondité, French.]

1. Fruitfulness; quality of producing or bringing forth in great abundance.

I appeal to the animal and vegetable productions of the earth, the vast numbers whereof notoriously testify the extreme luxuriance and fecundity of it.

Woodward.

2. Power of producing or bringing forth.

Some of the ancients mention some seeds that retain their fecundity forty years, and I have found that melon-seeds, after thirty years, are best for raising of melons.

Ray.

God could never create so ample a world, but he could have made a bigger; the fecundity of his creative power never growing barren nor being exhausted.

Bentley.

FED. Preterite and participle pass. of To feed.

For on the grassy verdure as he lay,
And breath'd the freshness of the early day,
Devouring dogs the helpless infant tore,
Fed on his trembling limbs, and lapp'd the gore.

Pope.

FE'DARY. n. s. [foedus, Latin, or from feudum.] This word, peculiar to Shakespeare, may signify either a confederate, a partner, or a dependant.

Damn'd paper!

Black as the ink that's on thee, senseless bauble!
Art thou a fedary for this act, and look'st
So virgin-like without. Shakespeare, Cymb.

FEDERAL. adj. [from foedus, Latin.]
Relating to a league or contract.

It is a federal rite betwixt God and us, as eating and drinking, both among Jews and Heathens, was wont to be.

Hammond.

The Romans compelled them, contrary to all federal right and justice, both to part with Sardinia, their lawful territory, and also to pay them for the future a double tribute.

Grew.

FE'DERARY. n. s. [from foedus, Latin.] A confederate; an accomplice.

She's a traitor, and Camillo is

A fedary with her.

Shakespeare.

FE'DERATE. adj. [foederatus, Latin.]

FE'DERATIVE.* adj. [from federate.] Having power to make a league or contract.
[They] suggest to them leagues of perpetual amity, at the very time when the power, to which our constitution has exclusively delegated the federative capacity of this kingdom, may find it expedient to make war upon them.

Burke on the French Revolution.

FEDERA'TION.* n. s. [from federate.] A league.

Is he obliged to keep any terms with these clubs and federations, who hold out to us as a pattern for imitation, the proceedings in France?

Burke.

FE'DITY.* n. s. [Lat. foeditus.] Baseness; turpitude; inherent vileness.

A second [impediment] may be the fedity and unnaturalness of the match, when the parties incestuously marry.

Bp. Hall, Cases of Conscience, iv. 10.

Some fedities common amongst the Gnosticks, not fit to be named.

Bp. Lavington, Moravians compared, &c. p. 65.

FEE-† n. s. [proh. Sax. fee, Danish, cattle; feudum, low Latin; feu, Scottish.

So far Dr. Johnson. The Saxon word denotes, like the Gothic, faihus, goods, possessions of any kind. So the Icel. and the Su. Goth. fæ. See also Food. Some think that because those, who held in fee, obtained the appellation of fideles, the word may be derived from the Latin fides, faith; Fr. fe, fed, foi; low Lat. fedum, feudum. See Brady's Gloss. Old Eng. Hist. p. 45. and Boehmeri Principia Juris Feudalis, p. 11.

Others, that foedus, an agreement, is the etymon. But the northern language gives the origin: "Vas auk habands faihu manas," i. e. "for he had great possessions." Hence also food, and the goods given, were for the sustenance of the vassal. Feudum is not to be found in writings before the eleventh century. See FEUDAL.]

1. [In law.] All lands and tenements that are held by any acknowledgement of superiority to a higher lord. All lands and tenements, wherein a man hath a perpetual estate to him and his heirs, &c. are divided into allodium and feudum: allodium is every man's own land, which he possesses merely in his own right, without acknowledgement of any service, or payment of any rent to any other. Feudum, or fee, is that which we hold by the benefit of another, and in name whereof we owe services, or pay rent, or both, to a superior lord. And all our land in England, the crown land, which is in the king's own hands, in right of his crown, excepted, is in the nature of feudum: for though a man have land by descent from his ancestors, or bought it for his money; yet is the land of such a nature, that it cannot come to any, either by descent or purchase, but with the burthen that was laid upon him who had novel fee, or first of all received it as a benefit from his lord to him and to all such to whom it might descend, or be any way conveyed from him. So that no man in England has directum dominium, that is, the very property or demesne in any land, but the prince in right of his crown: for though he that has fee has jus perpetuum et utile dominium, yet he owes a duty for it, and therefore it is not simply his own. Fee is divided into two sorts: fee-absolute, otherwise called fee-simple and fee-conditional, otherwise termed fee-tail: fee-simple is that whereof we are seised in those general words, To us and our heirs for ever: fee-tail is that whereof we are seised to us and our heirs, with limitation; that is, the heirs of our body. And fee-tail is either general or special: general is where land is given to a man, and the heirs of his body: fee-tail special is that where a man and his wife are seised of land to them and the heirs of their two bodies.

Cowel.

Now like a lawyer when he land would let,
Or sell fee-simples in his master's name.

Spenser, Hubb. Tale.

Here's the lord of the soil come to seize me for a stray, for entering his fee-simple without leave.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

2. Property; peculiar.

What concern they?

The general cause; or is it a fee-grief,
Due to some single breast? Shakspeare, Macb.

3. Reward; gratification; recompence.

These be the ways by which, without reward,
Livings in courts be gotten, though full hard;
For nothing there is done without a fee.

Spenser, Hubb. Tale.

Not helping, death's my fee;
But if I help, what do you promise me? Shakspeare.
4. Payments occasionally claimed by persons in office.

Now that God and friends
Have turn'd my captive state to liberty,
At our enlargement what are thy due fees?

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

5. Reward paid to physicians or lawyers.

He does not refuse doing a good office for a man, because he cannot pay the fee of it.

Addison, Spectator.

6. Portion; pittance; share. Obsolete.

In pruning and trimming all manner of trees,
Reserve to each cattle their property fees. Tusser.
FE'E-FARM. n. s. [fee and farm.] Tenure by which lands are held from a superiour lord.

John surrendered his kingdoms to the Pope, and took them back again to hold in fee-farm; which brought him into such hatred, as all his life-time after he was posset with fear. Davies.

To FE'E. † v. a. [Su. Goth., fae, reward.]

1. To reward; to pay.

No man fees the sun, no man purchases the light, nor errs if he walks by it. South.

Watch the disease in time; for when within
The dropsy rages and extends the skin,
In vain for hellebore the patient cries,
And fees the doctor; but too late is wise.

Dryden, Pers.

2. To bribe; to hire; to purchase.

I have long loved her, and ingrossed opportunities to meet her; fee'd every slight occasion, that could but niggardly give me sight of her.

Shakespeare, M. W. of Winds.

She hath an usher, and a waiting gentlewoman,
A page, a coachman; these are fee'd and fee'd,
And yet for all that will be prating.

Beaumont, and Fl. Nob. Gentlemen.

The unfamiliar cognizance of a fee'd gamester.
Milton, Doct. and Discipl. of Divorce.

3. To keep in hire. Dr. Jamieson seems to find fault with Dr. Johnson for thus rendering the word as used by Shakspeare: and says, that it properly denotes the act of hiring.

There's not a thane of them but in his house
I have a servant fee'd. Shakespeare, Macb.

FE'BLE. † adj. [old French, feble and feible; modern foible; Latin, debilis.]
Weak; debilitated; sickly; infirm; without strength of body or mind.

The men carried all the feble upon asses to Jericho. 2 Chron. xxviii. 15.

Command th' assistance of a faithful friend,
But feble are the succours I can send. Dryd. Zen.

How I have lov'd, excuse my fall'ring tongue;
My spirits feble, and my pains are strong. Dryd.

We carry the image of God in us, a rational and immortal soul; and though we be now miserable and feble, yet we aspire after eternal happiness, and finally expect a great exaltation of all our natural powers. Bentley.

Rhyme is a crutch that helps the weak along,
Supports the feble, but retards the strong. Smith.

To FE'BLE. † v. a. [from the noun.]
To weaken; to enfeeble; to deprive of strength or power. Not now perhaps in use.

Or as a castle reared high and round,
By subtle engines and malicious slight
Is undermined from the lowest ground,
And her foundation forc'd and feebled quite.

Spenser, F. Q.

Shall that victorious hand be feebled here,
That in your chambers gave you chastisement.

Shakespeare, K. John.

A life feebled with natural infirmities.
Walsall, Life of Christ, (1615), sign. A. 5. b.

Many a burning sun

Has sear'd my body and boil'd up my blood,
Feebled my knees, and stamp'd a meagreness
Upon my figure. Beaumont, and Fl. Isl. Prin.

FE'BLEMINDED. adj. [feeble and mind.]
Weak of mind; defective in resolution and constancy.

Warn them that are unruly, comfort the feeble- *minde*d, support the weak, be patient toward all men. 1 Thess. v. 14.

FE'BLENESS. † n. s. [from feble; old French, febles; and so Spenser once uses feeblesse for the present word,
F. Q. iv. viii. 37. Chaucer has feebles- ness.] Weakness; imbecility; infirmity;
want of strength.

A better head Rome's glorious body fits,
Than his that shakes for age and feeblesness.

Tit. Andronicus.

Some in their latter years, through the feebles- ness of their limbs, have been forced to study upon their knees. South.

FE'EBLY. adv. [from feble.] Weakly;
without strength.

Like mine thy gentle numbers feebly creep,
Thy tragick muse gives smiles, thy comick sleep.

Dryden.

To FEED. † v. a. [fodan, Gothick; foda,
Sw. peban, poeban, Sax. fodr. Icel. food.
See also FEED.]

1. To supply with food.

Her heart and bowels through her back he drew,

And feed the bounds that help'd him to pursue.

Dryden.

Boerhaave fed a sparrow with bread four days,
in which time it eat more than its own weight.

Arbutnot on Diet.

2. To supply; to furnish.

A constant smoke rises from the warm springs that feed the many baths with which this island is stocked. Addison.

The breadth of the bottom of the hopper must be half the length of a barleycorn, and near as long as the rollers, that it may not feed them to fast. Mortimer, Husbandry.

3. To graze; to consume by cattle.

Once in three years feed your mowing lands,
if you cannot get manure constantly to keep them
in heart. Mortimer.

The frost will spoil the grass; for which reason take care to feed it close before winter.

Mortimer.

4. To nourish; to cherish.

How oft from pomp and state did I remove,
To feed despair, and cherish hopeless love! Prior.

5. To keep in hope or expectation.

Barbarossa learned the strength of the emperor, craftily feeding him with the hope of liberty.

Knolles.

6. To delight; to entertain; to keep from satiety.

The alteration of scenes, so it be without noise, feeds and relieves the eye, before it be full of the same object. Bacon.

7. To make fat. A provincial use.

To FEED. v. n.

1. To take food. Chiefly applied to animals' food.

To feed were best at home;
From thence the sawce to meet is ceremony;
Meeting were bare without it. Shakespeare, Macb.

2. To prey; to live by eating.

I am not covetous of gold;
Nor care I who doth feed upon my cost.

Shakespeare, Hen. V.

You cry against the noble senate, who,
Under the gods, keep you in awe, which else would feed on one another. Shakespeare, Coriol.

Galen speaketh of the curing of the scirrhus of the liver by milk of a cow that feedeth upon certain herbs. Bacon.

Some birds feed upon the berries of this vegetable. Brown.

He feeds on fruits which of their own accord,
The willing grounds and laden trees afford.

Dryden, Virg.

The Brachmans were all of the same race, lived in fields and woods, and fed only upon rice,
milk, or herbs. Temple.

All feed on one vain patron, and enjoy
Th' extensive blessing of his luxury.

Pope, Essay on Man.

3. To pasture; to place cattle to feed.

If a man shall cause a field to be eaten, and shall put in his beast, and shall feed in another man's field, he shall make restitution. Ex. xxii. 5.

4. To grow fat or plump. A provincial use.

FEED. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Food; that which is eaten.

A fearful deer then looks most about when he comes to the best feed, with a shuddering kind of tremor through all her principal parts. Sidney.

An old worked ox eats as well as a young one:
their feed is much cheaper, because they eat no
oats. Mortimer.

2. Pasture.

Besides his cote, his flocks and bounds of feed.
Are now on sale. Shakespeare, As you like it.

3. Meal; act of eating.

Plenty hung
Tempting so nigh, to pluck and eat my fill
I spared not: for such pleasure till that hour
At feed or fountain never had I found. Milt. P. L.

FE'EDER. † n. s. [from feed.]

1. One that gives food.

Abel was a keeper [in the margin, a feeder] of sheep. Genesis, iv. 2.

Swinish gluttony

Ne'er looks to heaven amidst his gorgeous feast,
But with besotted base ingratitude
Crams, and blasphemes his feeder. Milton, Comus.

The beast obeys his keeper, and looks up,
Not to his master's but his feeder's hand. Denham.

2. An exciter; an encourager.

When thou do'st hear I am as I have been,
Approach me, and thou shalt be as thou was't,
The tutor and the feeder of my riots. Shak. H. IV.

It [flattery] is the poisoning of men's understanding, the feeder of humours.

Sir M. Sandys, Ess. p. 176.

3. One that eats.

With eager feeding, food doth choke the feeder.
Shakespeare.

But that our feasts

In every mess have folly, and the feeders
Jest with it as a custom, I should blush
To see you so attired. Shakespeare, Wint. Tale.

We meet in Aristotle with one kind of thrush, called the missel-thrush, or feeder upon misseltoe.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

4. One that eats in a certain mode; as, a fine feeder, a gross feeder.

But such fine feeders are no guests for me;
Riot agrees not with frugality;

Then, that unfashionable man am I,
With me they'd starve for want of ivory.

Dryden, Juv.

FE'EDING.* n. s. [Sax. febing.] Pasture.
See FEED.

Finding the feeding, for which he had toil'd
To have kept safe, by these vile cattle spoil'd.

Drayton's Poems, Moon-calf.

To FEEL. pret. felt; part. pass. felt. v. n.
[fehan, Saxon.]

1. To have perception of things by the touch.

The sense of feeling can give us a notion of extension, shape, and all other ideas that enter at the eye, except colours. Addison, Spect.

2. To search by feeling. See FEELER.
They should seek the Lord, if he happily they might feel after him, and find him. Acts, xvii. 27.

3. To have a quick sensibility of good or evil, right or wrong.

Man, who feels for all mankind. Pope.

4. To appear to the touch.

Blind men say black feels rough, and white feels smooth. Dryden.

Of these tumours one feels flaccid and rumpled;
the other more even, flatulent and springy.
Sharp, Surgery.

TO FEEL. v. a.

1. To perceive by the touch.

Suffer me that I may feel the pillars.
Judges, xxvi. 26.

2. To try; to sound.

He hath writ this to feel my affection to your honour. Shakespeare.

3. To have perception of.

The air is so thin, that a bird has therein no feeling of her wings, or any resistance of air to mount herself by. Raleigh.

4. To have sense of external pain or pleasure.

Nor did they not perceive the evil plight
In which they were, or the fierce pains not feel.
Milton, P. L.
But why should those be thought to 'scape, who feel
Those rods of scorpions and those whips of steel?
Creech.

5. To be affected by; to perceive mentally.

Would I had never trod this English earth,
Or felt the flatteries that grow upon it!
Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.
The well-sung woes shall sooth my pensive ghost:
He best can paint them who can feel them most.
Pope.

Not youthful kings in battle seiz'd alive,
E'er felt such grief, such terror, and despair.
Pope.

6. To know; to be acquainted with.

His overthrow heap'd happiness upon him;
For then, and not till then, he felt himself,
And found the blessedness of being little.
Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

FEEL. n. s. [from the verb.] The sense of feeling; the touch.

The difference of these tumours will be distinguished by the feel.
Sharp, Surgery.

FEELER† n. s. [from feel.]

1. One that feels.

This hand, whose touch,
Whose every touch would force the feeler's soul.
To the oath of loyalty. Shakespeare, Cymb.

2. One that perceives mentally.

Of my longing to see you I am a better feeler
than a describer.

3. The horns or antennæ of insects.

Insects clean their eyes with their forelegs as well as antennæ; and as they are perpetually feeling and searching before them with their feelers or antennæ, I am apt to think that besides wiping and cleaning the eyes, the uses here named may be admitted. Durham, Physico-Theol.

FE'ELING. part. adj. [from feel.]

1. Expressive of great sensibility.

O wretched state of man in self-decision!
O well thou say'st a feeling declaration
Thy tongue hath made of Cupid's deep incision!
Sidney.

Thy wailing words do much my spirits move,
They uttered are in such a feeling fashion. Sidney.
Write till your ink be dry, and with your tears
Moist it again: and frame some feeling line,
That may discover such integrity.
Shakespeare, Two Gent. of Ver.

2. Sensibly felt. This sense is not sufficiently analogical.

A most poor man made tame to fortune's blows,
Who, by the art of known and feeling sorrows,
Am pregnant to good pity. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

I had a feeling sense

Of all your royal favours; but this last
Strikes through my heart. Southerne.

FE'ELING. n. s. [from feel.]

1. The sense of touch.

Why was the sight
To such a tender ball as the eye confin'd;
So obvious and so easy to be quench'd,
And not, as feeling, through all parts diffus'd,
That she might look at will through every pore?
Milton, P. L.

2. Power of action upon sensibility.

The apprehension of the good,
Gives but the greater feeling to the worse.
Shakespeare, Rich. II.

3. Perception; sensibility.

Their king, out of a princely feeling, was sparing and compassionate towards his subjects.
Bacon, Hen. VII.

Great persons had need to borrow other men's opinions to think themselves happy; for if they judge by their own feeling, they cannot find it.
Bacon, Essays.

As we learn what belongs to the body by the evidence of sense, so we learn what belongs to the soul by an inward consciousness which may be called a sort of internal feeling. Watts.

FE'ELINGLY. adv. [from feeling.]

1. With expression of great sensibility.

The princes might judge that he meant himself, who spake so feelingly. Sidney.
He would not have talked so feelingly of Codrus's bed, if there had been room for a bedfellow in it. Pope.

2. So as to be sensibly felt.

Here feel we but the penalty of Adam,
The season's difference; as the icy fang,
And churlish chiding of the Winter's wind,
Which when it bites and blows upon my body,
Ev'n till I shrink with cold, I smile and say,
This is no flattery: these are counsellors,
That feelingly persuade me what I am.
Shakespeare, As you like it.

He feelingly knew, and had trial of the late good, and of the new purchased evil. Raleigh, Hist.

FE'ESE.* n. s. A race. Barret's Dict.

1580. He adds, "To leap without fetching any race or feese, nullo procursu salire." It is a word still used among boys; as, to take feese.

The bias of whose bowls doth make the knees,
From whence love's lightest muses take their veeze.
Davies, Wit's Pilgr. sign. N. 2. b.

FEET† n. s. The plural of foot. [Sax. fet.]

His brother's image to his mind appears,
Inflames his heart with rage, and wings his feet with fears. Pope, Statius.

FE'ETLESS† adj. [from feet.] Being without feet.

Geoffrey of Bouillon broched three feetless
birds, called Allierions, upon his arrow. Camden.
There beheld the mangled, headless, handless,
feetless corpses of their fellow-countrymen.
Fuller, Holy War, p. 196.

TO FEIGN† v. a. [feign, old French, of the eleventh century; feindre, modern; fingo, Lat.]

1. To invent; to image by an act of the mind.

Abominable, inutterable, and worse
Than fables yet have feign'd, or fear conceiv'd,
Gorgons, and hydras, and chimeras dire!
Milton, P. L.

No such things are done as thou sayest, but thou feignedst them out of thine own heart.
Neh. vi. 8.

2. To make a show of.

Both his hands, most filthy feculent,
Above the water were on high extent,
And feigned to wash themselves incessantly.
Spenser, F. Q.

3. To make a shew of; to do upon some false pretence.

Me gentle Delia beckons from the plain,
Then, hid in shades, eludes her eager swain;
But feigns a laugh to see me search around,
And by that laugh the willing fair is found.
Pope.

4. To dissemble; to conceal. Now obsolete.

Each trembling leaf and whistling wind they hear,
As ghastly bug their hair on end does rear;
Yet both do strive their fearfulness to feign.
Spenser, F. Q.

TO FEIGN. v. n. To relate falsely; to image from the invention; to tell fabulously.

Therefore the poet
Did feign that Orpheus drew trees, stones, and floods;
Since nought so stockish, hard, and full of rage,
But music for the time doth change his nature.
Shakespeare.

FE'IGNEDLY† adv. [from feign.] In fiction; not truly.

Those that come feignedly, and those that come unfeignedly. Abpi Cranmer on the Sacram. fol. 99.
Her treacherous sister Judah hath not turned unto me with her whole heart, but feignedly, saith the Lord. Jerem. iii. 10.

Such is found to have been falsely and feignedly
in some of the heathens. Bacon.

FE'IGNEDNESS.* n. s. [from feigned.] Fiction; deceit.

The church is not the school of feignedness
and hypocrisy, but of truth and sincerity.
Harmar, Transl. of Beza's Serm. p. 39.

FE'IGNER. n. s. [from feign.] Inventor; contriver of a fiction.

And these three voices differ; as the thing done, the doing, and the doer; the thing feigned, the feigning, and the feigner; so the poem, the poesy, and the poet. B. Jonson, Discoveries.

FE'IGNING.* n. s. [from feign.] A false appearance; an artful contrivance.

Hulot.

May her feignings
Not take your wisdoms; but this day she baited
A stranger, a grave knight, with her loose eyes.
B. Jonson, For.

FE'IGNINGLY.* adv. [from feigning.] Craftily. *Hulot, and Sherwood.*FEINT. participial adj. [from feign, for feigned; or feint, Fr.] Counterfeit; seeming.

The mind by degrees loses its natural relish of real, solid truth, and is reconciled insensibly to any thing that can be but dressed up into any feint appearance of it. Locke.

FEINT. n. s. [feint, French.]

1. A false appearance; an offer of something not intended be.

Courtly's letter is but a feint to get off. Spect.

2. A mock assault; an appearance of aiming at one part when another is intended to be struck.

But, in the breast encamp'd, prepares
For well bred feints and future wars. Prior.

FE'LANDERS.† n. s. [filandres, Fr. Cotgrave, "the small worms that breed in bruised, surfeited, or foul-fed hawks;" perhaps from filandrè, full of small threads or fibres; filum, Lat. a thread.]

Dr. Johnson merely cites Ainsworth as his authority for this word, without any etymology or example; but it appears that our word is not felander, but felander. Worms in hawks.

This may probably destroy that obstinate disease of the flander, or backworm.

Sir T. Brown, of Hawks, Miscell. p. 115.

To FELICITATE.† v. a. [felicitare, Fr. to make happy or prosperous, and to compliment, Cotgrave; felicitio, Latin.]

1. To make happy. See FELICITATE.

Gifts — felicitate lovers.

Transl. of Loredano's Academ. Disc. 1664, p. 76.

What a glorious entertainment and pleasure would fill and felicitate his spirit, if he could grasp all in a single survey! Watts.

2. To congratulate.

They might proceed unto forms of speeches, felicitating the good, or deprecating the evil to follow. Brown.

FELICITATE.* part. adj. [Lat. felicitatus.] Made happy.

I profess

Myself an enemy to all other joys;

And find I am alone felicitate

In your dear highness' love. Shaks. K. Lear.

FELICITATION. n. s. [from felicitate.] Congratulation. Dict.

FELICITOUS.† adj. [from felicitus, Lat.] Happy; prosperous.

In all which [wars] she was felicitous and victorious. Sir R. Naunton, Frag. Reg. of Q. Eliz.

FELICITOUSLY. adv. [from felicitus.] Happily. Dict.

FELICITY. n. s. [felicitas, Latin; félicité, French.] Happiness; prosperity; blissfulness; blessedness.

The joyous day, dear Lord, with joy begin, And grant that we, for whom thou diddest die, Being with thy dear blood clean wash'd from sin, May live for ever in felicity. Spenser, Sonnets.

Others in virtue plac'd felicity, But virtue join'd with riches and long life, In corporal pleasure he and careless ease. Milton, P. R.

The felicities of her wonderful reign may be complete. Atterbury.

How great, how glorious a felicity, how adequate to the desires of a reasonable nature, is revealed to our hopes in the gospel! Rogers.

FE'LINE. adj. [felinus, Latin.] Like a cat; pertaining to a cat.

Even as in the beaver; from which he differs principally in his teeth, which are canine, and in his tail which is feline, or a long taper. Gray, Museum.

FELL.† adj. [pell, Saxon; fel, old French, cruel, tyrannical, fierce.]

1. Cruel; barbarous; inhuman.

It seemed fury, discord, madness fell, Flew from his lap when he unfolds the same. Fairfax.

So felless foes,

Whose passions and whose plots have broke their sleep.

To take the one the other, by some chance, Some trick not worth an egg, shall grow dear friends. Shakspeare.

2. Savage; ravenous; bloody.

That instant was I turn'd into a hart, And my desires like fell and cruel hounds, E'er since pursue me. Shakspeare, Tw. Night.

I know thee, love! wild as the raging man, More fell than tigers on the Libyan plain. Pope.

Scorning all the taming arts of man, The keen hyena, felless of the fell. Thoms. Spring.

FELL.* n. s. [Sax. pelle, gall, anger, melancholiness. Sommer.]

Sweete Love, that doth his golden wings embay In blessed nectar and pure Pleasure's well, Untroubled of vile fear or bitter fell.

Spenser, F. Q. iii. xi. 2.

FELL.† n. s. [pell, Saxon; fills, Goth. φελος, Gr. cortex, Celt. pil. Lat. pellis.] The skin; the hide. Not used, Dr. Johnson says, citing only Shakspeare. We still use it, however, in the word fellmonger, which means a dealer in hides. And fell, in the present sense, was once common. It is in the vocabulary of Bullokar.

Wipe thine eye;

The goudier shall devour them, flesh and fell,

Ere they shall make us weep. Shaks. K. Lear.

The time has been my senses would have cool'd To hear a night-shriek; and my fell of hair Would at a dismal treatise rouze and stir.

Shakspeare, Macbeth.

He ought to shear not to flay his sheep; to take Their fleeces, not their felles. B. Jonson, Discov.

FELL.* n. s. [German, fels, a rock; Icel. fel, acclivities; the fell-foot, or foot of the hill; "περί το φέλλους." Vide apud scholiasten in Arisoph. in Nubibus, A. I. S. 1. que transcripsit ferè Suidas in voce ΦΕΛΛΑ." Ray. Mr. Whalley in his notes on Ben Jonson, who uses this word, refers, in explanation of it, to an interpretation of ΦΕΛΛΟΣ by Hesychius, viz. σκληρος τοπος και δυσεργος; and adds, that we seem to have taken this sense from our Gothick ancestors. The Su. Goth. faell, is a ridge or chain of mountains; and the Icel. fel, or fell, "a small mountain resting on one larger and longer," Gl. Rymbeglar, as cited by Dr. Jamieson. In the north of England the word is to this day common for a rocky hill.]

1. A hill; a mountain.

So may the first of all our felles be thine, And both the beesting of our goats and kine, As thou our folds doth still secure.

B. Jonson, Masques.

This county abounds with mountains, which in the language of the country are called felles.

Burn and Nicolson, Hist. of Westmorel. &c. i. 3. Greystock town and castle lie about three miles from Ulswater over the felles. Gray's Letters.

2. A corruption of field. [Sax. felb,] meaning an open country, formerly used by way of antithesis to frith, a forest. Obsolete.

The Sylvans that about the neighbouring woods did dwell,

Both in the tufty frith, and in the mossy fell.

Drayton, Polyolb. S. 17.

To FELL.† v. a. [fellen, German; arfallen, Sax. to overthrow.]

1. To knock down; to bring to the ground. Villain, stand, or I'll fell thee down.

Shakspeare, Hen. V.

Up and down he traverses his ground;

Now wards a felling blow, now strikes again.

Daniel.

Taking the small end of his musket in his hand, he struck him on the head with the stock and felled him.

Raleigh.

His fall, for the present, struck an earthquake into all minds; nor could the vulgar be induced to believe he was felled. Howel, Voc. Forest.

On their whole host I flew

Unarm'd, and with a trivial weapon fell'd

Their choicest youth: they only liv'd who fled.

Milton, S. A.

2. It seems improperly joined with down or along.

Whom with such force he struck he fell'd him down,

And cleft the circle of his golden crown. Dryden.

I fell'd along a man of bearded face, His limbs all cover'd with a shining case.

Dryden, Ind. Emp.

3. To hew down; to cut down;

Then would he seem a farmer that would sell, Bargains of wood which he did lately fell.

Spenser, Hubb. Tale.

They stopped all the wells of water, and felled all the good trees,

2 Kings, iii. 25.

Proud Arcite and fierce Palamon, In mortal battle, doubling blow on blow; Like lightning flam'd their fauchions to and fro, And shot a dreadful gleam; so strong they struck There seem'd less force requir'd to fell an oak.

Dryden.

4. To sew in a particular manner; to in-seam. This word is well known to the ladies, I believe, all over the kingdom: it ought to be in our dictionaries. Jennings, West-Country Words, 1825.

FELL. The preterite of To fall.

None on their feet might stand,

Though standing else as rocks; but down they fell

By thousands, angel on archangel roll'd.

Milton, P. L.

FELLER. n. s. [from fell.] One that hews down.

Since thou art laid down, no feller is come up against us.

Is. xiv. 8.

FELLI'FLOUS. adj. [fel, and fluo, Latin.] Flowing with gall. Dict.

FE'LLMONGER. n. s. [from fell.] A dealer in hides.

FEL'LESS.† n. s. [from fell.] Cruelty; savageness; fury; rage.

When his brother saw the red blood rail

Adown so fast, and all his armour steep,

For very feltnesse loud he gan to weep. Spens. F. Q.

Death, disarm'd,

Loses her feltness quite: All thanks to Him,

Who scourg'd the venom out. R. Blair, the Grave.

FE'LLOE.† n. s. [sometimes written felly; Sax. pelga; Dutch, felge, or velge.] The circumference of a wheel; the outward part. It is often written fally or felly.

Out, out, thou trumpet Fortune! all you gods, In general synod, take away her power; Break all the spokes and fellies from her wheel, And bowl the round nave down the hill of heav'n.

Shakspeare.

Their axle-trees, naves, fellies, and spokes were all molen.

1 Kings, vii. 33.

FE'LLON.* n. s. A sore. See the second sense of FELON.

FELLOW.† n. s. [quasi, to follow, Minshew: pe, faith, and laz, bound, Saxon, Junius; fallow, Scottish. So far Dr. Johnson. Minshew is right. The word is from the Goth. felag, community, fellowship, which Serenius derives from the verb foelga, to follow. The Sax. pelap, a companion, must not be omitted, which Chaucer exactly follows in writing our word fellow.]

1. A companion; one with whom we consort.

In youth I had twelve fellows like unto myself, but not one of them came to a good end.

Ascham, Schoolmaster.

To be your fellow

You may deny me: but I'll be your servant, Whether you will or no. Shakspeare, Temp.

- Have we not plighted each our holy oath,
That one should be the common good of both;
One soul should both inspire, and neither prove
His fellow's hindrance in pursuit of love? Dryden.
2. An associate; one united in the same affair.

Each on his fellow for assistance calls;
At length the fatal fabric mounts the walls.
Dryden, Virgil.

3. One of the same kind.

Let partial spirits still aloud complain,
Think themselves injur'd that they cannot reign;
And own no liberty, but where they may Without controul upon their fellows prey. Waller.

A shepherd had one favourite dog: he fed him with his own hand, and took more care of him than of his fellows. L'Estrange.

4. Equal; peer.

So you are to be hereafter fellows and no longer servants. Sidney.

Chieftain of the rest

I chose him here: the earth shall him allow;
His fellows late, shall be his subjects now. Fairfax.

5. One thing suited to another; one of a pair.

When virtue is lodged in a body, that seems to have been prepared for the reception of vice; the soul and the body do not seem to be fellows. Add. Sp.

6. One like or equal to another: as, this knave hath not his fellow.

My young remembrance cannot parallel
A fellow to it. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

7. A familiar appellation used sometimes with fondness; sometimes with esteem;
but generally with some degree of contempt.

This is Othello's ancient, as I take it.
— The same indeed; a very valiant fellow. Shaks.

An officer was in danger to have lost his place,
but his wife made his peace; whereupon a pleasant fellow said, that he had been crushed, but that he saved himself upon his horns. Bacon, Apoph.

Full fifteen thousand lusty fellows
With fire and sword the fort maintain;
Each was a Hercules, you tell us,
Yet out they march'd like common men. Prior.

8. A word of contempt; the foolish mortal;
the mean wretch; the sorry rascal.

Those great fellows scornfully receiving them, as foolish birds fall into their net, it pleased the eternal Justice to make them suffer death by their hands.
Sidney.

Cassio hath here been set on in the dark
By Rodrigo, and fellows that are 'scap'd. Shaks.

I have great comfort from this fellow, methinks
he hath no drowning mark about him; his complexion is perfect gallow. Shakespeare, Tempest.

Opinion that did help me to the crown,
Had still kept loyal to possession;
And left me in reputeless banishment,
A fellow of no mark nor likelihood.
Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

How oft the sight of means, to do ill deeds,
Makes deeds ill done? for had'st not thou been by,
A fellow by the hand of nature mark'd,
Quoted, and sign'd to do a deed of shame,
This murder had not come into my mind.
Shakespeare, K. John.

The Moor's abus'd by some most villainous
knaave,
Some base notorious knave, some scurvy fellow!

The fellow had taken more fish than he could spend while they were sweet.
As next of kin, Achilles' arms I claim;
This fellow would ingrat a foreign name
Upon our stock, and the Sisyphean breed
By fraud and theft asserts his father's breed.
Dryden.

You will wonder how such an ordinary fellow as this Mr. Wood, could have got his Majesty's broad seal. Swift.

You'll find, if once the monarch acts the monk,
Or, cobbler-like, the parson will be drunk,
Worth makes the man, and want of it the fellow;
The rest is all but leather and prunella. Pope.

9. Sometimes it implies a mixture of pity with contempt.

The provost commanded his men to hang him up on the nearest tree; then the fellow cried out that he was not the miller but the miller's man. Hayward.

10. A member of a college that shares its revenues, or of any incorporated society.

There should be mission of three of the fellows or brethren of Solomon's house, to give us knowledge of the affairs and state of those countries to which they were designed. Bacon.

- To FELLOW.† v. a. To suit with; to pair with; to match. Fellow is often used in composition to mark community of nature, station, or employment.

Imagination,

With what's unreal, thou co-active art,
And fellow'st nothing. Shakespeare, Wint. Tale.

Fellowing himself with every thing that had life in it. Sp. Hall, Select Thoughts, § 100.

- FELLOW-CITIZEN.* n. s. One who belongs to the same city.

'Ye are no more strangers and foreigners, but fellow-citizens with the saints. Ephes. ii. 19.

- FELLOW-COMMONER.† n. s.

1. One who has the same right of common.

He cannot appropriate, he cannot enclose, without the consent of all his fellowcommoners, all mankind. Locke.

2. A commoner at Cambridge of the higher order, who dines with the fellows.

About forty years since, forty pounds per annum for a commoner or pensioner, as the term is at Cambridge, and eighty pounds per annum for a fellow-commoner, was looked on as a sufficient maintenance. Dean Prideaux to Ld.

Townshend, (1715), Life, &c. p. 196.

- FELLOW-COUNSELLOR.* n. s. A member of the same council of state.

They would shame to make me
Wait else at door; a fellow-counsellor,
Among boys, grooms, and lackeys.
Shaks. Hen. VIII.

- FELLOW-CREATURE. n. s. One that has the same creator.

Reason is the glory of human nature, and one of the chief eminencies whereby we are raised above our fellowcreatures, the brutes in this lower world. Watts, Logic, Introd.

- FELLOW-HEIR. n. s. Coheir; partner of the same inheritance.

The Gentiles should be fellowheirs. Eph. iii. 6.

- FELLOW-HELPER. n. s. Coadjutor; one who concurs in the same business.

We ought to receive such, that we might be fellowhelpers to the truth. 3 John, 8.

- FELLOW-LABOURER. n. s. One who labours in the same design.

My fellowlabourers have commissioned me to perform in their behalf this office of dedication.
Dryden, Jew. Ded.

- FELLOW-MA'IDEN.* n. s. A virgin that bears another virgin company.

She, all as happy as of all the fairest,
Is, with her fellow-maidens, now within
The leafy shelter that abuts against
The island's side. Shakespeare, Pericles.

- FELLOW-MEMBER.* n. s. Member of the same body or society.

We signify our being united, and knit not only to Christ our head, but also to each other, as fellow-members. Whole Duty of Man.

- FELLOW-MINISTER.* n. s. One who serves the same office.

You fools! I and my fellows
Are ministers of fate — my fellow-ministers
Are alike invulnerable. Shaks. Tempest.

- FELLOW-PEER.* n. s. One who enjoys the same privileges of nobility, as the peers of England do; whose titles are indeed different, but whose essential privileges are the same.

You shall not need, my fellow-peers of Tyre,
Further to question of your king's departure.
Shakespeare, Pericles.

- FELLOW-PRISONER.* n. s. One confined in the same prison, or for the same cause.

Salute Andronicus and Junia my kinsmen, and my fellow-prisoners. Rom. xvi. 7.

Before St. Paul went to Rome, he was "in prisons oft;" — and so well might have many fellow-prisoners. Whitby on Rom. xvi. 7.

- FELLOW-SCHOLAR.* n. s. One who studies in company with others.

You three, Biron, Dumain, and Longaville,
Have sworn for three years' term to live with me,
My fellow-scholars, and to keep those statutes,
That are recorded in this schedule here.
Shakespeare, Love's Lab. Lost.

- FELLOW-SERVANT. n. s. One that has the same master.

Nor less think we in heav'n of thee on earth,
Than of our fellow-servant; and inquire
Gladly into the ways of God with man.
Milton, P. L.

Fair fellow-servant! may your gentle ear
Prove more propitious to my slighted care
Than the bright dame's we serve. Waller.

Their fathers and yours were fellow-servants to the same heavenly master while they lived; nor is that relation dissolved by their death, but ought still to operate among their surviving children.
Athenry.

- FELLOW-SOLDIER. n. s. One who fights under the same commander. An endearing appellation used by officers to their men.

Come, fellow-soldier, make thou proclamation.

Epaphroditus, my brother and companion in labour, and fellow-soldier. Phil. ii. 25.

- FELLOW-STUDENT. n. s. One who studies in company with another, in the same class, under the same master.

I pr'ythee, do not mock me, fellowstudent.

If you have no fellowstudent at hand, tell it over with your acquaintance. Watts, Logic.

- FELLOW-SUBJECT. n. s. One who lives under the same government.

The bleeding condition of their fellowsubjects was a feather in the balance with their private ends. Swift.

- FELLOW-SUFFERER. n. s. One who shares in the same evils; one who partakes
the same sufferings with another.

How happy was it for those poor creatures,
that your grace was made their fellow-sufferer?
And how glorious for you, that you chose to want rather than not relieve? Dryden.

We in some measure share the necessities of the poor at the same time that we relieve them, and make ourselves not only their patrons but fellow-sufferers. Addison, Spect.

- FELLOW-TRAVELLER.* n. s. One who travels in company with others.

That want of sepulture was a grievous punishment, Homer in his Odyssey speaking of Ulysses, and Elpenor his fellow-traveller being dead, gives us this authority. St. T. Herbert, Trav. p. 118.

Euripides, that friend of Socrates, and fellow-traveller of Plato. More, Conject. Cabb. p. 168.

FELLOW-WORKER.* n. s. One employed in the same design.

These only are my fellow-workers unto the kingdom of God, which have been a comfort unto me. Coloss. iv. 11.

FELLOW-WRITER. n. s. One who writes at the same time, or on the same subject.

Since they cannot raise themselves to the reputation of their fellow-writers, they must sink it to their own pitch, if they would keep themselves upon a level with them. Addison.

FELLOWFEELING. n. s. [fellow and feeling.]

1. Sympathy.

It is a high degree of inhumanity not to have a fellowfeeling of the misfortune of my brother.

L'Estrange.

2. Combination; joint interest: commonly in an ill sense.

Even your milk-woman and your nursery-maid have a fellowfeeling, Arbutnot, Hist. of John Bull.

FELLOWLIKE. } adj. [fellow and like.]
FELLOWLY. } Like a companion; on equal terms; companionable.

All which good parts he graceth with a good fellowlike, kind and respectful carriage.

Carew, Surv. of Cornwall.

One seed for another to make an exchange,
With fellowly neighbourhood seemeth not strange. Tusser.

FELLOWSHIP. n. s. [from fellow.]

1. Companionship; consort; society.

This boy cannot tell what he would have,
But kneels and holds up hands for fellowship. Shakespeare, Coriol.

From blissful bow'rs

Of amaranthine shade, fountain, or spring,
By the waters of life, where'er they stay
In fellowships of joy, the sons of light

There is no man but God puts excellent things into his possession, to be used for the common good; for men are made for society and mutual fellowship. Calamy, Sermons.

God having designed man for a sociable creature, made him not only with an inclination and under the necessity to have fellowship with those of his own kind, but furnished him also with language, which was to be the great instrument and cementer of society. Locke.

2. Association; confederacy; combination.
We would not die in that man's company,
That fears his fellowship to die with us. Shakespeare, Hen. V.

Those laws do bind men absolutely, even as they are men, although they have never any settled fellowship, never any solemn agreement amongst themselves. Hooker.

Most of the other Christian princes were drawn into the fellowship of that war.

Knolles, Hist. of the Turks.

3. Equality.

4. Partnership; joint interest.

Nearer acquainted, now I feel by proof
That fellowship in pain divides not smart,
Nor lights aught each man's peculiar load. Milton, P. R.

O love! thou sternly dost thy pow'r maintain,
And wilt not bear a rival in thy reign;
Tyrants and thou all fellowship disdain. Dryden.

5. Company; state of being together.

The great contention of the sea and skies
Parted our fellowship. But hark, a sail! Shakespeare, Othello.

6. Frequency of intercourse; social pleasure.

In a great town friends are scattered, so that there is not that fellowship which is in less neighbourhoods. Bacon, Ess.

7. Fitness and fondness for festal entertainments, with good prefixed.

He had by his excessive good fellowship, which was grateful to all the company, made himself popular with all the officers of the army. Clarendon.

8. An establishment in the college, with share in its revenue.

Corusodes having, by extreme parsimony, saved thirty pounds out of a beggarly fellowship, went to London. Swift.

9. [In arithmetick] That rule of plural proportion whereby we balance accounts, depending between divers persons, having put together a general stock, so that they may every man have his proportional gain, or sustain his proportional part of loss. Cocker's Arithmetick.

FELLY.† adv. [from fell.] Cruelly; inhumanly; savagely; barbarously.

Fair ye be sure, but cruel and unkind;

As is a tyger, that with greediness

Hunts after blood, when he by chance doth find

A feeble beast doth felly him oppress. Spenser, Sonnets.

The hearts do ne'er agree,

But felly one another do upbraid. More, Song of the Soul.

Or like a lamp arm'd with pellucid horn,
Which rustling winds about do rudely toss,
And felly lash with injury and scorn. More, Song of the Soul.

FELLY.* n. s. See FELLOE.

FELNESS.* See FELLNESS.

FEL-DE-SE.† n. s. [In law.] He that committeth felony by murdering himself.

Making their natures a kind of felo de se to prompt the destroying itself.

Lively Oracles, &c. p. 90.

FELON. n. s. [felon, French; felo, low Latin; fel, Saxon.]

1. One who has committed a capital crime.

I apprehend thee for a felon here.

Shakespeare, Rom. and Jul.

The wily fox,

Chas'd even amid' the folds; and made to bleed,
Like felons, where they did the murderous deed. Dryden.

2. A whitlow; a tumour formed between the bone and its investing membrane, very painful.

The malign paronychia is that which is commonly called a felon. Wiseman, Surgery.

FELON.† adj. [Fr. felon, fierce, cruel.] Cruel; traitorous; inhuman; fierce.

Ay me! what thing on earth, that all things breeds,

Might be the cause of so impatient plight!

What fury, or what fiend with felon deeds,

Hath stirred up so mischievous despite! Spenser.

He ask'd the waves, and ask'd the felon winds,

What hard mishap hath doom'd this gentle swain. Milton, Lycidas.

Then bids prepare th' hospitable treat,
Vain shews of love to veil his felon hate. Pope, Odyssey.

Nought but the felon undermining hand
Of dark corruption can its frame dissolve. Thomson, Liberty, P. IV.

FELONIOUS. adj. [from felon.] Wicked; traitorous; villainous; malignant; perfidious; destructive.

This man conceived the duke's death; but what was the motive of that felonious conception is in the clouds. Wotton.

O thiefish night!

Why should'st thou, but for some felonious end,
In thy dark lantern thus close up the stars
That nature hung in heaven, and fill'd their lamps
With everlasting oil, to give due light
To the misled and lonely traveller? Milton, Comus.
In thy felonious heart though venom lies,
It does but touch thy Irish pen and dies. Dryden.

FELONIOUSLY.† adv. [from felonious.] In a felonious way.

Parents have been most feloniously robbed of their children. By. Hall, Cases of Conscience.

Do the Chaldeans and Sabeans feloniously drive away the herds of Job? Seasonable Sermon, p. 26.

FELONIOUS. adj. [from felon.] Wicked; felonious; Not used.

[I] am like for desperate dole to die,
Through felonious force of mine enemy. Spenser, Shep. Cal. Feb.

FELONY. n. s. [felonie, Fr. felonía, low Latin; from felon.] A crime denounced capital by the law; an enormous crime. I will make it felony to drink small beer. Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

FELT. The preterite of FEEL, which see. FELT. n. s. [felt. Saxon.]

1. Cloth made of wool united without weaving.

It were a delicate stratagem to shoe

A troop of horse with felt. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

2. A hide or skin.

To know whether sheep are sound or not, see that the felt be loose. Mortimer, Husbandry.

TO FELT. v. a. [from the noun.] To unite without weaving.

The same wool one man felts into a hat, another weaves it into cloth, another into kersey. Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

FELT-MAKER.* n. s. One employed in making felt.

They put things call'd executors upon me,
The charge of orphans, little senseless creatures,
Whom in their childhoods I bound forth to felt-makers,

To make 'em lose and work away their gentry. Beaumont and Fl. W. at sev. Weapons.

Coachmen, weavers, felt-makers, and other base mechanicks, are now by some thought able ministers and profound doctors of the church!

Featley, Dippers dipt. p. 156.

TO FELTER, OR FELTRE.† v. a. [Ital. felt-rare.] To clot together like felt; to entangle. A northern word in use.

Craven Dial, and Brockett.

His feltred locks, that on his bosom fell,
On rugged mountains briers and thorns resemble. Fairfax,

FELUCCA.† n. s. [Italian; falouque, Fr. felcon, Arab.] A small open boat with six oars.

Having hired a felucca, we were forced by the foulness of the weather into Sostri Levante.

W. Pope to A. Hill, (1663.) Hill's Lett. p. 47.
I took a felucca at Naples to carry me to Rome. Addison, Travels.

FEMALE. n. s. [femelle, French; femella, Latin.] A she; one of the sex which brings young; not male.

God created man in his own image, male and female created he them. Gen. i. 27.

If he offer it of the herd, whether it be male or female, he shall offer it without blemish. Leviticus, iii. 1.

Men, more divine,
Indu'd with intellectual sense and soul,
Are masters to their females, and their lords.

Shakspeare.

FE'MALE. adj.

1. Not male.

Female of sex it seems. Milton, S. A.
Swarming next appear'd

The female bee, that feeds her husband drone.

Milton, P. L.

2. Not masculine; belonging to a she.

Other sexes perhaps

With their attendant moons thou wilt decry,
Communicating male and female light,
Which two great sexes animate the world.

Milton, P. L.

Add what wants

In female sex, the more to draw his love.

Milton, P. L.

He scrupled not to eat

Against his better knowledge, not deceiv'd,

But fondly overcome with female charms. Milt. P. L.

If by a female hand he had foreseen

He was to die, his wish had rather been

The lance and double ax of the fair warrior queen.

Dryden.

3. FEMALE Rhymes. Double rhymes so called, because in French, from which the term is taken, they end in e weak or feminine. These rhymes are female:

Th' excess of heat is but a fable;

We know the torrid zone is now found habitable.

Cowley.

The female rhymes are in use with the Italian in every line, with the Spaniard promiscuously, and with the French alternately, as appears from the Alarique, the Pucelle, or any of their later poems.

Dryden, Pref. to Annus Mirab.

FE'ME COVERT.† n. s. [French.] A married woman; who is also said to be under covert baron.

Blount.

My poor wife enjoyed herself happily under the protection of my shadow; and, being a feme-covert, not an officer durst come near her.

L'Estrange, Transl. of Quevedo.

FEME SOLE. n. s. [French.] A single woman; an unmarried woman.

FEMINA'LITY. n. s. [from femina, Latin.] Female nature.

If in the minority of natural vigour the parts of feminality take place, upon the increase or growth thereof the masculine appears.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

FE'MINATE.* adj. [from femina, Latin.] Feminine, not masculine; becoming only a woman.

A nation warlike, and inured to practice
Of policy and labour, cannot brook

A feminine authority, Ford, Broken Heart.

FE'MININE.† adj. [feminin, old French; femininus, Latin.]

1. Of the sex that bring young; female.

Thus we chastise the god of wine

With water that is feminine,

Until the cooler nymph abate

His wrath, and so concorporate. Cleaveland.

2. Soft; tender; delicate.

Her heavenly form

Angelic, but more soft and feminine. Milt. P. L.

3. Effeminate; emasculated; wanting manliness.

Ninias was no man of war at all, but altogether feminine and subjected to ease and delicacy.

Raleigh, History.

Feminine measures of impotent humour and indulgence. Glanville, Scrm. p. 382.

4. Belonging to women.

It will be worth our pains to take notice of some principal of the orders she [Paula] made in those feminine academies. Fuller, Holy State p. 87.

FE'MININE. n. s. A she; one of the sex that brings young; a female.

O! why did God create at last

This novelty on earth, this fair defect

Of nature? And not fill the world at once

With men, as angels, without femininity. Milt. P. L.

FEMI'NITY.* n. s. [from femina, Latin.]

Any quality or property of woman.

Hither great Venus brought this infant fair

Whom she fostered to be,

And trained up in true femininity.

Spenser, F. Q. iii. vi. 51.

There being all these symptoms of femininity in the church of Rome.

More on the Seven Churches, ch. 6.

TO FE'MINIZE.* v. a. [from femina, Lat.]

The largest crooked needle should be used in taking up the femoral arteries in amputation.

Sharp, Surgery.

FEN.† n. s. [Sax. penn; M. Goth. fani.]

Mr. H. Tooke thinks that it is from the Saxon verb fymgean, to grow musty, to spoil, to corrupt. But the Gothick fani is the word used for clay, or dirt,

St. John, ix. 6. (Vers. Goth.) and elsewhere. To this may be added the Su-

Goth. fen, and the Teut. ven.] A marsh;

low, flat, and moist ground; a moor; a bog.

Mexico is a city that stands in the midst of a great marsh or fen. Abbot, Descrip. of the World.

I go alone

Likes to a lonely dragon, that his fen

Makes fear'd and talk'd of more than seen.

Shakspeare, Coriol.

The surface is of black fen earth.

Woodward on Fossils.

He to Portina's wat'ry marshes went;

A long canal the muddy fen divides,

And with a clear unsully'd current glides. Addis.

FE'NBERRY, n. s. [fen and berry.] A kind of blackberry.

Skinner.

Sherwood.

FEN-FOWL.* n. s. [Sax. pen-fugel.] Any fowl inhabiting marshes.

FEN-LAND.* n. s. [peon-land, Sax. Chron.]

Marshy land.

FENCE.† n. s. [from defence, Dr. Johnson says; but defence is rather from fence, than fence from it. Fence is from the unusual Latin word fendo, to drive away; whence offendo, and defendo.]

1. Guard; security; outwork; defence.

That proved not fence enough to the reputation of their oppressors. Decay of Piet.

There's no fence against inundations, earthquakes, or hurricanes. L'Estrange.

To put them out of their parent's view, at a great distance, is to expose them to the greatest dangers of their whole life, when they have the least fence and guard against them. Locke.

Let us bear this awful corps to Caesar,
And lay it in his sight, that it may stand
A fence betwixt us and the victor's wrath.

Admission, Cato.

2. Enclosure: mound; hedge; fortified boundary.

In vain did nature's wise command

Divide the waters from the land,

If daring ships, and men prophane,

Inva'de th' inviolable main;

Th' eternal fens leap o'er,

And pass at will the boundless deep. Dryd. Hor.

Shall I mention make

Of the vast mound that binds the Lucrine lake?

Or the disdainful sea, that, shut from thence,

Roars round the structure, and invades the fence?

Dryden.

Employ their wives and unavailing care,

To pass the fences and surprise the fair. Pope.

3. The art of fencing; defence.

I bruised my skin th' other day, with playing at sword and dagger with a master of fence.

Shakspeare, M. Wives of Windsor.

4. Skill in defence.

I'll prove it on his body, if he dare,

Despite his nice fence and his active practice.

Shakspeare.

Enjoy your dear wit, and gay rhetoric,

That hath so well been taught her dazzling fence.

Milton, Comus.

TO FENCE. v. a.

1. To enclose; to secure by an enclosure or hedge.

Th' inhabitants each pasture and each plain

Destroyed have, each field to waste is lade;

In fenced towers bestowed is their grain,

Before thou cam'st this kingdom to invade.

Fairfax.

He hath fenced up my way that I cannot pass,

and set darkness in my paths. Job, xix. 8.

Thou hast clothed me with skin and flesh, and hast fenced me with bones and sinews.

Job, x. 11.

He went about to make a bridge to a strong city, which was fenced about with walls.

2 Mac. xii. 13.

See that the churchyard be fenced in with a decent rail, or other inclosure. Ayliffe, Parergon.

2. To guard; to fortify.

So much of adder's wisdom I have learnt,

To fence my ear against thy sorceries. Milt. S. A.

With love to friend, th' impatient lover went,

Fenc'd from the thorns, and trod the deep descent.

Dryden.

TO FENCE. v. n.

1. To practise the arts of manual defence; to practise the use of weapons.

He having got some iron, should have it beaten into swords, and put into his servants' hands to fence with, and bang one another. Locke.

2. To guard against; to act on the defensive.

Vice is the more stubborn as well as the more dangerous evil, and therefore in the first place to be fenced against. Locke.

3. To fight according to art, by obviating blows as well as giving.

If a throatsing, he falls straight a capering:

He will fence with his own shadow.

Shakspeare, Merch. of Ven.

A beauteous heifer in the wood is bred;

The stooping warriors aiming head to head,

Engage their clashing horns; with dreadful sound

The forest rattles, and the rocks rebound;

They fence and push, and pushing, loudly roar,

Their dewlaps and their sides are bath'd in gore.

Dryden.

A man that cannot fence will keep out of bullies' and gamsters' company. Locke.

FENCE-MONTH.* n. s. A word of the forest-law; meaning the month in which it is prohibited to hunt in any forest, as the does then fawn. It begins about the ninth of June, and continues till the ninth of July. There are also fence-months for fish. Bullockar, and Chambers.

FENCEFUL.* adj. [fence and full.] Affording defence or protection.

Blue-ey'd Minerva —
Taught artists first the carving tool to wield, Chariots with brass to arm, and form the fenceful
shield. Congreve, Hymn to Venus.
A fenceful shield. Pope, Odyssey. 16.

FENCELESS.† adj. [from fence.] Without inclosure; open.

The wall
Immovable of this now fenceless world. Milt. P. L.
Each motion of the heart rises to fury,
And love in their weak bosoms is a rage
As terrible as hate, and as destructive:
So the wind roars o'er the wide fenceless ocean,
And heaves the billows of the boiling deep,
Alike from North, from South. Rowe, Jane Shore.

FENCER.† n. s. [from fence.] One who teaches or practises the use of weapons, or science of defence.

Calmness is great advantage; he that lets
Another chafe, may warm him at his fire,
Mark all his wand'rings, and enjoy his frets;
As cunning fencers suffer heat to tire. Herbert.
A nimble fencer will put in a thrust so quick,
that the foil will be in your bosom when you thought it a yard off. Digby.

FENCIBLE.† adj. [from fence.] Capable of defence. Dr. Johnson mentions Addison as using the word, but has overlooked Spenser, probably in consequence of the corrupted text of some editions which substitute sensible for the genuine word fensible or fencible.

No fort so fensible, no walls so strong,
But that continual battery will rive.

Spenser, F. Q. iii. x. 10.

FENCIBLES.* n. s. In the military history of our own times, such regiments as have been raised either expressly for the defence of our own country; or for a limited service; and for a given time.

FENCING.* n. s. [from fence.] The art of fencing.

These, being polemical arts, could no more be learned alone than fencing or cudgel-playing.

Arbutnot and Pope.

FENCINGMASTER.† n. s. [fence and master.] One who teaches the science of defence, or the use of weapons.

The fencing-masters — present a foyle or fleuret to their scholars. Lord Herbert's Life, p. 46.

FENCINGSCHOOL. n. s. [fence and school.] A place in which the use of weapons is taught.

If a man be to prepare his son for duels, I had rather mine should be a good wrestler than an ordinary fencer, which is the most a gentleman can attain to, unless he will be constantly in the fencing-school, and every day exercising. Locke.

To FEND.† v. a. [Lat. fendo, to drive away.]

1. To keep off; to shut out.

Spread with straw the bedding of thy fold,
With fern beneath, to fend the bitter cold.

Dryden, Virg.

2. In naval language, to fend a boat, is to defend it from being dashed against rocks, the shore, or the side of a ship.

To FEND.† v. n.

1. To dispute; to shift off a charge.

Such fending, and such proving.

Benam, and Fl. Bani. Lieutenant.

The dexterous management of terms, and being able to learn and prove with them, passes for a great part of learning; but it is learning distinct from knowledge. Locke.

2. To be industrious; to work hard. A northern word. Westmoreland and Craven Dial. and Wilbraham's Cheshire Gloss.

3. Used in some parts of the north also in inquiries after a person's health: as, "How fend ye, Mister Ritson, how fend ye?" Cumberland Customs, &c. p. 23.

FENDER. n. s. [from fend.]

1. An iron plate laid before the fire to hinder coals that fall, from rolling forward to the floor.

2. Any thing laid or hung at the side of a ship to keep off violence.

To FENERATE.* v. n. [Lat. fœneror.] To put money to usury. Cockeram.

FENERATION. n. s. [fœneratio, Latin.] Usury; the gain of interest; the practice of increasing money by lending.

The hare figured not only pusillanimity and timidity from its temper, but feneration and usury from its fecundity and superfetation.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

FENESTRAL.* adj. [Lat. fenestralis; old French, fenestrelle, a little window, which Skelton adopts, mentioning "the fenestral of castel Angel gloriously glased," Poems, p. 53. The adjective seems proper.] Belonging to windows.

Anthony Wood collected the sepulchral and fenestral inscriptions of the several parishes in the county of Oxford. Bp. Nicholson, Eng. Hist. Lib.

FENNEL.† n. s. [penol, Saxon; fenuil, old French, feniculum, Lat.] A plant of strong scent.

A savoury odour blown, more pleas'd my sense
Than smell of sweetest fennel, or the teats
Of ewe, or goat, dropping with milk at even.

Milton, P. L.

FENNELFLOWER. n. s. [nigella.] A plant.

FENNELGIANT. n. s. [ferula.] A plant.

FENNY.† adj. [Sax. fenix.]

1. Marshy; boggy; moorish.

Driving in of piles is used for stone or brick houses, and that only where the ground proves fenny or moorish.

Moson.

The hungry crocodile, and hissing snake,
Lurk in the troubl'd stream and fenny brake.

Prior.

2. Inhabiting the marsh.

Fillet of a fenny snake,
In the cauldron boil and bake. Shaks. Macbeth.

FENNYSTONES. n. s. A plant.

FENOWED.* adj. [from the Sax. fynigean, to become mouldy, to corrupt, to decay; as Mr. H. Tooke has observed, Div. of Purl. ii. 61. The word is in our old lexicography, though unnoticed or forgotten, in the form of finewed. See Sherwood's Dict. 1632, where it is transferred to VINOWED. And that is explained by Cotgrave mouldy, hoary, musty.] Mouldy. See VINOWED.

The old moth-eaten leaden legend, and the foisty and fenowed festival, are yet secretly laid up in corners. Dr. Favour, Antig. Triumph over Novelty, (1619,) p. 354.

F'ENSUCKED. adj. [fen and suck.] Sacked out of marshes.

Infect her beauty,

You fensuck'd fogs, drawn by the powerful sun.

Shakspeare, K. Lear.

F'ENUGREEK.† n. s. [fenugrec, old Fr. fenogrecum, Sax. fenum Græcum, Lat.]

A plant or herb, the seed of which is much used in medicine. Bullockar.

F'EOD. n. s. [feodum, low Latin.] Fee; tenure. Dict.

F'EODAL.† adj. [feodal, French, from feod.]

1. Held from another.

2. Belonging to a feod or tenure.

The feodal discipline extended itself every where, and influenced the conduct of the courts, and the manners of the people, with its own irregular martial spirit. Burke, Atty. Eng. His. iii. 1.

F'EODALITY.* n. s. [old Fr. feodalité.]

The possession of, or seigniorship over, divers fiefs; feudal tenure; feudal law.

Cotgrave.

The leaders teach the people to reject all feodality as the barbarism of tyranny. Burke.

F'EODARY.† n. s. [from feodum, Latin.]

One who holds his estate under the tenure of suit and service to a superior lord. This word is cited by Dr. Johnson upon the authority of Sir T. Hanmer, who has thus defined feodary in his note on feodary in Shakspeare. See FEDARY. But the feudal vassal, as Mr. Malone observes, was not called a feodary, but a feodatory or feudatory. A feodary was an officer appointed by the court of wards to be present with, and assistant to, the escheators in every county at the finding of officers, and to give in evidence for the king. Stat. 32. Hen. viii. ch. 46. See also Bullockar's Expositor.

F'EODATARY.* n. s. [Lat. feodatarius.] A tenant who holds his estate by feudal service. See FEUDATARY.

F'EODATORY.* adj. Holding from another by some conditional tenure.

Any beneficiary or feodatory king.

Bacon, Observ. on a Libel, 1592.

To FE'OFF.† v. a. [feoffer, old French; fief, fieffer, French; feoffare, low Latin.]

To put in possession; to invest with right.

Cohiers with thee of that blessed patrimony, so feoffed upon them, so possessed of them, that they can never be disseised.

Bp. Hall, Breath. of the Devout Soul, § 29.

If any man have a mind to feoffe a curse upon himself and his posterity, let him defile his fingers with the holy things of God. Seasonable Serm. p. 49.

By spirit men cozen, when they father false doctrine upon the spirit; by word, when they feoff it upon true doctrine.

Shelford's Learned Discourses, p. 231.

FEOFF.* n. s. A fief. See FIEF.

By these sales the third part of the best feoffs in France came to be possessed by the clergy.

Fuller, Holy War, p. 18.

FEOFFE.E.† n. s. [feoffee, i. e. feudataire, old French, of the eleventh century; feoffatus, Lat.] One put in possession.

The late earl of Desmond, before his breaking forth into rebellion, conveyed secretly all his lands to feoffees in trust, in hope to have cut off his majesty from the escheat of his hands.

Spenser on Ireland.

FE'OFFER.† n. s. [old French, féoffer; low Latin, feoffator. One who gives possession of any thing. See FEOFFMENT.
Huloet, and Sherwood.

FE'OFFMENT.† n. s. [féoffment, old French; feoffamentum, Latin.] The act of granting possession.

Any gift or grant of any honours, castles, lands, or other immovable things, to another in fee simple, that is, to him and his heirs for ever, by the delivery of seisin of the thing given: when it is in writing it is called a deed of feoffment; and in every feoffment the giver is called the feoffor, feoffator, and he that receiveth by virtue thereof the feoffee, feoffatus. The proper difference between a feoffor and a donor is, that the feoffor gives in fee-simple, the donor in fee-tail.
Cowel.

Divers young gentlemen proffered large feoffments, but in vain. Tartletou's News out of Purgat.
Patrons of both churches on account of their feoffment, and with the consent of Fulk Burynggham, archdeacon of Oxford.

Warton, History of Keddington, p. 18.

FERA'CIOUS.* adj. [ferax, Latin.] Fertile; fruitful.

Those ages have been most feracious in the production of such persons. Stillingfleet, Orig. Sac. i. 6.

Like an oak,

Nurs'd on feracious Algidum.

Thomson, Liberty, p. III.

FERA'CITY. n. s. [feracitas, Lat.] Fruitfulness; fertility. Dict.

FE'RAL.† adj. [feralis, Latin.] Funereal; deadly. Dict.

Such feral accidents can want and penury produce. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 164.

The world is miserably tormented and shaken with wars; dearth, famine, inundations, plagues, and many feral diseases, reign among us.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 679.

By the wan moon-beam oft the bird of night
Lengthens her feral note.

Headley on the Ruins of Broomholm Priory.

FERE.* n. s. [Sax. ferpa, zeferpa.] A companion; a mate; an equal. Formerly used either for husband or wife. In fere is also an old expression for together, in company; and sometimes written yferre. Gower uses bedfere, and B. Jonson the same, for bedfellow.

We shall ben yferre,

As Orpheus and Eurydice his ferre.

Chaucer, Tr. and Cress, iv. 791.

Charissa to a lovely ferre

Was linked, and by him had many pledges dore.

Spenser, F. Q. i. x. 4.

FE'RETORY.* n. s. [feretrum, Lat.] A place in churches where the bier is set.
Coles.

A third shrine was prepared, whereon to place the other two, and inclose his sacred body. The upper part of this feretory was all covered with plate of the purest gold.

Keepe, Monum. Westm. p. 137.

FE'RIAL.* adj. [ferialis, Lat.] Respecting the common days of the week; sometimes, holidays.

Concerning the ferial character: The ecclesiastical year, of old, began at Easter, the first week whereof was all holiday, the days being distinguished by prima, secunda, tertia, &c. added unto feria; from thence the days of any other week began to be called feria prima, secunda, &c.

Gregory, Posthuma, (1650), p. 134.

[They] did learn to dance, and to sing, and to play on instruments on the ferial days.

Dugdale, Orig. Judic. ch. 55.

FERIA'TION. n. s. [feriatio, Latin.] The act of keeping holiday; cessation from work.

As though there were any feriation in nature, this season is commonly termed the physician's vacation. Brown.

FE'RIE.* n. s. [ferie, old French; feria, Latin.] Any day of the week not kept holy. Bullokar. Yet Wicliffe uses feries for holidays. But a common day seems to have been the usual meaning of the word.

My feast is turned into simple ferie.

Dance of Machabree, fol. 221. b.

FERINE.† adj. [ferin, old Fr. ferinus, Latin.] Wild; savage.

The only difficulty is touching those ferine, noxious, and untamable beasts; as lions, tigers, wolves, bears. Hale.

There are brutish and unnatural desires, which the philosopher calleth ferine and inhumane.

By. Reynolds on the Passions, ch. 16.

FERI'NESS. n. s. [from ferine.] Barbarity; savageness; wildness.

A ferine and necessitous kind of life, a conversation with those that were fallen into a barbarous habit of life, would assimilate the next generation to barbarism and ferineness. Hale.

FE'RITY.† n. s. [feritas, Latin.] Barbarity; cruelty; wildness; savageness. All ferity and inhumanity being laid aside.

Pearson on the Creed, Art. 2.

The ferity of such minds bears no rule in retaliations.

Brown, Chr. Mor. iii. 12.

[They] live by the rules of ferity and lust, and differ from the beasts seemingly in little else but external shape. Glanville, Serm. p. 285.

He reduced him from the most abject and stupid ferity to his senses, and to sober reason.

Woodward, Nat. Hist.

To FERK.* See To FIRK.

FERM.* n. s. [Sax. ferm; old Fr. ferme.]

1. Rent; farm.

Ferm signified rent both in England and in France, says Madox, in his Firma Burgi: he might have added Scotland.

Chalmers, Sir D. Lindsay, Gloss.

2. Lodging-house. The Saxon word is used both for hospitality and an inn or lodging, like the Latin, hospitium; and Spenser's expression is literally the Latin ex hospitio discedere, to leave one's lodging.

His sinful soul with desperate disdain

Out of her fleshy ferme fled to the place of pain.

Spenser, F. Q. iii. v. 23.

To FERMENT. v. a. [fermento, Latin; fermenter, French.] To exalt or rarify by intestine motion of parts.

Ye vig'rous swains! while youth ferments your blood,

And purer spirits swell the sprightly flood,

Now range the hills, the thickest woods beset,

Wind the shrill horn, or spread the waving net.

Pope.

To FERMENT.† v. n. To have the parts put into intestine motion.

If wine or cider do ferment twice, it will be harder, than if it had fermented but once.

Neile's Cider in Evelyn's Pomona.

FERMENT. n. s. [ferment, French; fermentum, Latin.]

1. That which causes intestine motion.

The semen puts females into a fever, upon impregnation; and all animal humours, which poison, are putrifying ferments. Floyer on the Humours.

2. Intestine motion; tumult.

Subdue and cool the ferment of desire.

Rogers, Serm.

FERME'NTABLE. adj. [from ferment.] Capable of fermentation.

FERME'NTAL. adj. [from ferment.] Having the power to cause fermentation. Not used.

Cucumbers, being watery, fill the veins with crude and windy serosities, that contain little salt or spirit, and debilitate the vital acid and fermental faculty of the stomach. Brown.

FERMENTA'TION. n. s. [fermentatio, Lat.]

A slow motion of the intestine particles of a mixt body, arising usually from the operation of some active acid matter, which rarifies, exalts, and subtilizes the soft and sulphureous particles: as when leaven or yeast rarifies, lightens, and ferments bread or wort. And this motion differs much from that usually called ebullition or effervescence, which is a violent boiling and struggling between an acid and an alkali, when mixed together. Harris.

The juice of grapes, after fermentation, will yield a spiritus ardens. Boyle.

A man, by tumbling his thoughts, and forming them into expressions, gives them a new kind of fermentation; which works them into a finer body, and makes them much clearer than they were before. Collier of Friendship.

The sap, in fluent dance,

And lively fermentation, mounting, spreads
All this innumerable scene of things.

Thomson.

FERME'NTATIVE. adj. [from ferment.] Causing fermentation; having the power to cause fermentation.

Aromatical spirits destroy by their fermentative heat.

Arbutnot.

FERME'NTATIVENESS.* n. s. [from fermentative.] Capability of fermenting.

The white of the egg he concluded, from its fermentativeness, to be impregnated with air.

Dr. Tyson, Hist. R. S. (1684) iv. 172.

FE'RMILLET.* n. s. [fermaillet, old Fr.]

A buckle or clasp.

Those stones were sustained or stayed by buckles and fermillets of gold for more firmness.

Donne, Hist. of the Sept. p. 49.

FERN. n. s. [peapn, Saxon.] A plant.

The leaves are formed of a number of small pinnules, dentated on the edges, and set close by one another on slender ribs. On the back of these pinnules are produced the seeds, small and extremely numerous. The country people esteem it a sovereign remedy decocted for the rickets in children. Hill.

Black was the forest, thick with beech it stood,
Horrid with fern, and intricate with thorn;
Few paths of human feet or tracks of beasts were worn. Dryden.

There are great varieties of fern in different parts of the world; but they are seldom cultivated in gardens. Miller.

FE'RTICLES.* n. s. pl. Freckles on the skin resembling the seeds of the fern.

Craven Dialect. Pronounced farnticles.

FE'RN.Y.† adj. [from fern.] Overgrown with fern.

Ferny ground [is] a place where many ferns grow. Barret, Alv. 1580.

The herd suffic'd, did late repair
To ferny heaths, and to their forest-lair. Dryden.
FEROCIOUS. adj. [ferox, Latin; feroce, French.]

1. Savage; fierce.

Smedly rose in majesty of mud;
Shaking the horrors of his ample brows,
And each ferocious feature grim with ooze. Pope.

2. Ravenous; rapacious.

The hare that becometh a prey unto man, unto beasts and fowls of the air, is fruitful even unto superfetation; but the lion and ferocious animal hath young ones but seldom, and but one at a time. Brown, Vulg. Err.

FEROCIOUSLY.* adv. [from ferocious.] In a savage, or in a rapacious, manner.

FEROCIOUSNESS.* n. s. [from ferocious.] Fierceness; savageness.

FEROCITY. n. s. [ferocitas, Latin; ferocité, French, from ferocious.] Savageness; wildness; fierceness.

An uncommon ferocity in my countenance, with the remarkable flatness of my nose, and extent of my mouth, have procured me the name of lion. Addison, Guardian.

Untaught, uncultivated, as they were Inhospitable, full of ferocity. Philips, Briton.

FERREOUS. adj. [ferreus, Latin.] Irony; of iron.

In the body of glass there is no ferreous or mag-netical nature. Brown, Vulg. Err.

FERRRET. n. s. [fured, Welsh; furet, Fr. ferret, Dutch; viverra, Lat.]

1. A kind of rat with red eyes and a long snout, used to catch rabbits. They are said to have been brought hither from Africa.

With what an eager earnestness she looked, having threatening not only in her ferret eyes, but while she spoke, her nose seemed to threaten her chin. Sidney.

Cicero
Looks with such ferret and such fiery eyes,
As we have seen him. Shakspeare, Jul. Cas.
Coney are taken either by ferrets or purse-nets. Mortimer.

TO FERRRET.† v. a. [from the noun.] To drive out of lurking places, as the ferret drives the coney.

The archbishop had ferreted him out of all his holds. Heylin.

He went in quest of Hudibras,
To find him out where'er he was;
And, if he were above ground, vow'd,
He'd ferret him, lurk where he wou'd.

Bulter, Hudibras.
So late as the year 1724 the Inquisition ferreted out, and drove into banishment, some considerable remnants of that unfortunate race, [persons in Spain of Moorish extraction.]

Swinnburne, Trav. through Spain, Let. 20.
FERRETER.† n. s. [from ferret.] One that hunts another in his privacies.

Sherwood.

FERRIAGE.† n. s. [old Fr. feriage.] The fare paid at a ferry. Sherwood.

FERRUGINOUS.* adj. [Lat. ferrugineus.] Partaking of particles and qualities of iron; a word chosen by Dr. Johnson in preference to ferruginous.

Ink may be made of any ferruginous matter and astringent vegetable.

Johnson, Review of Hanway's Journal.

FERRUGINOUS. adj. [ferrugineus, Fr. ferrugineus, Lat.] Partaking of the particles and qualities of iron.

They are cold, hot, purgative, diuretick, ferruginous, saline, petrifying, and bituminous.

Ray on the Creation.

FERRULE.† n. s. [virole, or verrel, old Fr. from ferrum, iron, Lat.] An iron ring put round any thing to keep it from cracking.

The fingers' ends are strengthened with nails, as we fortify the ends of our staves or forks with iron hoops or ferrules. Ray.

TO FERRY. v. a. [papan, to pass, Sax.; fahr, Germ. a passage. Skinner imagines that this whole family of words may be deduced from the Latin veho. I do not love Latin originals; but if such must be sought, may not these words be more naturally derived from ferri, to be carried?] To carry over in a boat.

Cymocles heard and saw,
He loudly call'd to such as were aboard,
The little bark unto the shore to draw,
And him to ferry over that deep ford. Spens. F. Q.

TO FERRY. v. n. To pass over water in a vessel of carriage.

Thence hurried back to fire,
They ferry over this Lethaan sound
Both to and fro, their sorrow to augment.

Milton, P. L.

FERRY.† } n. s. [from the verb and FERRYBOAT.† } boat.

1. A vessel of carriage; a vessel in which goods or passengers are carried over water.

By this time was the worthy Guyon brought Unto the other side of that wide strand,
Where she was rowing, and for passage sought:
Him needed not long call, she soon to hand
Her ferry brought. Spenser, F. Q.

Bring them with imagin'd speed
Unto the Traject, to the common ferry
Which trades to Venice. Shaks. Merch. of Ven.

A ferryboat to carry over the king's household.
2 Sam. xix. 18.

I went down to the river Brent in the ordinary ferry. Addison.

FERTILE. adj. [fertile, Fr. fertilis, Lat.]

1. Fruitful; abundant; plenteous.

I had hope of France,
As firmly as I hope for fertile England.
Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

I have had a large, a fair, and a pleasant field;
so fertile, that it has given me two harvests in a Summer. Dryden.

I ask whether in the uncultivated waste of America, a thousand acres yield as many conveniences of life as ten acres of equally fertile land do in Devonshire? Locke.

View the wide earth adorn'd with hills and woods,

Rich in her herds, and fertile by her flocks.

Blackmore.

2. With of before the thing produced.

The earth is fertile of all kind of grain.

Camden, Rem.

This happy country is extremely fertile, as of those above, so likewise of its productions under ground. Woodward.

FERTILENESS.† n. s. [from fertile.] Fruit-fulness; fecundity.

He, according to the fertility of the Italian wit, did not only afford us the demonstration of his practice, but sought to enrich our mind with the contemplation therein. Sidney, Def. of Poesy.

TO FERTILITATE. v. a. [from fertile.] To fecundate; to fertilize; to make fruitful or productive. Not in use.

A cock will in one day fertilize the whole racemation or cluster of eggs, not excluded in many weeks after. Brown.

FERTILITY.† n. s. [fertilité, Fr. fertilitas, Lat.] Fecundity; abundance; fruitfulness; plenteousness.

I will go root away

The noisome weeds, that without profit suck
The soil's fertility from wholesome flowers.

Shakspeare, Rich. II.

Paradise itself exceeded in beauty and fertility;
and these places had but a resemblance thereof.

Raleigh, History.

The quickness of the imagination is seen in the invention, the fertility in the fancy, and the accuracy in the expression. Dryden.

To inundations Egypt, through which the Nile flows, and the Indies owe their extraordinary ferti- lity, and those mighty crops they produce after these waters are withdrawn. Woodward, Nat. Hist.

TO FERTILIZE.† v. a. [fertilizer, Fr.] To make fruitful; to make plenteous; to make productive; to fecundate.

Having watered and fertilized, by their passage, the grounds through which they [rivers] seemed to wander. Boyle, Style of H. Script. p. 56.

fervency towards God. Hooker, Dedication.

There must be zeal and fervency in him which proposeth for the rest those suits and supplications, which they by their joyful acclamations must ratify. Hooker.

When you pray, let it be with attention, with fervency, and with perseverance.

Wake, Prep. for Death.

FERVENT.† adj. [fervens, Lat. fervent, Fr.]

1. Hot; boiling.

The fountain's
Bubbling wave did ever freshly wade
Ne ever would through fervent Summer fade.

Spenser.

From the phlegmatick humour, the proper alloy of fervent blood, will flow a future quietude and serenitude. Wotton.

2. Hot in temper; vehement.

They that are more fervent to dispute, be not always the most able to determine. Hooker.

3. Ardent in piety; warm in zeal; flaming with devotion.

This man being fervent in the spirit, taught diligently the things of the Lord. Acts, xviii. 25.
So spake the fervent angel; but his zeal
None seconded, as out of season judg'd,
Or singular and rash. Milton, P. L.

Let all enquiries into the mysterious points of theology be carried on with fervent petitions to God, that he would dispose their minds to direct all their skill to the promotion of a good life.

South, Serm.

4. Ardent in love.

Will you go to him then and speak for me?
You have loved longer, but not ferventer,
Beaumont, and Fl. Laws of Candy.

FERVENTLY,† adv. [from fervent.]

1. In a burning degree.

It continued so fervently hot, that men roasted eggs in the sand. Hakevill on Providence, p. 116.

2. Eagerly; vehemently.

Pleasure, wherunto a man is fervently moved.
Sir T. Elgot, Gov. fol. 182.
They all that charge did fervently apply,
With greedy malice and importune toil.

Spenser, F. Q.

3. With pious ardour; with holy zeal.

Epaphras saluteth you, labouring fervently for you in prayers. Col. iv. 12.
He cares not how or what he suffers, so he suffer well, and be the friend of Christ; nor where nor when he suffers, so he may do it frequently, fervently, and acceptably. Bp. Taylor.

FERVENTNESS,* n. s. [from fervent.] Ardour;
zeal. Sherwood.

Having great power, with constant ferventness of spirit, to declare his will.

Bale on the Revel. P. iii. sign. A. iii. b.

FERVID,† adj. [fervidus, Lat.]

1. Hot; burning; boiling.

The mounted sun
Shot down direct his fervid rays, to warm
Earth's inmost womb. Milton, P. L.

2. Vehement; eager; zealous.

FERVIDITY, n. s. [from fervid.]

1. Heat.

2. Zeal; passion; ardour.

Dict.

FERVIDNESS, n. s. [from fervid.] Ardour
of mind; zeal; passion.

As to the healing of Malchus's ear, — in the account of the meek Lamb of God, it was a kind of injury done to him by the fervidness of St. Peter, who knew not yet what spirit he was of.

Bentley, Serm. vi.

FERULA,† n. s. [ferule, Fr. from ferula, giant fennel, Lat.] An instrument of correction with which young scholars are beaten on the hand: so named because anciently the stalks of fennel were used for this purpose.

The birch upon the breeches of the small ones,
And humble with the ferula the tall ones.

Beaumont, and Fl. Two Nob. Kinsmen.

These differ as much as the rod and ferula.

Shaw's Grammar.

FERULAR,* n. s. [from ferula, Lat.] The ferule, or instrument of correction.

Phillips.

Fists, and ferulars, rods, and scourges, have been the usual dainties in schools.

Hartlib, Reform. of Schools. (1642), p. 13.

FERULE,* n. s. The more proper word for ferula.

Now my rhymes relish of the ferule still,
Some nose-wise pedant saith. Bp. Hall, Sat. iv. 1.
Before he had any down upon his chin, and whilst he was under the ferule.

Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 304.

From the rod or ferule I would have them free,
as from the menace of them.

B. Jonson, Discoveries.

TO FERULE, v. a. To chastise with the ferula.

FERVOUR, n. s. [fervor, Lat. fervor, Fr.]
1. Heat; warmth.

Were it an undeniable truth that an effectual fervour proceeded from this star, yet would not the same determine the opinion. Brown, Vulg. Err.

Like bright Aurora, whose refulgent ray
Foretells the fervour of ensuing day,
And warns the shepherd with his flocks retreat
To leafy shadows, from the threatened heat.

Wallar.

These silver drops, like morning dew,
Foretell the fervour of the day;
So from one cloud soft show'rs we view,
And blasting lightnings burst away. Pope.

2. Heat of mind; zeal.

Odious it must needs have been to abolish that which all had held for the space of many ages, without reason so great as might in the eyes of impartial men appear sufficient to clear them from all blame of rash proceedings, if in fervour of zeal they had removed such things. Hooker.

Haply despair hath seiz'd her;
Or, wing'd with fervour of her love, she's flown
To her desir'd Posthumus. Shakspeare, Cymb.

3. Ardour of piety.

There will be at Loretto, in a few ages more, jewels of the greatest value in Europe, if the devotion of its princes continues with its present fervour.

Addison on Italy.

FERSCENNINE,* n. s. [from Fescennia, in Tuscany, where licentious and wanton verses were sung at weddings; Lat. Fescennini versus.] A licentious poem.
Many old poets — did write fescennines, atel-lans, and lascivious songs.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 414.

FERSCENNINE,* adj. [Lat. fescenninus.]
Licentious; wanton.

Such a race

We pray may grace
Your fruitful spreading vine,
But dare not ask our wish in language Fescennine.

B. Jonson, Underwoods.

There seldom wanted a company of boys and mad sparks, got together, to sing a parcel of obscene verses, which were tolerated on this occasion, [the nuptial feast.] They consisted of a kind of Fescennine rhymes.

Kennet, Rom. Antig. ii. 5.

FERSCUE,† n. s. [Teut. vesken; Fr. fescu.]
Our own word was formerly written fescu. It is still pronounced, in some places, vester. The original is probably the Latin fescuca, a young shoot, or stalk of a tree; a small wand or stick; though
Mr. Pegge strangely interprets it, by way of etymological explanation, verse-cue. A small wire by which those who teach to read point out the letters.

Teach him an alphabet upon his fingers, making the points of his fingers of his left hand both on the inside to signify some letter, when any of them is pointed at by the forfinger of the right hand, or by any kind of fescue. Holder.

Teach them how many passions ought to move;
For such as cannot think, can never love;
And since they needs will judge the poet's art,
Point 'em with fescues to each shining part. Dryden.

FESSELS,† n. s. [faziols, Fr. "fusels, long pease, kidney beans." Cotgrave.] A kind of base grain.

Disdain not fescels or poor vetch to sow,
Or care to make Egyptian lentils thrive.

May, Virgil.

FESSE, n. s. [In heraldry.]

The fesse is so called of the Latin word fascia, a band or girdle, possessing the third part of the escutcheon over the middle; if there be above one, you must call them bars; if with the field there be odd pieces, as seven or nine, then you must name the field, and say so many bars; if even, as six, eight, or ten, you must say barwise, or barry of six, eight, or ten, as, the king of Hungary bears argent and gules barry of eight. Peacham on Blazoning.

FESTAL,* adj. [old Fr. festal, from the Lat. festum.] Respecting feasts; befitting a feast.

They would have thought, who heard the strain,
They saw in Tempe's vale her native maids
Amidst the festal sounding shades
To some unwearied minstrel dancing.

Collins, Ode on the Passions.

These were festal chansons for enlivening the merriments of the Christmasa celebrity.

Warton, Hist. of Eng. Poet. iii. 142.

At festal seasons there may be supposed a very numerous company.

Johnson, Journey to the Western Islands.

TO FESTE,† v. n. [fesse, in Bavarian, a swelling corrupted, Junius. Dr. Johnson accedes to this etymology. But our word may be perhaps a corruption of the Latin pustula, a blain, a blister.]
To rankle; to corrupt; to grow virulent.
I might, even in my lady's presence, discover the sore which had deeply festered within me.

Sidney.

Inward corruption and infected sin,
Not purg'd, not heal'd, behind remained still,
And festering sore, did rankle yet within.

Spenser, F. Q.

How should our festered sores be cured?

Hooker.

I have some wounds upon me, and they smart
To hear themselves remembered.

— Well might they fester 'gainst ingratitude,
And tent themselves with death. Shaks. Coriol.

Mind that their souls

May make a peaceful and a sweet retire
From off these fields, where, wretches, their poor bodies

Must lie and fester. Shakspeare, Hen. V.

There was imagination, that between a knight whom the duke had taken into some good degree of favour, and Felton, there had been ancient quarrels not yet well healed, which might perhaps be festering in his breast, and by a certain inflammation produce this effect. Wotton.

Passion and unkindness may give a wound that shall bleed and smart; but it is treachery that makes it fester. South.

FESTINATE, adj. [festinatus, Latin.]
Hasty; hurried. A word not in use.

Advise the duke, where you are going, to a most festinate preparation: we are bound to the like. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

FESTINATELY, adv. [from festinate.]

Hastily; speedily; with speed. Not in use.

Take this key! give enlargement to the swain;
bring him festinately hither. Shaks. L. Lab. Lost.
FESTINATION † n. s. [festinatio, Latin.]
Haste; hurry.

Lay hands on him with all festination.
Preston, Trag. of King Cambises, (1561.)
Festination may prove precipitation.

Brown, Chr. Mor. 1. 33.

FESTIVAL † adj. [festival, old French; festivus, Latin.] Pertaining to feasts; joyous.

The king forbid that they should profane the sabbaths and festival days. 1 Macc. i. 45.

Their garlands — were concubine, festival, sacrificial, nuptial, honorary, funereal.

Sir T. Brown, Miscell. p. 91.

He appeared at great tables, and festival entertainments, that he might manifest his divine charity to men. Atterbury.

FESTIVAL n. s. Time of feast; anniversary-day of civil or religious joy.

So tedious is this day,

As is the night before some festival,
To an impatient child that hath new robes,
And may not wear them. Shaks. Rom. and Jul.

Th' invited sisters with their graces blest
Their festivals. Sandys.

The morning trumpets festival proclaim'd
Through each high street. Milton, S. A.

Follow, ye nymphs and shepherds all,
Come, celebrate this festival,

And merrily sing and sport, and play;
'Tis Oriana's nuptial day. Granville.

By sacrifice of the tongues they purged away whatever they had spoken amiss during the festival.

Broome, on the Odyssey.

The festival of our Lord's resurrection we have celebrated, and may now consider the chief consequence of his resurrection, a judgment to come.

Atterbury, Sermons.

FESTIVE † adj. [festive, old Fr. festivus, Lat.] Joyous; gay; befitting a feast. The glad circle round them yield their souls
To festive mirth, and wit that knows no gall.

Thompson.

His vein was chiefly festive and satirical.
Warton, Hist. E. P. vol. i. Diss. 2.

FESTIVITE † n. s. [festivité, old French; festivitas, Latin.]

1. Festival; time of rejoicing.

The daughter of Jephtha came to be worshipped as a deity, and had an annual festivity observed unto her honour. Brown.

There happening a great and solemn festivity, such as the sheep shearings used to be, David condescends to beg of a rich man some small repast.

South.

2. Gaiety; joyfulness; temper or behaviour befitting a feast.

To some persons there is no better instrument to cause the remembrance, and to endear the affection to the article, than the recommending it by festivity and joy of a holiday. Bp. Taylor.

FESTON † n. s. [feston, French; "corona ex floribus tincta, seu sertum festum, aut festivum, i. e. festis diebus usurpari solitum." Skinner.] An ornament of carved work in the form of a wreath or garland of flowers, or leaves twisted together, thickest at the middle, and suspended by the two extremes, whence it hangs down perpendicularly. Harris.

The mere flower-painter is, we see, obliged to study the form of festons. Ld. Shaftesbury.

FESTUCINE adj. [festuca, Latin.] Straw-colour between green and yellow.

Therein may be discovered a little insect of a festucine or pale green, resembling a locust or grass-hopper. Brown.

FESTUCOUS adj. [festuca, Latin.] Formed of straw.

We speak of straws, or festucous divisions, lightly drawn over with oil. Brown, Vulg. Err.

To FET † v. a. [See to FETCH and FAR-FET.]

1. To fetch; to go and bring. Not in use. Get home with thy fewel, make ready to fet,
The sooner the easier carriage to get.

Tusser, Husbandry.

But for he was unable them to fet,
A little boy did on him still attend. Spenser, F. Q.
And they fet forth Urijah out of Egypt to Jehoikam, who slew him with the sword.

Jeremiah, xxvi. 23.

2. To come to; to arrive at. We hoist up mast and sail, that in a while
We fet the shore. Sackville, Induct. Mir. for Mag.

FET n. s. [I suppose from fail, French, a part or portion.] A piece. Not in use.

The bottom clear,

Now laid with many a fet
Of seed pearl, ere she bath'd her there
Was known as black as jet. Drayton.

To FETCH † v. a. preter. fetched; anciently fet; unless it rather came from To Fet, [peccan, pettan, Saxon; fatta, Sw.]

1. To go and bring.

They have devis'd a mean

How he her chamber-window will ascend,
And with a corded ladder fetch her down. Shaks.
We will take men to fetch victuals for the people.

Judges, xx. 10.

Go to the flock and fetch me from thence two kid goats. Gem. xxvii. 9.
The seat of empire, where the Irish come,
And the unwilling Scotch to fetch their doom.

Waller.

Draw forth the monsters of th' abyss profound,
Or fetch th' aerial eagle to the ground. Pope.

2. To derive; to draw.

On, you noblest English,

Whose blood is fetched from fathers of war-proof. Shakspeare.

3. To strike at a distance.

The conditions of weapons, and their improvements, are the fetching afar off, for that outruns the danger, as it is seen in ordnance and muskets.

Bacon, Essays.

4. To bring to any state by some powerful operation.

In smells, we see their great and sudden effect in fetching men again, when they swoon.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

At Rome, any of those arts immediately thrives under the encouragement of the prince, and may be fetched up to its perfection in ten or a dozen years, which is the work of an age or two in other countries. Addison on Italy.

5. To draw within any confinement or prohibition.

General terms may sufficiently convey to the people what our intentions are, and yet not fetch us within the compass of the ordinance. Sanderson.

6. To produce by some kind of force.

These ways, if there were any secret excellence among them, would fetch it out, and give it fair opportunities to advance itself by.

Milton, on Education.

An human soul without education is like marble in the quarry, which shews none of its beauties till the skill of the polisher fetches out the colours.

Addison, Spectator.

7. To perform. It is applied to motion or cause.

I'll fetch a turn about the garden, pitying
The pangs of barr'd affections; though the king
Hath charg'd you should not speak together.

Shakspeare, Cymb.

When evening grey doth rise, I fetch my round
Over the mount. Milton, Arcades.

To come to that place they must fetch a compass three miles on the right hand through a forest.

Knolles, History.

8. To perform with suddenness or violence.

Note a wild and wanton herd,
Or race of youthful and unhandled colts,
Fetching mad bounds, bellowing and neighing loud.

Shakspeare.

The fox fetched a hundred and a hundred leaps at a delicious cluster of grapes. L' Estrange.

Talk to her of an unfortunate young lady that lost her beauty by the small-pox, she fetches a deep sigh. Addison.

9. To perform without suddenness or violence.

She

As if she had drunk Lethe, or had made
Even with Heaven, did fetch so still a sleep,
So sweet and sound.

Beaumont and Fl. Maid's Tragedy.

10. To reach; to arrive at; to come to.

Mean time flew our ships, and straight we fetcht
The Syren's isle; a spleenless wind so stretcht
Her wings to waft us, and so urg'd our keel.

Chapman.

If earth, industrious of herself, fetch day
Travelling East; and with her part averse
From the sun's beam, meet night; her other part Still luminous by his ray. Milton, P. L.

The hare laid himself down and took a nap;
for, says he, I can fetch up the tortoise when I please.

L' Estrange.

11. To obtain as its price.

During such a state, silver in the coin will never fetch as much as the silver in bullion. Locke.

To FETCH v. n. To move with a quick return.

Like a shifted wind unto a sail,
It makes the course of thoughts to fetch about.

Shakspeare.

FETCH † n. s. [facen, fraud, trick, deceit.] A stratagem by which any thing is indirectly performed; by which one thing seems intended and another is done; a trick; an artifice.

An envious neighbour is easy to find,
His cumbersome fetches are seldom behind;
His fetch is to flatter, to get what he can;
His purpose once gotten, a pin for thee then.

Tusser.

It is a fetch of wit;
You laying these slight sillies on my son,
As 'twere a thing a little soild i' th' working.

Shakspeare, Hamlet.

But Sidrophel, as full of tricks

As rota men of politics,
Straight cast about to over-reach
Th' unweary conqueror with a fetch. Hudibras.

With this fetch he laughs at the trick he hath plaid me. Stillingfleet.

The fox had a fetch in't. L' Estrange.

From these instances and fetches
Thou mak'st of horses, clocks, and watches,
Quoth Mat, thou seem'st to mean
That Alma is a mere machine. Prior.

FETCHIER † n. s. [from fetch.] One that fetches any thing. Hulot.

FETID adj. [fetidus, Latin; fetide, French.] Stinking; rancid; having a smell strong and offensive.

Most putrefactions are of an odious smell; for they smell either fetid or mouldy.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

In the most severe orders of the church of Rome, those who practise abstinence, feel after it fetid hot eruptions. Arbuthnot.

Plague, fiercest child of Nemesis divine,
Descends from Ethiopia's poison'd woods,
From stifled Cairo's filth and fetid fields.

Thomson, Summer.

FETIDNESS. n. s. [from fetid.] The quality of stinking.

FETLOCK. n. s. [feet and lock.] A tuft of hair that grows behind the pastern joint of many horses: horses of a low size have scarce any such tuft.

Farrier's Dict.

Their wounded steeds

Fret fetlock deep in gore, and with wild rage

Yerk out their armed heels at their dead masters.

Shakespeare, Hen. V.

White were the fetlocks of his feet before,
And on his front a snowy star he bore.

Dryden, Virg.

FETOR. n. s. [fætor, Latin.] A stink; a stench; a strong and offensive smell.

The fetor may discover itself by sweat and humour.

Brown.

When the symptoms are attended with a fetor of any kind, such a disease will be cured by acrescent substances, and none better than whey.

Arbuthnot on Diet.

FETTER. n. s. It is commonly used in the plural, fetters. [from feet; petcepe, Saxon.] Chains for the feet; chains by which walking is hindered.

Doctrine unto fools is as fetters on the feet,
And like manacles on the right hand.

Ecclus. xxi. 19.

Drawing after me the chains and fetters whereunto I have been tied, I have by other men's errors failed.

Raleigh.

Passion's too fierce to be in fetters bound,
And nature flies him like enchanted ground.

Dryden.

The wretch in double fetters bound,
Your potent mercy may release.

Prior.

Pleasure arose in those very parts of his leg that just before had been so much pained by the fetter.

Addison.

I thought her pride
Had broke your fetters, and assur'd your freedom.

A. Philips.

TO FETTER. v. a. [from the noun.] To bind; to enchain; to shackle; to tie. It is properly used of the feet, but is applied to other restraints.

Neither her great worthiness nor his own suffering for her, could fetter his fickleness.

Sidney.

My conscience! thou art fetter'd
More than my shanks and wrists.

Shaks. Cymb.

Fetter strong madness in a silken thread;
Charm ach with air, and agony with words.

Shakespeare.

Doth a master chide his servant because he doth not come, yet knows that the servant is chained and fettered, so as he cannot move.

Bp. Bramhall against Hobbes.

A chain which man to fetter man has made;
By artifice impos'd, by fear obey'd.

Prior.

FETTERLESS. adj. [fetter and less.] Free from restraint.

Yet this affected strain gives me a tongue
As fetterless, as is an emperor's.

Marston, Malcontent.

TO FETTER. v. n. [A cant word from feet, Dr. Johnson says. This is a mistake. It is an old English word, as Mr. Malone also observes; and is yet used in the northern parts of England. "To fettle, to set or go about any thing; to dress, prepare, or put in order."

Grose. It is probably from the Su. Goth. fykt, studium.] To get ready; to prepare; to do business.

Nor list he now go whistling to the car,
But sell his team, and fettleth to the war.

Bp. Hall, Sat. iv. 6.

When your master is most busy in company, come in and pretend to fettle about the room; and if he chides, say you thought he rung the bell.

Swift, Direct. to the Foolman.

TO FETTER. v. a. To repair; to mend any thing which is broken or defective. The nearest word which occurs to me, Mr. Wilbraham says, is the old French word faiture, which has exactly the same meaning as our substantive fettle; and is explained by Roquefort in his Gloss. de la Lang. Rom. by façon, mode, forme, &c. Cheshire Glossary.

FETTER. n. s. Order; good condition. See Wilbraham's Gloss. as before. It is found in the Westmoreland, Cumberland, Lancashire, and Craven Dialects also; and the compiler of the last adds, that Ascham has used it in the sense of preparation.

FETUS. n. s. [fætus, Latin.] Any animal in embryo; any thing yet in the womb; any thing unborn.

That paradox of Hippocrates some learned physicians have of late revived, that the fetus respires in the womb.

Boyle.

FEU. n. s. [Sax. feoh.] A fee, or feudal tenure. See FEUDAL.

FEU DE JOIE. [French.] A bonfire; a firing of guns on any joyful occasion.

The origin of this fire on Midsummer eve, which is still retained by so many nations, though enveloped in the mist of antiquity, is very simple: it was a feu de joie, kindled the very moment the year began; for the first of all years, and the most ancient that we know of, began at this month of June.

Brand, Popular Antiquities.

FEUD. n. s. [Sax. feohð, enmity; from fean, to hate, or feh, a foe; Cimbr. faide; low Lat. faida.] Quarrel; contention; opposition; war.

Though men would find such mortal feuds
In sharing of their publick goods.

Hudibras.

In former ages it was a policy of France to raise and cherish intestine feuds and discords in Great Britain.

Addison.

Scythia mourns

Our guilty wars, and earth's remotest regions
Lie half unpeopled by the feuds of Rome.

Addison, Cato.

FEUD. n. s. [old Fr. feude; low Lat. feudum.] A conditional allotment of land. See FEOD.

The constitution of feuds had its original from the military policy of the northern nations.

Blackstone.

FEUDAL. adj. [feudal, old Fr. feudalis, low Lat.] pertaining to fees, feus, or tenures by which lands are held of a superiour lord.

Wales, that was not always the feudal territory of England, having been governed by a prince of their own, had laws utterly strange to the laws of England.

Hale.

A feudal kingdom was properly the encampment of a great army; military ideas predominated, military subordination was established, and the possession of land was the pay, which the soldiers received for their personal service.

Robertson, Hist. of Scotland.

The word fee in the northern languages signifies a conditional stipend or reward; and by combination with the northern adh, odhal, or udal, which signifies proprietas, will be formed, fee-adh, or feodum, to denote a feodhal, or feudal, or stipendiary property.

Blackstone.

FEUDALISM. n. s. [from feudal.] The feudal system.

FEUDALITY. n. s. The state of a chief lord; feodality. Cotgrave in V. Feodalitè.

FEUDARY. adj. [from feud.] Holding tenure under a superiour lord.

What greater dividing than by a pernicious and hostile peace to disailege a whole feudary kingdom from the ancient dominion of England?

Milton, on the Articles of Peace.

FEUDATARY. n. s. [old Fr. feudataire; low Lat. feudatarius.] One who holds not in chief, but by some conditional tenure from a superiour.

It was hard to obtain [in the feudal times] the fair feudatary, who was the object of universal adoration. Warton, Hist. of E. P. vol. i. Diss. 1.

FEUDATORY. adj. This word is given by Dr. Johnson as a substantive, with a citation from Bacon, in which it is an adjective, as feudatory; which is the spelling of Bacon. See FEODATORY.

FEUDIST. n. s. [old Fr. feudiste.] One learned in the law of feuds or fees; one who writes on them.

Marquesse is as much as a lord of the frontiers; although I know divers other are the derivations which the feudists have imagined.

Selden on Drayton's Polyolb. S. 7.

The word is to be found in this sense, — in all the feudists.

Brady, Eng. Hist. Gloss. p. 46.

FEVER. n. s. [pepew, Sax. fievre, French; febris, Lat.] A disease in which the body is violently heated, and the pulse quickened, or in which heat and cold prevail by turns. It is sometimes continual, sometimes intermittent.

Think'st thou the fiery fever will go out
With titles blown from adulation?
Will it give place to flexure and low bending?

Shakespeare, Hen. V.

Duncan is in his grave;
After life's fitful fever he sleeps well.

Shakespeare, Macbeth.

Should not a ling'ring fever he remov'd,
Because it long has rag'd within my blood?

Dryden.

He had never dreamed in his life, till he had the fever he was then newly recovered of.

Locke.

TO FEVER. v. a. [from the noun.] To put into a fever.

The white hand of a lady fever thee!
Shake to look on't.

Shaks. Ant. and Cleop.

Her blood all fever'd, with a furious leap,
She sprung from bed distracted in her mind.

Dryden.

FEVER-COOLING. adj. [fever and cool.] Allaying the heat of fever.

Lay me, reclin'd,
Beneath the spreading tamarind that shakes,
Fann'd by the breeze, its fever-cooling fruit.

Thomson, Summer.

FEVER-SICK. adj. [Sax. pepew-peoc.] Diseased with a fever.

Lie down upon thy bed,
Feigning thee fever-sick.

Peele, David and Bethsabe, (1599.)

FEVER-WEAKENED. adj. [fever and weak-en.] Debilitated by fever.

Fever-weakened joints,
Like strengthless hinges, buckle under life.

Shakespeare, K. Hen. IV. P. II.

FE'VERET. n. s. [from fever.] A slight fever; febricula.

A light feveret, or an old quartan ague, is not a sufficient excuse for non-appearance.

FE'VERFEW.† n. s. pefeppure, Sax. febris and fugo, Latin.] A plant.

Common feverfew is the sort used in medicine, and is found wild in many parts of England.

FE'VERISH. adj. [from fever.]

1. Diseased with a fever.

To other climates beasts and birds retire,
And feverish nature burns in her own fire. Creech.
When an animal that gives suck turns feverish, that is, its juices more alkaline, the milk turns from its native genuine whiteness to yellow.

Arbutnot on Aliments.

2. Tending to a fever.

A feverish disorder disabled me. Swift to Pope.

3. Uncertain; inconstant; now hot, now cold.

We toss and turn about our feverish will,
When all our ease must come by lying still;
For all the happiness mankind can gain,
Is not in pleasure, but in rest from pain.

Dryden, Ind. Emp.

4. Hot; burning.

And now four days the sun has seen our woes,
Four nights the moon beheld th' incessant fire;
It seem'd as if the stars more sickly rose,
And farther from the feverish North retire.

Dryden, Ann. Mir.

FE'VERISHNESS.† n. s. [from feverish.]

1. A slight disorder of the feverish kind.

2. Mental restlessness.

Satiety, perpetual disgust, and feverishness of desire, perpetually attend those, who passionately study pleasure.

Ld. Shaftesbury.

FE'VERLY.* adj. [from fever.] Like a fever.

Feverly heat maketh no digestion.

Old Poem in Asimole's Theat. Chem. 1652. p. 62.

FE'VEROUS. adj. [fièvreux-se, French; from fever.]

1. Troubled with a fever or ague.

Thou mad'st thine enemies shake, as if the world

Were feverous, and did tremble. Shakespeare, Coriol.

2. Having the nature of a fever.

All fev'rous kinds,

Convulsions, epilepsies, fierce catarrhs.

Milton, P. L.

3. Having a tendency to produce fevers.

It hath been noted by the ancients, that southern winds, blowing much, without rain, do cause a feverous disposition of the year; but with rain not.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

FE'VEROUSLY.* adv. [from feverous.] In a feverish manner.

A malady

Desp'rately hot, or changing fev'rously.

Donne, Poems, p. 77.

FE'VERY. adj. [from fever.] Diseased with a fever.

O Rome, thy head

Is drown'd in sleep, and all thy body fevery.

B. Jonson, Catiline.

FEU'ILLAGE. n. s. [French.] A bunch or row of leaves.

Of Homer's head I inclose the outline, that you may determine whether you would have it so large, or reduced to make room for feuillage or laurel round the oval.

Jervas to Pope.

FEUILLEMORTE.† n. s. [French.] The colour of a faded leaf, corrupted commonly to philemot, or flemot.

How ye make

Pale feulemort a pure vermilion take —

Fanshau, Past. Fide, p. 36.

To make a countryman understand what feuillemort signifies, it may suffice to tell him, it is the colour of withered leaves falling in autumn.

Locke, Essay iii. 11. § 14.

TO FEU'TER.* v. a. [old Fr. feutrer.] To make ready. A term of romance.

They feutred their spears.

Hist. of K. Arthur, fol. s. d. sign. H. i.

He his threatful spear

Gan feuter.

Spenser, F. Q.

FEU'TERER.† n. s. [Fr. vautrier, or vaultrier, from vaultre, a kind of mongrel hound; low Lat. vaultarius.] A dogkeeper: perhaps the cleaner of the kennel, Dr. Johnson says; but it meant one that led lime-hounds or grey-hounds for the chase. Puntarvolo, "who loves dogs and horses," is called a "yeoman feutrer" in B. Jonson's Every Man out of his Humour. It was also a cant term for a contemptible fellow.

Such a [favour] as you use to a brace of grey-hounds,

When they are led out of their kennels to scumber;

If you will be

An honest yeoman feutrer, feed us first,

And walk us after.

Massinger, Picture.

FEW.† adj. [rea, peapa, Saxon; fua, Danish; fauai, Goth. fu, Icel.]

1. Not many; not in a great number.

We are left but a few of many.

Jer. xlii. 2.

So much the thirst of honour fires the blood;
So many would be great, so few be good;
For who would virtue for herself regard,
Or wed without the portion of reward? Dryd. Juv.

On winter seas we fewer storms behold,

Than foul diseases that infect the fold. Dryd. Virg.

Men have fewer or more simple ideas from without, according as the objects they converse with afford greater or less variety.

Locke.

The fewer still you name, you wound the more;
Bond is but one, but Harpax is a score. Pope, Hor.
Party is the madness of many, for the gain of a few.

Swift.

Though one or two of our friends are gone, since you saw your native country, there remain a few.

Pope to Swift.

The imagination of a poet is a thing so nice and delicate, that it is no easy matter to find out images capable of giving pleasure to one of the few, who, in any age, have come up to that character.

Berkeley to Pope.

2. Sometimes elliptically; not many words.

To answer both allegations at once, the very substance of that they contain is in few but this.

Hooker.

So having said he thus to Eve in few:

Say, woman, what is this which thou hast done?

Milton, P. L.

Thus Jupiter in few unfolds the charge.

Dryden, Æn.

The firm resolve I here in few disclose.

Pope, Odys.

FE'WEL. n. s. [feu, French.] Combustible matter; materials for keeping fire; as firewood, coal.

If a spark of error have thus far prevailed, falling even where the wood was green, and farthest off from any inclination unto furious attempts, must not the peril thereof be greater in men, whose minds are as dry fewel, apt beforehand unto tumults, seditions, and broils?

Hooker, Dedic.

Others may give the fewel or the fire;

But they the breath, that makes the flame, inspire.

Denham.

A known quantity of fewel, all kindled at once,
will cause water to boil, which being lighted gradually will never be able to do it. Bentley, Sermon.

TO FE'WEL. v. a. [from the noun.] To feed with fewel.

Never, alas! the dreadful name,
That fewels the infernal flame.

Cowley.

FE'WMET.* See FUMET.

FE'WNESST.† n. s. [Sax. peapneffe.]

1. Paucity; smallness of number.

How little substantial doctrine is apprehended by the fewness of good grammarians!

Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 50. b.

According to the fewness of years, thou shalt diminish the price of it. Levit. xxxv. 16.

These, by reason of their fewness, I must not distinguish from the numbers with whom they are embodied.

Dryden.

2. Paucity of words; brevity; conciseness.

Fewness and truth, 'tis thus.

Shakespeare, Meas. for Meas.

TO FEY.† v. a. [veghen, Dutch; faegia, feia, Su. Goth. and Icel. to cleanse.] To cleanse a ditch of mud.

Such muddy deep ditches and pits in the field,
That all a dry summer no water will yield,
By feying and casting that mud upon heaps,
Commodities many the husbandman reaps. Tusser.

TO FI'ANCE.† v. a. [Fr. fiancer.] To affiance; to betroth. See TO AFFIANCE.

He hath as it were fianced and betrothed to himself his church.

Harnar, Transl. of Deza's Sermon. (1587.) p. 9.

Her, who is called the fianced, or spouse of the bridegroom.

Ibid. p. 203.

FI'AT.* n. s. [Latin, i. e. be it so, let it be done.] An order; a decree. Spenser, for the sake of the rhyme, has once written it fiawht.

I resolve all that into the sole pleasure and fiat of our Omnipotent Creator. Bentley, Sermon. ii.

Our hands at length the unchanging fiat bound,

And our glad souls sprung out to meet the sound.

A. Hill, The Wedding Day.

FIB.† n. s. [a cant word among children; perhaps from the Latin fabula.] A lie; a falsehood.

Destroy his fib or sophistry; in vain

The creature's at his dirty work again. Pope, Epist.

I so often lie,

Scarce Harvey's self has told more *fib*s than I.

Pope.

TO FIB. v. n. [from the noun.] To lie; to tell lies; to speak falsely.

If you have any mark, whereby one may know when you fib, and when you speak truth, you had best tell it me.

Arbutnot.

FI'BBER.† n. s. [from fib.] A teller of fib.

Sherwood.

FIBRE. n. s. [fibre, Fr. fibra, Latin.]

1. A small thread or string; the constituent parts of bodies.

Now sliding streams the thirsty plants renew,
And feed their fibres with reviving dew. Pope.

2. A fibre, in physics, is an animal thread, of which some are soft, flexible, and a little elastic; and these are either hollow, like small pipes, or spongy and full of little cells, as the nervous and fleshy fibres; others are more solid, flexible, and with a strong elasticity or spring, as the membranous and cartilaginous fibres: and a third sort are hard and flexible, as the fibres of the bones. Some so very small as not to be easily perceived; and others so big as to be plainly seen; and most of them appear to be composed of still smaller fibres: these fibres first constitute the substance of the bones, cartilages, ligaments, mem-branches, nerves, veins, arteries, and muscles. Quincy.

My heart sinks in me while I hear him speak,
And every slacken'd fibre drops its hold,
Like nature letting down the springs of life:
The name of father awes me still.

Dryden, Span. Friar.

FIBRIL. n. s. [fibrille, French.] A small fibre or string.

The muscles consist of a number of fibres, and each fibre of an incredible number of little fibrils bound together, and divided into little cells.

Cheyne, Phil. Prin.

FIBRILLOUS.* adj. [from fibril.] Relating to the fibres.

Hence arise those uneasy sensations, pains, fibrilous spasms, &c. that hypochondriacs usually complain of.

Dr. Keene's Ess. on the Nerves, (1739,) p. 14.

FIBROUS. adj. [fibreux, French; from fibre.] Composed of fibres or stamina.

The difference between bodies fibrous and bodies viscous is plain; for all wool and tow, and cotton and silk, have a greediness of moisture.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

I saw Petreus' arms employ'd about
A well-grown oak, to root it from the ground;
This way and that he wrench'd the fibrous bands,
The trunk was like a sapling in his hands. Dryden.

The fibrous and solid parts of plants pass unaltered through the intestines. Arbuth. on Aliments.

FIBULA. n. s. [Latin.] The outer and lesser bone of the leg, much smaller than the tibia: it lies on the outside of the leg; and its upper end, which is not so high as the knee, receives the lateral knob of the upper end of the tibia into a small sinus, which it has in its inner side. Its lower end is received into the small sinus of the tibia, and then it extends into a large process, which forms the outer ankle. Quincy.

FICKLE.† adj. [Ficol, Sax. Dr. Johnson says. But it is originally from the Lat. vacillo, to waver; whence the Danish vakler, the Saxon picelian, and thus our fickle.]

1. Changeable; inconstant; irresolute; wavering; unsteady; mutable; changeable; without steady adherence.

Remember where we are,

In France amongst a fickle wavering nation.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

A slave, whose easy borrow'd pride
Dwells in the fickle grace of her he follows.

Shakespeare, K. Lear.

Or likest hovering dreams,
The fickle pensioners of Morpheus' train.

Milton, Il Pens.

They know how fickle common lovers are!
Their oaths and vows are cautiously believ'd;
For few there are but have been once deceiv'd.

Dryden.

We in vain the fickle sex pursue,
Who change the constant lover for the new. Prior.

2. Not fixed; subject to vicissitude.

He would be both

Us to abolish: lest the adversary
Triumph, and say, fickle their state, whom God
Most favours!

Milton, P. L.

FICKLENESS. n. s. [from fickle.] Inconstancy; uncertainty; unsteadiness.

Neither her great worthiness, nor his own suffering for her, could fether his fickle; but, before his marriage-day, he had taken to wife that Baccha of whom she complained. Sidney.

Beware of fraud, beware of fickleness,
In choice and change of thy dear loved dame.

Spenser, F. Q.

I am a soldier and unapt to weep,
Or to exclaim on fortune's fickleness.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

Instability of temper ought to be checked, when it disposes men to wander from one scheme of government to another, since such a fickleness cannot but be attended with fatal consequences.

Addison, Freeholder.

Whether out of fickleness or design I can't tell,
I found that what she liked one day she disliked another.

Addison.

FICKLY. adv. [from fickle.] Without certainty or stability.

Do not now,

Like a young wasteful heir, mortgage the hopes
Of godlike majesty on bankrupt terms,
To raise a present pow'r that's fickle held
By the frail tenure of the people's will. Southern.

FICO.† n. s. [Italian, "fica, a flirt with one's fingers, given in disgrace; fare le fica, to bid a fig for one." Florio, Ital. Dict. 1598.] An act of contempt done with the fingers, expressing a fig for you.

Having once recovered his fortress, he then gives the fico to his adversaries. Carew, Surv. of Cornwall.

FICTILE.† adj. [fictil, Fr. fictilis, Latin.] Moulded into form; manufactured by the potter.

The cause of fragility is an impotency to be extended; and therefore stone is more fragil than metal, and so fictile earth is more fragil than crude earth.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

FICTION. n. s. [fictio, Lat.; fiction, Fr.]

1. The act of feigning or inventing.

If the presence of God in the image, by a mere fiction of the mind, be a sufficient ground to worship that image, is not God's real presence in every creature a far better ground to worship it?

Stillingfleet.

Fiction is of the essence of poetry, as well as of painting: there is a resemblance in one of human bodies, things, and actions, which are not real; and in the other of a true story by a fiction.

Dryden, Dufresnoy.

2. The thing feigned or invented.

If through mine ears pierce any consolations,
By wise discourse, sweet tunes, or poet's fictions;
If ought I cease these hideous exclamations,
While that my soul, she, she lives in afflictions.

Sidney.

So also was the fiction of those golden apples kept by a dragon, taken from the serpent, which tempted Evah.

Raleigh.

3. A falsehood; a lye.

FICTITIOUS.† adj. [fictus, Latin.] Fictitious; imaginary; invented. A word coined by Prior, Dr. Johnson says; which is not the case; for Daniel, nearly a century before Prior's time, uses it.

Unintermix'd with fictitious fantasies,

I verify the truth. Daniel, Civ. Wars.

With fancied rules and arbitrary laws

Matter and motion man restrains,

And studied lines and fictitious circles draws. Prior.

FICTITIOUS. adj. [fictitiu, Latin.]

1. Counterfeit; false; not genuine.

Draw him strictly so,

That all who view the piece may know
He needs no trappings of fictitious fame. Dryden.

2. Feigned; imaginary.

The human persons are as fictitious as the airy ones; and Belinda resembles you in nothing but in beauty. Pope.

3. Not real; not true; allegorical; made by prosopopeia.

Milton, sensible of this defect in the subject of his poem, brought into it two characters of a shadowy and fictitious nature in the persons of sin and death, by which means he has interwoven in his fable a very beautiful allegory. Addison, Spect.

FICTITIOUSLY. adv. [from fictitious.] Falsely; counterfeitedly.

These pieces are fictitiously set down, and have no copy in nature. Brown, Vulg. Err.

FICTITIOUSNESS.* n. s. [from fictitious.] Feigned representation.

Some make comedy a representation of mean, and others of bad men; some think that its essence consists in the unimportance, others in the fictitiousness of the transaction. Johns. Ramb. No. 125.

FICTIVE.* adj. [fictif, French; fictus, Lat.] Feigned; imaginary.

Time — to those things whose grounds were very true,

Though naked yet and bare, (not having to content

The wayward curious ear,) gave fictive ornament. Drayton, Polyolb. S. 6.

FID. n. s. [fitta, Italian.] A pointed iron with which seamen untwist their cords. Skinner.

FIDDLE. n. s. [fidel, Saxon; vedel, Dutch; fidel, German; fidicula, Latin; fiðll, Erse.] A stringed instrument of music; a violin.

In trials of musical skill the judges did not crown the fiddle, but the performer. Stillingfleet.

The adventure of the bear and fiddle

Is sung; but breaks off in the middle. Hudibras.

She tried the fiddle all over, by drawing the bow over every part of the strings; but could not, for her heart, find whereabouts the tune lay.

Addison, Guardian.

To FIDDLE. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To play upon a fiddle.

Themistocles being desired at a feast to touch a lute, he said he could not fiddle, but he could make a small town a great city. Bacon, Ess.

Others import yet nobler arts from France,
Teach kings to fiddle, and make senates dance.

Pope.

2. To trifle; to shift the hands often, and do nothing, like a fellow that plays upon a fiddle.

A cunning fellow observed, that old Lewis had stole away part of the map, and saw him fiddling and turning the map, trying to join the two pieces together. Arbuthnot.

Good cooks cannot abide what they justly call fiddling work, where abundance of time is spent, and little done. Swift.

FIDDLEFADDLE.† n. s. [A cant word, reduced into the still more ridiculous expression of fid-fad in modern novels, and in nonsensical conversation.] Trifles.

Leave these fiddle-faddles.

Beaumont and Fl. Wit without Money.

She said that her grandfather had a horse shot at Edgehill, and their uncle was at the siege of Buda; with abundance of fiddlefaddle of the same nature. Spectator.

FIDDLEFADDLE. adj. Trifling; giving trouble, or making a bustle about nothing.

She was a troublesome fiddlefaddle old woman, and so ceremonious that there was no bearing of her. Arbuthnot.

FIDDLER.† n. s. [Sax. fiðlepe.] A musician, one that plays upon the fiddle.

Let no saucy fiddler presume to intrude,
Unless he is sent for to vary our bliss. B. Jonson.

Nero put the fiddler's to death, for being more skilful in the trade than he was.

Bp. Taylor, Rule of Living Holy.

These will appear such chits in story,

'Twill turn all politics to jest,

To be repeated like John Dory,

When fiddlers sing at feasts.

Dryden.

When miss delights in her spinnet,

A fiddler may a fortune get.

Swift.

FIDDLESTICK. n. s. [fiddle and stick.]

The bow and hair which a fiddler draws over the strings of a fiddle.

His grisly beard was long and thick,

With which he strung his fiddlestick.

Hudibras.

FIDDLESTRING. n. s. [fiddle and string.]

The string of a fiddle; that which makes the noise.

A fiddlestring, moistened with water will sink a note in a little time, and consequently must be relaxed or lengthened one sixteenth.

Arbutnot on Air.

FIDEJUSSION.* n. s. [Lat. fidejussio.]

Suretiship; the act of being bound for another.

If he will be a surety, such is the nature of fidejussio and suretiship, he must.

Farinold's Sermon. 1647, p. 15.

FIDELITY. n. s. [fideltas, Latin; fidelié, French.]

1. Honesty; veracity.

The church by her public reading of the book of God, preached only as a witness; now the principal thing required in a witness is fidelié.

Hooker.

2. Faithful adherence.

They mistake credulity for fidelié.

Clarke.

To FIDGE.† } v. n. [A cant word, Dr.

To FIDGET. } Johnson says. It seems to be a descendant of the Su. Goth.

fika, to move quickly, to be in a great hurry, or in great expectation. See

To FIG. v. n.] To move nimbly and irregularly. It implies in Scotland agitation, and in some parts of the north of England impatience.

Behold the graces of each dame! —

How some would dance upright as any bolt,

And some would leap and skip like a young colt;

And some would fidge, as though she had the itch.

Breton, Works of a Young Wit, (1577.)

To fidge [is] to be fiddling here and there to no manner of purpose.

Cotgrave in V. Niveter.

Tim, thou'rt the Punch to stir up trouble;

You wriggle, fidge, and make a rout,

Put all your brother puppets out.

Swift.

Our lively hostess, whose fancy was impatient of the rein, fidgeted at this, and ventured to say,

Nay, this is too much.

Boswell, Life of Johnson.

FIDGET.* n. s. [from fidge.] Restless agitation.

Why, what can the viscountess mean?

Cried the square hoods in woeful fidget;

The times are alter'd quite and clean.

Gray, Long Story.

FIDGETY.* adj. [from fidget.] Restless; impatient. A low word, not used in serious writing.

FIDUCIAL.† adj. [fiducia, Lat.] Confident; undoubting.

Such a fiducial persuasion as cannot deceive us.

Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 268.

Faith is cordial, and such as God will accept of, when it affords fiducial reliance on the promises, and obediencial submission to the commands.

Hammond, Pract. Catech.

FIDUCIALLY.* adv. [from fiducial.] Undoubtingly; confidently.

It is the Spirit of God alone, that proposes to the soul the grounds of hope, and then by an immediate and Almighty power enables the soul fiducially to close with and rest upon that object, upon those grounds.

South, Sermon. vi. 472.

FIDUCIARY. n. s. [fiduciarius, Latin.]

1. One who holds any thing in trust.

2. One who depends on faith without works.

The second obstructive is that of the fiduciary, that faith is the only instrument of his justification; and excludes good works from contributing any thing towards it.

Hammond.

FIDUCIARY.† adj.

1. Confident; steady; undoubting; untouched with doubt.

That faith, which is required of us, is then perfect, when it produces in us a fiduciary assent to whatever the Gospel has revealed.

Wake, Prep. for Death.

2. Not to be doubted.

Elaiana can rely no where upon mere love and fiduciary obedience, unless at her own home, where she is exemplarily loyal to herself in a high exact obedience.

Howell.

The fiduciary or letters of credence of the churches.

Bp. Bancroft, Dangerous Posit. B. 3.

3. Held in trust.

Envy herself must pronounce that return of his for the acquitting of his fiduciary pledges, to be a most noble act.

Howell, Lett. ii. 61.

The High Admiral himself cannot grant it for longer than his own time, being but a trust and fiduciary power.

Spelman.

FIE.* interj. See Fy. A word of blame or indignation.

FIEF. n. s. [fié, French.] A fee; a manor; a possession held by some tenure of a superiour.

To the next realm she stretch'd her sway,

For painture near adjoining lay,

A plenteous province and alluring prey;

A chamber of dependencies was fram'd,

And the whole fief, in right of poetry, she claim'd.

Dryden.

As they were honoured by great privileges, so their lands were in the nature of fiefs, for which the possessors were obliged to do personal service at sea.

Arbutnot on Coins.

FIELD.† n. s. [felb, Saxon; feld, German; veld, Dutch.]

1. Ground not inhabited, not built on.

Every plant of the field, before it was in the earth.

Gen. ii. 5.

Live with me, and be my love,

And we will all the pleasure prove,

That hills and vallies, dale and field,

And all the craggy mountains yield.

Ralegh.

By the civil law the corpses of persons deceased were buried out of the city in the fields.

Ayliffe, Parergon.

2. Ground not enclosed.

Field lands are not exempted from mildews, nor yet from smut, where it is more than in enclosed lands.

Mortimer.

3. Cultivated tract of ground. Mr. Horne Tooke, in the margin of this copy of the dictionary, writes, "where trees have been felled, and therefore fit for cultivation;" and, in his Divisions of Purley, says, "field-land is opposed to wood-land, meaning land where the trees have been felled."

Or great Osiris, who first taught the swain In Pharian fields to sow the golden grain.

Pope, Statius.

4. The open country: opposed to house or quarters.

Since his majesty went into the field,

I have seen her rise from her bed.

Shaks. Macbeth.

5. The ground of battle.

When a man is in the field, a moderate skill in fencing rather exposes him to the sword of his enemy than secures him from it.

Locke.

6. A battle; a campaign; the action of an army while it keeps the field.

You maintain several factions;

And whilst a field should be dispatch'd and fought,

You are disputing of your generals.

Shaks. Hen. VI.

What though the field be lost,

All is not lost.

Milton, P. L.

7. A wide expanse.

The god a clearer space for heav'n design'd;

Where fields of light and liquid ether flow,

Purg'd from the pond'rous dregs of earth below.

Dryden.

Ask of yonder argient fields above,

Why Jove's satellites are less than Jove.

Pope.

8. Space; compass; extent.

The ill natured man gives himself a large field to expatiate in: he exposes failings in human nature.

Addison, Spect.

I should enter upon a field too wide, and too much beaten, if I should display all the advantages of peace.

Bp. Smalbridge.

Who can this field of miracles survey,
And not with Galen all in rapture say,
Behold a God, adore him and obey.

Blackmore, Creation.

9. The ground or blank space on which figures are drawn.

Let the field or ground of the picture be clean, light, and well united with colour.

Dryden, Dufresmay.

10. [In heraldry.] The surface of a shield.

Slight were his arms, a sword, a silver shield,

No marks of honour charg'd it's empty field.

Dryden, Æn.

FI'ELDED. adj. [from field.] Being in field of battle.

Now, Mars, I pr'ythee, make us quick in work;

That we with smoking swords may march from hence,

To help our fielded friends.

Shakspeare, Coriol.

FIELD-BASIL. n. s. [field and basil.] A plant.

FI'ELDBED. n. s. [field and bed.] A bed contrived to be set up easily in the field.

Romeo, good night; I'll to my trucklebed,

This fieldbed is too cold for me to sleep.

Shaks.

FI'ELDFARE. n. s. [felb and papan, to wander in the fields; turdus pilaris.]

A bird.

Winter birds, as woodcocks and fieldfires, if they come early out of the northern countries, with us shew cold Winters.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

FI'ELDMARSHAL.† n. s. [field and marshal.]

Commander of an army in a field; commander of the whole army, whether in the field or not; the officer of highest military rank in England.

FIELD-MOUSE. n. s. [field and mouse; nitedula.] A mouse that burrows in banks, and makes her house with various apartments.

The fieldmouse builds her garner under ground.

Dryden.

Fieldmice are apt to gnaw their roots, and kill them in hard winters.

Mortimer, Husbandry.

FI'ELDOFFICER. n. s. [field and officer.]

An officer whose command in the field extends to a whole regiment; as the colonel, lieutenant-colonel, and major.

FI'ELDPIECE. adj. [field and piece.] Small cannon used in battles, but not in sieges.

The bassa planting his fieldpieces upon the hills, did from thence grievously annoy the defendants.

Knolles.

FIELD-PREACHER.* n. s. [field and preacher.] One who preaches in a field or open place.

Do you think the popish field preachers did not first learn their lesson, took no previous steps, made no provision, before they set out upon their expeditions? Read their legends, and be convinced.

Bp. Lavington to Mr. Whitfield, Enthusiasm of Methodists, &c. vol. i. P. 2. Pref. p. viii.

FIELD-PREACHING.* n. s. The act of pronouncing an harangue in a field or open place.

The fact you own, both of popish and methodical field-preaching; you glory in it.

Bp. Lavington to Whitfield, &c. Pref. p. ix.

FIG'URATIVELY. adv. [from figurative.]

By a figure; in a sense different from that which words originally imply; not literally.

The custom of the apostle is figuratively to transfer to himself in the first person, what belongs to others. Hammond.

The words are different, but the sense is still the same; for therein are figuratively intended Uzziah and Ezechias. Brown.

Satire is a kind of poetry in which human vices are rephrased, partly dramatically, partly simply; but for the most part, figuratively and occultly. Dryden, Juv. Dedicat.

1. The form of any thing as terminated by the outline.

Flowers have all exquisite figures, and the flower numbers are chiefly five and four; as in primroses, briar-roses, single muskroses, single pinks, and gillflowers, which have five leaves; lilies, flower-de-luces, borage, buglass, which have four leaves. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Men find green clay that is soft as long as it is in the water, so that one may print on it all kind of figures, and give it what shape one pleases. Boyle.

Figures are properly modifications of bodies, for pure space is not any where terminated, nor can be; whether there be or be not body in it, it is uniformly continued. Locke.

2. Shape; form; semblance.

The carpenter—maketh it after the figure of a man. Isaiah, xlv. 13.

He hath borne himself beyond the promise of his age, doing in the figure of a lamb the feats of a lion. Shakespeare.

3. Person; external form; appearance graceful or inelegant, mean or grand.

The blue German shall the Tigris drink,
Ere I, forsaking gratitude and truth,
Forget the figure of that godlike youth.

Dryden, Virg.

I was charmed with the gracefulness of his figure and delivery, as well as with his discourses. Addison, Spect.

A good figure, or person, in man or woman, gives credit at first sight to the choice of either.

Richardson, Clarissa.

4. Distinguished appearance; eminence; remarkable character.

While fortune favour'd, while his arms support
The cause, and rul'd the counsels of the court,
I made some figure there; nor was my name
Obscure, nor I without my share of fame.

Dryden, Æn.

The figure, I believe, was not so much designed by the knight to inform the court, as to give him a figure in my eye, and keep up his credit in the country. Addison, Spect.

Not a woman shall be unexplained that makes a figure either as a maid, a wife, or a widow.

Addison, Guardian.

Whether or not they have done well to set you up for making another kind of figure, time will witness. Addison.

Many princes made very ill figures upon the throne, who before were the favourites of the people. Addison, Freeholder.

5. Magnificence; splendour.

If it be his chief end in it to grow rich, that he may live in figure and indulgence, and be able to retire from business to idleness and hurry, his trade, as to him, loses all its innocency. Law.

6. A statue; an image; something formed in resemblance of somewhat else.

Several statues, which seemed at a distance of the whitest marble, were nothing else but so many figures in snow. Addison.

7. Representations in painting; persons exhibited in colours.

In the principal figures of a picture the painter is to employ the sinews of his art; for in them consists the principal beauty of his work.

Dryden, Du Fresnoy.

My favourite books and pictures sell;

Kindly throw in a little figure,
And set the price upon the bigger. Prior.

8. Arrangement; disposition; modification.

Who is the figure of him that was to come.

Romans, v. 14.

12. [In rhetoric.] Any mode of speaking, in which words are detorted from their literal and primitive sense. In strict acceptation, the change of a word is a trope, and any affection of a sentence a figure; but they are confounded even by the exactest writers.

Silken terms precise,
Three pil'd hyperboles, spruce affectation,
Figures pedantical, these Summer flies
Have blown me full of maggot ostentation.

Shakspeare.
Here is a strange figure invented against the plain and natural sense of the words; for by praying to bestow must be understood only praying to pray.

Stillingfleet.
They have been taught rhetoric, but never taught language; as if the names of the figures that embellished the discourse of those, who understood the art of speaking, were the very art and skill of speaking well. Locke.

13. [In grammar.] Any deviation from the rules of analogy or syntax.

To FIGURE. v. a. [figuro, Latin.]

Dryden, Virg.

2. To show by a corporeal resemblance; as in picture or statuary.

Arachne figur'd how Jove did abuse
Europa like a bull, and on his back
Her through the sea did bear; so lively seen,
That it true sea, and true bull ye would ween.

Spenser.
Now marks the course of rolling orbs on high,
O'er figur'd worlds now travels with his eye. Pope.

3. To cover or adorn with figures or images.

I'll give my jewels for a set of beads,
My gorgeous palace for a hermitage,
My gay apparel for an almsman's gown,
My figur'd goblet for a dish of wood.

Shakspeare, Rich. II.
4. To diversify; to variegate with adventitious forms or matter.

But this effusion of such manly drops,
Startle mine eyes, and make me more amaz'd
Than had I seen the vaulty top of heaven
Figur'd quite o'er with burning meteors.

Shakspeare, K. John.
5. To represent by a typical or figurative resemblance.

When sacraments are said to be visible signs of invisible grace, we thereby conceive how grace is indeed the very end for which these heavenly mysteries were instituted; and the matter whereof they consist is such as signifieth, figureth, and representeth their end. Hooker.

There is a history in all men's lives,
Figuring the nature of the times deceased.

Shakspeare, Hen. IV.
Marriage rings are not of this stuff:
Oh why should ought less precious or less tough

An heroic poem should be more fitted to the common actions and passions of human life, and more like a glass of nature, figuring a more practicable virtue to us than was done by the ancients. Dryden.

The emperor appears as a rising sun, and holds a globe in his hand to figure out the earth that is enlightened and actuated by his beams.

Addison on Medals.
6. To image in the mind.

None that feels sensibly the decays of age, and his life wearing off, can figure to himself those imaginary charms in riches and praise, that men are apt to do in the warmth of their blood

Temple.

If love, alas! be pain, the pain I bear
No thought can figure, and no tongue declare. Prior.

7. To prefigure; to foreshew.

Three glorious suns, each one a perfect sun,
In this the heaven figures some event.

Shakspeare, Hen. VI.
8. To form figuratively; to use in a sense not literal.

Figured and metaphorical expressions do well to illustrate more abstruse and unfamiliar ideas, which the mind is not yet thoroughly accustomed to. Locke.

9. To note by characters.

Each thought was visible that roll'd within,
As through a crystal glass the figur'd hours are seen. Dryden.

To FIGURE.* v. n. To make a figure.

Who figured in the rebellion.

Bolingbroke, Sp. of Patriotism, p. 233.

A pretender to astrology.

I by this figure-caster must be imagined in such distress as to sue to Maronilla.

Milton, Apol. for Smectymn.
Enthusiasts in religion, figure-casters in astrology, are so resolved upon their hypotheses.

Spenser on Prod. p. 46.
A pretender to astrology and prediction.

Quacks, figure-fingers, pettifoggers, and republican plotters, cannot well live without it.

Coltier of Confidence.
FIGWORT.† n. s. [περὶ πτε, Sax. ficaria, Lat.] A plant. Miller.

FILA'CEOUS. adj. [from filum, Latin.] Consisting of threads; composed of threads.

They make cables of the bark of lime trees: it is the stalk that maketh the filaceous matter commonly, and sometimes the down that growth above. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

FIL'ACER. n. s. [filazarius, low Lat. filum.]

An officer in the Common Pleas, so called because he files those who writs whereon he makes process. There are fourteen of them in their several divisions and counties: they make out all original process, as well real as personal and mixt. Harris.

FILAMENT. n. s. [filament, French; filamenta, Lat.] A slender thread; a body slender and long like a thread.

The effluvium passing out in a smaller thread, and more enlightened filament, it stirreth not the bodies interposed. Brown.

The lungs of consumptives have been consumed, nothing remaining but the ambient membrane, and a number of withered veins and filaments.

Harvey on Consumptions.
The ever-rolling orb's impulsive ray
On the next threads and filaments does bear,
Which form the springy texture of the air,
And those still strike the next, till to the sight
The quick vibration propagates the light.

Blackmore.
The dung of horses is nothing but the filaments of the hay, and as such combustible.

Arbutnot on Aliments.
FILAMENTOUS.* adj. [from filament.]
Like a slender thread.

The doctrine of the filamentous cataract will become as familiar as any established theory among us, only by supposing this, like all other membranes, thickened and become opaque by disorders. The Student, i. 341.

FILA'NDER.* See FELANDERS.

FIL'BERT.† n. s. [This is derived by Junius and Skinner from the long beards or husks, as corrupted from full beard, or full of beard. It probably had its name, like many other fruits, from some one that introduced or cultivated it; and is therefore corrupted from Filbert or Filibert, the name of him who brought it hither. Such is Dr. Johnson's etymological account of this word. Gower gives us a very different one in the following lines; which Mr. Horne Tooke also has agreed with me in noticing:

"With that upon a grene bough
"A seynt of sykle, which she [Phillis]
there had,

"She knit; and so herself she lad,
"That she about her white swere
"It did, and henge herself there.
"Whereof the goddes were amoved,
"And Demophon was reproved,
"That of the goddes providence
"Was shape such an evidence
"Ever afterwarde ayen the slowe,
"That Phillis in the same throwe
"Was shape into a nutte tree,
"That all men it might see:
"And after Phillis PHILBERT
"This tree was cleped in the yerd:
"And yet, for Demophon to shame,
"Unto this day it beareth the name."

Confess. Amantis, B. 4.

The filbert is said to have been brought from Pontus. Huloet calls it "Pontica nut." A fine hazel nut with a thin shell.

In August comes fruit of all sorts; as plumbs, pears, apricots, barberries, filberts, muskmelons, monkshoods of all colours. Bacon, Ess.

Thou hast a brain, such as it is indeed!
On what else should thy worm of fancy feed;
Yet in a filbert I have often known
Maggots survive when all the kernel's gone.

Dorsel.
There is also another kind called the filbert of Constantinople; the leaves and fruit of which are bigger than either of the former: the best are those of a thin shell. Mortimer.

To FILCH. v. a. [A word of uncertain etymology. The French word filer, from which some derive it, is of very late production, and therefore cannot be its original.] To steal; to take by theft; to pilfer; to pillage; to rob; to take by robbery. It is usually spoken of petty thefts.

He shall find his wealth wonderfully enlarged by keeping his cattle in inclosures, where they shall always have safe being, that none are continually filched and stolen. Spenser on Ireland.

The champion robbery by night,
And prowleth and filcheth by daie. Tusser, Husb.
Who steals my purse, steals trash; 'tis something, nothing;

'Twas mine, 'tis his, and has been slave to thousands;

But he that filches from me my good name,
Robs me of that which not enriches him,
And makes me poor indeed. Shakspeare, Othello.

He could discern cities like hives of bees, wherein every bee did nought else but sting; some like hornets, some like filching wasps, others as drones. Burton on Melancholy.

What made thee venture to betray,
And filch the lady's heart away.

Hudibras.
The pismire was formerly a husbandman, that secretly filched away his neighbour's goods. L'Estrange,

Fain would they filch that little food away.
While unrestrain'd those happy gluttons prey.

Dryden.

So speeds the wily fox, alarm'd by fear,
Who lately filch'd the turkey's callow care.

Gay, Trivia.

FIL'CHER.† n. s. [from filch.] A thief; a petty robber.

This filcher of affections.

Beaumont and Fl. Love's Pilgrimage.

FIL'CHINGLY.* adv. [from the part. filch-ing.] In a thievish manner. Sherwood.

FILE.† n. s. [file, Fr. filum, a thread, Lat.]

1. A thread. Not now used.

But let me resume the file of my narration, which this object of books, best agreeable to my course of life, hath a little interrupted. Wotton.

Dorothea did not interrupt the file of her history.

Shelton, Tr. of D. Quix. iv. 1.

2. A line on which papers are strung to keep them in order.

All records, wherein there was any memory of the king's attainder, should be cancelled and taken off the file.

Bacon.

The petitions being thus prepared, do you continually set apart an hour in a day to peruse those, and then rank them into several files, according to the subject-matters. Bacon.

Th' apothecary-train is wholly blind;

From files a random recipe they take,
And many deaths of one prescription make.

Dryden.

3. A catalogue; roll; series.

Our present musters grow upon the file

To five-and-twenty thousand men of choice.

Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

The valu'd file

Distinguishes the swift, the slow, the subtle.

Shakespeare, Macbeth.

4. A line of soldiers ranged one behind another.

Those goodly eyes,
That o'er the files and musters of the war
Have glow'd like plated Mars, now bend, now turn

Upon a tawney front. Shakespeare, Ant. & Cleop.
So saying, on he led his radiant files,
Dazzling the moon. Milton, P. L.

5. [peol, Saxon; vijle, Dutch.] An instrument to rub down prominences.

The rough or coarse-toothed file, if it be large, is called a rubber, and is to take off the unevenness of your work which the hammer made in the forging: the bastard-toothed file is to take out of your work the deep cuts, or file-strokes, the rough file made: the fine-toothed file is to take out the cuts, or file-strokes, the bastard file made; and the smooth file is to take out those cuts, or file-strokes, that the fine file made. Moxon.

A file for the mattocks and for the coulters.

Sam. xiii. 21.

The smiths and armourers on palfrays ride,
Files in their hands and hammers at their side.

Dryden.

6. Style; manner of writing. A Latinism. Not now in use.

And, were it not ill fitting for this file
To sing of hills and woods 'mongst wars and knights,
I would abate the sternness of my stile.

Spenser, F. Q. vii. vi. 37.

FIL'ECUTTER. n. s. [file and cutter.] A maker of files.

Gad-steel is a tough sort of steel: filecutters use it to make their chissels, with which they cut their files. Moxon.

To FILE.† v. a. [filer, Fr. from filum, a thread, Lat.]

1. To string upon a thread or wire. Whence to file a bill is to offer it in its order to the notice of the judge.

Thou dost file

One lie upon another well.

Fanshawe, Past. Fido, p. 174.

From the day his first bill was filed he began to collect reports. Arbutnot & Pope, Mart. Scrib.

2. [from peolan, Sax.] To cut with a file.

They which would file away most from the largeness of that offer, do in more sparing terms acknowledge little less. Hooker.

The eminent court—gives their tongues
Sweetness of language; makes them apt to please;

Files off all rudeness, and uncivil haviour.

Beaumont and Fl. Nob. Gentleman.

Let men be careful how they attempt to cure a blemish by filig or cutting off the head of such an overgrown tooth. Ray.

3. To smooth; to polish. This use of the word was formerly frequent, as applied to the tongue; and denoted polished speech. It is a Gallicism, "Avoir la langue bien filée." Dr. Johnson cites only the example of Shakespeare, without any remark. Gower, Chaucer, and Skelton, afford abundant instances of this usage. Spenser, of course, adopts it; and Dryden thought it worth his notice.

For that old man of pleasing words had store,
And well could file his tongue as smooth as glass.

Spenser, F. Q. i. i. 35.

There hath flourished in England so fine and filed phrases, and so good and pleasant poets, as may countervayle the doings of Virgil, Ovid, &c. Googe, Ecloges, Epitaphs, &c. (1563), Pref.

His humour is lofty, his discourse peremptory, his tongue filed, and his eye ambitious.

Shakespeare, Love's Lab. Lost.

His mien he fashion'd, and his tongue he fil'd.
Dryden, Cymon and Iphigenia.

4. [from afylan, Saxon.] To foul; to sully; to pollute. This sense is retained in Scotland. See FOUL.

The corn is theirs, let others thresh,

Their hands they may not file.

Spenser, Shep. Cal. July.

She lightly left out of her filed bed.

Spenser, F. Q. iii. i. 62.

For Banquo's issue have I fil'd my mind,
For them the gracious Duncan have I murder'd.

Shakespeare.

His weeds divinely fashioned,
All fil'd and mangl'd. Chapman, Iliads.

To FILE.† v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To march in a file, not abreast, but one behind another.

All ran down without order or ceremony,
till we drew up in good order, and filed off.

Tatler.

Did all the grosser atoms at the call
Of chance file off to form the pondrous ball,
And undetermin'd into order fall?

Blackmore, Creation.

2. To rank with; to be strung, as it were, upon the same thread or wire.

These, I take it,

Although she love you well,
Must needs, and reason for it, be examin'd,
And by her modesty; and fear'd too light too,
To file with her affections: You have lost her.

Beaumont and Fl. Mons. Thomas.

FIL'EMOT. n. s. [corrupted from feuille morte, a dead leaf, French.] A brown or yellow-brown colour.

The colours you ought to wish for are blue or filemot, turned up with red.

Swift, Direct. for Servants.

FIL'ER.† n. s. [from file.] One who files; one who uses the file in cutting metals.

Sherwood.

FILIAL. adj. [filial, filiale, Fr. filius, Lat.]

1. Pertaining to a son; befitting a son.

My mischievous proceeding may be the glory of his filial piety, the only reward now left for so great a merit, Sidney.

From imposition of strict laws, to free
Acceptance of large grace; from servile fear
To filial; works of law, to works of faith.

Milton, P. L.

He griev'd, he wept, the sight an image brought
Of his own filial love, a sadly pleasing thought.

Dryden.

2. Bearing the character or relation of a son.

And thus the filial Godhead answering spoke.

Milton, P. L.

Where the old myrtle her good influence sheds,
Sprigs of like leaf erect their filial heads;
And when the parent rose decays and dies,
With a resembling face the daughter buds arise.

Prior.

FILIA'TION.† n. s. [filiation, French; from filius, Lat.] The relation of a son to a father; correlative to paternity.

The relation of paternity and filiation, between the first and second person, and the relation between the sacred persons of the Trinity, and the denomination thereof, must needs be eternal, because the terms of relation between whom that relation ariseth were eternal.

Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

Among all the sons of God, there is none like to that One Son of God. And if there be so great a disparity in the filiation, we must make as great a difference in the correspondent relation.

Pearson on the Creed, Art. i.

FIL'IBEG.* See FILLIBEG.

FIL'IGRANE, or FIL'IGREE.* adj. [Latin, filum, a thread, and granum, grain.]

Denoting work curiously wrought, in the manner of little threads or grains, usually in gold and silver; a kind of wire-work. In the Fop's Dictionary, 1690, filigrained, or filgrain'd, is defined as denoting "dressing-boxes, baskets, or whatever else is made of silver wire-work." But the word is older in our language.

A curious filigran handkerchief, and two fair filigrane plates brought out of Spain.

Dr. Brown's Travels, 1685, p. 147.

Adam and Eve in bugle-work, without fig-leaves, upon canvas, curiously wrought with her ladyship's own hand; several filigrane curiosities.

Tatler, No. 245.

The churches of our ancestors shoot up into spires, towers, pinnacles, and filgrree work.

Swinburne, Trav. through Spain, L. 44.

FIL'INGS.† n. s. [from file; without a singular, Dr. Johnson says; yet our lexicography presents the singular; "A filing, limure, Fr." Sherwood, which Cotgrave renders "file-dust, also a filing." Fragments rubbed off by the action of the file.

The filings of iron infused in vinegar, will, with a decoction of galls, make good ink, without any copperose. Brown.

The chippings and filings of those jewels are of more value than the whole mass of ordinary authors.
Felton on the Classics.

To FILL. v. a. [Fyllan, Sax.]

1. To store till no more can be admitted.
Fill the waterpots with water, and they filled them up to the brim.
St. John, ii. 7.

I am who fill
Infinite, nor vacuous the space. Milton, P. L.

The celestial quires, when orient light
Exhaling first from darkness they beheld;
Birth-day of Heav'n and Earth; with joy and shout

The hollow universal orb they fill'd. Milton, P. L.

2. To store abundantly.
Be fruitful, multiply, and in the seas
And lakes and running streams the waters fill.

Milton, P. L.

3. To satisfy; to content.

He with his consorted Eve
The story heard attentive, and was fill'd
With admiration and deep muse to hear. Milt. P. L.
Nothing but the supreme and absolute Infinite can adequately fill and super-abundantly satisfy the infinite desires of intelligent beings.

Cheyne, Phil. Princ.

4. To glut; to surfeit.

Thou art going to lord Timon's feast.
— Ay, to see meat fill knaves, and wine hate fools.

Shakespeare.

5. To FILL out. To pour out liquor for drink.

6. To FILL out. To extend by something contained.

I only speak of him
Whom pomp and greatness sits so loose about,
That he wants majesty to fill them out. Dryden.

7. To FILL up. [Up is often used without much addition to the force of the verb.] To make full.

Hope leaps from goal to goal,
And opens still, and opens on his soul;
Till lengthen'd on to faith, and unconfin'd,
It pours the bliss that fills up all the mind. Pope.

8. To FILL up. To supply.

When the several trades and professions are supplied, you will find most of those that are proper for war absolutely necessary for filling up the laborious part of life, and carrying on the under-work of the nation. Addison on the War.

9. To FILL up. To occupy by bulk.

There would not be altogether so much water required for the land as for the sea, to raise them to an equal height; because mountains and hills would fill up part of that space upon the land, and so make less water requisite. Burnet.

10. To FILL up. To engage; to employ.

Is it far you ride?
— As far, my lord, as will fill up the time
'Twixt this and supper. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

To FILL. v. n.

1. To give to drink.

In the cup which she hath filled, fill to her double.

Rev. xviii. 6.

We fill to the general joy of the whole table,
And to our dear friend Banquo, whom we miss.

Shakespeare.

2. To grow full.

3. To glut; to satiate.

Things that are sweet and fat are more filling,
and do swim and hang more about the mouth of the stomach, and go not down so speedily.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

4. To FILL up. To grow full.

Neither the Palus Meotis nor the Euxine, nor any other seas, fill up, or by degrees grow shallower.

Woodward.

FILL. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. As much as may produce complete satisfaction.

Her neck and breasts were ever open bare,
That aye thereof her babes might suck their fill.

Spenser, F. Q.

But thus inflam'd bespoke the captain,
Who scorneth peace shall have his fill of war.

Fairfax.

When ye were thirsty, did I not cleave the rock, and waters flowed out to your fill? 2 Esdr. 1. 20.

Mean while enjoy

Your fill, what happiness this happy state
Can comprehend, incapable of more. Milton, P. L.

Amid the tree now got, where plenty hung
Tempting so nigh, to pluck and eat my fill,
I spar'd not. Milton, P. L.

Which made me gently first remove your fears,
That so you might have room to entertain

Denham, Sophy.

Your fill of joy.
Your barbarity may have its fill of destruction.

Pope.

2. [More properly thill.] The place between the shafts of a carriage.

This mule being put in the fill of a cart, run away with the cart and timber.

Mortimer, Husbandry.

- FILLER.† n. s. [from fill.]

1. Any thing that fills up room without use.
'Tis a mere filler, to stop a vacancy in the hexameter, and connect the preface to the work of Virgil.

Dryden, Æn. Dedic.

A mixture of tender gentle thoughts and suitable expressions, of forced and inextricable conceits, and of needless fillers up to the rest. Pope.

2. One whose employment is to fill vessels of carriage.

They have six diggers to four fillers, so as to keep the fillers always at work.

Mortimer, Husbandry.

3. One who stores abundantly.

Brave soldier aye; thou stock of arms and honour,

Thou filler of the world with fame and glory.

Beaumont and Fl. Bonduca.

FILLET. n. s. [fîlet, French; filum, Lat.]

1. A band tied round the head or other part.

His baleful breath inspiring, as he glides,
Now like a chain around her neck he rides;
Now like a fillet to her head repairs,
And with his circling volumes folds her hairs.

Dryden, Æn.

She scorn'd the praise of beauty, and the care;
A belt her waist, a fillet binds her hair.

Pope, Windsor Forest.

2. The fleshy part of the thigh: applied commonly to veal.

The youth approach'd the fire, and as it burn'd,
On five sharp broachers rank'd, the roast they turn'd:

These morsels stay'd their stomachs; then the rest
They cut in legs and fillets for the feast. Dryd. Hind.

3. Meat rolled together; and tied round.

Fillet of a fenny snake,
In the cauldron boil and bake. Shaks. Macbeth.

The mixture thus, by chymick art
United close in every part,

In fillets roll'd, or cut in pieces,
Appear'd like one continu'd species. Swift.

4. [In architecture.] A little member which appears in the ornaments and mouldings, and is otherwise called listel.

Harris.

Pillars and their fillets of silver. Ex. xxvii. 10.

To FILLLET.† v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To bind with a bandage or fillet.

They wear their hair long and filleted.

Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 376.

2. To adorn with an astragal.

He made hooks for the pillars, and overlaid their chapters and filleted them. Ex. xxxviii. 28.

FILLIBEG.* n. s. [Gael. fillleadh-beg, i. e. fillleadh, a plait or cloth, and beg, little.] Literally, a little plaid; a dress, reaching only to the knees, worn by men in the Highlands of Scotland instead of breeches.

The fillibeg, or lower garment, is still very common, and the bonnet almost universal.

Johnson, Journey to the West. Islands.

FILLING.* n. s. [from fill.]

1. Supply.

And why that spiteful character given to all crowds? mere fillings of his own, without warrant from his original. Bentley, Phil. Lips. § 54.

2. The act of growing full.

The first stage of healing, or the discharge of matter, is by surgeons called digestion; the second, or the filling up with flesh, incarnation; and the last, or skinning over, cicatrization. Sharp, Surgery.

To FILLIP.† v. a. [A word, says Skinner, formed from the sound. This resemblance I am not able to discover, and therefore am inclined to imagine it corrupted from fill up, by some combination of ideas which cannot be recovered. This is Dr. Johnson's opinion; but the word may be a corruption of the Latin alapa, a blow, a stroke.] To strike with the nail of the finger by a sudden spring or motion.

If I do, fillip me with a three-man beetle.

Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

Then let the pebbles on the hungry beach
Fillip the stars: then let the mutinous winds
Strike the proud cedars 'gainst the fiery sun.

Shakespeare, Coriol.

We see, that if you fillip a lutestring, it sheweth double or treble.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

FIRLLIP.† n. s. [from the verb.] A jerk of the finger let go from the thumb.

Man's life is as a glass, and a fillip may crack it.

Trog. of Soliman and Perseda, (1599.)

A gentleman,

If I, that so much love him, may commend him,
Of free and virtuous parts; and one, if foul play
Should fall upon us, for which fear I brought him,
Will not fly back for fillips.

Beaumont and Fl. The Chances.

The dead epicure cannot but subscribe to the truth of Sardanapalus's tomb, which I find storied to have a hand in a posture of filliping, reaching out of the tomb; and the motto, "Omnia nec tant," all is not worth a fillip.

Whitlock, Mann. of the Eng. p. 549.

FIRLLY.† n. s. [ffilog, Welsh, a young mare, also a wanton girl; ffillog, Celt. filia, the fem. of fil, a colt, Iceland.]

1. A young mare: opposed to a colt or young horse.

I jest to Oberon, and make him smile,
When I a fat and bean-fed horse beguile,
Neighing in likeness of a filly foal. Shakespeare.

A well-wayed horse will convey thee to thy journey's end, when an unbacked filly may give thee a fall.

Suckling.

2. A wanton girl; a flirt.

A skittish filly will be your fortune, Welford.

Beaumont and Fl. Scornful Lady.

I am joined in wedlock, for my sins, to one of those filches who are described in the old poet.

Addison, Spect.

FILM. n. s. [film, Saxon.] A thin pellicle or skin.

While the silver needle did work upon the sight of his eye, to remove the film of the cataract, he never saw any thing more clear or perfect than that white needle.

Bacon.

Michael from Adam's eyes the film remov'd,
Which that false fruit that promis'd clearer sight
Had bred. Milton, P. L.

A stone is held up by the films of the bladder, and so kept from grating or offending it.

There is not one infidel so ridiculous as to pretend to solve the phenomena of sight, fancy, or cogitation, by those fleeting superficial films of bodies. Bentley, Serm.

He from thick films shall purge the visual ray,
And on the sightless eyeballs pour the day.

To FILM.† v. a. [from the noun.] To cover with a pellicle or thin skin.

It will but skin and film the ulcerous place,
Whilst rank corruption, mining all within,
Infects unseen. Shakespeare, Hamlet.

It is thine ignorant and gross infidelity that hath filmed up thine eyes, that thou canst discern no spiritual object. Bp. Hall's Rem. p. 251.

FILMY.† adj. [from film.] Composed of thin membranes or pellicles.

He shewed me a little excrescence that he hath beginning upon the uttermost ball of his eyes, a filmy matter, like the rudiment of a pin and web as they call it.

Sir H. Wotton, Lett. (1628.) Rem. p. 441.
So the false spider, when her nets are spread,
Deep ambush'd in her silent den does lie;
And feels, far off, the trembling of her thread,
Whose filmy cord should bind the struggling fly. Dryden.

The wasps with fruitless toil
Flap filmy pinions oft, to extricate
Their feet in liquid shackles bound, till death
Bereave them of their worthless souls; such doom
Waits luxury, and lawless love of gain. Philips.
Loose to the winds their airy garments flew,
Thin glit'ring textures of the filmy dew;
Dipt in the richest tincture of the skies,
Where light disports in ever-mingling dyes. Pope.

To FILTER. v. a. [filtro, low Latin; per filum trahere.]

1. To defecate by drawing off liquor by depending threads.

2. To strain; to percolate.
Dilute this liquor with fair water, filter it through a paper, and so evaporate it. Grew, Museum.

FILTER. n. s. [filtrum, Latin.]

1. A twist of thread, of which one end is dipped in the liquor to be defecated, and the other hangs below the bottom of the vessel, so that the liquor drips from it.

2. A strainer; a sence.

That the water, passing through the veins of the earth, should be rendered fresh and potable, which it cannot be by percolations we can make, but the saline particles will pass through a tenfold filter. Ray on the Creation.

FILTH.† n. s. [filð, Sax. fylta, Icel. Wic-liffe writes filth-heed for the state of being defiled, Apoc. 14.]

1. Dirt; nastiness; any thing that soils or fouls.

Wisdom and goodness to the vile seem vile;
Filths savour but themselves. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

Neither may you trust waters that taste sweet;
for they are commonly found in rising grounds of great cities, which must needs take in a great deal of filth. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

How perfect then is man? From head to foot Defil'd with filth, and rotten at the root. Sandys.

Though perhaps among the rout
He wildly flings his filth about;
He still has gratitude and sap'ence,
To spare the folks that give him ba'pence. Swift.

2. Corruption; grossness; pollution.

Such do likewise exceedingly dispose us to piety and religion, by purifying our souls from the dross and filth of sensual delights. Tillotson.

FILTHILY.† adv. [from filthy.] Nastily; foully; grossly.

If she do not paint, she will look so filthily,
thou canst not love her!

Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 572.
It stuck filthily in the camel's stomach that bullock's bears, and the like, should be armed, and that a creature of his size should be left defenceless. L'Estrange.

FILTHINESS. n. s. [from filthy.]

1. Nastiness; foulness; dirtiness.

Men of virtue suppressed it, lest their shining should discover the others filthiness. Sidney.

2. Corruption; pollution.

They held this land, and with their filthiness
Polluted this same gentle soil long time,
That their own mother loath'd their beastiness,
And gan abhor her brood's unkindly crime,
All were they born of her own native slime. Spenser, F. Q.

They never duly improved the utmost of such a power, but gave themselves up to all the filthiness and licentiousness of life imaginable. South, Sermons.

FILTHY. adj. [from filth.]

1. Nasty; foul; dirty.

Fair is foul, and foul is fair;
Hover through the fog and filthy air. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

2. Gross; polluted.

As all stories are not proper subjects for an epic poem or a tragedy, so neither are they for a noble picture: the subjects both of the one and of the other, ought to have nothing of immoral, low, or filthy in them. Dryden, Dufresnoy.

To FILTRATE. v. a. [from filter.] To strain; to percolate; to filter.

The extract obtained by the former operation, burnt to ashes, and those ashes boiled in water and filtrated, yield a fiery salt.

FILTRATION. n. s. [from filtrate.] A method by which liquors are procured fine and clear. The filtration in use is straining a liquor through paper, which, by the smallness of its pores, admits only the finer parts through, and keeps the rest behind. Quincy.

We took then common nitre, and having, by the usual way of solution, filtration, and coagulation, reduced it into chrystals, we put four ounces of it purified nitre into a strong new crucible. Boyle.

FIMBLE Hemp. n. s. [corrupted from female.]

The light summer hemp, that bears no seed, which is called fimble hemp. Mortimer.

Good flax and good hemp, for to have of her own,
In May a good housewife will see it sown;
And afterwards trim it, to serve at a need,
The fimble to spin and the carle for her seed. Tusser.

To FIMBRIATE. v. a. [Lat. fimbriatus.]* To fringe; to hem. Fimbriated is still an heraldick term for bordered.

Besides the divers tricking or dressing [heraldick crosses;] as piercing, voiding, fimbriating, &c. insomuch that crosses alone, as they are variously disguised, are enough to distinguish all the several families of gentlemen in England.

FIN. n. s. [fin, Sax. vin, Dutch.] The wing of a fish; the limb by which he balances his body, and moves in the water.

He that depends
Upon your favours, swims with fins of lead,
And hews down oaks with rushes. Shaks. Othello.

His fins consist of a number of grisly bones, long and slender, like pins and needles.

More against Atheism.
Thus at half-ebb a rolling sea
Returns, and wins upon the shore;
The watry herd, affrighted at the roar,
Rest on their fins awhile, and stay,
Then backward tack their wond'ring way. Dryd.

Still at his oar th' industrious Lihys plies;
But as he plies, each busy arm shrinks in,
And by degrees is fashion'd to a fin. Add. Ovid.

FIN-FOOTED. adj. [fin and foot.] Palmipedous; having feet with membranes between the toes.

It is described like fessipedes, or birds which have their feet or claws divided; whereas it is palmipedous or fin-footed, like swans and geese, according to the method of nature in latrostrous or flat-billed birds; which being generally swimmers, the organ is wisely contrived unto the action, and they are framed with fins or oars upon their feet. Brown.

FIN'ABLE. adj. [from fine.] That admits a fine; that deserves a fine.

This is the order for writs of covenant that be finable. Bacon.

He sent letters to the council, wherein he acknowledged himself favoured in bringing his cause finable. Hayward.

FIN'AL. adj. [final, French, finalis, Lat.]

1. Ultimate; last.

And over them triumphant Death his dart
Shook; but delay'd to strike, though oft invok'd
With vows, as their chief good, and final hope. Milton, P. L.

2. Conclusive; decisive.

There be many examples where sea-fights have been final to the war. Bacon.

Henry spent his reign in establishing himself, and had neither leisure nor opportunity to undertake the final conquest of Ireland. Davies on Ireland.

3. Mortal; destructive.

At last resolv'd to work his final smart,
He lifted up his hand, but back againe did start. Spenser, F. Q.

4. Respecting the end or motive.

Some things in such sort are allowed, that they be also required as necessary unto salvation, by way of direct, immediate, and proper necessity final, so that, without performance of them, they cannot by ordinary course be saved, nor by any means be excluded from life, observing them.

By its gravity air raises the water in pumps, siphons, and other engines; and performs all those feats which former philosophers, through ignorance of the efficient cause, attributed to a final, namely, nature's abhorrence of a vacuum. Ray.

Your answering in the final cause, makes me believe you are at a loss for the efficient. Collier on Thought.

FIN'ALLY. adv. [from final.]

1. Ultimately; lastly; in conclusion.

May chance to number thee with those Whom patience finally must crown. Milton, S. A.

2. Completely; without recovery.

Not any house of noble English in Ireland was utterly destroyed, or finally rooted out by the hand of justice, but the house of Desmond only. Davies on Ireland.

Doubtlessly many men are finally lost, who yet have no men's sins to answer for but their own. South.

FINANCE.† n. s. [French.] With the accent on the second syllable; though Dr. Johnson places it on the first.

It may be curious to observe, that we formerly used the word finance in the sense of an end; and that, in the enlarged edition of Bullokar, 1656, it has found a place. But it had then been long obsolete.] Revenue; income; profit. It is seldom used in the singular.

This sort of finance hath been increased. Bacon.
The residue of these ordinary finances be casual or uncertain; as be the escheats and forfeitures.

Bacon.
His pretence for making war upon his neighbours was their piracies, though he practised the same trade when he was straitened in his finances at the siege of Byzantium. Arbutnot.

FIN'ANCIAL.* adj. [from finance.] Respecting finance. A modern word.

Europe was filled with astonishment, when they saw England borrow in one year twelve millions. It was thought, and very justly, no small proof of national strength and financial skill, to find a fund for the payment of the interest upon this sum. Burke on the State of the Nation, (1769.)

FIN'ANCIER.† n. s. [French. This is a word of considerable age in our language, though hitherto unnoticed; for Dr. Johnson has given no example, and Mr. Mason has found the word only in the writings of Burke, who indeed often uses it.] One who collects or farms the publick revenue; one who understands the publick revenue.

I therefore, whom only love and duty to your majesty and your royal line hath made a financier, do intend to present unto your majesty a perfect book of your estate, like a perspective glass to draw your estate nearer to your sight.

Bacon to King James I. 2 Jan. 1618. Cabala, p. 9.

FIN'ARY. n. s. [from To fine.] In the iron works, the second forge at the iron mills. Dict.

FINCH.† n. s. [Finc, Sax. finck, Teut. from the bird's note, vinck, vink. Vossius, and Lye.] A small bird of which we have three kinds, the goldfinch, chaffinch, and bullfinch.

The finch, the sparrow, and the lark,
The plain-song cuckoo gray,
Whose note full many a man doth mark,
And dares not answer nay. Shaks. Mids. N. Dream.

To FIND.† v. a. [finban, Sax. vinden, Dutch; finthan, M. Goth. finna, Su. Goth.]

1. To obtain by searching or seeking.

Ask, and it shall be given you: seek, and ye shall find. St. Matt. vii. 7.

Whereas thou hast searched all my stuff, what hast thou found of all thy household stuff?

Gen. xxi. 37.

She disappear'd, and left me dark; I wak'd
To find her, or for ever to deplore
Her loss. Milton, P. L.

A bird that flies about,
And beats itself against the cage,
Finding at last no passage out,
It sits and sings. Cowley.

2. To obtain something lost.

When he hath found his sheep, he layeth it on his shoulders rejoicing. St. Luke, xv. 5.

In my school days, when I had lost one shaft,
I shot his fellow of the self-same flight
The self-same way, with more advised watch,
To find the other forth; by vent'ring both,
I oft found both. Shakspeare, Merch. of Ven.

3. To obtain something desired.

Thus I embolden'd spake, and freedom used Permissive, and acceptance found. Milton, P. L.

Our voluntary service he requires,
Not our necessitated; such with him
Finds no acceptance, nor can find. Milton, P. L.

4. To meet with; to fall upon.

There watchful at the gate they find,
Suspicion with her eyes behind. Doddsey's Miscell.
In woods and forests thou art found. Cowley.
The bad must miss, the good unsought shall find. Pope.

5. To know by experience.

How oft will he
Of thy chang'd faith complain!
And his fortunes find to be
So airy and so vain!
The torrid zone is now found habitable. Cowley.

6. To come to; to attain.

The sun that barren shines,
Whose virtue on itself works no effect,
But in the fruitful earth; there first receiv'd
His beams, unactive else, their vigour find. Milton, P. L.

7. To discover by study, or attention.

The fox that first this cause of grief did find,
Gan first thus plain his case, with words unkind. Spenser, Hubb. Tale.

Physicians

With sharpen'd sight some remedies may find. Dryden.

Thy maid! ah, find some nobler theme,
Whereon thy doubts to place. Cowley.

8. To discover what is hidden.

A curse on him who found the oar. Cowley.

9. To hit on by chance; to perceive by accident.

They build on sands, which if unmov'd they find,
'Tis but because there was no wind. Cowley.

10. To gain by any mental endeavour.

I by conversing cannot these erect,
From prone, nor in their ways complacence find. Milton, P. L.

If we for happiness could leisure find,
And wand'ring time into a method bind,
We should not then the great men's favour need. Cowley.

We oft review, each finding like a friend,
Something to blame, and something to commend. Pope.

11. To remark; to observe; to perceive.

Thus far to try thee, Adam, I was pleas'd
And find thee knowing not of beast alone,
Which thou hast rightly nam'd, but of thyself. Milton, P. L.

Beauty or wit in all I find. Cowley.

12. To detect; to deprehend; to catch.

When first found in a lie, talk to him of it as a strange monstrous matter, and so shame him out of it. Locke.

13. To reach; to attain.

They are glad when they can find the grave. Job. iii. 22.

They also know,
And reason not contemptibly; with these ind pastime, and bear rule. Milton, P. L.

In solitude
What happiness! who can enjoy alone,
Or all enjoying, what contentment find? Milton, P. L.

He did the utmost bounds of knowledge find,
Yet found them not so large as was his mind. Cowley.

14. To meet.

A clear conscience and heroic mind,
In ill their business and their glory find. Cowley.

15. To settle; to fix any thing in one's own opinion.

Some men

The marks of old and chivalrick would find. Cowley.

16. To determine by judicial verdict.

They would enforce them to find as they would direct; and if they did not, convent, imprison, and fine them. Bacon.

His peers, upon this evidence,
Have found him guilty of high treason. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

17. To supply; to furnish: as, he finds me in money and in victuals.

A war with Spain is like to be lucrative, if we go roundly on at first; the war in continuance will find itself. Bacon.

He that shall marry thee, had better spend the poor remainder of his days, in a dung-barge, for two-pence a week, and find himself.

Bacon, and Fl. Woman Hater.

Still govern thou my song,

18. [In law.] To approve: as, to find a bill.

To find a bill, there must at least twelve of the [grand] jury agree. Blackstone.

19. To purpose; to find in one's heart, as we now often say. Spenser, for the sake of the rhyme, writes the word fond instead of found.

In the sea to drown herself she find,
Rather than of that tyrant to be caught. Spenser, F. Q. iii. vii. 26.

She found in her heart, she chose rather to drown herself than to be caught of that tyrant, Upton on Spenser.

20. To FIND himself. To be; to fare with regard to ease or pain, health or sickness.

Pray, sir, how d'y'e find yourself? says the doctor. L'Estrange.

21. To FIND out. To unriddle; to solve. The finding out of parables is a wearisome labour of the mind. Ecclus. xiii. 26.

22. To FIND out. To discover something hidden.

Canst thou by searching find out God?
Canst thou find out the Almighty unto perfection? Job, xi. 7.

There are agents in nature able to make the particles of bodies stick together by very strong attractions, and it is the business of experimental philosophy to find them out. Newton.

What hinders then, but that thou find her out,
And hurry her away by manly force? Add. Cato.

23. To FIND out. To obtain the knowledge of.

The principal part of painting is to find out and thoroughly to understand what nature has made most beautiful. Dryden.

24. To FIND out. To invent; to excogitate.

A man of Tyre, skilful to work in gold, and to find out every device which shall be put to him. 2 Chron. ii. 14.

25. The particle out is added often without any other use than that it adds some force or emphasis to the verb.

While she proudly march'd about,
Greater conquests to find out,
She beat out Susan by the by. Cowley.

It is agreeable to compare the face of a great man with the character, and to try if we can find out in his looks and features either the haughty, cruel, or merciful temper. Addison.

He was afraid of being insulted with Greek, for which reason he desired a friend to find him out a clergyman rather of plain sense than much learning. Addison, Spect.

26. To FIND, is a word of very licentious and capricious use, not easily limited or explained; its first idea is the consequence of search; the second, equally frequent, is mere occurrence.

FIND'ER.† n. s. [from find.]

1. One that meets or falls upon any thing.

We will bring the device to the bar, and crown thee for a finder of madmen. Shaks. Tw. Night.

2. One that picks up any thing lost.

Some lewd squeaking cryer,
May gall the finder's conscience, if they meet.

Donne.

O yes! if any happy eye
This roving wanton shall descry,
Let the finder surely know
Mine is the wag; 'tis I that owe
The winged wand'rer.

Crashaw.

3. A discoverer: an inventor.

I curse the fiding finders out of musick.

Sidney, Arcad. b. ii.

FINDFA'ULT.† n. s. [find and fault.] A censurer; a caviller.

We are the makers of manners, Kate; and the liberty that follows our places, stops the mouth of all findfaults.

Shakespeare.

Railers, grudgers, persecutors, findfaults.

Trans. of Boccacini, (1626,) p. 42.

FINDFA'ULTING.* adj. [from findfault.] Cavilling; captious.

She doth not set business back by unquiet branglings and findfaulting quarrels.

1. Discovery by study.

The finding out of parables is a wearisome labour of the mind.

Ecclus. xiii. 26.

2. Discovery by chance.

Go you the next way with your findings.

Shakespeare, Win. Tale.

3. In law, the return made by the jury to the bill of indictment.

FINDY. adj. [germ. Saxon.] Plump; wighty; firm; solid. Not used. Thus the Proverb,

A cold May and a windy,

Makes the barn fat and findy :
means that it stores the barn with plump and firm grain.

Junius.

FINE.† adj. [fine, French; fin, Dutch and Erse; perhaps from finitus, completed, Latin. Serenius notices the Iceland, fynnr, beautiful, polished.]

1. Not coarse.

Not any skill'd in loops of fingering fine,
With this so curious net-work might compare.

Spenser.

He was array'd in purple and fine linen.

St. Luke, xvi. 19.

2. Refined; pure; free from dross.

Two vessels of fine copper, precious as gold.

Ezra, viii. 27.

3. Subtle; thin; tenuous: as, the fine spirits evaporate.

This is a pleasant cite —

The ayre subtil and fine.

Trag. of Damon and Pithias.

When the eye standeth in the finer medium, and the object in the grosser things shew greater; but contrariwise, when the eye is placed in the grosser medium and the object in the finer.

Bacon.

4. Refined; Subtly excited.

In substance he promised himself, money, honour, friends, and peace in the end; but those things were too fine to be fortunate and succeed in all parts.

Bacon.

Whether the scheme has not been pursued so far as to draw it into practice, or whether it be too fine to be capable of it, I will not determine.

Temple.

5. Keen; thin; smoothly sharp.

Great affairs are commonly too rough and stubborn to be wrought upon by the finer edges or points of wit.

Bacon.

6. Clear; pellucid; transparent: as, the wine is fine.

Let the wine without mixture or stum be all fine,
Or call up the master.

B. Jonson.

7. Nice; exquisite; delicate.

Are they not senseless then, that think the soul Nought but a fine perfection of the sense. Davies.

The irons of planes are set fine or rank: they are set fine when they stand so shallow below the sole of the plane, that in working they take off a thin shaving.

Mozon, Mech. Exer.

8. Artful; dexterous.

The wisdom of all these latter times, in princes affairs, is rather fine deliveries, and shiftings of dangers and mischiefs, than solid and grounded courses to keep them aloof.

Bacon.

9. Fraudulent; sly; knavishly subtle.

Through his fine handling, and his cleanly play, He all those royal signs had stol'n away.

Spenser, Hubb. Tale.

Thou art too fine in thy evidence; therefore, stand aside.

Shakespeare, All's Well.

10. Elegant; beautiful in thought or language.

To call the trumpet by the name of the metal was fine.

Dryden.

11. Applied to person, it means beautiful with dignity.

12. Accomplished; elegant of manners.

He was not only the finest gentleman of his time, but one of the finest scholars.

Felton on the Classics.

13. Showy; splendid.

It is with a fine genius as with a fine fashion; all those are displeased at it who are not able to follow it.

Pope.

The satirical part of mankind will needs believe, that it is not impossible to be very fine and very filthy.

Swift.

14. [Ironically.] Something that will serve the purpose; something worth contemptuous notice.

That same knave, Ford, her husband, hath the finest mad devil of jealousy in him, master Brook, that ever governed frenzy.

Shakespeare, M. Wives of Windsor.

They taught us, indeed, to cloath, to dwell in houses,

To feast, to sleep on down, to be profuse;

A fine exchange for liberty.

Philips, Briton.

15. Taper; slender.

Like a crane, his neck was long and fine.

Spenser, F. Q. i. iv. 21.

They gather'd flowers to fill their flasket,
And with fine fingers cropt full feateously

Her cheeks all white-red —

And such fine fingers.

A. Fraunce, Countess of Pemb. Tychurch, (1591,) sign G. 4.

No longer shall the bodice aptly lac'd

From thy full bosom to thy slender waste

That air and harmony of shape express,

Fine by degrees and beautifully less.

Prior.

FINE. n. s. [fin, Cimbr.]

1. A mulct; a pecuniary punishment.

The killing of an Irishman was not punished by our law, as manslaughter, which is felony and capital; but by a fine or pecuniary punishment, called an ericke.

Davies on Ireland.

2. Penalty.

Ev'n this ill night your breathing shall expire,
Paying the fine of rated treachery.

Shaks. K. John.

3. Forfeit; money paid for any exemption or liberty.

The spirit of wantonness is sure scared out of him: if the devil have him not in fee-simple, with fine and recovery, he will never, in the way of waste, attempt us again.

Shakespeare.

Besides fines set upon plays, games, balls, and feasting, they have many customs which contribute to their simplicity.

Addison.

How vain that second life in others breaths,
The estate which wits inherit after death!

Ease, health, and life for this they must resign,
Unsure the tenure, but how vast the fine! Pope

4. [From finis, Latin; fin, enfin, French.] The end; conclusion. It is now seldom used but adverbially, in fine. To conclude; to sum up all; to tell all at once.

In fine, whatsoever he was, he was nothing but what it pleased Zelmane, the powers of his spirit depending of her.

Sidney.

His resolution, in fine, is, that in the church a number of things are strictly observed, whereof no law of scripture maketh mention one way or other.

Hooker.

Still the fine's the crown;

Whate'er the course, the end is the renown. Shaks.

Your daughter, ere she seems as won,
Desires this ring; appoints him an encounter;

In fine, delivers me to fill the time,
Herself most chaste absent. Shaks. All's Well.

The blessings of fortune are the lowest: the next are the bodily advantages of strength and health; but the superlative blessings, in fine, are those of the mind.

L'Estrange.

In fine, he wears no limbs about him sound,
With sores and sicknesses beleaguer'd round.

Dryden, Juv.

In fine, let there be a perfect relation betwixt the parts and the whole, that they may be entirely of a piece.

Dryden.

TO FINE. v. a. [from fine, the adjective.]

1. To refine; to purify.

The fining pot is for silver, and the furnace for gold.

Prov. xvii. 3.

There is a vein for the silver, and a place for gold, where they fine it.

Job, xviii. 1.

South.

For him she loves:

She nam'd not me; that may be Torrismond,
Whom she has thrice in private seen this day:
Then I am finely caught in my own snare.

Dryden, Sp. Friar.

6. Subtly; finely.

We may rate this one secret, as it was finely carried, at 4000*l.* in present money.

Watson, Parall. D. of Buck. and E. of Essex.

7. In a great degree; completely; purely, as that word is sometimes used. Finely, as an adjective is thus common in Cumberland, where a man in good health being asked how he is, answers "he is finely."

My wife was finely well to day.

Diary of H. Earl of Clarendon, (1689,) ii. 365.

- FIN'LESS.* adj. [fine and less.] Unbounded; endless.

Poor and content is rich, and rich enough;
But riches fineness is as poor as winter,
To him that ever fears he shall be poor.

Shakespeare, Othello.

- FIN'NESS.† n. s. [from fine.]

1. Elegance; beauty; delicacy.

Every thing was full of a choice fineness, that if it wanted any thing in majesty, it supplied with increase in pleasure; and if at the first it struck not admiration, it ravished with delight.

Sidney.

As the French language has more fineness and smoothness at this time, so it had more compass, spirit, and force in Montaigne's days.

Temple.

The softness of her sex, and the fineness of her genius, conspire to give her a very distinguishing character.

Prior.

2. Show; splendour; gaiety of appearance.

The fineness of clothes destroys the ease; it often helps men to pain, but can never rid them of any: the body may languish under the most splendid cover.

Decay of Piety.

The fineness of the colours, and richness of the stuff.

Boyle, Style of H. Script. p. 72.

3. Subtly; artfulness; ingenuity.

Those, with the fineness of their souls,
By reason guide his execution.

Shakespeare, Troil. and Cress.

It [the Directory] should have been composed with so much artifice and fineness, that it might have been to all the world an argument of their learning and excellency of spirit, if not of the goodness and integrity of their religion and purposes.

Bp. Taylor, on Extempore Prayer.

4. Purity; freedom from dross or base mixtures.

Our works are, indeed, nought else

But the protractive trials of great Jove,

To find peristive constancy in men;

The fineness of which metal is not found

In fortune's love. Shakespeare, Troil. and Cress.

I am doubtful whether men have sufficiently refined metals; as whether iron, brass, and tin be refined to the height; but when they come to such a fineness as serveth the ordinary use, they try no farther.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

The ancients were careful to coin their money in due weight and fineness, only in times of exigence they have diminished both the weight and fineness.

Arbutnot on Coins.

5. Smoothness; not coarseness.

Needwood—

Of Britain's forests all —

For fineness of her turf surpassing.

Drayton, Polyolb. S. 12.

- FIN'ER. n. s. [from fine.] One who purifies metals.

Take away the dross from the silver, and there shall come forth a vessel for the finer. Prov. xxv. 4.

- FIN'ERY.† n. s. [from fine.]

1. Show; splendour of appearance; gaiety of colours.

Dress up your houses and your images,

And put on all the city's finery,

To consecrate this day a festival.

Southern.

The capacities of a lady are sometimes apt to fall short in cultivating cleanliness and finery together.

Swift.

Don't chuse your place of study by the finery of the prospects, or the most various scenes of sensible things.

Watts.

They want to grow rich in their trades, and to maintain their families in some such figure and degree of finery, as a reasonable Christian life has no occasion for.

Law.

2. The name of a forge at iron-works.

- FINESPO'KEN.* adj. [fine and spoken.]

Using a number of fine phrases. The word may be considered perhaps as ironical rather than serious.

Be cautiously upon your guard against the infinite number of finessed and finespoken "chevaliers d'industrie."

Ld. Chesterfield.

- FIN'ESPUN.* adj. [fine and spun.] Ingeniously contrived; artfully invented.

That mistress in the art of making

The finespun lies, that sells so dear

False words, false hopes. Fanshawe, Past. Fid. p. 68.

Have they not led us deep in the disclose

Of finespun nature, exquisitely small?

Young, Night Th. 9.

Men—who did not amuse their readers with empty declarations and finespun theories of toleration, while they themselves were agitated with a furious inquisitorial spirit.

Louth, Lett. to Warburton, p. 65.

- FINE'SSE. n. s. [French.] Artifice; stratagem: an unnecessary word which is creeping into the language.

A circumstance not much to be stood upon, in case it were not upon some finesse.

Hayward.

- FIN'GER.† n. s. [p̄n̄ḡer, Saxon; figger.

Goth. finger, Icel. from faengr, to seize, to hold, p̄ngan, Sax. fangen, Germ. fingers, i. e. fingers, seizers, holders.]

1. The flexible member of the hand by which men catch and hold.

The fingers and thumb in each hand consist of fifteen bones, there being three to each finger.

Quincy.

You seem to understand me,

By each at once her choppy finger laying

Upon her skinny lips. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

Diogenes, who is never said,

For aught that ever I could read,

To whine, put finger i' th' eye and sob,

Because h' had ne'er another tub. Hudibras.

The hand is divided into four fingers bending forward, and one opposite to them bending backwards, and of greater strength than any of them singly, which we call the thumb, to join with them severally or united; whereby it is fitted to lay hold of objects of any size or quantity. Ray.

A hand of a vast extension, and a prodigious number of fingers playing upon all the organ pipes of the world, and making every one sound a particular note. Kail against Burnet.

Poor Peg sewed, spun, and knit for a livelihood, till her finger ends were sore.

Arbutnot, Hist. of J. Bull.

2. A small measure of extension; the breadth of a finger.

Go now, go trust the wind's uncertain breath,
Remov'd four fingers from approaching death;
Or seven at most, when thickest is the board.

Dryden, Juv.

One of these bows with a little arrow did pierce through a piece of steel three fingers thick.

Wilkins, Math. Magick.

3. The hand; the instrument of work; manufacture; art.

Fool, that forgets her stubborn look

This softness from thy finger took. Waller.

- To FIN'GER.† v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To touch lightly; to toy with.

Go, get you gone, and let the papers lie;

You would be finering them to anger me. Shakspeare.

2. To touch unseasonably or thievisly.

Up from my cabin,

My sea-gown scarf'd about me, in the dark

Grop'd I to find out them: had my desire;

Finger'd their packet; and, in fine, withdrew

To mine own room again; making so bold,

My fears forgetting manners, to unseal

Their grand commission. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

You would fain be finering

This old sin-offering of two hundred, Tranio.

Beaumont and Fl. Tamer Tamcd.

His ambition would needs be finering the sceptre, and hoisting him into his father's throne.

South, Serm.

3. To touch an instrument of music.

You're a fair viol, and your sense the strings;
Who, finger'd to make man his lawful music,
Would draw heaven down, and all the gods to hearken.

Shakspeare, Pericles.

4. To handle without effort or violence.

Who touched me? saith our Saviour, when the bloody-fluxed woman fingered but the hem of his garment.

Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 90.

5. To perform any work exquisitely with the fingers. See FINGERING.

- FIN'GERBOARD.* n. s. The board at the neck of a fiddle, guitar, or the like, where the fingers operate on the strings.

Mell, though he played far sweeter than Baltasar, yet Baltasar's hand was more quick, and could run it insensibly to the end of the fingerboard.

Life of A. Wood, p. 108.

- FIN'GERED.* adj. [from finger.] Having fingers, digitatus.

Huicet.

Fingered and thumbed. Shelton Poems, p. 124.

- FIN'GERING.* n. s. [from finger.]

1. The act of touching lightly, of toying with.

One that is covetous, is not so highly pleased with the mere sight and finering of money, as with the thoughts of his being considered as a wealthy man.

Grew, Cosmol. Sacra.

2. The manner of touching an instrument of music.

Madam, before you touch the instrument,

To learn the order of my finering,

I must begin with rudiments of art.

Shakspeare, Tam. of the Shrew.

She hath broke the lute —

I did but tell her she mistook her frets,

And bow'd her hand to teach her finering.

Shakspeare, Tam. of the Shrew.

3. Work exquisitely performed with the fingers.

Not any skill'd in loops of fingering fute,
With this so curious net-work might compare.

Spenser.

FIN'GERSTONE. n. s. [finger and stone;
telentes, Lat.] A fossil resembling an arrow.

FIN'GLEFANGLE. n. s. [from fangle.] A trifle; a burlesque word.

We agree in nothing but to wrangle,

About the slightest fingeleangle.

Hudibras.

FIN'ICAL. adj. [from fine.] Nice; foppish; pretending to superfluous elegance.

A whorson, glassgazing, superserviceable, fi- ncial rogue.

Shakespeare, K. Lear.

I cannot hear a finical pop romancing, how the king took him aside at such a time; what the queen said to him at another.

L'Estrange.

FIN'ICALLY. adv. [from finical.] Fop-pishly.

FIN'ICALNESS.† n. s. [from finical.] Superfluous nicety; foppery.

It is for such little writers as the preacher of Lincoln's Inn to hide their barrenness by the finicalness of culture.

Warburton to Hurd, Lett. 50. note.

To FIN'ISH. v. a. [finir, French; finio,
Latin.]

1. To bring to the end purposed; to complete.

For which of you, intending to build a tower,
sitteth not down first and counteth the cost,
whether he have sufficient to finish it?

St. Luke, xiv. 28.

As he had begun, so he would also finish in you the same grace.

2 Cor. viii. 6.

2. To make perfect.

A poet uses episodes; but episodes, taken separately, finish nothing.

Broomo on the Odyssey.

3. To perfect; to polish to the excellency intended.

Though here you all perfection should not find,
Yet is it all th' Eternal Will design'd;
It is a finish'd work, and perfect in his kind.

Blackmore.

I would make what bears your name as fin- ished as my last work ought to be; that is, more finished than the rest.

Pope.

4. To end; to put an end to.

FIN'ISH.* n. s. [from the verb.] A word sometimes used by artists, meaning the last touch or polish of the composition.
See FINISHING.]

FIN'ISHER. n. s. [from finish.]

1. Performer; accomplisher.

He that of greatest works is finisher,
Oft does them by the weakest minister.

Shakspeare.

2. One that puts an end; ender.

This was the condition of those times; the world against Athanasius, and Athanasius against it: half an hundred of years spent in doubtful trials which of the two, in the end, would prevail;
the side which had all, or else that part which had no friend but God and death, the one a defender of his innocency, the other a finisher of all his troubles.

Hooker.

3. One that completes or perfects.
The author and finisher of our faith.

Hebrews, xii. 2.

O prophet of glad tidings! finisher
Of utmost hope!

Milton, P. L.

FIN'ISHING.* n. s. [from finish.]

1. Completion.

They hindered the finishing of the building.

1 Esdr. v. 73.

2. The last touch of a composition.

the last finishings of art and genius.

Warburton on Prodigies, p. 73.

FIN'ITE. adj. [finite, Latin.] Limited;
bounded; terminated.

Servius conceives no more thereby than a finite
number for indefinite.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

Finite of any magnitude holds not any proportion to infinite.

Locke.

That supposed infinite duration will, by the very supposition, be limited to two extremes, though never so remote asunder, and consequently must needs be finite.

Bentley.

FIN'ITELESS. adj. [from finite.] Without bounds; unlimited.

It is ridiculous unto reason, and finiteless as their desires.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

FIN'ITELY. adv. [from finite.] Within certain limits; to a certain degree.

They are creatures still, and that sets them at an infinite distance from God; whereas all their excellencies can make them but finutely distant from us.

Stillingfleet.

FIN'ITENESS. n. s. [from finite.] Limitation; confinement within certain boundaries.

I ought now to unbay the current of my passion, and love without other boundary than what is set by the finiteness of my natural powers.

Norris.

FIN'ITUDE. n. s. [from finite.] Limitation;
confinement within certain boundaries.
This is hardly an authorized word.

Finitude, applied to natural or created things, imports the proportions of the several degrees of affections, or properties of these things to one another; in-finitude, the unboundedness of these degrees of affections, or properties. Cheyne.

FIN'KLE.* n. s. [feniculum, Lat. fenckle, Teut.] Fennel. Craven Dial. It is used in other parts of the north.

FIN'LESS. adj. [from fin.] Wanting fins.

He angers me

With telling of the moldwarp and the ant,
And of a dragon and a finless fish.

Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

FIN'LIKE. adj. [fin and like.] Formed in imitation of fins.

In shipping such as this, the Irish kern
And untaken Indian, on the stream did glide;
Ere sharp-keel'd boats to stem the flood did learn,
Or finlike oars did spread from either side.

Dryden, Ann. Mir.

FIN'NED. adj. [from fin.] Having broad edges spread out on either side.

They plough up the turf with a broad finned
plough.

Mortimer.

species of pigeon.

Chambers.

FIN'NY. adj. [from fin.] Furnished with fins formed for the element of water.

High o'er the main in wat'ry pomp he rides,
His azure car and finny coursers guides;
Proteus his name.

Dryden, Virg.

New herds of beasts he sends the plains to share;

New colonies of birds to people air;
And to their oozy beds the finny fish repair.

Dryden, Ovid.

While black with storms the ruffled ocean rolls,
And from the fisher's art defends her finny shores.

Blackmore.

With hairy springes we the birds betray;
Slight lines of hair surprize the finny prey.

Pope.

FIN'TOED. adj. [fin and toe.] Palmeipous; having a membrane between the toes.

Such creatures as are whole footed, or fin-toed,
viz. some birds and quadrupeds, are naturally directed to go into the water and swim there.

river fish called the rudd. Chambers.

FI'PPLE. n. s. [from fibula, Latin.] A stopper.

You must know, that in recorders, which go with a gentle breath, the concave of the pip-were it not for the fipple that straitneth the air, much more than the simple concave, would yield
no sound.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

FIR. n. s. [fyr, Welsh; fuph, Saxon;
fyr, Danish.] The tree of which deal-boards are made.

It is ever green: the leaves are single,
and for the most part produced on every side of the branches: the male flowers, or catkins, are placed at remote distances from the fruit on the same tree.
The seeds are propagated on cones,
which are squamose.

Miller.

He covered the floor of the house with planks of fir.

1 Kings, vi. 15.

The aspiring fir and stately box.

Pope.

FIR-TREE.* n. s. The tree called fir.

fyr, Icel. and Su. "Vox antiquissima Scytho-Phrygica." Serenius.]

1. The igneous element.

The force of fire ascended first on high
And took its dwelling in the vaulted sky;
Then air succeeds, in lightness next to fire.

Dryd.

2. Any thing burning.

A little fire is quickly trodden out,
Which, being suffer'd, rivers cannot quench.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

Where two raging fires meet together,
They do consume the thing that feeds their fury.

Shakespeare.

So contraries on Ætna's top conspire;
Here heavy frosts, and by them breaks out fire.

Cowley.

3. A conflagration of towns or countries.
There is another liberality to the citizens, who had suffered damage by a great fire.

Arbutnot on Coins.

Though safe thou think'st thy treasure lies,
Conceal'd in chests from human eyes,
A fire may come, and it may be
Bury'd, my friend, as far from thee.

Granville.

4. Flame; light; lustre.

Stars, hide your fires!

Let not night see my black and deep desires!

Shakespeare Macbeth.

5. Torture by burning.

Did Shadrach's zeal my glowing breast inspire,
To weary tortures, and rejoice in fire?

Prior.

6. The punishment of the damned.

Who among us shall dwell with the devouring fire? Who among us shall dwell with everlasting burnings?

Isa. xxxiii. 14.

7. Any thing provoking; any thing that inflames the passions.

What fire is in my ears? Can this be true?
Stand I condemn'd for pride and scorn so much?

Shakespeare.

8. Ardour of temper; violence of passion.
He had fire in his temper, and a German bluntness; and upon provocations, might strain a phrase.

Atterbury.

One of my companions was a scholar with fire; and the other a soldier of the same complexion. My learned man would fall into disputes, and argue without any manner of provocation or contradiction. The other was decisive without words, and would give a shrug or an oath to express his opinion.

Tatler, No. 61.

9. Liveliness of imagination; vigour of fancy; intellectual activity; force of expression; spirit of sentiment.

Nor can the snow that age does shed

Upon thy rev'rend head,

Quench or ally the noble fire within,
But all that youth can be thou art.

Cowley.

They have no notion of life and fire in fancy and in words, and any thing that is just in grammar and in measure is good oratory and poetry to them.

Felton on the Classics.

He brings, to make us from our ground retire,
The reasoner's weapons and the poet's fire.

Blackmore.

Exact Racine, and Corneille's noble fire,
Taught us that France had something to admire.

Pope.

The bold Longinus all the nine inspire,
And warm the critic with a poet's fire.

Pope.

Oh may some spark of your celestial fire,
The last, the meanest of your sons inspire.

Pope.

10. The passion of love.

Love various hearts does variously inspire,
It stirs in gentle bosoms gentle fire,
Like that of incense on the altar laid;
But raging flames tempestuous souls invade;
A fire which every windy passion blows,
With pride it mounts, and with revenge it glows.

Dryden.

The fire of love in youthful blood,
Like what is kindled in brush-wood,
But for a moment burns.

Shadwell.

The god of love retires;
Dim are his torches, and extinct his fires.

Pope.

New charms shall still increase desire,
And time's swift wing shall fan the fire.

Moore's Fables.

11. Eruption or imposthumation: as, St. Anthony's fire.

Hermosilla courageously set upon the horsemen, and set fire also upon the stables where the Turk's horses stood.

Knolles.

He that set a fire on a plane-tree to spite his neighbour, and the plane-tree set fire on his neighbour's house, is bound to pay all the loss, because it did all rise from his own ill intention.

Bp. Taylor, Rule of Living Holy.

13. To set a FIRE. To inflame.

So inflam'd by my desire,
It may set her heart a-fire.

Carew.

14. A fellow of FIRE. A term, in queen Anne's time, for the modern duck or blood; the latter of which Dr. Johnson defines "a man of fire." See BLOOD.

You see, in the very air of a fellow of fire, something so expressive of what he would be at, that, if it were not for self-preservation, a man would laugh out.

Tatler, No. 61.

- To FIRE. † v. a. [from noun.]

1. To set on fire; to kindle.

They spoiled many parts of the city, and fired the houses of those whom they esteemed not to be their friends; but the rage of the fire was at first hindered, and then appeased by the fall of a sudden shower of rain.

Hayward.

The breathless body, thus bewail'd, they lay,
And fire the pile.

Dryden.

A second fire, diff'ring but in name,
Shall fire his country with a second flame.

Dryden, Æn.

2. To inflame the passions; to animate.

Yet, if desire of fame, and thirst of pow'r,
A beauteous princess, with a crown in dow'r,
So fire your mind, in arms assert your right.

Dryd.

3. To drive by fire.

He that parts us, shall bring a brand from heav'n
And fire us hence.

cozen their eyes, and represent an intire circle of fire to them.

Bibby on Bodies.

FIRESTONE. n. s. [fire and stone.]

The firestone, or pyrites, is a compound metallick fossil, composed of vitriol, sulphur, and an unmetallick earth, but in very different proportions in the several masses. The most common sort, which is used in medicine, is a greenish shapeless kind found in our clay-pits, out of which the green vitriol or coppers are procured. It has its name of pyrites, or firestone, from its giving fire on being struck against a steel much more freely than a flint will do; and all the sparks burn a longer time, and grow larger as they fall, the inflammable matter struck from off the stone burning itself out before the spark becomes extinguished.

Hill, Mat. Med.

Firestone, if broke small, and laid on cold lands,
must be of advantage.

Mortimer, Husbandry.

Doth reach, and all the firment doth fill.

Spens.

I am constant as the northern star,
Of whose true fix'd, and resting quality,
There is no fellow in the firment.

Shakespeare, Jul. Cæs.

The Almighty, whose hieroglyphical characters are the unnumbered stars, sun and moon, written on these large volumes of the firment.

Raleigh, Hist. of the World.

The firment expanse of liquid, pure,
Transparent, elemental air, diffus'd
In circuit to the uttermost convex
Of this great round.

Milton, P. L.

The steeds climb up the first ascent with pain;
And when the middle firment they gain,
If downward from the heavens my head I bow,
And see the earth and ocean hang below,
Ev'n I am seiz'd with horror.

Addison, Ovid.

What an immensurable space is the firment, wherein a great number of stars are seen with our naked eye, and many more discovered with our glasses!

Derham, Astro-Theology.

1. A paroxysm or exacerbation of any intermittent distemper.

Small stones and gravel collect and become very large in the kidneys, in which case a fit of the stone in that part is the cure. Sharp, Surgery.

2. Any short return after intermission; interval.

Sometimes 'tis grateful to the rich to try A short vicissitude, and fit of poverty. Dryd. Hor.

Men that are habitually wicked may now and then, by fits and starts, feel certain motions of repentance. L'Estrange.

By fits my swelling grief appears, In rising sighs and falling tears. Addis. on Italy.

Thus o'er the dying lamp th' unsteady flame Hangs quivering on a point, leaps off by fits, And falls again, as loth to quit its hold. Addison, Cato.

Religion is not the business of some fits only and intervals of our life, to be taken up at certain days and hours, but a system of precepts to be regarded in all our conduct. Rogers, Sermon.

All fits of pleasure we balanced by an equal degree of pain or languor; 'tis like spending this year part of the next year's revenue. Swift.

3. Any violent affection of mind or body. The life did flit away out of her nest, And all his senses were with deadly fit oppress. Spenser, F. Q.

An ambitious man puts it in the power of every malicious tongue to throw him into a fit of melancholy. Addison.

4. Disorder; distemperature.

For your husband, He's noble, wise, judicious, and best knows The fits o'th' season. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

5. It is used, without an epithet of discrimination, for the hysterical disorders of women, and the convulsions of children; and by the vulgar for the epilepsy.

Mrs. Bull was so much enraged, that she fell downright into a fit. Arbuth. Hist. of John Bull.

6. It was anciently used for any commencement after intermission. The parts of a song, or cantos of a poem, were called fits. So were sections or chapters of a book. The word was also used for a strain in musick, and for a measure in dancing.

The first fit here find we.

Old Poem of John the Rev. The fyrst fit of Anselme with king Wylliam Rufus. Bale, Eng. Vol. P. II. (1550.) sign. H. 7. b. The trompettours blow a fyttie. Horn. Vulturaria. Who knoweth where is ere a mynstrell?

By the masse, I would fayne go daunce a fyttie. Old Morality of Lusty Juvenius.

He, sitting me beside in that same shade, Provoked me to plaie some pleasant fit.

Spenser, Colin Clout. The epithalamie was divided by breaches into three parties, to serve for three several fits or times to be sung. Puttenham, Art. of Eng. Poesie, p. 41. Come to the bride; another fit Yet show, sirs, of your country wit.

B. Jonson, Underwoods.

FIT, adj. [vitten, Flemish, Junius.]

1. Qualified; proper: with for before the noun, and to before the verb.

Men of valour, fit to go out for war and battle. 1 Chron. vii. 11.

He lends him vain Goliath's sacred sword, The fittest help just fortune could afford.

Cowley, Davideis. This fury fit for her intent she chose, One who delights in wars and human woes.

Dryden, Æn. It is a wrong use of my understanding to make it the rule and measure of another man's; a use which it is neither fit for, nor capable of. Locke.

2. Convenient; meet; proper; right.

Since we have said it were good not to use men of ambitious natures, except it be upon necessity, it is fit we speak in what cases they are so. Bacon.

To see how thou could'st judge of fit and meet. Milton, P. L.

It is fit for a man to know his own abilities and weaknesses, and not think himself obliged to imitate all that he thinks fit to praise. Boyle.

If our forefathers thought fit to be grave and serious, I hope their posterity may laugh without offence. Addison.

To FIT v. a. [vitten, Flemish, Junius.]

1. To accommodate to any thing; to suit one thing to another.

The carpenter marketh it out with a line: he fitteth it with planes. Is. xlv. 13.

Would fate permit To my desires I might my fortune fit, Troy I would raise. Denham.

2. To accommodate a person with any thing: as, the tailor fits his customer.

A trussmaker fitted the child with a pair of boddice, stiffened on the lame side.

3. To be adapted to; to suit any thing or person; to become. The example from Sidney is placed by Dr. Johnson under the verb neuter.

How evil fits it me to have such a son; and how much doth thy kindness upbraid my wickedness. Sidney.

She shall be our messenger to this paltry knight: trust me I thought on her; she'll fit it. Shakspeare. But the same things, sir, fit not you and me. Beaumont and Fl. Beggar's Bush.

As much of the stone as was contiguous to the marcasite, fitted the marcasite so close as if it had been formerly liquid. Boyle.

4. To FIT out. To furnish; to equip; to supply with necessaries or decoration.

A play, which if you dare but twice fit out, You'll all be slander'd, and be thought devout. Dryden.

The English fleet could not be paid and manned, and fitted out, unless we encouraged trade and navigation. Addison, Freeholder.

5. To FIT up. To furnish; to make proper for the use or reception of any.

He has fitted up his farm. Pope to Swift.

To FIT v. n. To be proper; to be becoming.

Nor fits it to prolong the feast Timeless, indecent, but retire to rest. Pope, Odyssey.

FITCH* n. s. [A colloquial corruption of vetch, Dr. Johnson says, citing only the example from Tusser. Yet the translators of our present version of the Bible did not disdain to employ the word. It is also in our old lexicography.] A small kind of wild pea.

Now is the season, For sowing of fitches, of beans, and of peason.

Tusser. The fitches are not threshed with a threshing instrument. Isaiah, xxviii. 27.

Take thou also unto thee wheat, and barley, and beans, and lentiles, and millet, and fitches. Ezek. iv. 9.

FITCH* n. s. [fissau, French; fisse, Dutch.] A stinking little beast that robs the henroost and warren. Skinner calls him the stinking ferret, but he is much larger, at least as some provinces distinguish them, in which the polecat is termed a fitch, and the stinking ferret a stoat. The ferret is called a fitch, in the old dictionary of Sherwood; and in that of Bullokar, enlarged in 1656, the fur of the pole-cat is termed fitch. Our fitchet is sometimes called fitchel, and also foumart.

'Tis such another fitchew! marry, a perfum'd one!

What do you mean by this haunting of me? Shakspeare. The fitchet, the fulmart, and the like creatures, live upon the face and within the bowels of the earth. Walton, Angler.

FITCH* adj. [fit and full.] Varied by paroxysms; disordered by change of maladies.

Duncan is in his grave; After life's fitful fever, he sleeps well. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

FITLY, adv. [from fit.]

1. Properly; justly; reasonably.

Even so most fitly As you malign our senators. Shakspeare, Coriol. Where a man cannot fitly play his own part, if he have not a friend, he may quit the stage. Bacon.

I cannot fitlier compare marriage than to a lottery; for, in both, he that ventures may succeed, and may miss; and if he draw a prize, he hath a rich return of his venture: but in both lotteries there lie a pretty store of blanks for every prize. Boyle.

The whole of our duty may be expressed most fitly by departing from evil. Tillotson.

2. Commodiously; meetly.

To take a latitude, Sun or stars are fitly view'd At their brightest; but to conclude Of longitudes, what other way have we But to mark when and where the dark eclipses be. Donne.

An animal, in order to be movable, must be flexible; and therefore is fitly made of separate and small solid parts, replete with proper fluids. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

FITNESS, n. s. [from fit.]

1. Propriety; meetness; justness; reasonableness.

In things the fitness whereof is not of itself apparent, nor easy to be made sufficiently manifest unto all, yet the judgement of antiquity, concurring with that which is received, may induce them to think it not unfit. Hooker.

The queen being absent, 'tis a needful fitness That we adjourn this court. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

Wer't my fitness

To let these hands obey my boiling blood,
They're apt enough to dislocate and tear
Thy flesh and bones. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

2. Convenience; commodity; the state of being fit.

Nor time nor place
Did then cohere, and yet you would make both:
They've made themselves, and that their fitness
now

Does unmake you. Shakespeare, Macbeth.
FITMENT. n. s. [from fit.] Something adapted to a particular purpose. Not used.

Poor beseming: 'twas a fitment for
The purpose I then followed. Shakespeare, Cymb.

FITTABLE.* adv. [from fit.] Suitable. Not now in use. Sherwood.

FITTER.† n. s. [from fit.]

1. The person or thing that confers fitness for any thing.

Sowing the sandy gravelly land in Devonshire and Cornwall with French furze seed, they reckon a great improver of their land, and a fitter of it for corn. Mortimer, Husbandry.

2. A small piece; as, to cut into fitters. [from fetta, Italian; fetzen, German.] Skinner.

Where's the Frenchman? —

Alas! he's all to fitters.

Beaumont and Fl. Cust. of the Country.

They were in fitters about prosecuting their titles to this city. Fuller's Holy War, p. 225.

FITTINGLY.* adv. [from the part, fitting.] Properly; suitably.

It is rightly termed a new name, and very fittingly writ upon these Philadelphians.

More on the Sev. Churches, p. 138.

Which abstract terms do very fittingly agree with the notion we have put upon this symbolical earth. More, Conf. Cobb, p. 142.

FITZ. n. s. [Norman, from filz, a son, Fr.] A son. Only used in law and genealogy: as, Fitzherbert, the son of Herbert; Fitzthomas, the son of Thomas; Fitzroy, the son of the king. It is commonly used of illegitimate children.

FIVE.† adj. [fir, Saxon; funf, German; fimf, Goth. quinque, Latin.] Four and one; half of ten.

And five of them were wise, and five were foolish. St. Matt. xxv. 2.

No person, no incident, but must be of use to carry on the main design: all things else are like six fingers to the hand, when nature, which is superfluous in nothing, can do her work with five.

Dryden, Dufresnoy.

Five herds, five bleating flocks his pastures fill'd.

Dryden.

Our British youth lose their figure by that time they are five and twenty. Addison.

FIVEBAR.* } adj. [five and bar.]
FIVEBARRED. } Having five bars; usually applied to gates.

O check the foamy bit, nor tempt thy fate;
Think of the murders of a fivebar gate!

Gay, Birth of the Squire.

There master Betty leaps a fivebar'd gate.

Young, Satire, 5.

FIVEFOLD.* adj. [five and fold.] Having five distinctions; composed of five materials.

We may observe a fivefold difference among the creatures. Fotherby, Atheism, p. 176.

And bids his men bring out the fivefold twist.

W. Browne.

FIVELEAF.* n. s. Cinquefoil.

Campana here he crops —
And from the falling-ill by fiveleaf doth restore,
And melancholy cures by sovereign hellebore.
Drayton, Polyolb. S. 13.

FIVELEAVED GRASS.† n. s. Cinquefoil; a species of clover.

Fiveleaved grass, or cinquefoil, groweth in low and shadowy places, sometimes by the water-side; it is dry in the third degree. Barret, Alro. 1580.

FIVES. n. s.

1. A kind of play with a ball.

2. A disease of horses.

His horse sped with spavins, rayed with the yellows, past cure of the fives, and stark-spoiled with the staggers. Shakespeare.

TO FIX. v. a. [fixer, French; fixus, Latin.]

1. To make fast, firm, or stable.

Hell heard the insufferable noise, hell saw
Heaven running from heav'n, and would have fled

Affrighted, but that fate had fix'd too deep
Her dark foundations, and too fast had bound.

Milton, P. L.

2. To settle; to establish invariably.

Brightest seraph! tell

In which of all these orbs hath man

His fixed seat, or fixed seat hath none,

But all these shining orbs his choice to dwell!

Milton, P. L.

One loves fixed laws, and the other arbitrary power. Temple.

When custom hath fixed his eating to certain stated periods, his stomach will expect victuals at the usual hour. Locke.

3. To direct without variation.

Why are thine eyes fast to the sullen earth,
Gazing at that which seems to dim thy sight!

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

Thus while the Trojan prince employs his eyes,
Fix'd on the walls with wonder and surprise.

Dryden, Æn.

4. To deprive of volatility.

We pronounce concerning gold, that it is fixed.

Locke.

5. To pierce; to transfix. A sense purely Latin.

While from the raging sword he vainly flies,
A bow of steel shall fix his trembling thighs.

Sandys.

6. To withhold from motion.

TO FIX. v. n.

1. To settle the opinion; to determine the resolution.

If we would be happy, we must fix upon some foundation that can never deceive us. L'Étrange.

He made himself their prey,

T' impose on their belief and Troy betray;

Fix'd on his aim, and obstinately bent

To die undaunted, or to circumvent. Dryd. Æn.

Here hope began to dawn; resolv'd to try,

She fix'd on this her utmost remedy,

Death was behind; 'but hard it was to die. Dryd.

In most bodies, not propagated by seed, it is the colour we must fix on, and are most led by.

Locke.

2. To rest; to cease to wander.

Your kindness banishes your fear,

Resolv'd to fix for ever here. Waller.

3. To lose volatility; so as to be malleable.

In the midst of molten lead, when it beginneth to congeal, make a little dent, and put quicksilver, wrapped in a piece of linen, in that hole, and the quicksilver will fix and run no more, and endure the hammer. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

FIXATION.† n. s. [French, fixation.]

1. Stability; firmness; steadiness.

Your fixation in matters of religion will not be more necessary for your soul's than your kingdom's peace. King Charles.

Which some would fain set up as idols to such an immovable fixation, as if they were impious to endeavour to remove them.

Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsom. p. 57.

A vehement desire of affection, with an unalterable fixation of resolution.

Killingbeck, Serm. p. 32.

The fixation of your creed, sir, is the great object. — Hitherto the custom has been to fix creeds from Scripture. But Scripture you seem prepared to discard, whenever it does not please you.

Horne, Lett. to Dr. Priestley, p. 7.

2. Residence in a certain place.

To light, created in the first day, God gave no proper place or fixation. Raleigh, Hist. of the World.

3. Confinement; forbearance of excursion.

They are subject to errors from a narrowness of soul, a fixation and confinement of thought to a few objects. Watts.

4. Want of volatility; destruction of volatility.

Upon the compound body three things are chiefly to be observed; the colour, the fragility or plantness, and the volatility or fixation, compared with the simple bodies. Bacon.

It is more difficult to make gold of other metals less ponderous and less materiate, than to make silver of lead or quicksilver, both of which are more ponderous than silver; so that they need rather a degree of fixation than any condensation. Bacon.

5. Reduction from fluidity to firmness.

Salt dissolved, upon a fixation returns to its affected cubes. Glanville, Scepis.

FIXEDLY.† adv. [from fixed.]

1. Certainly; firmly; in a manner settled and established.

If we pretend that the distinction of species, or sorts, is fixedly established by the real and secret constitutions of things. Locke.

2. Stedfastly.

Her look is squint, with which wisely beholding one, she fixedly looketh upon another.

Transl. of Boccacini, (1626.) p. 71.

Omnipotency, omniscience, and infinite goodness enlarge the spirit while it fixtly looks on them. Burnet.

FIXEDNESS.† n. s. [from fixed.]

1. Stability; firmness.

The heavens, or any part of them, never stood still, but once, since they were made; but the earth was made for fixedness and stability.

Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 66.

The fixedness of the eternal Fates.

More, Song of the Soul, li. 114.

2. Want or loss of volatility.

Fixedness, or a power to remain in the fire unconsumed, is an idea that always accompanies our complex idea signified by the word gold. Locke.

3. Solidity; coherence of parts.

Fluid or solid comprehend all the middle degrees between extreme fixedness and coherency, and the most rapid intestine motion of the particles of bodies. Bentley.

4. Steadiness; settled opinion or resolution.

The peril that arises to the heart from passion, is the fixedness of it, when, like a corrosive plaster, it eats into the sore. Bp. Hall, Contempl. B. 4.

A fixedness in religion will not give my conscience leave to consent to innovations. K. Charles.

FIXIDITY. n. s. [from fixed.] Coherence of parts, opposed to volatility. A word of Boyle.

Bodies mingled by the fire are differing as to fixidity and v uility, and yet are so combined by the first operation of the fire, that itself does scarce afterwards separate them. Boyle.

FIXITY. n. s. [fixité, French.] Coherence of parts, opposed to volatility.

And are not the sun and fixed stars great earths vehemently hot, whose heat is conserved by the greatness of the bodies, and the mutual action and re-action between them, and the light which they emit, and whose parts are kept from fuming away, not only by their fixity, but also by the vast weight and density of the atmospheres incumbent upon them? Newton, Opticks.

FIXT.* part. of the verb fix. Fixed. See To Fix.

FIXTURE.* n. s. [from fixt. This word is unwarrantably inserted in some editions of Dr. Johnson's Dictionary; which has led Mr. Mason into an absurd and unjust attack upon Dr. Johnson for having arbitrarily altered fixure into fixture, to suit his purpose, for the latter word. Mr. Mason accordingly introduces fixure in his supplement, as if it had never before been noticed. But the fact is, that Dr. Johnson never noticed fixure; and that fixure is the word in his own editions of his work, as it really is in the passages which he cites from Shakespeare to illustrate it. Fixture, however, has been unaccountably given of late years in the Dictionary, with the examples from Shakespeare altered; and fixure has been as unjustly omitted. Fixture is a modern word.] That which is fixed; a piece of furniture fixed to a house; as, he took the fixtures at a fair valuation.

FIXURE.† n. s. [from fix.]

1. Position.

The fixure of her eye hath motion in't,
As we were mock'd with art. Shaksp. Wint. Tale.
Whose glorious fixure in so clear a sky.
Drayton, Baron's Wars, C. i.

2. Stable pressure.

The firm fixure of thy foot would give an excellent motion to thy gait.

Shakespeare, Mer. Wives of Windsor.

3. Firmness; stable state.

Frights, changes, horrors,
Divert and crack, rend and deracinate
The unity and married calm of states
Quite from their fixure. Shaksp. Troil. and Cress.

FIZGIG.† n. s. [properly fishgig, a sea term.]

1. A kind of dart or harpoon with which seamen strike fish.

Canst thou with fishgigs pierce him to the quick,
Or in his skull thy barbed trident stick.

Sandys, Job.

Such [dolphins] we salted as we could entice to taste our hooks or fishgigs.

Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 25.

We saw also abundance of flying fish, and their continual enemies, the albicore and dolphin; the latter we strike now and then with a fishgig or harping-iron.

Atkins, Voyage, p. 33.

2. A kind of firework, which boys make up in paper, and explode. [from fizz.]

Cotgrave in V. Troitiere.

3. A gadding flirt.

Then sterte forth a fishgigge,
And she brought a boar-pigge.

Skelton, Poems, p. 138.

TO FIZZ.* } v. n. [Icel. and Goth. fisa;
TO FIZZLE.* } fis, a puff or blast; low Lat.
visium.] To emit a slight and transient noise, or a slight continued noise; to make a kind of hiss. Ainsworth and others apply the latter of these words to suppressing wind from behind, or to fust, which is sometimes written also fiest, and fyst.

FLA'BBY.† adj. [flaccidus, Latin, Dr. Johnson says; but it is probably from the Teut. flabbe, a flap to drive away flies, originally any thing limber or pendulous; or, as Serenius deduces it, from the Swed. "flabb, bucca, labium pendulum," who adds the adjective "flabbig, bucculentus," i.e. having blubbered lips.] Soft; not firm; easily shaking or yielding to the touch.

Paleness, a weak pulse, palpitations of the heart, flabby and black flesh, are symptoms of weak fibres.

Pulls out the rags contriv'd to prop
Her flabby dugs, and down they drop. Swift.

FLA'BEL.* n. s. [Lat. labellum.] A fan. Obsolete. Huloet, and Sherwood.

FLA'BILE. adj. [flabilis, Latin.] Blown about by the wind; subject to be blown.

Diet.

FLA'CCID. adj. [flaccidus, Latin.] Weak;

limber; not stiff; lax; not tense.

The bowing and inclining the head is found in the great flower of the sun: the cause I take to be, is, that the part against which the sun beateeth waxeth more faint and flaccid in the stalk, and thereby less able to support the flower. Bacon.

They whose muscles are weak or flaccid, are unapt to pronounce the letter r.

Holder, Elem. of Speech.

The surgeon ought to vary the diet as he finds the fibres are too flaccid and produce funguses, or as they harden and produce callosities.

Arbutnot on Diet.

FLACCI'DITY. n. s. [from flaccid.] Laxity; limberness; want of tension; want of stiffness.

There is neither fluxion nor pain, but flaccidity joined with insensibility. Wiseman, Surgery.

TO FLA'CKER.* v. n. [Teut. fliggeren.] To flutter as a bird. A northern word. Grose, and Craven Dial.

TO FLAG.† v. n. [flaggeren, old Teutonic, to be loosened; pleogan, Saxon, to fly.]

1. To hang loose without stiffness or tension.

Beds of cotton wool hung up between two trees, not far from the ground; in the which, flagging down in the middle, men, wives and children lie together. Abbot.

The jades

That drag the tragic melancholy night,
Who with their drowsy, slow, and flagging wings
Clip dead men's graves. Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

It keeps those slender aerial bodies separated and stretched out, which otherwise, by reason of their flexibility and weight, would flag or curl.

Boyle, Spring of the Air.

Like a fiery meteor sunk the sun,
The promise of a storm; the shifting gales
Forsake by fits, and fill the flagging sails. Dryden.

2. To grow spiritless or dejected.

My flagging soul flies under her own pitch,
Like fowl in air too damp, and lags along
As if she were a body in a body:

My senses too are dull and stupify'd,
Their edge rebated: sure some ill approaches.

Dryden, Don Sebastian.

3. To grow feeble; to lose vigour.

Juice in language is somewhat less than blood; for if the words be but becoming and signifying, and the sense gentle, there is juice: but where that wanteth, the language is thin, flagging, poor, starved, scarce covering the bone, and shews like stones in a sack: some men, to avoid redundancy, run into that; and while they strive to hinder ill blood or juice, they lose their good.

B. Jonson, Discoveries.

His stomach will expect victuals at the usual hour, either fretting itself into a troublesome excess, or flagging into a downright want of appetite.

Locke.

Fame, when it is once at a stand, naturally flags and languishes. Addison, Spect.

If on sublimer wings of love and praise,
My love above the starry vault I raise,
Lur'd by some vain conceit of pride or lust,
I flag, I drop, and flutter in the dust. Arbutnot.

He sees a spirit hath been raised against him, and he only watches till it begins to flag: he goes about watching when to devour us. Swift.

The pleasures of the town begin to flag and grow languid, giving way daily to cruel inroads from the spleen. Swift.

TO FLAG.† v. a.

1. To let fall into feebleness; to suffer to droop.

The thought of dying may cool appetite and passion; it may blunt the edge of desire, and flag projects, chiefly those laid at a great distance.

Bp. Burnet, Sermon, p. 181.

Nothing so flags the spirits, disorders the blood, and enfeebles the whole body of man, as intense studies.

Echard, Grounds of the Cont. of the Clergy, p. 29.

Take heed, my dear, youth flies apace;
As well as Cupid, Time is blind:
Soon must those glories of thy face
The fate of vulgar beauty find:

The thousand loves, that arm thy potent eye,
Must drop their quivers, flag their wings, and die. Prior.

2. [From flag, a species of stone.] To lay with broad stone.

The sides and floor are all flagged with excellent marble. Sandys.

A white stone used for flagging floors. Woodward on Fossils.

FLAG. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A water plant with a bladed leaf and yellow flower, so called from its motion in the wind.

She took an ark of bulrushes, and laid it in the flags by the river's brink. Ex. ii. 3.

Can bulrushes but by the river grow?
Can flags there flourish where no waters flow.

There be divers fishes that cast their spawn on flags or stones, Walton, Angler.

Cut flag roots, and the roots of other weeds. Mortimer.

2. The colours or ensign of a ship or land-forces, by which signals are made at sea, or regiments are distinguished in the field.

These flags of France that are advanced here,
Before the eye and prospect of your town,
Have hither march'd to your endamagement.

Shakespeare, K. John.

He hangs out as many flags as he descrieth vessels; square, if ships; if gallees, pentads.

Sandys, Travels.

Democracies are less subject to sedition than where there are stirps of nobles: for if men's eyes are upon the persons, it is for the business sake as fittest, and not for flags or pedigree. Bacon.

Let him be girt

With all the grisly legions that troop
Under the sooty flag of Acheron,
Harpies and hydras, or all the monstrous forms
Twixt Africa and Inde, I'll find him out,

And force him to restore his purchase back,
Or drag him by the curls to a foul death.

Milton, Comus.

The French and Spaniard, when your flags appear,

Forget their hatred, and consent to fear. Waller.

The interpretation of that article about the flag is a ground at pleasure for opening a war. Temple.

In either's flag the golden serpents bear,
Erecting crests alike, like volumes rear,
And mingle friendly hissings in the hair.

Dryden, Aurengzebe.

Then they, whose mothers, frantick with their fear,

In woods and wilds the flags of Bacchus bear,
And lead his dances with dishevell'd hair.

Dryden, Æn.

3. A species of stone used for smooth pavements. [flache, old French. But see also FLAW.]

Part of two flags striated, but deeper on one side than the other. Woodward on Fossils.

Flagstones will not split, as slate does, being found formed into flags, or thin plates, which are no other than so many strata. Woodward on Fossils.

4. The surface of the earth, or upper turf, which they pare off, to burn, in denshiring land. Norfolk Dialect. Grose.
The Lancashire dialect gives flaighst as
"a kind of light turf."

FLAG-BROOM. n. s. [from flag and broom.]
A broom for sweeping flags or pavements, commonly made of birch-twigs,
or of the leaves of the dwarf-palm, imported from Spain.

FLAG-OFFICER. n. s. [flag and officer.] A commander of a squadron.

Her grandfather was a flag-officer. Add. Spect.

FLAG-SHIP. n. s. [flag and ship.] The ship in which the commander of a fleet

FLAG-WORM. n. s. [flag and worm.] A grub bred in watry places among flags or sedge.

He will in the three hot months bite at a flag- worm, or a green gentile. Warton, Angler.

FLA'GELET.† n. s. [flageolet, French, derived by some from the Gr. πλαγιανλος,
i. e. πλαγος, oblique, and αυλος, a pipe
or flute; by others from the Lat. flagellum, a little branch or twig. V. Roquefort, Gloss. et Morin, Dict. Etym.
Our own word is sometimes written flageolet.] A small flute; a small instrument of wind musick.

Play us a lesson on your flagelet.

More, Divine Dialogues.

To FLA'GELLATE.* v. a. [Lat. flagello.]
To whip or scourge. Cockeram.

FLAGELLATION.† n. s. [flagellatio, old
Fr.] The use of the scourge.

He underwent those previous pains which cus-tomarily antecede that suffering, as flagellation and bearing of the cross. Pears on the Creed, Art. 4.

By Bridewell all descend,
As morning pray'r and flagellation end.

Gorth, Dispensary.

FLA'GGINESS.† n. s. [from flaggy.] Laxity;
limberness; want of tension. Sherwood.

FLA'GGY. adj. [from flag.]

1. Weak; lax; limber; not stiff; not tense.

His flaggy wings, when forth he did display,
Were like two sails, in which the hollow wind
Is gather'd full, and worketh speedy way.

Spenser, F. Q.

That basking in the sun thy bees may lye,
And resting there, their flaggy pinions dry.

Dryden, Virg.

2. Weak in taste; insipid.

Graft an apple-cion upon the stock of a cole-wort, and it will bear a great flaggy apple.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

FLAG'ITIOUS. adj. [from flagitius, Lat.]

1. Wicked; villainous; atrocious.

No villany or flagitious action was ever yet committed, but, upon a due enquiry into the causes of it, it will be found that a lye was first or last the principal engine to effect it. South.

There's no working upon a flagitious and perverse nature by kindness and discipline. L' Estrange.

First, those flagitious times,
Pregnant with unknown crimes,
Conspire to violate the nuptial bed. Roscommon.

Perjury is a crime of so flagitious a nature, we cannot be too careful in avoiding every approach towards it. Addison.

But if in noble minds some dregs remain,
Not yet purg'd off, of spleen and sour disdain,
Discharge that rage on more provoking crimes,
Nor fear a dearth in these flagitious times. Pope.

2. Guilty of crimes.

He dies, sad outcast of each church and state,
And, harder still, flagitious yet not great. Pope.

FLAG'ITIOUSNESS.† n. s. [from flagitiosus.]

Wickedness; villany.
A and others would intentionally avoid all acts of flagitiousness and villany.

The Student, Def. of Relig. (1750), i. 176.

FLA'GON.† n. s. [flaccid, Welsh: plaxe,
Saxon; flaske, Danish; flacon, French; fiasco, Italian; flasco, Spanish. After all these citations, from the Welsh to the Spanish, by Dr. Johnson; we must rather agree with Upton and Ainsworth, who derive the Latin lagena, a flagon, from λαγνηος, Gr. a kind of cup, and a measure; which is from the Heb. lag;
whence our word, prefixing the f or digemma.] A vessel of drink with a narrow mouth.

A mad rogue! he pour'd a flagon of Rhenish on my head once. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

More had sent him by a suitor in Chancery two silver flagons. Bacon, Apophthegms.

Did they coin pispots, bowls, and flagons
Int' officers of horse and dragoons? Hudibras.

His trusty flagon, full of potent juice,
Was hanging by, worn thin with age and use.

Roscommon.

One flagon walks the round, that none should think

They either change, or stint him of his drink.

Dryden, Juv.

FLA'GRANCE.* n. s. [old Fr. flagrance;
"flagrance d'un delict, plain apparency of an offence," Cotgrave.] Notorious-ness; glaring offence.

They bring to him a woman taken in the flag- rance of her adultery. Bp. Hall, Contempl. B. 4.

FLA'GRANCY.† n. s. [flagrantia, Latin.]

1. Burning; heat; fire.

Last causeth a flagrancy in the eyes, as the sight and the touch are the things desired, and therefore the spirits resort to those parts. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

2. Notoriousness; glaring impudence.

In some places they will assemble diverse of their fairest courtisans, to draw the modest beauty of a virgin out of the flagrancy of harlots.

Sir E. Sandys, State of Religion.

FLA'GRANT.† adj. [flagrant, old Fr.
flagrans, Latin.]

1. Ardent; burning; eager. It is always used figuratively.

A thing which filleth the mind with comfort and heavenly delight, stireth up flagrant desires and affections, correspondent unto that which the words contain. Hooker.

2. Glowing; flushed.

See Sapho, at her toilet's greasy task,
Then issuing flagrant to an evening mask:
So morning insects, that in muck begun,
Shine, buz, and fly-blow in the setting sun. Pope.

3. Red; imprinted red.

Their common loves, a lewd abandon'd pack,
The beetle's lash still flagrant on their back. Prior.

4. Notorious; flaming into notice. "Predre au fait flagrant," Cotgrave.

When fraud is great, it furnishes weapons to defend itself; and at worst, if the crimes be so flagrant that a man is laid aside out of perfect shame, he retires loaded with the spoils of the nation. Swift.

With equal poize let steady justice sway,
And flagrant crimes with certain vengeance pay;
But till the proofs are clear the stroke delay. Smith.

FLA'GRANTLY.* adv. [from flagrant.]

1. Ardently; eagerly.

2. Notoriously.

An epigram of four lines [is] a species of wit as flagrant unsuitable to the dignity, and as foreign to the nature of the lyric, as it is of the epic muse.

Dr. Warton, Ess. on Pope.

To FLA'GRATE.* v. a. [Lat. flagro.] To burn; to injure by fire.

This lamp stands on the foot of an eagle or hawk, thereby, says Kircher, to represent how Typhon's destructive and flagrating power, lying hid in the sun, was made more temperate.

Greenhill, Art of Embalming, (1705), p. 336.

FLA'GRATION.† n. s. [flagro, Latin.]
Burning.

See! in this glad farewell he doth appear,
Stuck with the constellations of his sphere,
Fearing we numm'd fear'd no flagration,
Hath curled all his fires in this one One.

Loveace, Luc. Posth. (1659), p. 72.

FLA'GSTAFF. n. s. [flag and staff.] The staff on which the flag is fixed.

The duke, less numerous, but in courage more,
On wings of all the winds to combat flies:
His murdering guns a loud defiance roar,
And bloody crosses on his flagstaffs rise.

Dryden, Ann. Mirab.

FLAIL.† n. s. [flagellum, Latin; flagel, German, Dr. Johnson says. It is more directly the old French flael, or flaiel,
"fléau à battre le bled." V. Roq.
Gloss.] The instrument with which grain is beaten out of the ear; the tool of the thresher.

Our soldiers, like the night owl's lazy flight,
Or like a lazy thresher with a flail,
Fell gently down as if they struck their friends.

Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

When in one night, ere glimpse of morn,
His shadowy flail hath thresh'd the corn,
That ten day-labourers could not end.

Milton, L' All.

In this pile shall reign a mighty prince,
Born for a scourge of it, and flail of sense. Dryden.

The dexterous handling of the flail, or the plough, and being good workmen with these tools, did not hinder Gideon's and Cincinnatus's skill in arms and government. Locke.

The thresher, Duck, could o'er the queen prevail;

The proverb says, no fence against a flail. Swift.

FLAKE.† n. s. [Sw. flake; Icel. flak, a part separated from the rest; from flaka, to divide; placea, Sax. flakes of snow;
flocke, Germ. a flake; fiocco, Ital. flocuus,
Latin.]

1. Any thing that appears loosely held together, like a flock of wool.

Crimson circles, like red flakes in the element,
when the weather is hottest. Sidney.

And from his wide devouring oven sent

A flake of fire, that flushing in his beard,
Him all amaz'd, and almost made affear'd.

Spenser, F. Q.

The earth is sometimes covered with snow two or three feet deep, made up only of little flakes or pieces of ice. Burnet.

Small drops of a misling rain, descending through a freezing air, do each of them shoot into one of those figured icicles; which, being ruffled by the wind, in their fall are broken, and clustered together into small parcels, which we call flakes of snow. Grew, Cosmol. Sacra.

Upon throwing in a stone the water boils for a considerable time, and at the same time are seen little flakes of scurf rising up. Addison on Italy.

2. A stratum; layer; film; lamina.

The flakes of his tough flesh so firmly bound,
As not to be divorced by a wound. Sandys.

The teeth cut away great flakes of the metal, till it received the perfect form the teeth would make.

Morox.

- To FLAKE. v. a. [from the noun.] To form in flakes or bodies loosely connected.

From the bleak pole no winds incline blow,
Mold the round hail, or flake the fleecy snow.

Pope, Odys.

- To FLAKE. v. n. To break into laminae;
to part in loose bodies.

- FLA'KY. adj. [from flake.]

1. Loosely hanging together.

The silent hour steals on,
And flaky darkness breaks within the East.
Shakspeare, Rich. III.

The trumpet roars, long flaky flames expire,
With sparks that seem to set the world on fire.

Pope.

Hence, when the snows in winter cease to weep,
And undissolv'd their flaky texture keep,
The banks with ease their humble streams contain,
Which swell in summer, and those banks disdain.

Blackmore.

2. Lying in layers or strata; broken into laminae.

FLAM.† n. s. [A cant word of no certain etymology, Dr. Johnson says. It is probably the Icel. flim, a mocking. Our old poets Ben Jonson and Beaumont and Fletcher use it evidently in the sense of a freak or whim. Sherwood calls flam
"a flimflam tale." See FLIMFLAM.]

1. A freak; a whim; a fancy. Not noticed by Dr. Johnson.

Hard trifles, anagrams,
Or eteosticks, or your finer flams
Of eggs, and halberts, cradles and a hearse,
A pair of scissars, and a comb in verse!

B. Jonson, Underwoods.

Thou hast more of
These flams in thee, these musty doubts.

Beaum. and Fl. Loyal Subject.

She sings admirably;
But still when any hope was, 'tis her trick
To minister enough of those, then presently
With some new flam or other, nothing to the matter,
And such a frown, as would sink all before her,
She takes her chamber.

Beaum. and Fl. Hum. Lieutenant.

2. A falsehood; a lie; an illusory pretext.

A flam more senseless than the rog'ry
Of old auspicy and aug'ry. Hudibras.

Till these men can prove the things, ordered by our church, to be either intrinsically unlawful or indecent, all pretences or pleas of conscience to the contrary are nothing but cant and cheat, flam and delusion. South.

What are most of the histories of the world but lies? Lies immortalized and consigned over as a perpetual abuse and flam upon posterity. South.

- To FLAM. v. a. [from the noun.] To deceive with a lie. Merely cant.

For so our ignorance was flam'd,
To damn ourselves't avoid being damn'd. Hudibras.
God is not to be flam'd off with lies, who knows exactly what thou can'st do, and what not.

South.

- FLA'MBEAU. n. s. [French.] A lighted torch.

The king seized a flambeau with zeal to destroy.

Dryden.

As the attendants carried each of them a flambeau in their hands, the sultan, after having ordered all the lights to be put out, gave the word to enter the house, find out the criminal, and put him to death.

Addison, Guardian.

- FLAME.† n. s. [flamma, Latin; flamme, French; flam, old Cornish, old French and Celt.]

1. Light emitted from fire.

Is not flame a vapour, fume, or exhalation heated red hot, that is, so hot as to shine? For bodies do not flame without emitting a copious fume, and this fume burns in the flame.

Newton, Opticks.

What flame, what lightning e'er
So quickly an active force did bear!

Cowley.

2. Fire.

Jove, Prometheus' theft allow;
The flames he once stole from thee, grant him now.

Cowley.

3. Ardour of temper or imagination; brightness of fancy; vigour of thought.

Of all our elder plays,

This and Philaster have the loudest flame;
Great are their faults, and glorious is their flame:
In both our English genius is exprest,
Lofty and bold, but negligently drest. Waller.

4. Ardour of inclination.

Smit with the love of kindred arts we came,
And met congenial, mingling flame with flame.

Pope.

5. Passion of love.

My heart's on flame, and does like fire
To her aspire.
Come arm'd in flames; for I would prove
All the extremities of love.
No warning of th' approaching flame;
Swiftly like sudden death it came:
I lov'd the moment I beheld. Granville.

- To FLAME.† v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To shine as fire; to burn with emission of light.

Can you think to blow out the intended fire your city is ready to flame in, with such weak breath as this?

Shakspeare.

Him the Almighty Power
Hurl'd headlong flaming through the ethereal sky
To bottomless perdition. Milton, P. L.

Hell all around
As one great furnace flam'd. Milton, P. L.

2. To shine like flame.

Behold it like an ample curtain spread,
Now streak'd and glowing with the morning red;
Anon at noon in flaming yellow bright,
And chusing sable for the peaceful night. Prior.

3. To break out in violence of passion.

Lascivious fires, should such flame in you,
As I must ne'er believe.

Beaum. and Fl. Lover's Progress.

- To FLAME.† v. a. To inflame; to excite;
to animate.

Much was he moved at that rueful sight;
And, flam'd with zeal of vengeance inwardly,
He ask'd who had that dame so foully dign'd.

Spenser, F. Q. v. i. 14.

And since their courage is so nobly flam'd,
This morning we'll behold the champions
Within the list. Beaum. and Fl. Coronation.

- FLA'MECOLOUR.† n. s. [flame and colour.]
The colour of flame.

The first was Splendour in a robe of flamecolour.
B. Jonson, Masques at Court.

- Changing it from a red-rose crimson to flame- colour. Sir W. Petty, Sprat's Hist. R. S. p. 289.

- FLA'MECOLOURED. adj. [flame and colour.]
Of a bright yellow colour.

'Tis strong, and it does indifferent well in flamecoloured stockings. Shakspeare, Tw. Night.

August shall bear the form of a young man of a fierce and choleric aspect, in a flamecoloured garment. Peacham.

- FLA'MEYED.† adj. [flame and eye.]
Having eyes like flames. A fine epithet in the following fine lines.

Nor sea, nor shade, nor shield, nor rock, nor cave,
Nor silent deserts, nor the sullen grave,
Where flame-ey'd Fury means to smite, can save.

Quarles, Emblems.

- FLA'MELESS.† adj. [flame and less.] Without flame; without incense.

Both king, and priest, obnoxious to his hate,
Detests his sanctuary, and forsakes
His flameless altar. Sandys, Lament. p. 4.

- FLA'MEN.† n. s. [Latin.] A priest;
one that officiates in solemn offices.

The heathen Romans, had their flamens, and archflamens; the Britons and Gauls their druids.

Featley, Dippers Dipt. p. 130.

A dear and dying sound
Affrights the flamens at their service quaint.

Milton, Ode Nativ.

Then first the flamen tasted living food;
Next his grim idol smear'd with human blood.

Pope.

- FLA'MING.† n. s. [from flame.] The act of bursting out in flames.

Which honour I to fiery flames compare;

For when they flash and flourish most of all,
Then suddenly their flamings quenched are.

Mir. for Mag. p. 228.

- FLA'MINGLY.† adv. [from flaming.] Ra-diantly; most brightly.

Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

- FLA'MINGO.† n. s. The name of a very remarkable and beautiful bird, common in many parts of America, and seen at times in other parts of the world.

Here [at the Mauritius island] are also aeries of hawks, and sundry other birds; as goshawks, hobbies, passe-flamingoes, geese.

Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 383.

- FLA'MINICAL.† adj. [from flaman, Lat.]
Belonging to the Roman priest.

Superstitious coqs and flaminical vestures.

Milton, Reas. of Ch. Gov. ii. 2.

- FLAMMA'TION. n. s. [flammati, Latin.]
The act of setting on flame.

White or crystalline arsenick, being artificial,
and sublimed with salt, will not endure flam- mation. Brown, Vulg. Err.

- FLAMMAB'ILITY. n. s. [flamma, Latin.]
The quality of admitting to be set on fire, so as to blaze.

In the sulphur of bodies torrifed, that is, the oily, fat and unctuous parts, consist the principles of flammability.

Brown.

- FLA'MMEOUS. adj. [flammeus, Latin.] Consisting of flame; resembling flame.

This flammeous light is not over all the body.

Brown.

- FLAMMI'FEROUS. adj. [flammifer, Latin.]
Bringing flame. Dict.

FLA'MY,† adj. [from flame.]

1. Inflamed; burning; blazing.

My thoughts imprison'd in my secret woes,
With flamy breaths do issue oft in sound. Sidney.

2. Having the nature of flame.

The vital spirits of living creatures are a substance compounded of an airy and flamy matter; and though air and flame, being free, will not well mingle, yet bound in by a body they will.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

3. Flame coloured.

A flamy redness will overspread the heavens.

Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 53.

FLANG.* old pret. of the verb fling. See To FLING.

On every side full fast we flang the Frenchmen downe.

Mir. for Mag. p. 489.

FLANK.† n. s. [flanc, French, according to Menage, from λαγών; more probably from latus, Latin. So far Dr. Johnson. Our word, which is also the Germ. flanke, is, however, the Teut. lancke, the same, with the addition of f. In this Kilian and Wachter agree.]

1. That part of the side of a quadruped near the hinder thigh.

The belly shall be eminent by shadowing the flank.

Peachment.

Do not those goodly flanks and briskets march up in your stately chargers?

Milton, Anim. Rem. Defence.

2. [In men.] The lateral part of the lower belly.

He covereth his face with his fatness, and maketh collops of fat on his flanks. Job, xv. 27.

He said, and pois'd in air the jav'lin sent;
Through Paris' shield the forceful weapon went,
His corslet pierces, and his garment rends,
And glancing downward near his flank descends.

Pope.

3. The side of any army or fleet.

Great ordnance and small shot thundered and showered upon our men from the rampier in front, and from the galleys that lay at sea in flank.

Bacon, War with Spain.

Gray was appointed to stand on the left side, in or at he might take the flank of the enemy.

Haywards.

To right and left the front

Divided and to either flank retired. Milton, P. L.

4. [In fortification.] That part of the bastion which reaches from the curtain to the face, and defends the opposite face, the flank and the curtain. Harris.

To FLANK.† v. a. [Fr. flanquer.]

1. To attack the side of a battalion or fleet.

2. To be posted so as to overlook or command any pass on the side.

With fates averse against their king's command,
Arm'd on the right, and on the left they stand,
And flank the passage. Dryden, Æn.

We cannot talk in rank and file, and flank and rear our discourses with military allusions.

Scott, Sermon before the Artillery Comp. (1630.)

Works, ii. 24.

3. To secure on the side.

By the rich scent we found our perfum'd prey,
Which, flank'd with rocks, did close in covert lay.

Dryden.

To FLANK*. v. n. To border; to touch.

That side, which flanks on the sea and haven,
Needs no art to fortify it.

Buller, Rem. ed. Tyeer. vol. i. p. 417.

FLANKER.† n. s. [from flank.] A fortification jutting out so as to command the side of a body marching to the assault.

The Turks, discouraged with the loss of their fellows, and sore beaten by the Spaniards out of their flankers, were enforced to retire.

Knolles, Hist. of the Turks.

Like storms of hail the stones fell down from high,

Cast from the bulwarks, flankers, ports, and towers.

Fairfax.

In this disorder, a flanker by mischance was blown up; but the siege continued.

Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 109.

To FLANKER.† v. a. [flanquer, French.]

1. To defend by lateral fortifications.

The city is compassed with a thick wall, flankered, and moated about.

Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 40.

The castle was neither so weakly manned, nor flankered, as they were made to believe.

Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 277.

2. To attack sideways.

Where sharp winds do rather flanker, than blow fully opposite upon, our plantations, they thrive best.

Evelyn, i. iii. § 8.

FLANKNEL. n. s. [gwlanel, Welsh; from gwlan, wool, Davies.]

A soft nappy stuff of wool.

I cannot answer the Welsh flannel. Shakespeare.

To FLANT.† See To FLAUNT.

FLAP.† n. s. [flabbe, Teut. a flyflap; originally, any thing pendulous. See FLABBY.]

1. Any thing that hangs broad and loose, fastened only by one side.

There is a peculiar provision for the windpipe, that is, a cartilaginous flap upon the opening of the larynx, which hath an open cavity for the admission of the air.

Brown.

Some surgeons make a crucial incision, upon the supposition that the wound will more easily heal by turning down the flaps.

Sharp, Surgery.

2. The motion of any thing broad and loose.

3. [A disease in horses.]

When a horse has the flaps, you may perceive his lips swelled on both sides of his mouth; and that which is in the blisters is like the white of an egg; cut some slashes with a knife, and rub it once with salt, and it will cure.

Farrier's Dict.

To FLAP. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To beat with a flap, as flies are beaten.

A hare, hard put to it by an eagle, took sanctuary in a ditch with a beetle; the eagle flap'd off the former, and devoured the other.

L'Estrange.

Yet let me flap this bug with gilded wings,
This painted child of dirt that stinks and stings.

Pope.

2. To move with a flap or noise made by the stroke of any thing broad.

With fruitless toil

Flop filmy pinions off, to extricate

Their feet in liquid shackles bound.

Philips.

Three times, all in the dead of night,
A bell was heard to ring;

And shrieking at her window thrice
The raven flap'd his wing.

Tickell.

To FLAP. v. n.

1. To ply the wings with noise.

'Tis common for a duck to run flapping and fluttering away, as if maimed, to carry people from her young.

L'Estrange.

The dire flapping on the shield of Turnus, and fluttering about his head, disheartened him in the duel.

Dryden, Æn.

2. To fall with flaps, or broad parts depending.

When suffocating mists obscure the morn,
Let thy worst wig, long used to storms, be worn;

This knows the powder'd footman, and with care
Beneath his flapping hat secures his hair.

Gay, Trivia.

FLAPDRAGON.† n. s. [from a dragon supposed to breathe fire. The word is sometimes called snapdragon, or slapdragon.]

1. A play in which they catch raisins out of burning brandy, and extinguishing them by closing the mouth, eat them. Gallants thus drank the healths of their mistresses.

2. The thing eaten at flapdragon.

He plays at quails well, and eats conger and fennel, and drinks candles ends for flapdragons, and rides the wild mare with the boys.

Shakespeare, Hen. IV. P. II.

Flapdragons, healths, whiffs, and all such swaggering humours.

B. Jonson, Cynthia's Revels.

To FLAPDRAGON. v. a. [from the noun.]

To swallow; to devour. Low cant.

But to make an end of the ship, to see how the sea flapdragoned it.

Shakespeare, Wint. Tale.

FLA'PEARED. adj. [flap and ear.] Having loose and broad ears.

A whoreson, beetleheaded, flap-eared knave.

Shakespeare.

FLA'PJACK.† n. s. An apple puff, so called in some counties; anciently a pancake.

We'll have flesh for holidays, fish for fasting-days, and moreover puddings and flapjacks; and thou shalt be welcome.

Shakespeare, Pericles.

FLA'PMOUTHED.* adj. [flap and mouth.] Having loose lips.

When he [the hound] had ceas'd his noise,
Another flap-mouth'd mourner black and grim,
Against the welkin vollied out his voice.

Shakespeare, Ven. and Adolis.

FLA'PPER.* n. s. [from flap.]

1. A fan, or flap for wind.

Barret.

2. Figuratively, one who endeavours to make another remember.

I write to you, by way of flapper, to put you in mind of yourself.

Ld. Chesterfield.

To FLARE. v. a. [from fladeren, to flutter, Dutch, Skinner; perhaps accidentally changed from glare.]

1. To glitter with transient lustre.

Doctrine and life, colours and light, in one
When they combine and mingle, bring
A strong regard and awe; but speech alone
Doth vanish like a flaring thing,
And in the ear, not conscience, ring.

Herbert.

2. To glitter offensively.

When the sun begins to fling
His flaring beams, me, goddess, bring
To arched walks of twilight groves. Milt. Il Pens.

3. To be in too much light.

I cannot stay

Flaring in sunshine all the day.

Prior.

4. To flatter with a splendid show.

She shall be loose enrob'd,
With ribbands pendant flaring 'bout her head.

Shakespeare.

FLASH.† n. s. [φάεξ, Gr. a flame, Minshew; to which Dr. Johnson accedes. Skinner offers blaze as the etymology. Our word seems to have some connection with the Icel. flas, a tumbling down from a high place; as, where it means a body of water driven by violence.]

1. A sudden, quick, transitory blaze.

When the cross blue light'n'ing seem'd to open
The breast of heav'n, I did present myself
Ev'n in the aim and very flash of it.

Shakespeare, Jul. Cæs.

We see a flash of a piece is seen sooner than the noise is heard.
Bacon, Nat. Hist.
 One with a flash begins, and ends in smoke;
 The other out of smoke brings glorious light.

Roscommon.

And as Egeon, when with heaven he strove,
 Defy'd the fork lightning from afar,
 At fifty mouths his flaming breath expires,
 And flash for flash returns, and fires for fires.
Dryden, Æn.

2. Sudden burst of wit or merriment.

Where be your gibes now? your gambols?
 your songs? your flashes of merriment, that were wont to set the table in a roar? Shaks. Hamlet.

Wicked men prefer the light flashes of a wanton mirth, which for awhile suspend reflection, and hide the sinner from himself, to such discourses
 as awaken conscience. Rogers.

3. A short transient state.

The Persians and Macedonians had it for a flash. Bacon.

4. A body of water driven by violence.

Any little pool. North. Pegge.

TO FLASH.† v. n.

1. To glitter with a quick and transient flame.

This salt powdered, and put into a crucible,
 was, by the injection of well kindled charcoal,
 made to flash divers times almost like melted nitre.
Boyle.

2. To burst out into any kind of violence.

By day and night he wrongs me; ev'ry hour
 He flashes into one gross crime or other,
 That sets us all at odds. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

3. To break out into wit, merriment, or bright thought.

They flash out sometimes into an irregular greatness of thought. Felton on the Classicists.

4. To rise in flashes; to dash.

The flashing waves divide. Pope, Odyssey 6.

TO FLASH.† v. a.

1. To strike up large bodies of water from the surface.

With his raging arms he rudely flash'd
 The waves about, and all his armour swept,
 That all the blood and filth away was wash'd.
Spenser, F. Q.

If the sea-water be flushed with a stick or oar,
 the same casteth a shining colour, and the drops resemble sparkles of fire. Carew, Surv. of Cornwall.

2. To trick up in a showy manner. See FLASHY.

Oft have I season'd savoury periods
 With sugred words, to delude Gustus' taste;
 And oft embellish'd my entreative phrase
 With smelling flowers of vermant rhetoric,
 Limning and flushing it with various dyes,
 To draw proud Visus to me by the eyes.
Brewer, Com. of Lingua, (1657.) l. 1.

FLASHER.† n. s. [from flash.]

1. A man of more appearance of wit than reality.

Dict.

2. A rower; a flasher, or a dasher of water.

[Fr. gascœur.] Cotgrave.

FLASHLY. adv. [from flashy.] With empty show; without real power of wit or solidity of thought.

FLASHY.† adj. [from flash.]

1. Empty; not solid; showy without substance.

Flashy ships cannot fathom the whole extent of a large discourse. Digby on the South, Ded.

When they list, their lean and flashy songs
 Grate on their scranell pipes of wretched straw.
Milton, Lycidas.

This mean conceit, this darling mystery,
 Which thou think'st nothing, friend! thou shalt not buy;
 Nor will I change for all the flashy wit. Dryd. Pers.

2. [From flaccidus, Skinner.] Insipid; without force or spirit.

Distilled books are, like common distilled waters, flashy things. Bacon, Ess.

The tastes that most offend in fruits, herbs, and roots, are bitter, harsh, sour, waterish, or flashy.
Bacon, Nat. Hist.

3. [Fr. gascœur.] Plashy; washy; dashing; bespirling.

Cotgrave.

FLASK.† n. s. [flaque, Fr. flasche, Teut.

Then for the Bourdeaux you may freely ask;
 But the Champagne is to each man his flask.
King.

2. A powder-horn.

Powder in a skillless soldier's flask
 Is set on fire. Shakspeare.

The sun is spent, and now his flasks
 Send forth light squibs, no constant rays.
Donne, Poems, p. 35.

FLASKET.† n. s. [Fr. flasket.]

1. A vessel in which viands are served.

Another plac'd
 The silver stands, with golden flaskets grac'd.
Pope, Odys.

2. A long shallow basket. Ray, and Grose.

Each one had a little wicker basket,
 Made of fine twigs, entrailed curiously,
 In which they gather'd flowers to fill their flasket.
Spenser, Prothalamion.

FLAT.† adj. [flatr, Icel. flad, Danish; plat, Fr. πλατυς, Gr.]

1. Horizontally level without inclination.

Thou all-shaking thunder,
 Strike flat the thick rotundity of the world.
Shakspeare, K. Lear.

Virtue could see to do what virtue would
 By her own radiant light, though sun and moon
 Were in the flat sea sunk. Milton, Comus.

The houses are flat roofed to walk upon, so that every bomb that fell on them would take effect. Addison on Italy.

2. Smooth; without protuberances.

In the dawning of the next day we might plainly discern it was a land flat to our sight, and full of bosage. Bacon.

3. Not elevated; fallen; not erect.

Cease t' admire, and beauty's plumes
 Fall flat, and shrink into a trivial toy,
 At every sudden slighting quite abasht. Milt. P. L.

4. Level with the ground.

In them is plainest thought, and easiest learnt,
 What makes a nation happy, and keeps it so,
 What ruins kingdoms, and lays cities flat.
Milton, P. R.

That Christ-church stands above ground, and that the church of Westminster lies not flat upon it, is your lordship's commendation. South.

5. Lying prostrate; lying along.

The wood born people fall before her flat,
 And worship her as goddess of the wood.
Spenser, F. Q.

That lamentable wound,
 Which laid that wretched prince flat on the ground.
Daniel.

6. [In painting.] Wanting relief; wanting prominence of the figures.

7. Tasteless; insipid; dead.

He, like a puling cuckold, would drink up
 The lees and dregs of a flat tamed piece.
Shakspeare, Troil. and Cress.

Taste so divine! that what of sweet before Hath touch'd my sense, flat seems to this and harsh. Milton, P. L.

The miry fields,
 Rejoicing in rich mold, most ample fruit
 Of beauteous form produce; pleasing to sight,
 But to the tongue inelegant and flat. Philips.

8. Dull; unamused; frigid.

Short speeches fly abroad like darts, and are thought to be shot out of secret intentions; but as for large discourses, they are flat things, and not so much noted. Bacon.

Some short excursions of a broken vow
 He made indeed, but flat insipid stuff.

Dryden, Don Sebastian.

9. Depressed; spiritless; dejected.

I feel my genial spirits droop,
 My hopes all flat, nature within me seems
 In all her functions weary of herself. Milt. S. A.

10. Unpleasing; tasteless.

How weary, stale, flat, and unprofitable
 Seem to me all the uses of this world!
Shakspeare, Hamlet.

To one firmly persuaded of the reality of heavenly happiness, and earnestly desirous of obtaining it, all earthly satisfactions must needs look little, and grow flat and unsavoury.
Auberbury, Serm.

11. Peremptory; absolute; downright.

His horse with flat tiring taught him, that discrete stays make speedy journeys. Sidney.

It is a flat wrong to punish the thought or purpose of any before it be enacted; for true justice
 punisheth nothing but the evil act or wicked word.
Spenser on Ireland.

As it is in the nature of all men to love liberty, so they become flat libertines, and fall to all licentiousness. Spenser.

You start away,
 And lend no ear unto my purposes;
 Those prisoners you shall keep:
 — I will, that's flat. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

Thus repuls'd, our final hope
 Is flat despair: we must exasperate
 Th' Almighty Victor to spend all his rage,
 And that must end us. Milton, P. L.

If thou sin in wine or wantonness,
 Boast not thereof, nor make thy shame thy glory;
 Frailty gets pardon by submissiveness:
 But he that boasts, shuts that out of his story:
 He makes flat war with God, and doth defy
 With his meer cloud of earth the spacious sky.
Herbert.

You had broke and robb'd his house,
 And stole his talismanique louse;
 And all his new-found old inventions,
 With flat felonious intentions. Hudibras.

12. Not shrill; not acute; not sharp in sound.

If you stop the holes of a hawk's bell it will make no ring, but a flat noise or rattle.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

The upper end of the windpipe is ended with several cartilages and muscles to contract or dilate it, as we would have our voice flat or sharp.

Ray on the Creation.

FLAT.† n. s.

1. A level; an extended plane.

The strings of a lute, viol, or virginals, give a far greater sound, by reason of the knot, board, and concave underneath, than if there were nothing but only the flat of a board to let in the upper air into the lower. Bacon.

Because the air receiveth great tincture from the earth, expose flesh or fish, both upon a stake of wood some height above the earth, and upon the flat of the earth. Bacon.

It comes near an artificial miracle to make divers distinct eminences appear a flat by force of shadows, and yet the shadows themselves not to appear. Wotton, Architecture.

He has cut the side of the rock into a flat for a garden; and by laying on it the waste earth, that he has found in several of the neighbouring parts, furnished out a kind of luxury for a hermit.
Addison on Italy.

2. Even ground ; not mountainous.

Now pile your dust upon the quick and dead,
Till of this flat a mountain you have made,
To o'er-top old Pelion, or the skyish head
Of blue Olympus. Shakespeare, Hamlet.

The way is ready and not long,
Beyond a row of myrtles, on a flat,
Fast by a mountain. Milton, P. L.

3. A smooth low ground exposed to inundations.

The ocean, overpeering of his list,
Eats not the flats with more impetuous haste,
Than young Laertes, in a riotous head,
O'erbears your officers. Shakespeare, Hamlet.
All the infections, that the sun sucks up
From bogs, fens, flats, on Prospero fall.

Shakespeare, Tempest.
Half my pow'r's this night,
Passing these flats, are taken by the tide;
These Lincoln washes have devoured them.

Shakespeare, K. John.

4. Shallow ; strand ; place in the sea where the water is not deep enough for ships.

I should not see the sandy hour-glass run,
But I should think of shallows and of flats.

Shakespeare.

The difficulty is very great to bring them in or out through so many flats and sands, if wind and weather be not very favourable. Raleigh, Ess.

Having newly left these grammatical flats and shallows, where they stuck unreasonably, they are now tormented with their unballasted wits in fathomless and unquiet deeps of controversy.

Milton on Education.

Full in the prince's passage hills of sand,
And dang'rous flats, in secret ambush lay,
Where the false tides skim o'er the cover'd land,

And seamen with dissembled depths betray.

Dryden.

Must we now have an ocean of mere flats and shallows, to the utter ruin of navigation ? Bentley.

5. The broad side of a blade.

A darted mandate came
From that great will which moves this mighty frame,

Bid me to thee, my royal charge, repair,
To guard thee from the demons of the air ;
My flaming sword above 'em to display,
All keen and ground upon the edge of day,
The flat to sweep the visions from thy mind,
The edge to cut 'em through that stay behind.

Dryden.

6. Depression of thought or language.

Milton's Paradise Lost is admirable ; but am
I therefore bound to maintain, that there are no flats amongst his elevations, when 'tis evident he creeps along sometimes for above an hundred lines together ? Dryden.

7. A surface without relief, or prominences.

Are there then such ravishing charms in a dull unvaried flat, to make a sufficient compensation for the chief things of the ancient mountains, and for the precious things of the lasting hills.

Bentley, Serm.

8. [In musick.] A kind of additional or half note, contrived, together with sharps, to remedy the defects of musical instruments ; which, taking the name of the natural note next above it, and having a distinctive mark, is called a flat. Thus D flat signifies a semitone below D natural.

To FLAT-† v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To level ; to depress ; to make broad and smooth.

The ancients say, if you take two twigs of several fruit-trees, and flat them on the sides, and bind them close, and set them in the ground, they will come up in one stock. Bacon.

With horrid shapes she does her sons expose,
Distends their swelling lips, and flats their nose.
Creech.

2. To make vapid.

An orange, lemon, and apple, wrapt in a linen cloth, being buried for a fortnight four foot deep within the earth, though in a moist place and rainy time, were become a little harder than their were ; otherwise fresh in their colour, but they juice somewhat flattened. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

3. To render unanimated or evanid.

Nor are constant forms of prayer more likely to flat and hinder the spirit of prayer and devotion, than unpremeditated and confused variety to distract and lose it. K. Charles.

It mortifies the body, and flats the pleasure of the senses. Glanville, Serm. p. 279.

To FLAT. v. n. To grow flat : opposed to swell.

I burnt it the second time, and observed the skin shrink, and the swelling to flat yet more than at first. Temple.

FLAT-BO-TTOMED.* adj. [flat and bottom.]

1. Having a flat bottom, applied to boats.

We saw great vessels with masts and sails, flat- bottomed, — keeping in sight of land.

Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 189.

2. [In fortification.] A moat which has no sloping, its corners being somewhat rounded.

Chambers.

FLA'TIVE.* adj. [Lat. flatus.] Producing wind ; flatulent.

Eat not too many of those apples ; they be very flative. Brewer, Com. of Lingua. (1657.)

FLA'TLONG. adv. [flat and long.] With the flat downwards ; not edgewise.

What a blow was there given ?

— An it had not fallen flatlong. Shaksp. Tempest.

1. Horizontally ; without inclination.

2. Without prominence or elevation.

3. Without spirit ; dully ; frigidly.

4. Peremptorily ; downright.

He in these wars had flatly refused his aid.

Sidney.

Thereupon they flatly disavouch

To yield him more obedience, or support. Daniel.

Unjust, thou say'st,

Flatly unjust, to bind with laws the free.

Milton, P. L.

Not any interpreters allow it to be spoken of such as flatly deny the being of God ; but of them that believing his existence, seclude him from directing the world. Bentley.

FLA'TNESS.† n. s. [from flat.]

1. Evenness ; level extension.

The flatness of the bottom [of the ark.]

Biblioth. Bibl. (Or. 1720), i. 234.

2. Want of relief or prominence.

It appears so very plain and uniform, that one would think the coiner looked on the flatness of a figure, as one of the greatest beauties in sculpture. Addison on Medals.

3. Deadness ; insipidity ; vapidness.

Deadness or flatness in cyder is often occasioned by the too free admission of air into the vessel. Mortimer, Husbandry.

4. Dejection of fortune.

The emperor of Russia was my father :
Oh, that he were alive and here beholding
His daughter's trial ! that he did but see
The flatness of my misery. Shakespeare, Wint. Tale.

5. Dejection of mind ; want of life ; want of spirit.

How fast does obscurity, flatness, and imper-tinency flow in upon our meditations ? 'Tis a difficult task to talk to the purpose, and to put life and perspicuity into our discourses. Collier.

6. Dulness ; insipidity ; frigidity.

Some of Homer's translators have swelled into fustian, and others sunk into flatness.

Pope, Pref. to Homer.

7. The contrary to shrillness or acuteness of sound.

Take two saucers, and strike the edge of the one against the bottom of the other within a pail of water, and you shall find the sound growth more flat, even while part of the saucer is above the water ; but that flatness of sound is joined with a harshness. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

FLATNO'SED.* adj. [flat and nose.] Having a flat nose ; camous.

Huloet.

If she be flat-nosed, she is lovely !

Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 526.

What vicious clerk would fear to dwell there,
where all the crows are white, be they never so black ; and where flatnosed people are the most comely ? Bp. Morton, Discharge, &c. p. 226.

To FLA'TTEN.† v. a. [flatir, French ; from flat.]

1. To make even or level, without prominence or elevation.

As if for that time their round bodies flattened were.
Donne, Poems, p. 298.

If they should lie in it, and beat it down, or flatten it, it will rise again. Mortimer, Husbandry.

3. To make vapid.

4. To deject ; to depress ; to dispirit.

To FLA'TTEN. v. n.

1. To grow even or level.

2. To grow dull and insipid.

Here joys that endure for ever, fresh and in vigour, are opposed to satisfactions that are attended with satiety and surfeits, and flatten in the very tasting. L'Estrange.

FLA'TTER. n. s. [from flat.] The workman or instrument by which bodies are flattened.

To FLA'TTER.† v. a. [flater, French ; fladra, Iceland. to flatter, to fawn ; flete, a woman who flatters ; fletsen, Teut. to flatter, and also vleyden.]

1. To sooth with praises ; to please with blandishments ; to gratify with servile obsequiousness ; to gain by false compliments.

When I tell him he hates flatterers,
He says he does ; being then most flattered.

Shakespeare, Jul. Cæs.

His nature is too noble for the world ;

He would not flatter Neptune for his tribute,
Or Jove for's power to thunder : his heart's his mouth ;

What his breast forges that his tongue must vent.

Shakespeare.

He that flattereth his neighbour, spreadeth a net for his feet. Prov. xxix. 5.

He flattereth himself in his own eyes, until his iniquity be found hateful. Psalms xxxvi. 2.

After this way of flattering their willing benefactors out of part, they contrived another of forcing their unwilling neighbours out of all their possessions. Decay of Piety.

Averse alike to flatter or offend.

Pope.

I scorn to flatter you or any man.

Newton, Ded. to Milton's Works.

2. To praise falsely.

Flatter'd crimes of a licentious age,

Provoke our censure. Young.

3. To please ; to sooth. This sense is purely Gallick.

A consort of voices supporting themselves by their different parts make a harmony, pleasingly fills the ears and flatters them.

Dryden, Dufresnoy.

4. To raise false hopes.

Who always vacant, always amiable,
Hopes thee, of flattering gales
Unmindful. Milton, Ode of Horace.

FLATTERER. n. s. [from flatter.] One who flatters; a fawner; a wheedler; one who endeavours to gain favour by pleasing fancies.

When I tell him he hates flatterers,
He says he does; being then most flattered.
Shakespeare, Jul. Cæs.

Some praises proceed merely of flattery; and if he be an ordinary flatterer, he will have certain common attributes, which may serve every man: if he be a cunning flatterer, he will follow the arch flatterer, which is a man's self. But if he be an impudent flatterer, look wherein a man is conscious to himself that he is most defective, and is most out of countenance in himself, that will the flatterer entitle him to performe. Bacon, Ess.

If we from wealth to poverty descend,
Want gives to know the flatterer from the friend.
Dryden.

After treating her like a goddess, the husband uses her like a woman: what is still worse, the most abject flatterers degenerate into the greatest tyrants. Addison, Guardian.

The publick should know this; yet whoever goes about to inform them, shall be censured for a flatterer. Swift.

FLATTERINGLY.* adv. [from flattering.] In an artfully obsequious manner.

Flatteringly to creep, to dissemble.
Bale on the Revel. P. 1. (1550.) sign. I. iii. b.

He flatteringly encouraged him in the opinion of his own merits. Sir T. Brown, Miscell. p. 169.

FLATTERY. n. s. [from flatter; flatterie, French.] False praise; artful obsequiousness; adulation.

Minds, by nature great, are conscious of their greatness,
And hold it mean to borrow ought from flattery.
Rowe.

Simple pride for flattery makes demands. Pope.
See how they beg an alms of flattery!
They languish, O! support them with a lye.

FLATTISH. adj. [from flat.] Somewhat flat; approaching to flatness.

These are from three inches over to six or seven, and of a flattish shape. Woodward on Fossils.

FLATULENCY. n. s. [from flatulent.]

1. Windiness; fulness of wind; turgescence by wind confined.

Vegetable substances contain a great deal of air, which expands itself, producing all the disorders of flatulency. Arbuthnot.

2. Emptiness; vanity; levity; airiness.

Whether most of them are not the genuine derivations of the hypothesis they claim to, may be determined by any that considers the natural flatulency of that airy scheme of notions. Glanville.

FLATULENT. adj. [from flatulentus, flatus, Latin.]

1. Turgid with air; windy.

Pease are mild and demulcent; but being full of aerial particles, are flatulent, when dissolved by digestion. Arbuthnot.

Flatulent tumours are such as easily yield to the pressure of the finger; but readily return, by their elasticity, to a tumid state again. Quincy.

2. Empty; vain; big without substance or reality; puffy.

To talk of knowledge, from those few indistinct representations which are made to our grosser faculties, is a flatulent vanity. Glanville, Scypis.

How many of these flatulent writers have sunk in their reputation, after seven or eight editions of their works. Dryden.

FLATUOSITY. n. s. [from flatuosité, French; from flatus, Latin.] Windiness; fullness of air.

The cause is flatuosity; for wind stirred, moveth to expel; and all purgers have in them a raw spirit or wind, which is the principal cause of tension in the stomach and belly. Bacon.

FLATUOUS. adj. [Fr. flatueur, from flatus, Latin.] Windy; full of wind.

Rhubarb in the stomach, in a small quantity, doth digest and overcome, being not flatuous nor loathsome; and so sendeth it to the mesentery veins, and, being opening, it helpeth down urine. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Her mother hath of late been much troubled (and I think as much in her fancy, which is the greater cure, as in her body,) with a pain in her side, which changeth place, and therefore is sure but a flatuous infirmity. Wotton, Rem. p. 462.

FLATUS. fr. n. s. [Latin.]

1. Wind gathered in any cavities of the body, caused by indigestion and a gross internal perspiration; which is therefore discussed by warm aromatics. Quincy.
2. A breath; a puff.

You make the soul, as being a mere flatus, to have a more precarious subsistence even than mere matter itself.

Clarke, Lett. to Dodwell, p. 31.

FLATWISE. adj. [from flat and wise: so it should be written, not flatways.] With the flat downwards; not the edge.

Its posture in the earth was flatwise, and parallel to the site of the stratum in which it was reposit. Woodward on Fossils.

TO FLAUNT. fr. v. n. [Dr. Johnson offers no etymology. The word seems to be allied to the Icel. flana, to be carried away with precipitation, to run about with uncertainty. Ainsworth, however, deduces it from the Lat. laustus, fine, costly. The word is often written flant.]

1. To make a fluttering show in apparel.
'Twas when young Eustace fought his battles in compliments and cringes, when his understanding waved in a flaunting feather, and his best contemplation looked no further than a new-fashioned doublet. Beaumont and Fletcher Elder Brother.
With ivy canopied, and interwove
With flaunting honeysuckle. Milton, Comus.

Here, attir'd beyond our purse, we go,
For useless ornament and flaunting show:
We take on trust, in purple robes to shine,
And poor, are yet ambitious to be fine.

Dryden, Juv.
You sot, you loiter about alehouses, or flaunt about the streets in your new-gilt chariot, never minding me nor your numerous family.

Arbuthnot, Hist. of John Bull.

2. To face; to carry a pert or saucy appearance.

The tropical rhetorician and the flaunting orator, the jibing satyrist and scurrilous comedian.

Bp. Seth Ward's Apology for the Mysteries of the Gospel, 1673, p. 15.

These courtiers of applause deny themselves things convenient to flaunt it out, being frequently vain enough to immolate their own desires to their vanity. Boyle.

3. To be hung with something loose and flying. This seems not to be proper; the words flaunt and flutter might with more propriety have changed their places.

Fortune in men has some small difference made; One flaunts in rags, one flutters in brocade.

Pope, Ess.

FLAUNT. fr. n. s.

1. Any thing loose and airy.

How would he look to see his work so noble,
Wildly bound up, what would he say! or how,
Should I in these my borrow'd flaunts behold
The sternness of his presence! Shaksp. Wint. Tale.

2. An ostentatious display; a brag.

Dost thou come hither with thy flourishes,
Thy flaunts, and faces, to abuse men's manners?
Beaumont and Fl. False One

FLAVOUR. fr. n. s. [Dr. Johnson offers no etymology. It may be the French flair, a scent. The Welsh fflair is a stink.]

1. Power of pleasing the taste.

They have a certain flavour, at their first appearance, from several accidental circumstances, which they may lose, if not taken early.

Addison, Spect.
2. Sweetness to the smell; odour; fragrance.

Myrtle, orange, and he blushing rose,
With bending heaps, so nigh their bloom disclose,
Each seems to smell the flavour which the other blows. Dryden.

FLAVOROUS. adj. [from flavour.]

1. Delightful to the palate.

Sweet grapes degen'rate there, and fruits decline'd

From their first flav'rous taste, renounce their kind. Dryden.

2. Fragrant; odorous.

FLAVOURED.* adj. [from flavour.] Having a fine taste.

Neptunian Albion's high testaceous food,
And flavoured Chian wines. Dyer.

FLAVOUS.* adj. [Lat. flavous.] Yellow.
The membrane itself is somewhat of a flavous colour, and tends more towards that of gold, than any other part whatsoever.

Smith, Portr. of Old Age, (1666,) p. 219.

FLAW. fr. n. s. [φλάω, Gr. to break; flob, Saxon, a fragment. So far Dr. Johnson. Mr. Horne Tooke observes, that flaw is the past participle of the Sax. plean, to flay. But I may carry this etymology to a higher source. The Icelandic, flagan is to divide, or break up as it were by the plow; and flag, is a part so separated or broken up. The Swedish flaga is a breach or flaw. And this may be deduced from flan, to strip off the rind or skin. See TO FLAY. The example from Shakespeare, under Dr. Johnson's first definition of this word, certainly signifies a small broken particle. Our word was formerly written also sometimes flaugh.]

1. A crack or breach in any thing.

This heart shall break into a thousand flaws,
Or ere I weep. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

Wool, new-shorn, being laid casually upon a vessel of verjuice, after some time had drunk up a great part of the verjuice, though the vessel were whole, without any flaw, and had not the bungle open. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

We found it exceeding difficult to keep out the air from getting in at any imperceptible hole or flaw. Boyle.

A flaw is in thy ill-bak'd vessel found:
'Tis hollow, and returns a jarring sound.

Dryden, Pers.
As if great Atlas, from his height,
Should sink beneath his heavenly weight;
And with a mighty flaw the flaming wall, as once it shall,

Should gape immense, and rushing down,
O'erwhelm this nether ball. Dryden.

Whether the nymph shall break Diana's law,
Or some frail China-jar receive a flaw. Pope.
He that would keep his house in repair, must attend every little breach or flaw, and supply it immediately, else time alone will bring all to ruin.
Swift.

2. A fault; defect; something that weakens or invalidates.

Yet certain though it be, it hath flaws; for that the scriveners and brokers do value unsound men to serve their own turn. Bacon, Ess.

Traditions were a proof alone,
Could we be certain such they were, so known:
But since some flaws in long descents may be,
They make not truth, but probability. Dryden.

And laid her dowry out in law,
To null her jointure with a flaw. Hudibras.

Their judgement has found a flaw in what the generality of mankind admires. Addison, Spect.

So many flaws had this vow in its first conception. Atterbury.

3. A sudden gust; a violent blast. [from flō, Latin.] Obsolete.

Oh, that that earth, which kept the world in awe,
Should patch a wall, t' expel the winter's flaw.
Shakespeare, Hamlet.

What flaws and whirls of weather,
Or rather storms have been aloft these three days.
Beaumont, and Fl. The Pilgrim.

One kind of these storms they call a flaw, or flaugh, which is a mighty gale of wind passing suddenly to the shore, and working strong effects upon whatsoever it encounters in its way.

Caveau, Surv. of Cornwall.
As a huge fish, laid
Near to the cold weed-gathering shore, is with a north flaw frigid,
Shoots back; so, sent against the ground,
Was foil'd Urialus. Chapman, Iliad.

Expect rough seas, flaws, and contrary blasts.
Brown, Chr. Mor. i. 1.
Bursting their brazen dungeon, arm'd with ice,
And snow, and hail, and stormy gust, and flaw,
Boreas, and Cæcias, and Argestes loud,
And Thrasius rend the woods, and seas upturn.
Milton, P. L.

I heard the rack,
As earth and sky would mingle; but myself
Was distant; and these flaws, though mortals fear
them,
As dangerous to the pillar'd frame of heav'n,
Or to the earth's dark basis underneath,
Are to the main inconceivable. Milton, P. L.

4. A tumult; a tempestuousness.

And this fell tempest shall not cease to rage,
Until the golden circuit on my head
Do calm the fury of this madbrain'd flaw.
Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

The fort's revolted to the emperor,
The gates are open'd, the portculis drawn,
And deluges of armies from the town
Came pouring in: I heard the mighty flaw
When first it broke, the crowding ensigns sang,
Which choak'd the passage. Dryden, Aurengzebe.

5. A sudden commotion of mind.

Oh these flaws and starts,
Impostors to true fear, would become
A woman's story at a winter's fire.
Shakespeare, Macbeth.

- To FLAW. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To break; to crack; to damage with fissure.

But his flaw'd heart,
Alack, too weak the conflict to support,
'Twixt two extremes of passion, joy and grief,
Burst smilingly. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

The cup was flawed with such a multitude of little cracks, that it looks like a white, not like a crystalline cup. Boyle.

The brazen caldrons with the frosts are flaw'd,
The garment stiff with ice, at hearths is thaw'd.
Dryden.

2. To break; to violate. Out of use.

France hath flaw'd the league, and hath attack'd
Our merchants' goods. Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.
FLAWLESS. adj. [from flaw.] Without cracks; without defects.

A star of the first magnitude, which the more high, more vast, and more flawless shines only bright enough to make itself conspicuous.

Boyle on Computers.

FLAWN.† n. s. [plena, Saxon; flan, French;
fladen, German.] A custard; a sort of pudding or pie baked in a dish; a cheese-cake.

Fill oven full of flawns, Ginny pass not for sleep,
To-morrow thy father his wake-day will keep.
Tusser.

As flat as a flawn. Ray, Prov.
To FLAWTER. v. a. To scrape or pare a skin. Ainsworth.

FLAWY. adj. [from flaw.] Full of flaws.

FLAX. n. s. [pleax, plex, Saxon; vlax,
Dutch.]

1. The fibrous plant of which the finest thread is made.

2. The fibres of flax cleansed and combed for the spinner.
I'll fetch some flax and whites of eggs,
'T'apply to's bleeding face. Shakespeare, K. Lear.
Then on the rock a scanty measure place
Of vital flax, and turn'd the wheel apace,
And turning sung. Dryden, Ovid.

FLAXCOMB. n. s. [flax and comb.] The instrument with which the fibres of flax are cleansed from the brittle parts.

FLAXDRESSER. n. s. [flax and dress.] He that prepares flax for the spinner.

FLAXEN.† adj. [Saxon, pleaxen.]

1. Made of flax.

The matron at her nightly task,
With pensive labour draws the flaxen thread.
Thomson, Winter.

The best materials for making ligatures are the flaxen thread that shoemakers use. Sharp, Surgery.

2. Fair, long, and flowing, as if made of flax.

I bought a fine flaxen long wig. Addison.

FLAXWEED. n. s. A plant.

FLAXY.* adj. [from flax.] Of a light colour; fair.

The four colours—signify these four virtues.
The flaxy, having whiteness appertains to temperance,
because it makes "candidam et mundam animam." Sir M. Sandys, Ess. (1634); p. 16.

To FLAY.† v. a. [flaa, Icelandic; fla,
Danish; vlaen, Dutch; plean, Saxon.

And our own word was formerly written flea and flean. Some etymologists derive flay from the Greek, φλοῖω, φλοῖω, to strip off the bark.]

1. To strip off the skin.

I must have been eaten with wild beasts, or have fallen into the hands of the Spaniards, and been flayed alive. Rolegh.

While the old Levitical hierarchy continued, it was part of the ministerial office to flay the sacrifices. South.

Then give command the sacrifice to haste:
Let the flay'd victims in the plains be cast;
And sacred vows, and mystick song, apply'd
To grisly Pluto and his gloomy bride.

2. To take off the skin or surface of any thing,

They flay their skin from off them, break their bones, and chop them in pieces. Mic. iii. 3.

Neither should that odious custom be allowed of cutting scraws, which is flaying off the green surface of the ground, to cover their cabins. Swift.

FLAYER. n. s. [from flay.] He that strips off the skin of any thing. Sherwood.

FLEA. n. s. [plea, Saxon; vloge, Dutch; fleach, Scottish.] A small red insect remarkable for its agility in leaping, which sucks the blood of larger animals.

While wormwood hath seed, get a handfull or twain,
To save against March, to make flea to refrain;
Where chamber is sweep'd, and wormwood is strown,
No flea for his life dare abide to be known. Tusser.

A valiant flea that dares eat his breakfast on the lip of a lion. Shakespeare, Hen. V.

Fleas breed principally of straw or mats, where there hath been a little moisture. Bacon, N. Hist.

To FLEA. v. a. [from the noun.] To clean from fleas.

FLEABANE. [n. s. flea and bane.] A plant.
It hath undivided leaves, which, for the most part are glutinous, and have a strong scent: the cup of the flower is for the most part scaly, and of a cylindrical form; the flower is composed of many florets, which are succeeded by seeds with a downy substance adhering to them. Miller.

FLEABITE.† } n. s. [flea and bite.]
FLEABITING. }

1. Red marks caused by fleas.

The attendance of a cancer is commonly a breaking out all over the body, like a fleabiting.
Wiseman, Surgery.

2. A small hurt or pain like that caused by the sting of a flea.

That which is but a fleabiting to one causeth insufferable torment to another.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 13.
What fleabittings were in comparison of those inward torments! Bp. Hall, Contempt. B. 4.

A gout, a cholick, a cutting off an arm or leg, or searing the flesh, are but fleabites to the pains of the soul. Harvey.

The same expence that breaks one man's back,
is not a fleabiting to another.
L' Estrange.

FLEABITTEN.† adj. [flea and bite.]

1. Stung by fleas.

Itching, as if they were fleabitten, or stung with pismires. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 208.

2. Mean; worthless.

Fleabitten synod, an assembly brew'd
Of clerks and elders ana, like the rude
Chaos of presbytry, where laymen guide,
With the tame woolpack clergy by their side.
Cleveland.

FLEAK.† n. s. [from floccus, Latin. See
FLAKE.]

1. A small lock, thread, or twist.

The businesses of men depend upon these little long fleaks or threads of hemp and flax.
More, Ant. against Atheism.

2. [Icel. fleke.] An old word for a grate, hurdle, or any thing made of parts laid transverse. It is a word, according to Pegge, yet used in Yorkshire, meaning a rack for bacon.

FLEAM. n. s. [corrupted from φλεβοτόμον,
the instrument used in phlebotomy.]

An instrument used to bleed cattle, which is placed on the vein, and then driven by a blow.

FLEAWORT.† n. s. [Saxon, pleapwyr.] A plant. Miller.

To FLECK.† v. a. [fleck, German, a spot, Skinner: perhaps it is derived from fleak, or fleke, an old word for a grate, hurdle, or any thing made of parts laid transverse, from the Icelandick flecke. Such is Dr. Johnson's opinion of the etymon. But Skinner is right. The Su. Goth. fleck, is a spot; and the Danish flek, the same. The Iceland flecka, is a spotted sheep, and a flecked cow is no uncommon phrase in Scotland.] To spot; to streak; to stripe; to dapple; to variegate.

The grey-eyed morn smiles on the frowning night,

Check'ring the eastern clouds with streaks of light;
And darkness, flecked, like a drunkard, reels
From forth day's path, and Titan's burning wheels.

Shakespeare, Rom. and Jul.
Let it not see the dawning fleck the skies,
Nor the grey morning from the ocean rise. Sandys.
Fleck'd in her face, and with disorder'd hair,
Her garments ruffled, and her bosom bare.

Congreve, Juv.
Both fleck'd with white, the true Arcadian strain.
Dryden.

To FLECKER.† v. a. To spot; to mark with strokes or touches of different colours; to mark with red wheelks. This is Dr. Johnson's definition, which he illustrates by the example from Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet, where the true word is flecked. It is probable that we have flecker in our old language. The Danes have the same verb flekker, to stain, to spot.

FLECTION.* n. s. [Latin, flectio.] The act or power of bending or turning. See FLEXION.

The one gives flection and extension with strength. Smith, Portr. of Old Age, p. 60.

FLECTOR.* n. s. [from flecto, Lat.] A name given to the muscles, more frequently called flexors. See FLEXOR.

Their origination may be either from the back, inwardly, as the chief flectors, the psoas, &c.

Smith, Port. of Old Age, p. 65.
FLED. The preterite and participle, not properly of fly, to use the wings, but of flee, to run away.

Truth is fled far away, and leasing is hard at hand.

2 Esd. xiv. 18.
In vain for life he to the altar fled;
Ambition and revenge have certain speed. Prior.

FLEDGE.† adj. flederen, to fly, Dutch; from the Su. Goth. flyga.] Full feathered; able to fly; qualified to leave the nest.

We did find
The shells of fledge souls left behind. Herbert.
A stripling divine or two of those newly fledge
probationers. Milton, Colasterion.

His locks behind,
Illustrious on his shoulders, fledge with wings,
Lay waving round. Milton, P. L.

To FLEDGE. v. a. [from the adjective.] To furnish with wings; to supply with feathers.

The birds were not as yet fledged enough to shift for themselves.

L'Estrange, Fables.
The speedy growth of birds that are hatched in nests, and fed by the old ones till they be fledged, and come almost to full bigness in about a fortnight, seems to me an argument of providence.

Ray on the Creation.
The sandals of celestial mould,
Fledg'd with ambrosial plumes, and rich with gold,
Surround her feet. Pope, Odyssey.

To FLEE.† v. n. pret. fled. [This word is now almost universally written fly, though properly to fly, pleogan, flew, is to move with wings, and flee, plean, to run away. They are now confounded. The distinction, however, ought to be observed. Our translation of the Bible, as Lowth has noticed, is not quite free from the confusion. It has flee, for to move with wings, in perhaps seven or eight places out of a great number; but never fly for to run away.] To run from danger; to have recourse to shelter.

Behold this city is near to flee unto.
Genesis, xix. 20. Shakespeare.

Macduff is fled to England.
Were men so dull they could not see
That Lyce painted; should they flee
Like simple birds, into a net,
So grossly woven and ill set? Waller.

None of us fall into those circumstances of danger, want, or pain, that can have hopes of relief but from God alone; none in all the world to flee to but him. Tillotson.

FLEECE.† n. s. [plýr, pleje, Saxon; vleese, Dutch; from the Latin, vellus, which is derived by some from vello, to pluck; wool, it is said, being pulled from the animal, before shearing was adopted; by others, from velare, to clothe, the fleece being the sheep's clothing.] As much wool as is shorn from one sheep.

Giving account of the annual increase
Both of their lambs, and of their woolly fleece.
Spenser, Hubb. Tale.

So many days my ewes have been with young,
So many months ere I shall shear the fleece.
Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

I am shepherd to another man,
And do not shear the *fleece*s that I graze.
Shakespeare, As you like it.

Sailors have used every night to hang *fleece*s of wool on the sides of their ships towards the water; and they have crushed fresh water out of them in the morning. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

The sheep will prove much to the advantage of the woollen manufacture, by the fineness of the *fleece*s. Swift.

To FLEECE.† v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To clip the fleece off a sheep.
2. To strip; to pull; to plunder, as a sheep is robbed of his wool.

Courts of justice have a small pension, so that they are tempted to take bribes, and to fleece the people. Addison.

3. To whiten; to spread over as with wool.

Mean time, light shadowing all, a sober calm,
*Fleece*s unbounded ether. Thomson, Autumn.

FLEECE. adj. [from fleece.] Having *fleece*s of wool.

As when two rams, strid'd with ambitious pride,
Fight for the rule of the rich fleece'd flock,
Their horned fronts so fierce on either side
Do meet, that with the terror of the shock
Astondied both stand senseless as a block.

Spenser, F. Q.
FLEECE.* n. s. [from fleece.] One who strips or plunders.

Not *fleece*s but feeders; not butchers, but shepherds.
Huntley, (i. e. Prynn), Breviate of the Prel.
(1637.) p. 262.

FLEECE.† adj. [from fleece.]

1. Woolly; covered with wool.

Not all the *fleece*y wealth
That doth enrich these downs, is worth a thought
To this my errand. Milton, Comus.

From eastern point
Of Libra, to the *fleece*y star, that bears
Andromeda far off Atlantic seas. Milton, P. L.
Let her glad valleys smile with wavy corn;
*Fleece*y flocks her rising hills adorn. Prior.

The good shepherd tends his *fleece*y care,
Seeks freshest pasture, and the purest air;
Explores the lost, the wand'ring sheep directs.
Pope.

2. Of a light colour; pale.

The moon
Peeps through the chambers of the *fleece*y east, Enlighten'd by degrees. Thomson, Spring.

3. Having the appearance of fleeces of wool.

Thick clouds ascend, in whose capacious womb
A vapour deluge lies, to snow congeal'd;
Heavy they roll their *fleece*y world along.

Thomson, Winter.
To FLEER.† v. n. [pleapyan, to trifle, Saxon; fleardan, Scottish. Skinner thinks it formed from leer. So far Dr. Johnson. It may be rather from the Iceland, flyra, to laugh, to grin. Flying is still our own word, in the north of England, for sneering or grinning.]

1. To mock; to gibe; to jest with insolence and contempt.

You speak to Casca, and to such a man
That is no fleeing tell-tale. Shakespeare, Jul. Cas.

Dares the slave
Come hither, cover'd with an antick face,
To fleeer and scorn at our solemnity!

Shakespeare, Rom. and Jul.
Do I, like the female tribe,
Think it well to fleeer and gibe? Swift.

2. To leer; to grin with an air of civility.

How popular and courteous; how they grin and fleeer upon every man they meet!
Burton on Melancholy.

Those,
With their court dog-tricks, that can fawn and fleeer,
Make their revenue out of legs and faces,
Echo my lord, and lick away a moth.

B. Jonson, For.
To FLEER.* v. a. To mock; to flout.

I was fain to drive him like a sheep before me;
I blush to think how people fleeer'd and scorn'd me.
Beaumont and Fl. Span. Curate.

FLEER. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Mockery expressed either in words or looks.

Encave yourself,
And mark the fleeers, the gibes, and notable scorns,
That dwell in every region of his face.

Shakespeare, Othello.
2. A deceitful grin of civility.

He shall generally spy such false lines, and such a sly treacherous fleeer upon the face of deceivers, that he shall be sure to have a cast of their eye to warn him, before they give him a cast of their nature to betray him. South.

FLEERER.† n. s. [from fleeer.] A mocker; a fawner.

Democritus, thou ancient fleeer.
Beaumont and Fl. Nice Valour.

FLEET. FLEOT. FLOT. Are all derived from the Saxon pleot, which signifies a bay or gulph.

Gibson's Camden.
FLEET.† n. s. [plota, Saxon, from pleotan, to float, to swim on the waves; plet, a ship. The old French language also has flete for a boat; which Roquefort deduces from the Greek πλῆω, to navigate.] A company of ships; a navy.

Our pray'rs are heard; our master's fleet shall go
As far as winds can bear, or waters flow. Prior.

FLEET. n. s. [pleot, Saxon, an estuary, or arm of the sea.] A creek; an inlet of water. A provincial word, from which the Fleet-prison and Fleet-street are named.

They have a very good way in Essex of draining of lands that have land-floods or fleets running through them, which make a kind of a small creek.

Mortimer, Husbandry.

FLEET.† adj. [flīot, Icelandic, from flyta, to hasten, to move quickly.]

1. Swift of pace; quick; nimble; active.

Upon that shore he spied Atin stand;
There by his master left, when late he fir'd
In Phædria's fleet bark. Spenser, F. Q.

I take him for the better dog;

— Thou art a fool: if Echo were as fleet,

I would esteem him worth a dozen such. Shaks.

He had in his stables one of the fleetest horses in England. Clarendon.

His fear was greater than his haste;
For fear, though *fleet*er than the wind,
Believes 'tis always left behind. Hudibras.

So fierce they drove, their coursers were so fleet,
That the turf trembled underneath their feet. Dryd.

He told us, that the welkin would be clear
When swallows fleet soar high and sport in air. Gay.

2. [In the husbandry of some provinces.]

Light; superficially fruitful.

Marl cope-ground is a cold, stiff, wet clay,
unless where it is very fleet for pasture. Mortimer.

3. Skimming the surface. Cant word.

Those lands must be plowed fleet.

Mortimer, Husbandry.

4. Shallow; as a fleet pan or vessel, fleet water. [Saxon, plebing, fluxus.] Brockett's N. C. Words.

TO FLEET.† v. n. pleotan, Saxon; flīota, Icel. flyta, Su. Goth.]

1. To fly swiftly; to vanish.

How all the other passions fleet to air,
As doubtful thoughts, and rash embrac'd despair!
Shakspeare.

A wolf, who, hang'd for human slaughter,
Ev'n from the gallows did his fell soul fleet. Shaks.

2. To be in a transient state; the same with flit, Dr. Johnson says. It is rather the same with float, to skim along. Fleet is our old verb for float. See the next definition, overpassed by Dr. Johnson.

Our understanding, to make a complete notion, must add something else to this floating and unremarkable superficialities, that may bring it to our acquaintance. Digby on Bodies.

O floating joys

Of Paradise, dear-bought with lasting woes!

Milton, P. L.

While I listen to thy voice,
Chloris! I feel my life decay:
That powerful noise

Calls my floating soul away. Wall.

As empty clouds by rising winds are tost,
Their floating forms scarce sooner found than lost.

Prior.

3. "To fleet about the water;" to float.

Barret.

Who swelling sails in Caspian sea doth cross,
And in frail wood on Adrian gulf doth fleet.

Spenser, F. Q. ii. vii. 14.

Our sever'd navy too

Have knit again, and fleet. Shaks. Ant. & Cleop.

TO FLEET.† v. a.

1. To skim the water. Dr. Johnson here cites, from Spenser, the example which I have placed under the third definition of the verb neuter; where, in order to make the verb active, he unjustifiably reads "an Adrian gulf," and destroys entirely the sense of the poet.

2. To live merrily, or pass time away lightly.

Many young gentlemen flock to him every day, and fleet the time carelessly as they did in the golden age. Shakspeare.

3. [In the country.] To skim milk; to take off the cream: whence the word floating dish. Dr. Johnson takes no further notice of this expression; which, however, is very old. "Flet of mylke, or other lyke, despumatio." Prompt. Parv. flet, Sax. flos lactis. Lye.

He fleeted off the cream of the king's manors.

Sir A. Weldon, Court of K. James, p. 51.

FLEETFOOT.* adj. [fleet and foot.] Swift of foot.

Like a wild bird, being tam'd with too much handling,

Or as the fleetfoot roe that's tir'd with chasing.

Shakspeare, Ven. and Adon.

FLEETING.† n. s. [from fleet and dish.]

A skimming bowl.

FLEETLY. adv. [from fleet.] Swiftly;

nimble; with swift pace.

FLEETNESS.† n. s. [from fleet.] Swiftness of course; nimbleness; celerity; velocity;

speed; quickness.

The fleetness of time. Lord Chesterfield.

FLEGM.* See PHLEGM.

FLEMING.* n. s. [Sax. plymning, plyma, a wanderer, an exile; whence, according to Laurence Noel, the Flemings are named; by reason that their country, being wild and strong, was a fit receptacle for outlaws; and so was first inhabited. But this may be doubted. Inundation might occasion them to be wanderers or exiles.] A native or inhabitant of the Low Countries.

I will rather trust a Fleming with my butter, parson Hugh the Welchman with my cheese,
an Irishman with my aquavite bottle, or a thief to walk my ambling gelding, than my wife with herself. Shakspeare, Merr. W. of Windsor.

FLEMISH.* adj. Relating to the character or history of the Flemings.

What an unweighed behaviour hath this Flemish drunkard picked out of my conversation.

Shakspeare, Merr. W. of Windsor.

FLESH.† n. s. [plec, plec, Saxon, flesh, Icel. fleisch, German, vleesch, Dut. leik, M. Goth. lik, Su. Goth. V. Wachter, Gloss.]

1. The body distinguished from the soul.

As if this flesh, which walls about our life,

Were brass impregnable. Shakspeare, Rich. II.

A disease that's in my flesh,

Which I must needs call mine. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

And thou, my soul, which turn'st with curious eye

To view the beams of thine own form divine,

Know, that thou canst know nothing perfectly,

While thou art clouded with this flesh of mine. Davies.

2. The muscles distinguished from the skin, bones, tendons.

A spirit hath not flesh and bones.

St. Luke, xxiv. 39.

3. Animal food distinguished from vegetable.

Flesh should be forborne as long as he is in coats, or at least till he is two or three years old.

Locke.

Flesh, without being qualified with acids, is too alkaline to a diet.

Arbutnot on Aliments.

Acidity in the infant may be cured by a flesh diet in the nurse. Arbutnot on Aliments.

4. The body of beasts or birds used in food, distinct from fishes.

There is another indictment upon thee, for suffering flesh to be eaten in thy house, contrary to the law. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

We mortify ourselves with fish; and think we fare coarsely, if we abstain from the flesh of other animals. Brown.

5. Animal nature.

The end of all flesh is come before me.

Gen. vi. 13.

6. Carnality; corporeal appetites.

Name not religion; for thou lov'st the flesh.

Shakspeare.

Fasting serves to mortify the flesh, and subdue the lusts thereof. Smaulbridge, Serm.

7. A carnal state; worldly disposition; in theology.

They that are in the flesh cannot please God.

Rom. viii. 8.

The flesh lusteth against the spirit, and the spirit against the flesh.

Gal. v. 16.

8. Near relation: a scriptural use.

Let not our hand be upon him; for he is our flesh.

Genesis, xxxvii. 27.

When thou seest the naked, cover him; and hide not thyself from thine own flesh. Is. lviii. 7.

9. The outward or literal sense. The orientals termed the immediate or literal signification of any precept or type the flesh, and the remote or typical meaning the spirit. This is frequent in St. Paul.

FLEXA'NIMOUS. adj. [flexanimus, Latin.] Having power to change the disposition of the mind. Dict.

That flexanimous and golden-tongued orator. Howell.

FLEXIBILITY. n. s. [flexibilité, Fr. from flexible.]

1. The quality of admitting to be bent; pliancy.

Do not the rays which differ in refrangibility differ also in flexibility? And are they not, by their different inflexions, separated from one another, so as after separation to make the colours? Newton, Opticks.

Corpuscles of the same set agree in every thing; but those that are of diverse kinds differ in specific gravity, in hardness, and in flexibility, as in bigness and figure. Woodward.

2. Easiness to be persuaded; ductility of mind; compliance; facility.

Resolve rather to err by too much flexibility than too much perverseness, by meekness than by self-love. Hammond.

FLEXIBLE. adj. [flexibilis, Lat. flexible, Fr.]

1. Possible to be bent; not brittle; easy to be bent; pliant; not stiff.

When splitting winds Make flexible the knees of knotted oaks. Shakespeare, Troil. and Cress.

Take a stock-gillyflower, tie it upon a stick, put them both into a glass full of quicksilver, so that the flower be covered: after four or five days you shall find the flower fresh, and the stalk harder and less flexible than it was. Bacon.

2. Not rigid; not inexorable; complying; obsequious.

Phocyon was a man of great severity, and no ways flexible to the will of the people. Bacon.

3. Ductile; manageable.

This was a principle more flexible to their purpose. Rogers.

FLEXIBILITY. n. s. [from flexible.]

1. Possibility to be bent; not brittleness; easiness to be bent; not stiffness; pliancy; pliancy.

I will rather choose to wear a crown of thorns, than to exchange that of gold for one of lead, whose embased flexibility shall be forced to bend.

King Charles.

Keep those slender aerial bodies separated and stretched out, which otherwise, by reason of their flexibility and weight, would flag or curl.

Boyle, Spring of the Air.

2. Facility; obsequiousness; compliance.
3. Ductility; manageableness.

The flexibility of the former part of a man's age, not yet grown up to be headstrong, makes it more governable. Locke.

FLEXILE. adj. [flexilis, Lat.] Pliant; easily bent; obsequious to any power or impulse.

Every flexile wave

Obeys the blast; the aerial tumult swells.

Thomson, Summer.

FLEXION. † n. s. [flexio, Lat.]

1. The act of bending.

To sit doth not [here] signify any peculiar inclination or flexion, any determinate location or position of the body, but to be in heaven with permanence of habitation.

Pearson on the Creed, Art. 6.

2. A double; a bending; part bent; joint.

Of a sinuous pipe that may have some four flexions, trial would be made. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

3. A turn towards any part or quarter.

FLEXOR. n. s. [Latin.] The general name of the muscles which act in contracting the joints.

Flatterers, who have the flexor muscles so strong that they are always bowing and cringing, might in some measure be corrected by being tied down upon a tree by the back. Arbutnot.

FLEXUOUS. adj. [flexuosus, Lat.]

1. Winding; full of turns and meanders; tortuous.

In regard of the soul, the numerous and crooked narrow cranies, and the restrained flexuous rivulets of corporeal things, are all contemptible.

Digby on the Soul.

2. Bending; not strait; variable; not steady.

The trembling of a candle discovers a wind, that otherwise we do not feel; and the flexuous burning of flames doth shew the air beginning to be unquiet. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

FLEXURE. n. s. [flexura, Lat.]

1. The form or direction in which any thing is bent.

Contrary is the flexure of the joints of our arms and legs to that of quadrupeds: our knees bend forward, whereas the same joint of their hind legs bends backward. Ray.

2. The act of bending.

The elephant hath joints, but none for courtesy; His legs are for necessity, not flexure.

Shakespeare, Troil. and Cress.

3. The part bent; the joint.

His mighty strength lies in his able loins, And where the flexure of his navel joins. Sandys.

4. Obsequious or servile cringe. Not used.

Think'st thou the fiery fever will go out
With titles blown from adulation?
Will it give place to flexure and low bends?

Shakespeare, Hen. V.

FLICK.* See FLITCH.

To FLICKER.† v. n. [fligheren, Dutch; pliepepan, Saxon; flückern, Germ. fleckra, Su. Goth. This is one of our oldest verbs; Chaucer uses it for flutter.]

1. To flutter; to play the wings; to have a fluttering motion.

The wreath of radiant fire,

On flickering Phœbus' front. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

'Twas ebbing darkness, past the mid of night,

And Phosphor, on the confines of the light,

Promis'd the sun, ere day began to spring;

The tuneful lark already stretch'd her wing,

And flick'ring on her nest, made short essays to sing. Dryden.

At all her stretch her little wings she spread,

And with her feather'd arms embrac'd the dead;

Then, flickering to his pallid lips, she strove

To print a kiss, the last essay of love. Dryden.

2. To fluctuate; to move with uncertain and hasty motion.

An old dizard, that bath one foot in his grave, shall flicker after a young lusty wench that is blithe and bonny. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 629.

Their soft maiden voice, and flickering eye.

Niccols, The Cuckoo, (1607,) p. 10.

Rising o'er the flickering wave.

Dyer, Fleece, B. 4.

FLICKERMOUSE.* n. s. [flicker and mouse.]

A bat. See FLINDERMUSE.

Come, I will see the flickermouse.

B. Jonson, New Inn.

FLIER. n. s. [from fly.] See FLYER.

1. One that runs away; a fugitive; a runaway.

The gates are ope, now prove good seconds;

'Tis for the followers fortune widens them,

Not for the fliers. Shakespeare, Coriol.

Now the fliers from and forsakers of their places, carry the parliamentary power along with them. King Charles.

2. That part of a machine which, by being put into a more rapid motion than the other parts, equalizes and regulates the motion of the rest; as in a jack.

The flier, tho't had leaden feet,

Turn'd so quick, you scarce could see't. Swift.

FLIGHT.† n. s. [Sax. fliht.]

1. The act of flying or running from danger.

And now, too late, he wishes for the flight,

That strength he wasted in ignoble flight. Denham.

He thinks by flight his mistress must be won,

And claims the prize because he best did run.

Dryden, Ind. Emp.

As eager of the chase, the maid

Beyond the forest's verdant limits stray'd;

Pan saw and lov'd, and, burning with desire,

Pursued her flight; her flight increas'd his fire. Pope.

2. The act of using wings; volation.

For he so swift and nimble was of flight,

That from this lower tract he dar'd to fly

Up to the clouds and thence with pinions light

To mount aloft unto the crystal sky. Spenser, Muirpotmos.

The fury sprang above the Stygian flood;

And on her wicker wings, sublime through night,

She to the Lateral palace took her flight. Dryden, Æn.

Winds that tempests brew,

When through Arabian groves they take their

flight,

Made wanton with rich odours, lose their spite.

Dryden.

3. Removal from place to place by means of wings.

Ere the bat hath flown

His cloyster'd flight. Shakespeare, Macb.

The fowls shall take their flight away together. 2 Esd. v. 6.

Fowls, by winter forc'd, forsake the flocks,

And wing their hasty flight to happier lands. Dryden, Æn.

4. A flock of birds flying together.

Flights of angels sing thee to thy rest!

Shakespeare, Hamlet.

They take great pride in the feathers of birds, and they took from their ancestors of the mountains, who were invited into it by the infinite flights of birds that came up to the high grounds.

Bacon, New Atlantis.

I can at will, doubt not,

Command a table in this wilderness;

And call swift flights of angels ministrant,

Array'd in glory, on my cup t'attend. Milt. P. R.

5. The birds produced in the same season; as the harvest flight of pigeons.

6. A volley; a shower; as much shot as is discharged at once.

At the first flight of arrows sent,

Full threescore Scots they slew. Chevy Chase.

Above an hundred arrows discharged on my left hand, pricked me like so many needles; and besides they shot another flight into the air, as we do bombs. Swift.

7. The space past by flying.

8. Heat of imagination; sally of the soul.

Old Pindar's flights by him are reacht,

When on that gale his wings are stretcht. Denb.

He shewed all the stretch of fancy at once;

and if he has failed in some of his flights, it was but because he attempted every thing. Pope.

Strange graces still, and stranger flights she had;

Was just not ugly, and was just not mad. Pope.

Trust me, dear! good humour can prevail,

When airs and flights, and screams and scolding fail. Pope.

9. Excursion on the wing.

If there were any certain height where the flights of ambition end, one would imagine that the interest of France were but to conserve its present greatness. Temple.

It is not only the utmost pitch of impiety, but the highest flight of folly, to deride these things.

10. The power of flying.

In my school-days, when I had lost one shaft,

I shot his fellow of the self-same flight

The self-same way. Shakespeare.

11. A particular kind of arrow.

Here be of all sorts; flights, rovers, and but-shafts. Ben. Jonson, Cynthia. Revels.

A flight drawn home,

A round stone from a sling. Beaumont and Fl. Bonduca.

12. An ancient sport of shooting with arrows, called roving.

He set up his bills here in Messina, and chal-

- FLIGHT-SHOT.* n. s. The length which an arrow may fly, when shot from a bow. See the 11th sense of FLIGHT.

The passage into it at full sea is a flight-shot over. Leland, Itinerary.

It being from the park about two flight-shots over. Entert. at Cass. House, (1613.)

Jack was already gone a fly-shot beyond his patience. Swift, Tale of a Tub, § 6.

- FLIGHTED.* adj. [from flight.] Taking flight; flying. This is a word used by Milton in the manuscript of his mask of Comus, but not admitted by him into the published copies of it. Bishop

Newton preferred it to the printed word frighted; but the context requires the more rational and easy reading of the latter, which the poet evidently intended by permitting its continuance in three editions during his life-time.

The drowsy flighted steeds,
That draw the litter of close-curtain'd Sleep.

Com. ver. 553.

FLIGHTINESS.* n. s. [from flighty.] Wildness; irregularity of conduct. Modern.

FLIGHTY. adj. [from flight.]

1. Fleeting; swift.

Time, thou anticipat'st my dread exploits:
The flighty purpose never is o'ertook,

Unless the deed go with it. Shaksp. Macb.

2. Wild; full of imagination.

FLIMFLAM.* n. s. [from film, Icel.] A word, of elder times, for a freak, a whim, a trick, a cheat, a petty fiction. See FLAM. This is a pretty flimflam.

Benim. and Fl. Little Fr. Lawyer.

Here are recounted a thousand flimflams, as impertinent as necessary to the understanding of this famous history.

Contin. of Shelton's Don. Quix. ch. 24.

FLIMSINESS.* n. s. [from flimsy.] Easy texture.

There is a certain flimsiness in poetry, that seems expedient in a song. Shenstone.

FLIMSY.† adj. [Of this word I know not any original, and suspect it to have crept into our language from the cant of manufacturers, Dr. Johnson says. May it not be a corruption of film, which is a thin covering or skin?]]

1. Weak; feeble; without strength of texture.

2. Mean; spiritless; without force.

Proud of a vast extent of flimsy lines. Pope.
Walsh was in general a flimsy and frigid writer.

Dr. Warton, Ess. on Pope.

To FLINCH.† v. n. [corrupted from fling. Skinner. To this etymology Dr. Johnson accedes. It may more easily be deduced from the Sax. flion, to avoid any thing.]]

1. To shrink from any suffering or undertaking; to withdraw from any pain or danger.

Every martyr could keep one eye steadily fixed upon immortality, and look death and danger out of countenance with the other; nor did they flinch from duty, for fear of martyrdom. South, Serm.

A child, by a constant course of kindness, may be accustomed to bear very rough usage without flinching or complaining. Locke.

Oh ingratitude, that John Bull, whom I have honoured with my friendship, should flinch at last, and pretend that he can disburse no more money. Arbuthnot, Hist. of John Bull.

2. In Shakspeare it signifies to fail.

If I brake time, or flinch in property
Of what I spoke, unpitied let me die. Shaksp.

FLINCHER.† n. s. [from the verb.†] One who shrinks or fails in any matter.

But make this good upon us as you have promised,
You shall not find us flinchers.

Benim. and Fl. Bloody Brother.
After that sharp reprehension of flinchers from the faith, he returns to encourage and corroborate the church in Smyrna.

More on the Sev. Churches, p. 51.

FLINDERMOUSE.* n. s. [a corruption of fichermouse or filttermouse.] A bat.

Large wings on him did grow,
Fram'd like the wings of flindermice.

Googe, Zodiac of Life, (1565), p. 9.

The other — had wings like a backe or flindermouse. Knight, Trial of Truth, (1580), fol. 9. b.
FLINDERS.* } n. s. pl. Teut. flenters.† Flit-FLINTERS. } ters; rags; shreds; broken pieces. Flinders is the Northern word; flinters is a vulgar expression.

To FLING.† v. a. preter. flung; part. flung or flong. [from fligo, Latin, Skinner; according to others, from flaying; so to fling is to set flying. Thus far Dr. Johnson. Serenius mentions the Su. flenga, jacere, i. e. to cast or throw, as the parent of our word; fleiga, Icel. the same. The Goth. flinga, is to strike.]]

1. To cast from the hand; to throw.

The matrons flung their gloves,
Ladies and maids their scarfs and handkerchiefs
Upon him, Shakspeare, Coriol.

'Tis fate that flings the dice! and as she flings,
Of kings makes peasants, and of peasants kings. Dryden.

2. To dart; to cast with violence.

How much unlike that Hector who return'd Clad in Achilles' spoils; when he, among
A thousand ships, like Jove, his lightning flung. Denham.

3. To scatter.

West winds, with musky wing,
About the eodan allies fling
Nard and Cassia's balmy smells. Milton, Comus.
Ev'ry beam new transient colours flings,
Colours that change whene'er they wave their wings. Pope.

4. To drive by violence.

A heap of rocks, falling, would expel the waters out of their places with such a violence as to fling them among the highest clouds.

Burnet, Theory of the Earth.

5. To move forcibly.

The knight seeing his habitation reduced to so small compass, ordered all the apartments to be flung open. Addison, Spect.

6. To cast: in an ill sense.

I know thy gen'rous temper:
Fling but the appearance of dishonour on it,
It strait takes fire. Addison, Cato.

7. To force into another condition, properly into a worse.

Squalid fortune, into baseness flong,
Doth scorn the pride of wonted ornaments. Spens.

8. To FLING away. To eject; to dismiss.

Crownwell, I charge thee, fling away ambition;
By that sin fell the angels. Shaksp. Hen. VIII.

9. To FLING down. To demolish; to ruin.

These are so far from raising mountains, that they overturn and fling down some of those which were before standing. Woodward, Nat. Hist.

10. To FLING off. To baffle in the chase; to defeat of a prey.

These men are too well acquainted with the chace to be flung off by any false steps or doubles. Addison, Spect.

To FLING.† v. n.

1. To flounce; to wince; to fly into violent and irregular motions.

Fearing lest, fatted at too much ease, he [the horse] wax headstrong, and fall to kicking and flinging, instead of carrying his rider well and quietly.

Harmar, Transl. of Beza's Serm. (1587), p. 379.

Neither fares it otherwise than with some wild colt, which, at the first taking up, flings and plunges, and will stand no ground.

Bp. Hall, Select Thoughts, § 86.

The angry beast

Began to kick, and fling, and wince,
As if h'd been beside his sense. Hudibras.

Their consciences are galled by it, and this makes them wince and fling as if they had some mettle. Tillotson.

2. To FLING out. To grow unruly or outrageous: from the act of any angry horse that throws out his legs.

Duncan's horses,

Turn'd wild in nature, broke their stalls, flung out,
Contending 'gainst obedience. Shakspeare.

FLING.† n. s. [from the verb.]]

1. A throw; a cast.

2. A gibe; a sneer; a contemptuous remark.

Else would I have a fling at Winchester.

Shakspeare, K. Hen. VI. P. I.

No little scribbler is of wit so bare,
But has his fling at the poor wedded pair. Addis.

I, who love to have a fling
Both at senate-house and king,
Thought no method more commodious
Than to show their vices odious. Swift.

FLINGER.† n. s. [from the verb.]]

1. One who throws.

Sherwood.

2. One who jeers.

FLINT. n. s. [flint, Saxon.]]

1. A semi-pellucid stone, composed of crystal debased, of a blackish grey, of one similar and equal substance, free from veins, and naturally invested with a whitish crust. It is sometimes smooth and equal, more frequently rough: its size is various. It is well known to strike fire with steel. It is useful in glassmaking. Hill on Fossils.

Searching the window for a flint, I found
This paper, Shaksp. Jul. Cæs.

Love melts the rigour which the rocks have bred,
A flint will break upon a featherbed. Cleveland.

There is the same force and the same refreshing virtue in fire kindled by a spark from a flint, as if it were kindled by a beam from the sun.

South, Serm.

Take this, and lay your flint edg'd weapon by.

Dryden.

I'll fetch quick fuel from the neighb'ring wood,
And strike the sparkling flint, and dress the food. Prior.

2. Any thing eminently or proverbially hard.

Your tears a heart of flint
Might tender make. Spenser.

Throw my heart

Against the flint and hardness of my fault.

Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

FLINTHEART.* } adj. [flint and heart.]]

FLINTHEARTED. } Having a hard heart; cruel.

Under the conduct of great Soliman,
Have I been chief commander of an host,

And put the flint-heart Persians to the sword.

Trag. of Soliman and Perseda, (1599.)

Oh pity, gan she cry, flint-hearted boy.

Shakspeare, Ven. and Adon.

FLINTY.† adj. [from flint.]]

1. Made of flint; strong.

He made him to suck honey out of the rock,
and oil out of the flinty rock. Deut. xxxii. 13.

Tyrant custom

Hath made the flinty and steel couch of war
My thrice-driven bed of down. Shaksp. Othello.

A pointed flinty rock, all bare and black,
Grew gibbous from behind the mountain's back.

Dryden.

2. Full of stones.

The gathering up of flints in flinty ground, and laying them on heaps, is no good husbandry.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

3. Hard of heart; cruel; savage; inexorable.

Gratitude,

Through flinty Tartar's bosom, would peep forth,
And answer thanks. Shaksp. All's Well.

Flinty hearts of men turned into flesh.

Bp. Hall, Estate of a Christian.

FLIP. n. s. [A cant word.] A liquor much used in ships, made by mixing beer with spirits and sugar.

The tarpawlin and swabber is loolling at Madagascars, with some drunken sunburnt where, over a can of flip. Dennis.

FLIP'PANCY.* n. s. [from flippant.] Pertness; brisk folly.

FLIP'PANT.† adj. [A word of no great authority, probably derived from flip-flap. Dr. Johnson. — Yet Dr. Johnson cites the authority of Addison, to which I may add the elder and more weighty usage of the word by Barrow.]

1. Nimble; movable. It is used only of the act of speech.

It becometh good men, in such cases, to be brisk and gay in their looks, flippant and free in their speech.

Barrow, Sermon on Gunpowder Treason.

An excellent anatomist promised to dissect a woman's tongue, and examine whether there may not be in it certain juices, which render it so wonderfully valuable or flippant. Addison.

2. Pert; petulant; wagish.

Away with flippant epilogues. Thomson.

FLIP'PANTLY. adv. [from the adjective.] In a flowing prating way.

To FLIRE.* See To FLEER.

To FLIRT.† v. a. [Skinner thinks it formed from the sound, and Dr. Johnson offers no other etymological remark. It is probably from the Sax. pleapbian, trifle, pleapo, trifles. Or it may be formed from fleer. See To FLEER. This might seem to belong exclusively to the verb neuter, if we had not also flirt as a verb active in the sense of jeer; of which sense, however, Dr. Johnson, has taken no notice.]

1. To throw any thing with a quick elastic motion.

Dick the scavenger

Flirts from his cart the mud in Walpole's face. Swift.

2. To throw out words carelessly; to blurt.

Our cousin Archy hath more privilege than any; for he often goes with his fool's-coat where he lists. Infanta is with her ladies, and flirts out what he lists. Howell, Lett. i. iii. 18.

3. To move with quickness.

Permit some happier man,
To kiss your hand or flirt your fan. Dorset.

4. To jeer; to treat with scoffs.

I am ashamed, I'm scorn'd, I'm flirted.
Beaum. and Fl. Wildgoose-Case.

Is this the fellow,
That had the patience to become a fool,
A flirted fool. Beaum. and Fl. Rule a Wife.

To FLIRT.† v. n.

1. To jeer; to gibe at one.

2. To run about perpetually; to be unsteady and fluttering.

The wife that gads not, giglot-wise,
With every flirting gill.

Translation of Bullinger's Sermon. (1576.) p. 224.

3. To act with levity; to be guilty of a kind of coquetry; from the preceding use of the word. Modern.

FLIRT.† n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A quick elastic motion.

In unfurling the fan, are several little flirts and vibrations, as also gradual and deliberate openings. Addison, Spect.

Before you pass th' imaginary sights,
While the spread fan o'ershades your closing eyes,
Then give one flirt, and all the vision flies. Pope.

2. A sudden trick.

Have licence to play,
At the hedge a flirt,
For a sheet or a shirt. B. Jonson, Gypsies.

3. A pert young hussey.

I do not apologize here for any headstrong, unruly, wanton flirts. Burton, Anat. of Mel.

Salute the skirts
Of her, to whom all ladies else are flirts.
B. Jonson, Masques.

Several young flirts about town had a design to cast us out of the fashionable world.
Addison, Guardian.

4. A jeer; a gibe.

They have play'd their prizes with me,
And with their several flirts they have lighted dangerously;
But sure I shall be quit.
Beaum. and Fl. Span. Curate.

FLIRT.* adj. Pert; wanton. Applied to gill as a woman. See GILL and To FLIRT, v. n.

Scurvy knave! I am none of his flirt gills.
Shakespeare, Rom. and Jul.

Thou took'st me up at every word I spoke,
As I had been a mawkin, a flirt gillian.
Beaum. and Fl. The Chances.

FLIRTATION.† n. s. [from flirt.]

1. A quick sprightly motion. A cant word among women.

A muslin founce, made very full, would give a very agreeable flirtation air. Pope.

2. Hence the more modern acceptance, a desire of attracting notice.

Flirtation is short of coquetry, and intimates only the first hints of approximation!
Ld. Chesterfield, World, No. 101.

FLIRTIG.* n. s. [from flirt and gig. See the fourth sense of GIG.] A wanton, pert girl. Still a northern word. Praise of Yorkshire Ale, Grose and Brackett.

To FLIT.† v. n. [from fleet; or from flyter, Danish; to remove; or from the Sax. plhtc.]

1. To fly away.

Liketh it seemeth, in my simple wit,
Unto the fair sunshine in Summer's day,
That when a dreadful storm away is flit,
Through the broad world doth spread his goodly ray. Spenser, F. Q.

2. To remove; to migrate. In Scotland it is still used for removing from one place to another at quarter-day, or the usual term. It was once common also in England, as it should seem, by the admission of it into Barret's Alveary in 1580. "To remove or go from one place to live in another: to flit." And it is still retained in our northern countries. See FLITTING. The examples from Spenser given by Dr. Johnson, shew the word as a verb active, to put from its place; and flit is still older as a verb active, though Dr. Johnson has not noticed it as such at all.

It became a received opinion, that the souls of men, departing this life, did flit out of one body into some other. Hooker.

3. To flutter; to rove on the wing.

He made a glancing shot, and miss'd the dove;
Yet miss'd so narrow, that he cut the cord
Which fasten'd, by the foot, the flitting bird.
Dryden, Zen.

Fear the just gods, and think of Scylla's fate!
Chang'd to a bird, and sent to flit in air. Pope.

4. To be flux or unstable.

Himself uphigh he lifted from the ground,
And with strong flight did forcibly divide
The yielding air, which nigh too feeble found
Her flitting parts, and element unsound. Spenser, F. Q.

The especial cause of this levity and flitting disposition, in the common and ordinary sort of men, is their disability to discern the strength of such reasons as may be framed against them. Hales, Rem. p. 12.

He stood at once the passage of his wind,
And the free soul to flitting air resign'd. Dryd. Zen.

To FLIT.* v. a. To remove out of its place; to dispossess.

The head [of the arrow] was left behind—
So sore it stucked when I was hit,
That by no crafte I might it flit.
Chaucer, Rom. R. v. 1812.

His grudging ghost did strive
With the frail flesh; at last it flitted is,
Whither the souls of men do fly that live amiss. Spenser, F. Q.

So hardly he the flitted life does win
Unto her native prison to return. Spenser, F. Q.

FLIT.† adj. [from fleet.] Swift; nimble; quick. Not now in use.

And in his hand two darts exceeding flit,
And deadly sharp, he held; whose heads were dight,
In poison and in blood of malice and despite. Spenser, F. Q.

And life itself's as flit as is the air we breathe.
P. Fletcher, Purp. Island, ii. 7.

FLITCH.† n. s. [Fliche, Saxon; flycke, Dan. fleche, floche, French. Skinner. The old French, Dr. Johnson might have added, is flie; and the Iceland. flycke, probably from flaka to divide. See FLAKE. A flitch of bacon is still common in the north of England. It is our old word. The side of a hog salted and cured.

Another brought a spycke
Of a bacon flitch. Skelton, Poems, p. 133.

But heretofore 'twas thought a sumptuous feast,
On birth days, festivals, or days of state,
A salt dry flitch of bacon to prepare;
If they had fresh meat, 'twas delicious fare. Dryden, Jew.

While he from out the chimney took
A flitch of bacon off the hook,
Cut out large slices to be fry'd. Swift.

He sometimes accompanies the present with a flitch of bacon. Addison.

To FLITE.* v. n. [plycan, Sax. contendere, rixare.] To scold. Used throughout the north. Written also fligit and flyte. See Praise of Yorkshire Ale, Grose, Westmoreland and Craven Dialects, and Wilbraham's Cheshire Words.

To FLITTER.* v. n. [a corruption of flutter.] To be in agitation; to be flux or unstable.

Work of flittering matter. Chauc. Boeth. Metr. ix.

Fends flittered in the ayre for fere. Lib. Fest. fol. 38. b.

Under such props false fortune builds her bower;
On sudden change her flittering frames be set. Mir. for Mag. p. 502.

FLITTER.* n. s. [Icel. flitia.] A rag; a tatter.

The box was snapp'd asunder, and the wig torn all to flitters. Aubrey's Miscel. p. 116.

FLITTERMOUSE.† n. s. [vespertilio, from flit and mouse. Teut. fledermuis.] The bat; the winged mouse. Sherwood.

The blood of a flittermouse, Middleton's Witch.

FLY'TTINESS.* n. s. [from flit.] Unsteadiness; lightness.

Had we but the same delight in heavenly objects, did we but receive the truth in the love of it, and mingle it with faith in the hearing, this would fix that volatileness and flittiness of our memories, and make every truth as indelible as it is necessary.

Bp. Hopkins. Expos. of the Lord's Prayer, p. 314.

FLITTING.† n. s.

1. An offence; a fault; a failure; a desert. [flit, Saxon, Scandal.] So far Dr. Johnson. The example he gives of this alleged sense is from Psalm, lvi. 8. "Thou tellest my flittings." In the Bible translation it is wanderings; which bishop Patrick paraphrases, "Thou art perfectly acquainted how often I have been forced to fly, like a vagabond, from place to place;" which hath cost me many a tear." See also Poli. Synops. Crit. where the word is migrations, vagationes, fugas, vol. 2. P. i. col. 913. We may consider, therefore, flittings, used in the translation of the psalm in our Common-Prayer-Book, as meaning no more than wandering, or removal from place to place.

2. Removal. [from flit.]

Seeing our whole life is but a vapour, or a flitting.
Dr. Plafiere, Nine Serms. 1621, p. 32.

Two flittings are as bad as one fire, i. e. household goods are as much injured by two removals as by one fire. North. Grose.

FLITTY.* adj. [from flit.] Unstable. Not now in use.

Busying their brains in the mysterious toys of flitty motion. More, Song of the Soud. i. i. 11.

FLIX.† n. s.

1. Down; fir; soft hair. [corrupted from flax.]

With his loll'd tongue he faintly licks his prey;
His warm breath blows her fliz up as she lies;
She trembling creeps upon the ground away,
And looks back to him with beseeching eyes.

Dryden.

2. Dysentery. [corrupted from flux; common in old language.]

The father of Publius lay sicke of the fever, and of a bloudie flize. Acts, xxviii. 8. Transl. of 1578.

FLIXWOOD. n. s. A plant.

FLO.* n. s. [Sax. fla.] An arrow. The word is in our old lexicography. Obsolete.

His bow he bent and set therein a flo.

Chaucer, Mancip. Tale.

To FLOAT.† v. n. [flotter, French. Dr. Johnson. — Rather the Sax. pleocan, or plöcan. See To FLEET.]

1. To swim on the surface of the water.

When the sea was calm, all boats alike
Shew'd mastership in floating. Shakspeare, Coriol.
The ark no more now floats, but seems on ground,
Fast on the top of some high mountain fix'd.

Milton, P. L.

That men, being drown'd and sunk, do float the ninth day, when their gall breaketh, are popular affirmations. Brown.

Three blust'ring nights, borne by the southern blast,
I float; and discover'd land at last. Dryd. Æn.

His rosy wreath was dropt not long before,
Borne by the tide of wine, and floating on the floor. Dryden.

On frothy billows thousands float the stream,
In cumb'rous mail. Philips.

Carp are very apt to float away with fresh water. Mortimer.

2. To move without labour in a fluid.

What divine monsters, O ye gods, were these,
That float in air, and fly upon the seas!

Dryden, Ind. Emp.

Swift they descend, with wing to wing conjoin'd,
Stretch their broad plumes and float upon the wind.

Pope.

3. To pass with a light irregular course: perhaps mistaken for fleet or flit.

Floating visions make not deep impressions enough to leave in the mind clear, distinct, lasting ideas. Locke.

To FLOAT. v. a. To cover with water.

Proud Pactolus floats the fruitful lands,
And leaves a rich manure of golden sands.

Dryden, Æn.

Venice looks, at a distance, like a great town half *float*ed by a deluge. Addison on Italy.

Now smokes with show'r's the misty mountain-ground,
And *float*ed fields lie undistinguish'd round.

Pope, Statius.

The vast parterres a thousand hands shall make:
Lo! Cobham comes, and floats them with a lake.

Pope.

FLOAT.† n. s. [from the verb.]

1. The act of flowing; the flux; the contrary to the ebb. A sense now out of use.

Our trust in the Almighty is, that with us contentions are now at their highest float. Hooker, Pref.

There is some disposition of bodies to rotation, particularly from East to West; of which kind we conceive the main float and reflux of the sea is, which is by consent of the universe, as part of the diurnal motion. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

2. Any body so contrived or formed as to swim upon the water.

That they should bring cedar-trees from Libanus, which should be brought by floats to the haven of Joppe. 1 Esdras, v. 55.

They took it for a ship, and, as it came nearer, for a boat; but it proved a float of weeds and rushes. L'Estrange.

A passage for the weary people make;
With osier floats the standing water strow,
Of massy stones make bridges if it flow.

Dryden, Virg.

3. The cock or quill by which the angler discovers the bite of a fish.

You will find this to be a very choice bait, sometimes casting a little of it into the place where your float swims. Walton, Angler.

4. A cant word for a level.

Banks are measured by the float or floor, which is eighteen foot square and one deep.

Mortimer, Husbandry.

5. A wave. [Fr. flot.]

For the rest o' the fleet,
Which I dispers'd, they all have met again,
And are upon the Mediterranean float.

Shakspeare, Tempest.

FLO'ATER.* n. s. [from float.] One who floats or sails upon.

Pity the floaters on the Ionian seas.

Eusden, Ovid's Met. B. 4.

FLO'ATING.* n. s. [from float.] The act of being conveyed by the stream.

What more necessary while we are at sea, in the floatings of this world, than the faithful adviser?
Whitlock, Mann. of the Eng. p. 391.

FLO'ATY. adj. Buoyant and swimming on the surface.

The hindrance to stay well is the extreme length of a ship, especially if she be floaty, and want sharpness of way forwards. Raleigh, Ess.

FLOCK.† n. s. [floce, Sax. flokkr, Icel. derived by some from the Greek, ὄχλος, a company; by others, from πλῆθος, a lock of wool.

1. A company; usually a company of birds or beasts.

She that hath a heart of that fine frame,
To pay this debt of love but to a brother,
How will she love when the rich golden shaft
Hath kill'd the flock of all affections else
That live in her. Shakspeare, Tw. Night.

2. A company of sheep, distinguished from herds, which are of oxen.

The cattle in the fields, and meadows green,
Those rare and solitary; these in flocks
Pasturing at once, and in broad herds upspring.

Barret, Alto. 1580.

To FLOUT.† v. a. [fluyten, Dutch; flouwe, Frisick. This is the etymology given by Dr. Johnson. But the word is from the Saxon flutan, to quarrel, to scold, flout being, as Mr. H. Tooke says, the past part of this verb. And it may be added that flit or flite is still used, like the Saxon, in the north of England.] To mock; to insult; to treat with mockery and contempt.

You must flout my insufficiency. Shakspeare.

The Norweyan banners flout the sky,
And fan our people cold. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

He mock'd us when he begg'd our voices;
Certainly he flouted us downright. Shaks. Coriol.

She rallied at her, that she should be so immodest to write to one she knew would flout her.
Shakspeare.

The heroic spirit of Luther, for I cannot be flouted out of that word, hated the brotherly of their cloisters.

Ep. Hall, Hon. of the Marr. Clergy, p. 42.
Phyllida flouts me. Walton, Angler.

To FLOUT. v. n. To practise mockery; to behave with contempt; to sneer.

Though nature hath given us wit to flout at fortune, hath not fortune sent in this fool to cut off this argument? Shakspeare.

With talents well endu'd
To be scurrilous and rude;
When you pertly raise your snout,
Flee and gibe, and laugh and flout. Swift.

FLOUT. n. s. [from the verb.] A mock; an insult; a word or act of contempt.

He would ask of those that had been at the other's table, Tell truly, was there never a flout or dry blow given?
Bacon.

She opened it, and read it out,
With many a smile and leering flout. Hudibras.
Their doors are barr'd against a bitter flout;
Snarl, if you please; but you shall snarl without. Dryden.

How many flouts and jeers must I expose myself to by this repentance? How shall I answer such an old acquaintance when he invites me to an intemperate cup?
Calamy, Serm.

FLOUTER.† n. s. [from flout.] One who jeers.

Democritus, that common flouter of folly.

Mortimer, Husbandry.

FLOW. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. The rise of water; not the ebb.

Some, from the diurnal and annual motion of the earth, endeavour to solve the flows and motions of these seas, illustrating the same by water in a bowl, that rises or falls according to the motion of the vessel. Brown, Vulg. Err.

The ebb of tides, and their mysterious flow,
We as art's elements shall understand. Dryden, Ann. Mirab.

2. A sudden plenty or abundance.

The noble power of suffering bravely is as far above that of enterprising greatly, as an unblemished conscience and inflexible resolution are above an accidental flow of spirits, or a sudden tide of blood. Pope.

3. A stream of diction; volubility of tongue.

Teaching is not a flow of words, nor the draining of an hour-glass; but an effectual procuring that a man know something which he knew not before, or to know it better. South.

FLOWER.† n. s. [flur, Goth. fleur, French; flos, flores, Latin.]

1. The part of a plant which contains the seeds.

Such are reckoned perfect flowers which have petala, a stamen, apex, and stylus; and whatever flower wants either of these is reckoned imperfect. Perfect flowers are divided into simple ones, which are not composed of other smaller, and which usually have but one single stile; and compounded, which consist of many flosculi, all making but one flower. Simple flowers are monopetalous, which have the body of the flower all of one entire leaf, though sometimes cut or divided a little way into many seeming petala, or leaves: as in borage, buglos; or polypetalous, which have distinct petala, and those falling off singly, and not altogether, as the seeming petala of monopetalous flowers always do: but those are further divided into uniform and difform flowers: the former have their right and left hand parts, and the forward and backward parts all alike; but the difform have no such regularity, as in the flowers of sage and deadnettle. A monopetalous difform flower is likewise further divided into, first, semifistular, whose upper part resembles a pipe cut off obliquely, as in the ariltochia: 2d, labiate; and this either with one lip only, as in the acanthum and scordium, or with two lips, as in the far greater part of the labiate flowers: and here the upper lip is sometimes turned upwards, and so turns the convex part downwards, as in the chamæcissus; but most commonly the upper lip is convex above, and turns the hollow part down to its fellow below, and represents a kind of helmet or monkshood; and from thence these are frequently called galleate, cucullate, and galericulate flowers; and in this form are the flowers of the lamium, and most verticillate plants. Sometimes the lamium is intire, and sometimes jagged or divided. 3d, Corniculate; that is, such hollow flowers as have on their upper part a kind of spur, or little horn, as the linaria, delphinium, &c. and the carniculum, or calcar, is always impervious at the tip or point. Compounded flowers are, first, discous, or discoidal; that is, whose flosculi are set so close, thick, and even, as to make the surface of the flower plain and flat, which because of its round form, will be like a discus; which disk is sometimes radiated, when there is a row of petala standing round in the disk, like the points of a star, as in the matricaria, chamæmelum, &c. and sometimes naked, having no such radiating leaves round the limb of its disk, as in the tanacetum. 2d, Planifolious, which is composed of plain flowers, set together in circular rows round the centre, and whose face is usually indented, notched, and jagged, as the hieracia. 3d, Fistular, which is compounded of long hollow little flowers, like pipes, all divided into large jags at the ends. Imperfect flowers, because they want the petala, are called staminateous, apetalous, and capillaceous; and those which hang pendulous by fine threads, like the juli, are by Tournefort called amentaceous, and we call them cats-tail. The term campaniformis is used for such as are in the shape of a bell, and infundibuliformis for such as are in the form of a funnel. Miller.

Good men's lives
Expire before the flowers in their caps,
Dying ere they sicken. Shaksp. Macbeth.
Beauteous flow'rs why do we spread
Upon the monuments of the dead? Cowley.
Though the same sun with all-diffusive rays
Blush in the rose, and in the diamond blaze,
We praise the stronger effort of his power,
And always set the gem above the flower. Pope.
If the blossom of the plant be of most importance,
we call it a flower; such are daisies, tulips,
and carnations. Watts.

2. An ornament; an embellishment.

The nomination of persons to those places being so prime and inseparable a flower of his crown, he would reserve to himself. Clarendon.
This discourse of Cyprion, and the excellent flowers of rhetoric in it, shew him to have been a sweet and powerful orator. Hakew. on Prop.
Truth needs no flow'rs of speech. Pope.

3. The prime; the flourishing part.

Alas! young man, your days can ne'er be long:
In flow'r of age you perish for a song.

Pope, Horace Impr.

4. The edible part of corn; the meal.

[flour och hweti, Goth. fine flour.]
The bread I would have in flower, so as it might be baked still to serve their necessary want.

Spenser on Ireland.

I can make my audit up, that all
From me do back receive the flow'r of all,
And leave me but the bran. Shakspere, Coriol.
The flowers of grains, mixed with water, will make a sort of glue. Arbutnot on Aliments.

But by thy care twelve urns of wine be fill'd,
Next these in worth, and firm those urns be seal'd;
Be twice ten measures of the choicest flower
Prepar'd, ere yet descends the evening hour.

Pope, Odys.

5. The most excellent or valuable part of any thing; quintessence.

The choice and flower of all things profitable the psalms do more briefly contain, and more movingly express, by reason of their poetical form.

Hooker.

1. To be in flower; to be in blossom; to bloom; to put forth flowers.

So forth they marched in this goodly sort,
To take the solace of the open air,
And in fresh flowering fields themselves to sport.

Spenser, F. Q.

Sacred hill, whose head full high,
Is, as it were, for endless memory
Of that dear Lord, who oft thereon was found,
For ever with a flow'ring garland crown'd.

Spenser, F. Q.

Then herbs of every leaf, that sudden flower'd,
Op'n'ing their various colours. Milton, P. L.
Mark well the flow'ring almonds in the wood,
If od'rous blooms the bearing branches load.

Dryden, Georg.

To leafless shrubs the flow'ring palms succeed,
And od'rous myrtle to the noisome weed.

Pope, Messiah.

2. To be in the prime; to flourish.

Whilome in youth, when flower'd my youthful spring,

Like swallow swift I wander'd here and there;
For heat of heedless lust me did so sting,
That I of doubted danger had no fear. Spenser.

This cause detain'd me all my flow'ring youth,
Within a loathsome dungeon set to pine.

Shakspere, Hen. VI.

3. To froth; to ferment; to mantle, as new bottled beer.

Those above water were the best, and that beer did flower a little; whereas that under water did not, though it were fresh. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

4. To come as cream from the surface.

If you can accept of these few observations, which have flowered off, and are, as it were, the burnishing of many studious and contemplative years, I here give you them to dispose of.

FLO'WERET. n. s. [fleuriet, French.] A flower; a small flower.

Sometimes her head she fondly would aguish
With gaudy garlands of fresh flow'rets dight,
About her neck, or rings of rushes plight.

Spenser, F. Q.

That same dew, which sometime on the buds
Was wont to swell, like round and orient pearls,
Stood now within the pretty flow'ret's eyes,
Like tears that did their own disgrace bewail. Shak.

So to the sylvan lodge

They came, that like Pomona's arbour smil'd,
With flow'rets deck'd, and fragrant smells,

Milton, P. L.

Then laughs the childish year with flow'rets crown'd,
And wisely perfumes the fields around;
But no substantial nourishment receives,
Infirm the stalks, unsolid are the leaves.

Dryden, Fab.

FLO'WERGARDEN. n. s. [flower and garden.] A garden in which flowers are principally cultivated.

Dr. Tillotson polished over whatever was left rough in the compositions with his smooth language, and flowingness of his easy eloquence.

Nichols, Def. of the Doct. and Disc. of the Ch. of Eng. Intro.

FLOWK.† n. s. [Sax. flowc.] See FLOOK.] A flogster; the name of a fish.

Amongst these the flowk, sole, and plaice follow the tide up into the fresh waters.

Carew, Survey of Cornwall.

FLO'WKWORT. n. s. The name of a plant.

FLOWN. Participle of fly, or flee, they being confounded; properly of fly.

1. Gone away.

For those,
Appointed to sit there, had left their charge,
Flown to the upper world. Milton, P. L.

Where, my deluded sense! was reason flown?
Where the high majesty of David's throne? Prior.

2. Puffed; inflated; elate.

And when night
Darkens the streets, then wander forth the sons
Of Belial, flown with insolence and wine.

Milton, P. L.

Is this a bridal or a friendly feast?

Or from your deeds I rightly may divine,
Unseemly flown with insolence or wine. Pope.

FLO'UTUANT.† adj. [fluctuans, Latin.] Wavering; uncertain.

Such is the fluctuant condition of human generation, and of those relations, which arise from thence, that he, which is in this day a son, the next may prove a father, and in the space of one day more, without any real alteration in himself, become neither son, nor father, losing one relation by the death of him who begat him, and the other by the departure of him that was begotten of him.

Pearson on the Creed, Art. 1.

To be longing for this thing to-day, and for that thing to-morrow; to change likings for loathings, and to stand wishing and hankering at a venture, how is it possible for any man to be at rest in this fluctuant wandering humour and opinion?

L'Estrange.

To FLUCTUATE. v. n. [fluctuo, Lat.]

1. To roll to and again as water in agitation.

The fluctuating fields of liquid air,
With all the curious meteors hov'ring there,
And the wide regions of the land, proclaim
The Pow'r Divine, that rais'd the mighty frame.

Blackmore.

2. To float backward and forward, as with the motion of water.

3. To move with uncertain and hasty motion.

The tempter

New part puts on; and, as to passion mov'd,
Fluctuates disturb'd.

Milton, P. L.

4. To be in an uncertain state; to feel sudden vicissitudes.

As the greatest part of my estate has been hitherto of an unsteady and volatile nature, either tost upon seas, or fluctuating in funds, it is now fixed and settled in substantial acres and tenements.

Addison, Spect.

5. To be irresolute; to be undetermined.

FLUCTUATION. n. s. [fluctuatio, Lat. fluctuation, Fr. from fluctuare.]

1. The alternate motion of the water.

Fluctuations are but motions subservient, which winds, storms, shores, shelves, and every interjacency irregularates.

Brown.

They were caused by the impulses and fluctuation of water in the bowels of the earth.

Woodward, Nat. Hist.

2. Uncertainty; indetermination.

It will not hinder it from making a proselyte of a person, that loves fluctuation of judgement little enough to be willing to be eased of it by any thing but error.

Boyle.

3. Violent agitation.

I have seen a crowd of disorderly people rush violently, and in heaps, till their utmost border was restrained by a wall, or had spent the fury of the first fluctuation and watery progress; and by and by it returned to the contrary with the same earnestness, only because it was violent and ungoverned.

Bp. Taylor, Holy Dying, v. § 8.

FLUE.† n. s. [A word of which I know not the etymology, unless it be derived from flew of fly, Dr. Johnson says. It is probably from the French l'ouverture, an opening, whence our old word lower, signifying an opening to let out smoke; used by Spenser. See LOUVER.]

1. A small pipe or chimney to convey air, heat, or smoke.

Flew [flue] a narrow outlet for smoke, to encrease the draught of air. North.

Pegge.

2. Soft down or fur, such as may fly in the wind.

FLUE'LLIN. n. s. The herb SPEEDWELL.

FLU'ENCE.* n. s. [from fluent.] Copiousness; readiness. Not now in use.

Poetry indeed hath a fluence of expression.

Whitlock, Mann. of the Eng. (1654), p. 478.

FLU'ENCY. n. s. [from fluent.]

1. The quality of flowing; smoothness; freedom from harshness or asperity.

Fluency of numbers, and most expressive figures for the poet, morals for the serious, and pleasantries for admirers of points of wit.

Garth, Pref. to Ovid.

2. Readiness; copiousness; volubility.

Our publick liturgy must be cashiered, the better to please those men who gloried in their extemporary vein and fluency.

King Charles.

We reason with such fluency and fire,

The beaux we baffle, and the learned tire. Tickell.

The common fluency of speech in many men, and most women, is owing to a scarcity of matter, and a scarcity of words; for whoever is a master of language, and hath a mind full of ideas, will be apt, in speaking, to hesitate upon the choice of both.

Swift, Thoughts on various Subjects.

3. Affluence; abundance. This sense is obsolete.

Those who grow old in fluency and ease,
— behold him tost on seas.

Sandys, Paraphrase on Job.

God riches and renown to men imparts,
Even all they wish; and yet their narrow hearts
Cannot so great a fluency receive,
But their fruition to a stranger leave.

Sandys.

FLUENT. adj. [fluens, Lat.]

1. Liquid.

It is not malleable; but yet is not fluid, but stiffened.

Bacon.

2. Flowing; in motion; in flux.

Motion being a fluent thing, and one part of its duration being independent upon another, it doth not follow that because any thing moves this moment, it must do so the next.

Ray on the Creation.

3. Ready; copious; voluble.

Those have some natural dispositions, which have better grace in youth than in age, such as is a fluent and luxurious speech.

Bacon.

I shall lay before you all that's within me,
And with most fluent utterance.

Denham, Sophy.

FLUENT.† n. s.

1. Stream; running water.

Confiding in their hands, that sed'ulous strive
To cut th' outrageous fluents; in this distress,
Ev'n in the sight of death.

Philips.

2. In the doctrine of fluxions, flowing quantity.

They must know to find fluxions from fluents.

Bp. Berkeley, Analyst, § 47.

FLUENTLY.† adv. [from fluent.] With ready flow; volubly; readily; without obstruction or difficulty.

To speak divinely, or by inspiration, was the usual phrase whereby they expressed speaking fluently, pathetically, and with coherence.

Spenser, Van. of Vulg. Prophecies, p. 74.

FLUID. adj. [fluidus, Lat. fluide, Fr.]

Having parts easily separable; not solid.

Or serve they as a flow'ry verge to bind

The fluid skirts of that same wat'ry cloud,
Lest it again dissolve, and show'r the earth?

Milton, P. L.

If particles slip easily, and are of a fit size to be agitated by heat, and the heat is big enough to keep them in agitation, the body is fluid; and if it be apt to stick to things, it is humid.

Newton, Opticks.

FLUID.† n. s.

1. Any thing not solid.

The doctrine and laws of fluids are of the greatest extent in philosophy.

Chambers.

2. [In physick.] Any animal juice: as the blood.

Consider how luxury hath introduced new diseases, and with them, not improbably, altered the whole course of the fluids.

Arbutnot and Pope, Mart. Scribl.

FLUIDITY. n. s. [fluidité, Fr. from fluid.]

The quality in bodies opposite to stability; want of coherence between the parts.

Heat promotes fluidity very much, by diminishing the tenacity of bodies: it makes many bodies fluid, which are not fluid in cold, and increases the fluidity of tenacious liquids; as of oil, balsam, and honey; and thereby decreases their resistance.

Newton, Opticks.

A disease opposite to this spissitude is too great fluidity.

Arbutnot.

FLUIDNESS. n. s. [from fluid.] That quality in bodies opposite to stability.

What if we should say that fluidness and stability depends so much upon the texture of the parts, that, by the change of that texture, the same parts may be made to constitute either a fluid or a dry body, and that permanently too?

Boyle.

FLUKE.* See FLOOK and FLOWK. Both the fish, and the part of an anchor, are frequently written fluke.

FLUME.* n. s. [Sax. plum; old Fr. flum, "flume, riviere," Lacombe. One also of our own oldest words. Lat. flumen.] A river. Obsolete.

They were baptised of him in the flume Jordan.

Wickliffe, St. Marks, i.

FLUMMERY.† n. s. [llymru, Welsh.]

1. A kind of food made by coagulation of wheatflower or oatmeal.

Milk and flummery are very fit for children.

Locke.

2. Flattery; either an enlargement of flam, or a figurative usage of the preceding meaning.

FLUNG. participle and preterite of fling. Thrown; cast.

Several statues the Romans themselves flung into the river, when they would revenge themselves.

Addison on Italy.

FLU'OR. n. s. [Latin.]

1. A fluid state.

The particles of fluids which do not cohere too strongly, and are of such a smallness as renders them most susceptible of those agitations which keep liquors in a fluor, are most easily separated and rarified into vapours.

Newton, Opticks.

2. Catamenia.

To FLUR.* See To FLURRY.

FLURRY.† n. s. [perhaps from the Teut. or German, flugs, hastily, in a hurry; or perhaps a corruption of fluster.]

1. A gust or storm of wind; a hasty blast. The boat was overset by a sudden flurry from the North.

Swift.

2. Hurry; a violent commotion.

One is kept in perpetual alarm, and flurry of spirits, for the first or second time of assisting at this diversion, [a bull-fight.]

Swinburne, Trav. through Spain, L. 40.

To FLURRY.* v. a. [from the noun.] To keep in agitation; to alarm. To Flur is an old northern word. "Flur'd, all ruffled." Praise of Yorksh. Ale, 1697, p. 98.

After so long a journey through the still wastes, and silent stupid towns of Spain, where every thing bears the mark of languor and indolence, we were at first quite flurried and confounded with the hurry in the garrison, the perpetual noise of cannon, and the reports of the soldiers going through their firing exercise.

Swinburne, Trav. through Spain. Lett. 29. (1776.)

To FLUSH.† v. n. [fluisen, Dutch, to flow; flus, or flux, Fr.]

1. To flow with violence.

The pulse of the heart he attributes to an ebullition and sudden expansion of the blood in the ventricles, after the manner of the milk, which, being heated to such a degree, doth suddenly, and all at once, flush up and run over the vessel. Ray.
It flushes violently out of the cock for about a quart, and then stops. Mortimer, Husbandry.

2. To come in haste. Dr. Johnson here cites a passage from Ben Jonson, where the verb is active, in the sportsman's sense of springing birds. The following passage will explain the present meaning of coming in haste.

Oh your crush'd nostrils slake your oppilation,
And makes your pent poovers flush to wholesome sneezes. Beaumont and Fl. Nice Valour.

3. To glow in the skin; to produce a colour in the face by a sudden afflux of blood. It is properly used of a sudden or transient heat of countenance; not of a settled complexion.

Thus Eve with count'nance blithe her story told,
But in her cheek distemper flushing glow'd.

What means that lovely fruit? What means, alas!
That blood, which flushes guilty in your face?
Dryden.

At once, array'd
In all the colours of the flushing year,
The garden glows. Thomson, Spring.

4. To shine suddenly. Obsolete.

A flake of fire that, flushing in his beard,
Him all amaz'd. Spenser.

To FLUSH.† v. a.

1. To colour; to redden; properly to redden suddenly.

The glowing dames of Zama's royal court,
Have faces flush'd with more exalted charms.
Addison, Cato.

Some court, or secret corner seek,
Nor flush with shame the passing virgin's cheek.
Gay, Trivia.

2. To elate; to elevate; to give the appearance of sudden joy.

Such things as can only feed his pride, and flush his ambition. South, Sermon ii. 104.

A prosperous people, flushed with great victories and successes, are rarely known to confine their joys within the bounds of moderation and innocence.
Atterbury, Sermon.

3. To put up; to spring.

If the place but affords
Any store of lucky birds,
As I make 'em to flush
Each owl out of his bush.

Ben Jonson, Masque of Owls.

FLUSH.† adj.

1. Fresh; full of vigour.

He took my father grossly, full of bread,
With all his crimes broad blown, and flush as May;
And how his audit stands, who knows, save Heav'n? Shakespeare.

I love to wear clothes that are flush,
Not prefacing old rags with plush. Cleaveland.

2. Affluent; abounding. A cant word.

Lord Strut was not very flush in ready, either to go to law or clear old debts; neither could he find good bail. Arbutnot.

3. Conceited, elevated in opinion.

Content not yourselves with some part of it;
that you read the Gospel, or New Testament, but neglect the Old, as is the practice of some flush notionists.

Bp. Hopkins, Expos. of the Lord's Prayer, p. 297.

FLUSH.† n. s. [German, flussh.]

1. Afflux; sudden impulse; violent flow.
This is commonly corrupted to flash:
as, a flash of water.

Never had any man such a loss, cries a dower, in the flush of his extravagancies for a dead wife. E. Strange.

The pulse of the arteries is not only caused by the pulsation of the heart, driving the blood through them in manner of a wave or flush, but by the coats of the arteries themselves. Ray.

Success may give him a present flush of joy;
but when the short transport is over, the apprehension of losing succeeds to the care of acquiring.
Rogers, Sermon.

2. Cards all of a sort. [Spanish, flus.]

3. Bloom; growth; abundance.

No busy steps the grass-grown footway tread,
But all the bloom flush of life is fled. Goldsmith.

A horse turned out in the spring to take the first flush of grass. Steevens, Note on K. Lear.

4. A term for a number of ducks; as a covey is for partridges.

As when a faulcon hath with nimble flight
Flowne at a flush of ducks fore by the brook,
The trembling fowl

Do hide themselves from her astonying look
Amongst the flags and covert round about.

Spenser, F. Q. ii. v. 54.

FLU'SHER.* n. s. The common name of the lesser butcher-bird. Chambers.

FLU'SHING.* n. s. [from flush.] Colour in the face by a sudden afflux of blood.

Ere yet the salt of most unrighteous tears
Had left the flushing in her galled eyes,
She married. Shakespeare, Hamlet.

To cover any pimples and heats, or to remove any obstructions, or to mitigate and quench excessive flushings.

Bp. Taylor, Artific. Handsom, p. 62.

What can be more significant than the sudden flushing and confusion of a blush?

Collier of the Aspect.

FLU'SHNESS.* n. s. [from flush.] Freshness.
Whose interest it is, like hermsaws, to hide the meagerness of their bodies by the flushness of their feathers. Bp. Gauden's Life of Hooker, 1661, p. 37.

To FLU'STER.† v. a. [from To flush.]

1. To make hot and rosy with drinking;
to make half drunk.

Three lads of Cyprus, noble swelling spirits,
Have to-night flush'd with flowing cups,
And they watch too. Shakespeare, Othello.

2. To confound; to hurry.

All endeavours must be therefore used either to divert, bind up, stypify, flusher, and amuse the senses; or else to juggle them out of their stations.

Swift, Fragment.

To FLU'STER.* v. n. [Teut. and Germ.
flugs, in a hurry; Icel. flas, precipitant, and Serenius gives flester, anhelus, i. e. short-winded, out of breath.]
To be in a bustle; to make much ado about little.

The Apostle seems here most peculiarly to have directed this encomium of the gospel, as a defiance to the philosophers of his time, the flushing, vain-glorious Greeks. South, Sermon iii. 215.

FLU'STER.* n. s. [from the verb.] Sudden impulse; violent flow; hurry.

Let no present flusher of fortune, or flow of riches, either transport the man himself with confidence, or the fools about him with admiration.
South, Sermon vi. 235.

When Caska adds to his natural impudence the flusher of a bottle, that which fools called fire when he was sober, all men abhor as outrage when he is drunk. Taitler, No. 252.

FLU'STERED.* adj. [from flusher.] Heated with liquor; half-drunk.

Being pleased with two or three imaginary bumpers of different wines, equally delicious; and a little vexed with this fantastick treat; he pretended to grow flushered, and gave the Barn-cide a good box on the ear.

Addison, Guardian, No. 162.

FLUTE.† n. s. [fluste, flute, French; fluyte,
Dutch; flöite, Danish; Chaucer writes our word after this manner, "many a flöite," House of Fame, iii. 133; Germ. flöite. The word may be either from the Gr. φλῦς, to blow, or the Lat. fistula, a pipe.]

1. A musical pipe; a pipe with stops for the fingers.

Th' oars were silver,
Which to the tune of flutes kept stroke.
Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleop.

The soft complaining flutes,
In dying notes discovers
The woes of hopeless lovers,
Whose dirge is whisper'd by the warbling lute.
Dryden.

2. A channel or furrow in a pillar, like the concave of a flute split.

To FLUTE.* v. n. To play on the flute.
Singing he was, or floyting all the day.

Chaucer, C. T. Prol.

To FLUTE.† v. a. To cut columns into hollows.

Channelled, fluted, furrowed, streaked.

Cotgrave, in V. Canell, and Sherwood.

FLU'TER.* n. s. [Fr. futeur.] One who plays on the flute. Cotg. and Sherw.

To FLU'TTER.† v. n. [plotepan, Saxon; flöter, French. And our word was formerly written flöter, or flöter. "As an eagle stirreth up her nest, flötereth over her birds, and beareth them on her wings," &c. Dr. Plafiere's Nine Sermon.
1621, p. 106.]

1. To take short flights with great agitation of the wings.

As an eagle stirreth up her nest, fluttereth over her young, and spreadeth abroad her wings, so the Lord alone did lead him. Deut. xxxii. 11.

Think you've an angel by the wings;
One that gladly will be nigh,
To wait upon each morning sigh;
To flutter in the balmy air
Of your well-perfumed pray'r.

Crashaw
They fed, and, flutt'ring, by degrees withdrew.
Dryden.

2. To move about with great show and bustle without consequence.

Excess muddies the best wit, and only makes it flutter and fro high. Grew.

No rag, no scrap of all the beau or wit,
That once so flutter'd, and that once so writ.

Pope, Druciad.

3. To be moved with quick vibrations or undulations.

Ye spirits! to your charge repair;
The flutt'ring fan be Zephyretta's care. Pope.

They the tall mast above the vessel rear,
Or teach the flutt'ring sail to float in air.

Pope, Odyssey.

4. To be in agitation; to move irregularly;
to be in a state of uncertainty.

The relation being brought him what a glorious victory was got, and how long she flutt'rd upon the wings of doubtful success, he was not surprised. Howell, Voc. For.

It is impossible that men should certainly discover the agreement or disagreement of ideas, whilst their thoughts flutter about, or stick only in sounds of doubtful signification. Locke.

Esteem we these, my friends! event and chance,
Produc'd by atoms from their flutt'ring dance!

Prior.

His thoughts are very fluttering and wandering, and cannot be fixed attentively to a few ideas successively. Watts.

To FLUTTER.† v. a.

1. To drive in disorder, like a flock of birds suddenly roused.
Like an eagle in a dovecoat, I Flutter'd your Volscians in Corioli. Shaks. Coriol.
2. To hurry the mind.
3. To disorder the position of any thing.
Then might ye see
Cows, hoods, and habits, with their wearers, toss'd
And flutter'd into rags. Milton, P. L.

FLUTTER. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Vibration; undulation; quick and irregular motion.

An infinite variety of motions are to be made use of in the flutter of a fan: there is the angry flutter, the modest flutter, and the timorous flutter.
Admon. Spect.

2. Hurry; tumult; disorder of mind.
 3. Confusion; irregular position.
- FLUTTERING.* n. s. [from flutter.] Tumult of mind; agitation.
In sweet confusion lost,
And dubious flutterings, he a while remain'd.
Thomson, Summer.

FLUVIAT'ICK. adj. [fluviatricus, Lat.] Belonging to rivers.

FLUX. n. s. [fluxus, Lat.; flux, Fr.]

1. The act of flowing; passage.
The simple and primary motion of fire is a flux, in a direct line from the centre of the fuel to its circumference. Digby.
By the perpetual flux of the liquids, a great part of them is thrown out of the body. Arbutnot.
2. The state of passing away and giving place to others.
Whether the heat of the sun in animals whose parts are successive, and in a continual flux, can produce a deep and perfect gloss of blackness.
Brown, Vulg. Err.

What the stated rate of interest should be, in the constant change of affairs, and flux of money, is hard to determine. Locke.

In the constituent matter of one body, turning naturally to another like body, the stock or fund can never be exhausted, nor the flux and alteration sensible. Woodward.

Languages, like our bodies, are in a perpetual flux, and stand in need of recruits to supply those words that are continually falling. Felton on the Classics.

3. Any flow or issue of matter.
Quinces stop fluxes of blood. Arbutnot, on Diet.
4. Dysentery; disease in which the bowels are excoriated and bleed; bloody flux.
Eat eastern spice, secure
From burning fluxes and hot calenture. Halifax.

5. Excrement; that which falls from bodies.
Civet is the very uncleanly flux of a cat. Shaks.
6. Concourse; confluence.
Left and abandon'd of his velvet friends;
'Tis right, quoth he; 'tush misery doth part
The flux of company. Shakspeare, As you like it.

7. The state of being melted.
8. That which mingled with a body makes it melt.

FLUX.† adj. [fluxus, Latin.] Unconstant; not durable; maintained by a constant succession of parts.

A corporation; which is likewise a flux body, may be punished for the faults, and liable to the debts, of their predecessors.

Arbutnot and Pope, Mart. Scribnerus, ch. 12.

Our argument for such a translation is the flux nature of living languages.

Abp. Newcome, Ess. Tr. of the Bible, p. 233.

To FLUX.† v. a.

1. To melt.
He maketh his cure more dilatory, and at the same time fluxes his body and his purse.
Moral State of England, (1670,) p. 34.
2. To salivate; to evacuate by spitting.
He might fashionably and genteelly—have been duelled or fluxed into another world.
South, Sermon, ii. 215.

FLUXA'TION.* n. s. [fluxus, Lat.] The state of passing away and giving place to others.

They [the Siamese] believe a continual fluxation and transmigration of souls from eternity.

Leslie, Short Method with the Deists.
FLUX'IBLE.* adj. [Fr. fluxible.] Not durable; changing.

Though it be questionable, whether I wear the same flesh which is fluxible, I am sure my hair is not the same; for I went faxen-haired out of England, but you shall find me returned with a very dark brown. Howell, Let. i. i. 31.

FLUXIB'ILITY.* n. s. [from fluxible.] Aptness to flow or spread. Cockeram.

FLUX'ILITY. n. s. [fluxus, Lat.] Easiness of separation of parts; possibility of liquefaction.

Experiments seem to teach, that the supposed aversion of nature to a vacuum is but accidental, or in consequence, partly of the weight and fluidity, or at least fluxibility of the bodies here below. Bayle.

FLUX'ION.† n. s. [fluxion, Fr. fluxio, Lat.]

1. The act of flowing.
A running, flowing or floating of waters. Colgrave.
2. The matter that flows.
The fluxion increased, and abscesses were rais'd. Wiseman.
3. [In mathematics.] The arithmetick or analysis of infinitely small variable quantities; or it is the method of finding an infinite small or infinitely small quantity, which being taken an infinite number of times, becomes equal to a quantity given. Harris.

A penetration into the abstruse difficulties and depths of modern algebra and fluxions, are not worth the labour of those who design the learned professions as the business of life. Watts.

FLUX'IONARY.* adj. [from fluxion.] Relating to mathematical fluxions.

You may apply the rules of the fluxionary method. Bp. Berkeley, Analyst, § 32.

FLUX'IONIST.* n. s. [from fluxion.] One skilled in the doctrine of fluxions.

Whether an algebraist, fluxionist, geometrician, or demonstrator of any kind can expect indulgence for obscure principles or incorrect reasonings. Bp. Berkeley, Analyst, Qu. 43.

FLUX'IVE.* adj. [from flux.]

1. Flowing with tears.
These often bath'd she in her fluxive eyes. Shakspeare, Lover's Complaint.
2. Wanting solidity.

Their arguments are as fluxive as liquor spilt upon a table. B. Jonson, Discoveries.

FLUX'URE.* n. s. [Lat. fluxus.]

1. The act or power of flowing.
Humour, we thus define it,
To be a quality of air, or water,
And in itself holds these two properties,
Moisture and fluxure.
B. Jonson, Every Man out of his Humour.

2. Fluid matter.

The swollen fluxure of the clouds.

Drayton, Baron's Wars, ii. 16.
To FLY.† pret. flew or fled; part. fled or flown. v. n. [pleogan, Saxon. To fly is properly to use wings, and gives flew and flown. To flee is to escape, or to go away, plean, Saxon, and makes fled.] They are now confounded. Fly, or pleogan, are evidently from the Latin volo, to fly.

1. To move through the air with wings.
Ere the bat hath flown
His cloister'd flight. Shakspeare, Macbeth.
Fowl that may fly above the earth in the open firmament of heaven. Gen. i. 20.
These men's hastiness the warier sort of you do not commend: ye wish they had held themselves longer in, and not flown so dangerously abroad before the feathers of the cause had been grown. Hooker.

2. To pass through the air.
Man is born unto trouble, as the sparks fly upward. Job, v.

3. To pass away, with the idea of swiftness or escape.

Ev'n a romance, a tune, a rhyme,
Help thee to pass the tedious time,
Which else would on thy hand remain;
Though flown, it ne'er looks back again. Prior.

4. To pass swiftly.
The scouts with flying speed
Return, and through the city spread the news. Dryden.

5. To move with rapidity.
Earth rolls back beneath the flying steed. Pope.

As striplings whip the top for sport,
On the smooth pavement of an empty court,
The wooden engine flies and whirls about. Dryd.

6. To part with violence.
Glad to catch this good occasion,
Most thoroughly to be winnow'd, where my chaff
And corn shall fly asunder. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.
He bassas heads, to save his own made fly;
And now, the sultan to preserve, must die. Waller.

7. To break; to shiver; to burst asunder with a sudden explosion.

Behold, a frothy substance rise;
Be cautious, or your bottle flies. Swift.

8. [plean, Saxon; fliehen, German.] To run away; to attempt escape. In this sense the verb is properly to flee, when fled is formed; but the following examples shew that they are confounded:

they are confounded oftener in the present than in the preter tense. See To FLEE.

Which when the valiant elf perceiv'd, he leapt,
As lion fierce, upon the flying prey. Spens. F. Q.
Ye shall flee, as ye fled from before the earthquake. Zech. xiv. 5.

Abiathar escaped, and fled after David. 1 Sam. xxii. 20.

What wonder if the kindly beams he shed,
Reviv'd the drooping arts again;
If science rais'd her head,
And soft humanity, that from rebellion fled. Dryden.

He oft desir'd to fly from Israel's throne,
And live in shades with her and love alone. Prior.

I'll fly from shepherds, flocks, and flow'ry plains;
From shepherds, flocks, and plains I may remove,
Forsake mankind, and all the world but love. Pope.

9. To FLY at. To spring with violence upon; to fall on suddenly.

Though the dogs have never seen the dog-killer, yet they will come forth, and bark and fly at him. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

No honour, no fortune, can keep a man from being miserable, when an enraged conscience shall fly at him, and take him by the throat.

South, Serm.
South.

10. To FLY at. To hawk; to catch birds by means of hawks.

Believe me, lords, for flying at the brook, I saw not better sport these seven years' day.

Shakespeare, K. Hen. VI. P. II.

11. To FLY back. To start; to become restiff, as a horse.

12. To FLY in the face. To insult.

This would discourage any man from doing you good, when you will either neglect him, or fly in his face, and he must expect only danger to himself.

Swift, Drapier's Letters.

13. To FLY in the face. To act in defiance.

Fly in nature's face :

— But how, if nature fly in my face first?

— Then nature's the aggressor. Dryd. Span. Fr.

14. To FLY off. To revolt.

Deny to speak with me? They're sick, they're weary,

They have travell'd all the night ! mean fetches ;
The images of revolt and flying off. Shak. K. Lear.

The traitor Syphax

Flew off at once with his Numidian horse.

Addison, Cato.

15. To FLY on. To spring with violence upon; to fly at.

A servant that he bred, thrill'd with remorse,
Oppos'd against the act, bending his sword
To his great master ; who, thereat enrag'd,
Flew on him, and amongst them fell'd him dead.

Shakespeare, K. Lear.

16. To FLY out. To burst into passion.

How easy is a noble spirit discern'd,
From harsh and sulphurous matter that flies out
In contumelies, makes a noise and stinks.

B. Jonson, Catiline.

Passion is apt to ruffle, and pride will fly out into contumely and neglect. Collier of Friendship.

17. To FLY out. To break out into licence.

You use me like a courser spur'd and rein'd ;
If I fly out, my fierceness you command. Dryd.
Papists, when unopposed, fly out into all the pageantries of worship ; but when they are hard pressed by arguments, lie close intrenched behind the council of Trent. Dryden.

18. To FLY out. To start violently from any direction.

All bodies, moved circularly, have a perpetual endeavour to recede from the centre, and every moment would fly out in right lines, if they were not restrained. Bentley, Serm.

19. To let FLY. To discharge.

The noisy culverin, o'ercharged, lets fly,
And bursts, unaiming, in the rended sky.

Granville.

20. To be light and unencumbered : as, a flying camp.

21. To float in the air ; as they marched out of the town, by capitulation, with drums beating, colours flying, &c. i. e. with honour. Hence perhaps the vulgar expression, "to come off with flying-colours."

- To FLY† v. a.

1. To shun ; to avoid ; to decline.

Love like a shadow flies, when substance love pursues ;

Pursuing that which flies, and flying what pursues.

Shakespeare.

O Jove, I think

Foundations fly the wretched ; such I mean,
Where they should be relieved. Shakespeare.

If you fly physick in health altogether, it will be too strange for your body when you shall need it.

Bacon, Essays.

O whether shall I run, or which way fly
The sight of this so horrid spectacle. Milton, S. A.

2. To refuse association with.

Sleep flies the wretch ; or when with cares oppressed,

And his toss'd limbs are weary'd into rest,

Then dreams invade. Dryden, Juv.

Nature flies him like enchanted ground.

Dryden.

3. To quit by flight.

Dedalus, to fly the Cretan shore,

His heavy limbs on jointed pinions bore,

The first who sail'd in air. Dryden, En.

4. To attack by a bird of prey.

If a man can tame this monster, and with her fly
other ravening fowl, and kill them, it is somewhat worth.

Bacon.

Fly every thing you see to the mark, and censure it freely.

B. Jonson, Magn. Lady, Induct.

5. To cause to fly, or float in the air, as, to fly an artificial kite.

6. It is probable that flew was originally the preterite of fly, when it signified volution, and fled when it signified escape : flown should be confined likewise to volution ; but these distinctions are now confounded. I know not any book except the Scriptures in which fly and flee are carefully kept separate.

FLY† n. s. [fleege, flie, Saxon ; fluga, Icel.]

1. A small winged insect of many species.

As flies to wanton boys, are we to th' gods ;
They kill us for their sport. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

My country neighbours begin to think of being in general, before they come to think of the fly in their sheep, or the tares in their corn.

Locke.

To prevent the fly, some propose to sow ashes with the seed.

Mortimer, Husbandry.

To heedless flies the window proves

A constant death. Thomson, Summer.

2. That part of a machine which, being put into a quick motion, regulates and equalises the motion of the rest.

If we suppose a man tied in the place of the weight, it were easy, by a single hair fastened unto the fly or balance of the jack, to draw him up from the ground.

Wilkins.

Massinger, Virgin Martyr.

- FLY-BITTEN.* adj. [fly and bite.] Stained by the bites of flies.

The German hunting in water-work is worth a thousand of these bed-hangings, and these fly-bitten tapestries. Shakespeare, K. Hen. IV. P. II.

- FLY-BLOW.* n. s. [fly and blow.] The egg of a fly.

As fast, and thick as fly-blows.

Beaumont and Fl. Cust. of the Country.

- To FLY-BLOW. v. a. [fly and blow.] To taint with flies ; to fill with maggots.

I am unwilling to believe that he designs to play tricks, and to fly-blow my words, to make others distaste them.

Stillingfleet.

Like a fly-blow cake of tallow ;

Or, on parchment, ink turn'd yellow. Swift.

So morning insects, that in muck begun,
Shine, buzz, and fly-blow in the setting sun. Pope.

FLY-BOAT.† n. s. [fly and boat. Fr. flibot ; Icel. fley.] A kind of vessel nimble and light for sailing.

With three neat fly-boats, which with them do take Six ships of Sandwich, up the fleet to make.

Drayton's Agincourt.

- FLYCA'TCHER n. s. [fly and catch.] One that hunts flies.

There was more need of Brutus in Domitian's days, to mend, than of Horace, to laugh at a fly-catcher.

Dryden.

The swallow was a fly-catcher as well as the spider.

L'Estrange.

FLYER.† n. s. [from fly.]

1. One that flies or runs away. This is written more frequently flier.

Enforced flight is no disgrace ; such flyers fight again.

Warner, Albion's Eng. iii. 18.

They hit one another with darts, as the others do with their hands, which they never throw counter, but at the back of the flier.

Sandys, Journey.

- He grieves so many Britons should be lost ;
Taking more pains, when he beheld them yield,
To save the flies than to win the field. Waller.

2. One that uses wings.

You, Philander, are too high a flyer for me ;
you are so much in the altitudes, &c.

Goodman, Wint. Ev. Conf. P. III.

3. The fly of a jack.

4. [In architecture.] Stairs made of an oblong square figure ; whose fore and back sides are parallel to each other, and so are their ends : the second of these flyers stands parallel behind the first, the third behind the second, and so are said to fly off from one another.

Moxon, Mech. Exerc.

To FLY-FISH. v. n. [fly and fish.] To angle with a hook baited with a fly, either natural or artificial.

Your order appointing certain deacons with fly-flaps to drive away flies, when the Pope celebrated, were very superfluous.

Sheldon, Mir. of Antichr. (1616,) p. 84.

Then 'mongst the rout he flew as swift,

As weapon made by Cyclops,

And bravely quell'd sedition's buz,

By dint of massy fly-flaps.

Song of St. George for England.

FLYING-FISH.* n. s. [fly and fish.] A fish of the gurnard kind.

The greatest recreation we had, to view such large shoals of flying fishes, as, by their interposing multitude, for some time darkened the sun ; a fish beautiful in its eye ; the body, though no larger than a small herring, yet big enough for those complemental fins, which, so long as moist, serve as wings to fly 200 paces or more, and 40 foot high.

Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 39.

FOAL.† n. s. [M. Goth. fula ; Su. Goth. fole ; Sax. folā, fole.] Our old authors write the word fole. The offspring of a mare, or other beast of burthen. The custom now is to use colt for a young horse, and filly for a young mare ; but there was not originally any such distinction.

Also flew his steed,
And with his winged heels did tread the wind,
As he had been a foal of Pegasus's kind.

Spenser, F. Q.

Twenty she-asses and ten foals. Gen. xxxii. 15.
To FOAL, v. a. [from the noun.] To bring forth. Used of mares.

Give my horse to Timon: it foals me straight Ten able horses. Shakespeare, Timon.

—Such colts as are
Of generous race, straight, when they first are foal'd,
Walk proudly. Moy, Georgicks.

Cotgrave in V. Barvseiment, and Sherwood.

FO'AMY, adj. [from foam.] Covered with foam; frothy.

More white than Neptune's foamy sea,
When struggling rocks he would embrace. Sidney.
Behold how high the foamy billows ride!
The winds and waves are on the juster side.

Dryden.

FOB, n. s. [fuppe, fupsack, German.] A small pocket.

Who pick'd a fob at holding forth. Hudibras.
When were the dice with more profusion thrown?

The well-fill'd fob, not empty'd now alone.

Dryden, Juv.

He put his hand into his fob, and presented me in his name with a tobacco-stopper.

Addison, Spect.

Two pockets he called his fobs: they were two large slits squeezed close by the pressure of his belly. Swift.

Orphans around his bed the lawyer sees,
And takes the plaintiff's and defendant's fees;
His fellow pick-purse, watching for a job,
Fancies his fingers in the cully's fob. Swift.

To FOB, v. a. [fuppen, German.]

1. To cheat; to trick; to defraud.

I think it is scurvy, and begin to find myself fob'd in it. Shakespeare, Othello.

Shall there be a gallows standing in England when thou art king, and resolution thus fob'd as it is with the rusty curb of old father antick the law. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

He goes pressing forward, till he was fobbed again with another story. L'Estrange.

2. To FOB off. To shift off; to put aside with an artifice; to delude by a trick.

You must not think to fob off our disgrace with a tale. Shakespeare, Coriol.

For they, poor knaves, were glad to cheat,

To get their wives and children meat;

But these will not be fob'd off so,

They must have wealth and power too. Hudibras.

By a Ravenna vintner once betray'd,

So much for wine and water mix'd I paid;

But when I thought the purchas'd liquor mine,

The rascal fob'd me off with only wine. Addison.

Being a great lover of country-sports, I absolutely determined not to be a minister of state, nor to be fob'd off with a garter.

Addison, Freeholder.

FO'CAL, adj. [from focus.] Belonging to the focus. See Focus.

Schellhammer demandeth whether the convexity or concavity of the drum collects rays into a focal point, or scatters them. Derham, Physico-Theology.

FO'CIL, † n. s. [focile, French; originally an Arabick expression for the two bones of the arm and leg here named.] The greater or less bone between the knee and ankle; or elbow and wrist.

The fracture was of both the focils of the left leg. Wiseman, Surgery.

FOCILLATION, n. s. [focillo, Lat.] Confort; support. Dict.

FO'CUS, n. s. [Latin.]

1. [In optics.] The focus of a glass is the point of convergence or concourse, where the rays meet and cross the axis after their refraction by the glass. Harris.

The point from which rays diverge, or to which they converge, may be called their focus. Newton, Opticks.

2. Focus of a Parabola. A point in the axis within the figure, and distant from the vertex by a fourth part of the parameter, or latus rectum. Harris.

3. Focus of an Ellipsis. A point towards each end of the longer axis; from whence two right lines being drawn to any point in the circumference, shall be together equal to that longer axis. Harris.

4. Focus of the Hyperbola. A point in the principal axis, within the opposite hyperbolas; from which if any two right lines are drawn, meeting in either of the opposite hyperbolas, the difference will be equal to the principal axis. Dict.

FO'DDER, † n. s. [Sax. foðer, pobbop, from poeban, to feed; Su. Goth. foda, to feed; Irish, foder, straw; Icel. fodr, food for cattle. See FOTHER.] Dry food stored up for cattle against winter.]

Their cattle, starving for want of fodder, corrupted the air. Knolles, Hist. of the Turks.

Being not to be raised without wintering, they will help to force men into improvement of land by a necessity of fodder. Temple.

Of grass and fodder thou defraud'st the dams,
And of their mother's dugs the starving lambs.

Dryden, Virg.

To FO'DDER, v. a. [from the noun.] To feed with dry food.

Natural earth is taken from just under the turf of the best pasture ground, in a place that has been well foddered on. Evelyn's Kalendar.

From winter keep,
Well fodder'd in the stalls, thy tender sheep. Dryden, Virg.

A farm of fifty pound lath commonly three barns, with as many cowyards to fodder cattle in. Mortimer, Husbandry.

Straw will do well enough to fodder with.

Mortimer.

FO'DDERER, † n. s. [Sax. foðpere.] He who foddereth cattle. Sherwood.

FOE, † n. s. [Sax. fah, an enemy; perhaps from pian, to hate; fa, Scottish. Runick faat, secret hatred; Cimbr. faide, enmity; Icel. faide; Goth. faad. Hence our feud; to which likewise foe-hood is akin; a word which Dr. Johnson has overpassed. Fone is our ancient plural of foe, and often occurs in the poetry of Spenser.]

1. An enemy in war.

Ere he had established his throne,
He fought great battles with his savage fone,
In which he then defeated ever more. Spenser, F. Q.
Never but one more was either like
To meet so great a foe. Milton.

2. A persecutor; an enemy in common life.

God's benison go with you, and with those
That would make good of bad, and friends of foes. Shakespeare.

Forc'd by thy worth, thy foe in death become,
Thy friend has lodg'd thee in a costly tomb. Dryden, Fab.

Thy defects to know,
Make use of ev'ry friend, and ev'ry foe. Pope.

3. An opponent; an illwisher.
He that considers and enquires into the reason of things, is counted a foe to received doctrines. Watts on the Mind.

To FOE,  v. a.* [from the noun.] To treat as an enemy. Not now in use.

In his power she was to foe or friend.

Spenser, F. Q. vi. xi. 6.

FO'EHOO,  [Sax. fah and hab, the quality, condition, or character of a foe.] Enmity.*

Have you forgotten S. Hierome's and Rufinus's deadly foehood which was rung over the world? Bp. Bedell, Cop. of Cert. Letters, (1620.) ch. 2. p. 325.

Composals of these inbred foehoods. Dr. Jackson, Works, ii. 522.

FO'ELIKE,  adj.* [foe and like, Sax. fa-læca.] In the character of an enemy.

He —
Foelike hath bent his bow; his hostile hand
Advanc'd, and slain the beauty of the land. Sandys, Lament, p. 4.

FO'EMAN, † n. s. [from foe and man, Sax. fahmon.] Enemy in war; antagonist. An obsolete word, Dr. Johnson says. Some poets of the present time have endeavour'd to re-establish this word, which once indeed was common.

Here haunts that fiend, and does his daily spoil;
Therefore henceforth be at your keeping well,
And ever ready for your foeman fell. Spenser, F. Q.

What valiant foeman, like to autumn's corn,
Have we mow'd down in top of all their pride? Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

When by report of subjects I did hear
How foemen were arrived on my shore,
I gathered all my soldiers void of fear.

Mirror, for Mag. p. 17.

Art nor cunning shall not lack,
To preserve thee, still to keep,
What thy envious foemen seek.

Beaumont and Fl. Women Pleased.

FO'ETUS. n. s. [Latin.] The child in the womb after it is perfectly formed; but before, it is called embryo. Quincy. A fetus, in the mother's womb, differs not much from the state of a vegetable. Locke.

FOG-† n. s. [Icel. fog, Dan. fog, a storm, a fall of snow, snow driven by the wind. It seems to be connected with the Lat. fuligo, a mist, darkness.] A thick mist; a moist dense vapour near the surface of the land or water.

Infect her beauty,
You fensuck'd fogs drawn by the pow'rful sun,
To fall and blast her pride. Shakspeare, K. Lear.
Lesser mists and fogs than those which covered Greece with so long darkness, present great alterations in the sun and moon.

Raleigh, Hist. of the World.
Fly, fly, prophane fogs! far hence fly away;
Taint not the pure streams of the springing day
With your dull influence: it is for you
To sit and scoule upon night's heavy brow.

Crashaw.
Fogs we frequently observe after sun-setting, even in our hottest months. Woodward, Nat. Hist.
FOG-† n. s. [fogagium, low Latin. "Gramen in foresta regis locatur pro fogagio." Leges Forest. Scotiæ.] Aftergrass; grass which grows in autumn after the hay is mown. A common word in the north.

The thick and well-grown fog doth mat my smoother slades. Drayton, Polyolb. S. 13.
To FOG- v. a. [from the noun.] To overcast; to darken; "to fog over."

Sherwood.

To FOG- v. n. [Fr. foguer, sway, authority; voguer, to go forward.] To have power; to practise. Hence our word pettifogger, one who has little influence, practice, or power. The present word has hitherto been unobserved.

The fogging protractage of money.

FO'GGINESS-† n. s. [from foggy.] The state of being dark or misty; cloudiness; mistiness.

Your poverty shall exceed the lazy dulness and useless fogginess of many of them amidst their plenty. Bp. Gardin, Hieraspistes, 1653, p. 560.
FO'GGY-† adj. [from fog.]

1. Misty; cloudy; dank; full of moist vapours.

Alas! while we are wrapt in foggy mist
Of our self-love, so passions do deceive,
We think they hurt when most they do assist. Sidney.
And Phæbus flying so, most shameful sight,
His blushing face in foggy cloud implies,
And hides for shame. Spenser.

Whence have they this mizzle?
Is not their climate foggy, raw and dull.

Shakspeare, Hen. V.
As cleere Phæbus, when some foggy cloud
His brightness from the world a while doth shroud,
Doth by degrees beginne to shew his light. Brown.

Let not the air be subject to any foggy noisomeness, from fens or marshes near adjoining.

Wotton, Architecture.

About Michaelmas, the weather fair, and by no means foggy, retire your rarest plants.

Evelyn's Kalendar.

2. Cloudy in understanding; dull.

I will pass over your coarse, foggy, drowsy conceit, that there are few or none simple monarchies in the world.

Hayward, Ans. to Doleman, (1603,) p. 35.

FOH. interject. [from rah, Saxon, an enemy.] An interjection of abhorrence: as if one should at sight of any thing hated cry out a foe!

Not to affect many proposed matches

Of her own clime, complexion and degree,
Whereto we see in all things nature tends,
Foh!! one may smell in it what most rank,
Foul disproportions; thoughts unnatural.

Shakspeare, Othello.

FO'IBLE-* adj. [French, foible; Ital. fiavole; probably from the Lat. febilis, to be lamented. Our word is now used perhaps only as a substantive, signifying defect, a weak side; but is no doubt adopted from the adjective, though our lexicographers have thought the adjective unworthy of any notice, in the sense formerly used by fencers; foible being the word for the weakest part of a blade, in contradistinction to fort, the strongest.] Weak.

The fencing-masters, when they present a foyle or fleuret to their scholars, tell him it hath two parts; one of which he calleth the fort or strong, and the other the foible or weak.

Lord Herbert's Life, p. 46.

FO'IBLE-† n. s. [from the adjective.] A weak side; a blind side; a failing.

He knew the foibles of human nature.

Friend, Hist. of Physick.

The witty men sometimes have sense enough to know their own foible, and therefore they craftily shun the attacks of argument. Watts, Logic.

To FOIL- v. a. [affoler, to wound, old French.]

1. To put to the worst; to defeat, though without a complete victory.

Amazement seiz'd

The rebel thrones; but greater rage to see
Thus foil'd their mightiest. Milton, P. L.

Leader of those armies bright,
Which but th' omnipotent none could have foil'd.
Milton, P. L.

Yet these subject not: I to thee disclose
What inward thence I feel, not therefore foil'd:
Who meet with various objects from the sense
Variouly representing; yet still free,
Approve the best, and follow what I approve.

Milton, P. L.

Strange, that your fingers should the pencil foil,
Without the help of colours or of oil! Waller.
He had been foiled in the cure, and had left it to nature.

Wiseman, Surgery.

In their conflicts with sin they have been so often foiled, that they now despair of ever getting the day.

Calamy, Serm.

Virtue, disdain, despair, I oft have try'd;
And, foil'd, have with new arms my foe defy'd.

Dryden.

But I, the consort of the thunderer,
Have warg'd a long and unsuccessful war;
With various arts and arms in vain have toil'd,
And by a mortal man at length am foil'd.

Dryden, Æn.

2. [fouiller, French.] To blunt; to dull.

When light-wing'd toys
Of feather'd Cupid foil'd, with wanton dulness,
My speculative and offic'd instruments. Shaks.

3. To defeat; to puzzle.

Whil'st I am following one character, I am cross'd in my way by another, and put up such a variety of odd creatures in both sexes, that they foil the scent of one another, and puzzle the chase.

Addison.

FOIL-† n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A defeat; a miscarriage; an advantage gained without a complete conquest.

We of thy cunning had no diffidence;
One sudden foil shall never breed distrust.

Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

Whosoever overthrow his mate in such sort, as that either his back, or the one shoulder, and contrary heel do touch the ground, shall be accounted to give the fall: if he be endangered, and make a narrow escape, it is called a foil. Carew.

So after many a foil the temper proud,
Renewing fresh assaults, amidst his pride,
Fell-whence he stood to see his victor fall.

Milton, P. L.

When age shall level me to impotence,
And sweating pleasure leave me on the foil.

Southern.

Death never won a stake with greater toil,
Nor e'er was fate so near a foil. Dryden.

2. [feuille, French, folium, Lat.] Leaf; gilding.

A stately palace, built of squared brick,
Which cunningly was without mortar laid,
Whose walls were high, but nothing strong nor thick,
And golden foil all over them display'd.

Spenser, F. Q.

Fame is no plant that grows on mortal soil,
Nor in the glistening foil

Set off to th' world, nor in broad rumour lies.
Milton, Lycidas.

3. Something of another colour near which jewels are set to raise their lustre.

As she a black silk cap on him begun
To set for foil of his milk-white to serve. Sidney.

Like bright metal on a sullen ground,
My reformation glittering o'er my fault,
Shall shew more goodly, and attract more eyes,
Than that which hath no foil to set it off.

Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

The sullen passage of thy weary steps
Esteem a foil, wherein thou art to set
The precious jewel of thy home. Shakspeare.

'Tis the property of all true diamonds to unite the foil closely to itself, and thereby better augment its lustre: the foil is a mixture of mastich and burnt ivory.

Grew, Museum.

Hector has a foil to set him off; we oppose the incontinence of Paris to the temperance of Hector.

Broome on the Odyssey.

4. [from fouiller, French.] A blunt sword used in fencing.

He that plays the king shall be welcome; his majesty shall have tribute of me: the adventurous knight shall use his foil and target. Shaks. Hamlet.

5. The steel of a looking-glass. [French, feuille, leaf; Lat. folium.] Sherwood.

Foil, among looking-glass-grinders, is a sheet of tin with quicksilver, or the like, laid on the back-side of a looking-glass, to make it reflect. Chambers.

FO'ILABLE-* adj. [from foil.] That may be foiled; refusable; rejectible.

Cotgrave in V. Rebutable, & Sherwood.

FO'ILER. n. s. [from foil.] One who has gained advantage over another.

FO'ILING-* n. s. Among hunters, the mark, barely visible, where deer have passed over grass.

To FOIN-† v. n. [poindre, French, pungo, Lat.] To push in fencing.

He hew'd, and lash'd, and foin'd, and thunder'd blows,

And every way did seek into his life;
No plate, no mail, could ward so mighty throws,
But yielded passage to his cruel knife. Spens. F.Q.

He cares not what mischief he doth, if his weapon be out: he will foin like any devil; he will spare neither man, woman, nor child. Shaks. Hen. IV.

He was fain to defend himself from the boat, a great while, the boar continually foining at him with his great tusks. Caendish, Life of Wolsey.

Then both, no moment lost, at once advance
Against each other, arm'd with sword and lance:
They lash, they foin, they pass, they strive to bore
Their corslets, and the thinnest parts explore.

Dryden.

To FOIN.* v. a. To prick; to sting.

Huloet, and Barret.

FOIN.† n. s. [from the verb.] A thrush; a push.

At hand strokes they use not swords, but pollaxes; which be mortal as well in sharpness as in weight, both for foynes and down strokes.

Robinson, Transl. of More's Utopia, (1551), ch. 10.
Come; no matter vor your foins. Sh. K. Lear.

I had my wards, and foins, and quarter-blows.

Wise Wom. of Hogsden, (1638.)

FO'ININGLY. adv. [from foin.] In a pushing manner.

FO'ISON.† n. s. [old French, foison, (for there is no such Sax. word, I think, as porjon, given by Dr. Johnson,) from foisonner, to abound. It may be from the Lat. fusus, copious; or, as Menage says, from fusio.] Plenty; abundance. A word now out of use, Dr. Johnson says; but it is certainly still used in several counties.

Pay justly thy tithes, whatsoever they be,
That God may in blessing send foison to thee.

Tusser.

Be wilful to kill, and unskillful to store,
And look for no foison, I tell thee before. Tusser.

Nature should bring forth,

Of its own kind, all foison, all abundance,
To feed my innocent people. Shaks. Tempest.

As those that feed grow full, as blossoming time
That from the seedness the bare fallow brings
To teeming foison; so her plentiful womb
Expresseth his full tillth and husbandry.

Shakespeare, Meas. for Meas.

To FOIST.† v. a. [fausser, French.] To insert by forgery; to falsify. It appears to have been adopted from the practice of gamblers; "to foist or cog a die," Barret's Alv. 1580; "to foist or cog," Sherwood's Dict. 1632.

Lest negligence or partiality might admit or foist in abuses and corruption, an archdeacon was appointed to take account of their doings.

Carew, State of Cornwall.

Forge law, and foist it into some by-place
Of some old rotten roll. Dryden, Don Sebast.

To FOIST.* v. n. To stink; to be fusty. It is the same as fust, which see; and also foistied. It is sometimes written fest, as in Hollyband's old French Grammar.

FOIST.* n. s. [old Fr. fuste, "a foist, a light galley," Cotgrave; perhaps from the Lat. fustis, in the sense of wood. "A fuste seu ligno dicta navis species, quam vulgo fuste dicimus; nam et naves nude ligna vocantur." See Du Cange in V. FUSTA.] A light and swift ship.

Barret.

This pink, this painted foist, this cockle-boat.
Beaumont and Fl. Tamer Tamed.

FO'ISTER.* n. s. [from To foist. A falsifier; "a liar." Sherwood.

These able are at neede to stand and keepe the stake,

When facing foisters, fit for Tiburne fraies,
Are food-sick, faint; or, heart-sick, run their waies.

Mir. for Mag. p. 483.

FO'ISTIED.* adj. [F. fusté.] Mustied; vinowed. Huloet.

FO'ISTINESS. n. s. [from foisty.] Fustiness; mouldiness.

Dress mustard, and lay it in cellar up sweet,
Lest foistiness make it for table unmeet. Tusser.

FO'ISTY.† adj. [Fr. fusté. See FUSTY.] Mouldy; fusty.

The old motheaten, leaden legend; and the foisty and favoured festival.

Favours, Antiq. Triumph over Novelty, (1619), p. 334.

FOLD.† n. s. [Sax. falæb, falb, from the Goth. faldan, to fold up. "Huc pertinet illud pealb, vel falb, quod Anglo-saxonibus olim denotabat stabulum, propriè verò septum ex stipitibus cratibusque in terram defixis complicatisque factum." Jun. Gloss. Goth. in V. FALDEN.]

1. The ground in which sheep are confined.

His eyes he open'd, and beheld a field
Part arable and tith; whereon were sheaves
New reap'd; the other part, sheep-walks and folds.

Milton, P. L.

In thy book record their groans,
Who were thy sheep, and in their ancient folds Slain. Milton, Sonnet.

2. The place where sheep are housed.
Build ye cities for your little ones, and folds for your sheep. Numb. xxxii. 24.

Time drives the flocks from field to fold,
When rivers rage, and rocks grow cold;
And Philomel becometh dumb,
And all complain of cares to come. Raleigh.

3. The flock of sheep.
And this you see I scarcely drag along,
Who yeanning on the rocks has left her young,
The hope and promise of my falling fold.

Dryden, Virg.

4. A limit; a boundary.
Secure from meeting, they're distinctly roll'd;
Nor leave their seats, and pass the dreadful fold.

Creech.

5. An enclosure of any kind, as fold-garth, still used in the north of England, for the farm-yard.

6. [From flib, Saxon.] A double; a complication; an involution; one part added to another; one part doubled upon another.

She in this trice of time
Commits a thing so monstrous, to dismantle
So many folds of favour. Shakespeare, K. Lear.
The ancient Egyptian mummies were shrouded in a number of folds of linen, besmeared with gums.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Not with indented wave, the serpent then
Prone on the ground, as since; but on his rear
Circular base of rising folds, that tower'd

Fold above fold, a surging maze! Milton, P. L.
Let the draperies be nobly spread upon the body, and let the folds be large; the parts should be often traversed by the flowing of the folds.

Dryden, Dufresnoy.

With fear and wonder seiz'd, the crowd beholds
The gloves of death, with seven distinguish'd folds
Of tough bull hides. Dryden, Virg. Æn.

The inward coat of a lion's stomach has stronger folds than a human, but in other things not much different.

Arbuthnot.

7. From the foregoing signification is derived the use of fold in composition. Fold signifies the same quantity added: as, two fold, twice the quantity; twenty fold, twenty times repeated.

But other fell into good ground, and brought forth fruit; some an hundred fold; some sixty fold, some thirty fold. St. Matt. xiii. 8.

At last appear

Hell bounds high reaching to the horrid roof,
And thrice three fold the gates: three folds were brass,

Three iron, three of adamantine rock. Mil. P. L.
Their martyr'd blood and ashes sow
O'er all the Italian fields, where still doth sway
The triple tyrant, that from these may grow
A hundred fold. Milton, Sonnet.

To FOLD.† v. a. [Goth. faldan; Sax. pealban.]
1. To shut sheep in the fold.
The star that bids the shepherd fold,
Now the top of heaven's doth hold. Mil. Comus.
She in pens his flocks will fold,
And then produce her dairy store,
With wine to drive away the cold,
And unbought dainties of the poor. Dryd. Hor.

2. To double; to complicate.
As a vesture shalt thou fold them up. Heb. i. 12.
Yet a little sleep, a little slumber, a little folding of the hands to sleep. Prov. vi. 10.
They be folded together as thorns. Nah. i. 10.
I have seen her rise from her bed, unlock her closet, take forth paper, fold it, write upon it, read it, seal it, and again return to bed. Shakespeare.
Conscious of its own impotence, it folds its arms in despair, and sits cursing in a corner.

Collier of Envy.

Both furl their sails, and strip them for the fight;
Their folded sheets dismiss the useless air.

Dryden, Ann. Mir.

3. To enclose; to include; to shut.
We will descend and fold him in our arms.

Shakespeare, Rich. II.

Witness my son, now in the shade of death,
Whose bright outshining beams thy cloudy wrath
Hath in eternal darkness folded up.

Shakespeare, Rich. III.

The fires i' th' lowest hell fold in the people.

Shakespeare, Coriol.

To FOLD. v. n. To close over another of the same kind; to join with another of the same kind.

The two leaves of the one door were folding, and the two leaves of the other door were folding.

1 Kings, vi. 34.

FO'LDER.* n. s. [from fold.] One who folds up any thing. Lat. rugator. Hul.

FO'LDING.* n. s. [from fold.] Applied to sheep, means the keeping them on arable lands within folds made of hurdles, which they remove about, so that when they have dunged one place they are set upon another.

We see that the folding of sheep helps ground, as well by their warmth as by their compost.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

FOLE.* See FOAL.

FOLIA'CEOUS. adj. [foliaceus, from folium, Latin.] Consisting of laminæ or leaves.

A piece of another, consisting of an outer crust, of a ruddy talky spar, and a blue talky foliaceus spar.

Woodward on Fossils.

FO'LIAGE. n. s. [folium, Latin; feuille, French.] Leaves; tufts of leaves; the apparel of leaves to a plant.

The great columns are finely engraven with fruits and foliage, that run twisting about them from the very top to the bottom. Addis. on Italy.

When swelling buds their od'rous foliage shed,
And gentl; harden into fruit, the wise

Spare not the little offsprings, if they grow Redundant.

Philips.

To FO'LIAGE.* v. a. [from the noun.] To work so as to represent foliage.

There is in this place one very great square, in the middle of which appears an huge composite foliated column. Drummond, Travels, p. 58.

Behold his chair, whose fractur'd seat infirm
An aged cushion hides! replete with dust
The foliag'd velvet, pleasing to the eye,
Of great Eliza's reign, but now the snare
Of weary guest, that on the specious bed
Sits down confiding. Shenst. Economy, P. III.

To FO'LIATE. v. a. [foliatus, folium, Lat.]
To beat into laminas, or leaves.

Gold foliated, or any metal foliated, cleaveth.

Bacon.

If gold be foliated, and held between your eyes and the light, the light looks of a greenish blue.

Newton, Opticks.

FOLIA'TION. n. s. [foliatio, folium, Lat.]

1. The act of beating into thin leaves.
2. Foliation is one of the parts of the flower, being the collection of those fugacious coloured leaves called petala, which constitute the compass of the flower; and sometimes guard the fruit which succeeds the foliation, as in apples and pears, and sometimes stand within it, as in cherries and apricots; for these being tender and pulpos, and coming forth in the spring, would be injured by the weather, if they were not lodged up within their flowers.

Quincy.

FO'LIATURE.† n. s. [from folium, Latin.]
The state of being hammered into leaves.

Dict.

They wreathed together a foliature of the fig-tree. Shuckford on the Creation, p. 203.

FO'LIER.* n. s. [Dutch, foeli; French, feuille.] Goldsmith's foil.

Concerning the preparing these foliers, it is to be observed, how and out of what substance they are prepared. Hist. R. Soc. ii. 489.

FO'LIO.† n. s. [in folio, Latin.]

1. A leaf or page of a book; fol. a and b, or recto and verso, being ancient and still continued distinctions for the first and second sides of the leaf in manuscripts and early-printed books. This is the primary sense of folio; the first writing being on leaves.

2. A large book, of which the pages are formed by a sheet of paper once doubled.

I am for whole volumes in folio.

Shakespeare, L. Lab. Lost.

Plumbinus and Plumee made less progress in knowledge, though they had read over more folios.

Watts on the Mind.

FO'LIOMORT. adj. [folium mortuum, Lat.]
A dark yellow; the colour of a leaf faded; vulgarly called filemot. See FILEMOT.

A flinty pebble was of a dark green colour, and the exterior cortex of a foliomort colour.

Woodward on Fossils.

FO'LIOT.* n. s. [Ital. foletto, "a spirit, a hobgoblin, a robin-goodfellow," Florio, World of Words, 1598.] A kind of demon.

Terrestrial devils are wood-nymphs, foliots, fairies, robin-goodfellows, &c.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 47.

Another sort of these [demons] are, which frequent forlorn houses; which the Italians call foliots, most part innoxious.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 47.

FO'LIUS.* adj. [from the Lat. folium.]
Leafy; thin and unsubstantial as a leaf.

Folious apperances, and not the central and vital interiors of truth. Brown, Ch. Mor. ii. 3.
FO'LIU† n. s. [role, Sax. volk, Dutch;
folk, Icel. foulk, old French; folios Gr.
Æol. φοῖλος, and by transposition φοῖνος;
Lat. voluus. It is properly a noun collective; and has no plural but by modern corruption.]

1. People in familiar language.

Never troubling him, either with asking questions, or finding fault with his melancholy, but rather fitting to his dolor dolorous discourses of their own and other folks' misfortune. Sidney.

Dorilaus having married his sister, had his marriage in short time blest, for so are folk wont to say, how unhappy soever the children after grow, with a son. Sidney.

When with greatest art he spoke,
You'd think he talk'd like other folk;
For all a rhetorician's rules
Teach nothing but to name his tools. Hudibras.

2. Nations; to name.

Thou shalt judge the folk righteously, and govern the nations upon earth. Psaln lvii. 4.

3. Any kind of people as discriminated from others.

The river thrice hath flow'd, no ebb between:
And the old folk, time's doting chronicles,
Say it did so a little time before. Shakespeare.

Anger is a kind of baseness: as it appears well in the weakness of children, women, old folks, and sick folks. Bacon.

4. It is now used only in familiar or burlesque language.

Old good man Dobson of the green,
Remembers he tree has seen,
And goes with folks to shew the sight. Swift.

He walk'd and wore a threadbare cloak;
He din'd and sup'd at charge of other folk. Swift.

FO'LKLAND.* n. s. [Sax. folcland.] Copy-hold land, in contradistinction to book-land (bocland) or charter-land.

They held their small portions of land as an inheritance — not by charter, but by a sort of prescription: this was called folkland.

Burke, Abridg. of Eng. Hist. ii. 7.

FO'LMKOTE.† n. s. [Sax. folcgmot; folcmot; folk, the people, and mote, a meeting, Su. Goth.] A meeting of people.

Those hills were appointed for two special uses, and built by two several nations: the one is that which you call folkmotes, built by the Saxons, and signifies in the Saxon a meeting of folk.

Spenser on Ireland.

To which folkmote they all, with one consent,
Agreed to travel. Spenser, F. Q. iv. iv. 6.

These held a court every fortnight, which they called the folkmote or leet, and there became re-ciprocally bound to each other, and to the public, for their own peaceable behaviour, and that of their families and dependants.

Burke, Abridg. of Eng. Hist. ii. 7.

FO'LLICLE. n. s. [folliculus, Latin.]

1. A cavity in any body with strong coats.

Although there be no eminent and circular follicle, no round bag or vesicle, which long containeth this humour; yet is there a manifest receptacle of choler from the liver into the guts.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

2. Follicle is a term in botany signifying the seed vessels, capsula seminalis, or case, which some fruits and seeds have over them; as that of the alkengi, pe-dicularis, &c.

Quincy.

FO'LLIFUL.* adj. [folly and full.] Full of folly. This is an old Scottish expression; and is an English vulgarism.

The common people call wit, mirth, and fancy, folly; fanciful and fullfolly they use indiscrimi-nately. Shenstone.

FO'LLILY.* adv. [from folly.] Foolishly.
Obsolete. Used both by Wicliffe and Chaucer.

To FO'LLOW.† v. a. [folgan, Saxon;
volgen, Dutch; foelga, Goth. to follow.]

1. To go after; not before, or side by side.

I had rather, forsooth, go before you like a man, than follow him like a dwarf.

Shakespeare, Mer. W. of Windsor.

Him all his train
Follow'd in bright procession to behold
Creation, and the wonders of his might.

Milton, P. L.

What could I do,

But follow strait, invisibly thus led. Milton, P. J.

2. To pursue as an enemy; to chase.

Where ranks fell thickest was indeed the place
To seek Sebastian, through a track of death
I follow'd him by groans of dying foes. Dryden.

3. To accompany; not to forsake.

Yet doubt not but in valley and in plain
God is as here, and will be found alike
Present, and of his presence many a sign
Still following thee, still compassing thee round
With goodness and paternal love, his face
Express, and of his steps the track divine.

Milton, P. J.

Up he rode,

Follow'd with acclamation and the sound
Symphonious of ten thousand harps that tun'd

4. To attend as a dependant.

And the three eldest sons of Jesse went and follow'd Saul to the battle. 1 Sam. xvii. 13.
Let not the muse then flatter lawless sway,
Nor follow fortune where she leads the way. Pope.

5. To go after.

Not yielding over to old age his country delights, he was at that time following a merlin.

Sidney.

Some pious tears the pitying hero paid,
And follow'd with his eyes the fleeting shade.

Dryden, Æn.

We follow fate, which does too fast pursue.

Dryden.

6. To succeed in order of time.

Such follow him as shall be registered,
Part good, part bad, of bad the longer scroll.

Milton, P. L.

Signs following signs, lead on the mighty year.

Pope.

7. To be consequential in argument, as effects to causes.

I laugh, when those who at the spear are bold
And venturous, if that fail them, shrink and fear
What yet they know must follow, to endure
Exile, or ignominy, or bonds or pain. Milt. P. L.

8. To imitate; to copy as a pupil; or to be of an opinion or party.

Where Rome keepeth that which is ancienter and better, others, whom we much more affect, leaving it for newer, and changing it for worse,
we had rather follow the perfections of them whom we like not, than in defects resemble them whom we love. Hooker.

Ill patterns are sure to be followed more than good rules. Locke on Education.

9. To obey; to observe as a guide or direction.

If all who do not follow oral tradition as their only rule of faith are out of the church, then all who follow the council of Trent are no Christians.

Tillotson.

Most men admire
Virtue, who follow not her lore.
Fair virtue, should I follow thee,
I should be naked and alone,
For thou art not in company,
And scarce art to be found in one.

Milton, P. R.

Evelyn.

10. To pursue as an object of desire.

Follow peace with all men. Hebrews, xii. 14.
Follow not that which is evil. S John, ver. 11.

11. To confirm by new endeavours; to keep up indefatigably.

They bound themselves to his laws and obedience; and in case it had been followed upon them, as it should have been, they should have been reduced to perpetual civility.

Spenser on Ireland.

12. To attend to; to be busied with.

He that undertaketh and followeth other men's business for gain, shall fall into suits.

Ecclesi. xxix. 9.

To FOLLOW.† v. n.

1. To come after another.

The famine shall follow close after you.

Jer. xlii. 16.

Welcome all that lead or follow
To the oracle of Apollo.

B. Jonson.

2. To attend servilely.

Such smiling rogues as these sooth every passion,
That in the nature of their lords rebels:
As knowing nought, like dogs, but following.

Shakespeare, K. Lear.

3. To be posterior in time.

Living carcasses design'd
For death, the following day, in bloody fight.

Milton, P. L.

4. To be consequential, as effect to cause.

If the neglect or abuse of liberty to examine what would really and truly make for his happiness misled him, the miscarriages that follow on it must be imputed to his own election.

Locke.

To tempt them to do what is neither for their own nor the good of those under their care, great mischiefs cannot but follow.

Locke.

5. To be consequential, as inference to premises.

Though there are or have been sometimes dwarfs, and sometimes giants in the world; yet it does not follow that there must be such in every age, nor in every country.

Temple.

Dangerous doctrine must necessarily follow, from making all political power to be nothing else but Adam's paternal power.

Locke.

6. To continue endeavours; to persevere.

Then shall we know, if we follow on to know the Lord;

Hos. vi. 3.

FO'LLOWER.† n. s. [from follow; Sax. pol-zepe.]

1. One who comes after another; not before him, or side by side.

Little gallant, you were wont to be a follower;
but now you are a leader; whether had you rather lead mine eyes, or eye your master's heels?

Shakespeare, Merry Wives of Windsor.

No stop, no stay, but clouds of sand arise,
Spurn'd and cast backward on the follower's eyes.

Dryden.

2. One who observes a guide or leader.

The understanding that should be eyes to the blind faculty of the will, is blind itself; and so brings all the inconveniences that attend a blind follower, under the conduct of a blind guide.

South, Sermon.

3. An attendant or dependant.

No follower, but a friend.

Pope.

4. An associate; a companion.

How accompanied, can'st thou tell that?

— With Poins, and other his continual followers.

Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

Grief is an impudent guest,
A follower every where.

Beaum. and Fl. Q. of Corinth.

5. One under the command of another.

I hold it no wisdom to leave unto the Irish chiefs too much command over their kindred, but rather withdraw their followers from them as much as may be, and gather them under the command of law.

Spenser on Ireland.

And forc'd Æneas, when his ships were lost,
To leave his followers on a foreign coast.

Dryden, Æn.

6. A scholar; an imitator; a copyer.

Be ye followers of me, even as I am of Christ.

1 Cor. xi. 1.

The true profession of Christianity invariably engages all its followers to do good to all men.

Sprat, Sermon.

Every one's idea of identity will not be the same that Pythagoras and thousands of his followers have.

Locke.

The church of Smyrna professed they worthily loved the martyrs, as the disciples and followers of our Lord; and because of their exceeding great affection to their King and their Master.

Nelson.

The studious head or gen'rous mind,
Follower of God, or friend of human kind,
Poet or patriot, rose but to restore
The faith and moral nature gave before.

Pope, Essays.

7. One of the same faction or party.

FO'LLY.† n. s. [old Fr. folle; Welsh, folox.]

1. Want of understanding; weakness of intellect.

This is folly, childhood's guide,
This is childhood at her side.

Hawkesworth.

2. Criminal weakness; depravity of mind.

She hath wrought folly in Israel, to play the whore in her father's house.

Deut. xxii. 21.

They have committed lewdness and folly in Israel.

Judges, xx. 6.

Think'st thou, that duty should have dread to speak,
When pow'r to flattery bows? To plainness honour

Is bound, when majesty to folly falls.

Shakespeare, K. Lear.

She turn'd to folly, and she was a whore.

Shakespeare, Othello.

3. Act of negligence or passion unbecoming gravity or deep wisdom. In this sense it has a plural.

Love is blind, and lovers cannot see

The pretty follies that themselves commit;

For if they could, Cupid himself would blush

To see me thus transformed to a boy.

Shakespeare.

Thy hum'rous vein, thy pleasing folly,

Lies all neglected, all forgot.

Prior.

Leave such to trifle with more grace and ease,

Whom folly pleases, or whose follies please.

Pope, Horace.

To FOMENT. v. a. [fomentor, Latin; fomentor, French.]

1. To cherish with heat.

Every kind that lives,

Fomented by his virtual power, and warm'd.

Milton, P. L.

2. To bathe with warm lotions.

He fomented the head with opiates to procure sleep, and a solution of opium in water to foment the forehead.

Arbutnot.

3. To encourage; to support; to cherish.

They love their givings, and foment their deeds no less than parents do their children.

Wolton.

Blame them thyself, as reason's law requires,

Since nature gave, and thou foment'st my fires.

Dryden.

They are troubled with those ill humours, which they themselves infused and fomented in them.

Locke.

FOMENTATION.† n. s. [fomentation, Fr. from foment.]

1. A fomentation is partial bathing, called also stuping, which is applying hot flannels to any part, dipped in medicated decoctions, whereby the steams breathe into the parts, and discuss obstructed humours.

Quincy.

Fomentation callet forth the humour by vapours; but yet, in regard of the way made by the poultice, draweth gently the humours out: for it is a gentle fomentation, and hath withal a mixture of some stupefactive.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

2. The lotion prepared to foment the parts.

The medicines were prepared by the physicians, and the lotions or fomentations by the nurses.

Arbutnot on Coins.

3. Excitation; encouragement.

This gentleman leaveth Italy in present tranquillity, though not without a little fear of some alteration on the side of Savoy: which prince seemeth to have great and unquiet thoughts; and, I fear, they will lack no fomentation from abroad.

Sir H. Wotton, Lett. Rem. p. 276.

And dive in science for distinguished names,
Dishonest fomentation of your pride!

Young, Night Th. 5.

FOMENTER.† n. s. [from foment.] One that foment; an encourager; a supporter.

These fatal distempers, as they did much hurt to the body politic at home, being like humours stirred in the natural without evacuation, so did they produce disadvantageous effects abroad; and better had it been, that the raisers and fomenters of them had never sprung up.

Howell.

The kinder, fomentor, and advancer of the whole German war.

Beuailing of the Peace of Germany, (1635), p. 113.

A perpetual fomentor and nourisher of sin.

Hale, Sermon, end of his Remains, p. 25.

FON.† n. s. [a word used by Chaucer for a fool, which Mr. Tyrwhitt designates as Saxon; but, as Dr. Jamieson has observed, there is no similar word in that language. "It is," he observes, "the same with the Su. Goth. and Icel. faane, fatuus; whence faana, faanast, fatuē se gerere; Su. Goth. faanig, delirus, stultus; Icel. fanytr, homo nihili; Germ. fanzen, nugas agere. Perhaps this is the origin of the English fond, and also of fun, sport." But see FUN. Wicliffe, it may be added, uses foned for foolish. We have also, in our old language, the term fond-plough for fool-plough, a kind of pageant.] A fool; an idiot.

Sicker I hold him for a greater fon,
That loves the thing he cannot purchase.

Spenser, Shep. Cal.

FOND.† adj. [fon, Scottish; a word of which I have found no satisfactory etymology; to fomme in is Chaucer to doat, to be foolish. So far Dr. Johnson. See however, the etymology of the preceding word, fon.]

1. Foolish; silly; indiscreet; imprudent injudicious.

That the Grecians or Gentiles ever did think it a fond or unlikely way to seek men's conversion by sermons, we have not heard.

Hooker.

He was beaten out of all love of learning by a fond schoolmaster. Ascham.

Tell these sad women,
'Tis fond to wail inevitable strokes,
As 'tis to laugh at them. Shakespeare, Coriol.

Grant I may never prove so fond
To trust man on his oath or bond. Shaks. Timon.

I am weaker than a woman's tear,
Tamer than sleep, fonder than ignorance. Shaks.

Fond thoughts may fall into some idle brain;
But one belief of all, is ever wise. Davies.

Thou see'st
How subtly to detain thee I devise,
Inviting thee to hear while I relate;
Fond I were it not in hope of thy reply.

Milton, P. L.

So fond are mortal men,
Fall'n into wrath divine,
As their own ruin on themselves 't invite.

'Twas not revenge for griev'd Apollo's wrong
Those ass's ears on Midas' temples hung;
But fond repentance of his happy wish. Waller.

But reason with your fond religion fights;
For many gods are many infinities.

Dryden, Tyrann. Love.
This is fond, because it is the way to cheat thyself.
Tillotson.

Dryden.

I, fond of my well-chosen seat,
My pictures, medals, books complete. Prior.

Some are so fond to know a great deal at once, and love to talk of things with freedom and boldness before they thoroughly understand them.

Watts on the Mind.

To FOND. } v. a. [from the adjective.]

To FONDLE. } To treat with great indulgence; to caress; to cocker.

How'er unjust your jealousy appear,
It does my pity, not my anger move:
I'll fond it as the froward child of love.

Dryden, Aurengzebe.
When amidst the fervour of the feast,
The Tyrian hugs, and fonds thee on her breast,
And with sweet kisses in her arms constrains,
Thou may'st infuse the venom in her veins.

Dryden, Æn.
They are allowed to kiss the child at meeting and parting; but a professor, who always stands by, will not suffer them to use any fondling expressions.

Swift.
To FOND. v. n. To be fond of, to be in love with; to doat on.

How will this fadge? My master loves her dearly;
And I, poor monster, fond as much on him;
And she, mistaken, seems to dote on me. Shakspr.

To FOND.* v. n. [Sax. fundan.] To strive; to try. Obsolete.

Though I sickness have upon honde,
And long have had, yet will I fonde
To make a boke after his heste.

FO'NDLING.† n. s. [from fondle.]

1. A person or thing much fondled or caressed; something regarded with great affection.

Quite you well in field and town,
And of all the fondlings make a deliverance.

Mystery of Candlemas-Day, (1512.)
Partiality in a parent is commonly unlucky;
for fondlings are in danger to be made fools, and the children that are least cockered make the best and wisest men.

L'Estrange.
The bent of our own minds may favour any opinion or action, that may shew it to be a fondling of our own.

Locke.
Any body would have guessed miss to have been bred up under a cruel stepdame; and John to be the fondling of a tender mother.

Arbutnot, Hist. of J. Bull.
Bred a fondling and an heirress,
Dress'd like any lady may 'ress;
Cocker'd by the servants round,
Was too good to touch the ground. Swift.

2. A fool. Yet so used, I believe, in the north of England.

We have many such fundlings, that are their wives' packhorses and slaves.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 603.

Fo'NDEY. adv. [from fond.]

1. Foolishly; weakly; imprudently; injudiciously.

Most shallowly did you these arms commence,
Fondly brought here, and foolishly sent hence.

The military mound
The British files transcend, in evil hour
For their proud foes, that fondly brav'd thy fate.

Philips.
Some valuing those of their own side or mind,
Still make themselves the measure of mankind:
Fondly we think we merit honour then,
When we but praise ourselves in other men. Pope.

Under those sacred leaves, secure
From common lightning of the skies,
He fondly thought he might endure
The flashes of Ardelia's eyes.

Swift.
2. With great or extreme tenderness.

Ev'n before the fatal engine clos'd,
A wretched sylph too fondly interpos'd:
Fate urg'd the sheers, and cut the sylph in twain.

Pope.
Fondly or severely kind.

Savage.

Fo'NDNESS.† n. s. [from fond.]

1. Foolishness; weakness; want of sense; want of judgement.

Fondness it were for any, being free,
To covet fetters, though they golden be.

Spenser, Sonnets.
So many absurd and indeed ridiculous consequences do follow the fondness of this argument.

Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsom. p. 55.

2. Foolish tenderness.

My heart had still some foolish fondness for thee;
But hence! 'tis gone: I give it to the winds.

Addison, Cato.
Hopeless mother!
Whose fondness could compare her mortal offspring

To those which fair Latona bore to Jove. Prior.

3. Tender passion.

Your jealousy perverts my meaning still;
My very hate is construed into fondness.

A. Philips, Distrest Mother.

Corinna, with that youthful air,
Is thirty and a bit to spare:
Her fondness for a certain earl Began when I was but a girl. Swift.

4. Unreasonable liking.

They err that either through indulgence to others, or fondness to any sin in themselves, substitute for repentance any thing that is less than a sincere resolution of new obedience, attended with faithful endeavour, and meet fruits of this change.

Hammond's Fundamentals.
Not that he had any fondness to the number itself.

Norris on the Beatitudes, p. 245.

FO'NL. n. s. Plural of foe. Obsolete.

person, yet it may become him better than that fool's coat. Denham.

5. To play the FOOL. To play pranks like a hired jester; to jest; to make sport.

I returning where I left his armour, found another instead thereof, and armed myself therein to play the fool. Sidney.

6. To play the FOOL. To act like one void of common understanding.

I have played the fool, and have erred exceedingly.
1 Sam. xxvi. 21.

Well, thus we play the fools with them, and the spirits of the wise sit in the clouds and mock us. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

Is it worth the name of freedom to be at liberty to play the fool, and draw shame and misery upon a man's self? Locke.

7. To make a FOOL of. To disappoint; to defeat.

'Twere as good a deed as to drink when a man's a-hungry, to challenge him to the field, and then to break promise with him, and make a fool of him.

Shakespeare, Tro. Nip't.

To FOOL. v. n. [from the noun.] To trifle; to toy; to play; to idle; to sport.

I, in this kind of merry fooling, am nothing to you; so you may continue and laugh at nothing still. Shakespeare, Tempest.

Fool not; for all may have,

If they dare try, a glorious life, a grave. Herbert.
If you have the luck to be court-fools, those that have either wit or honesty, you may fool withal, and spare not. Denham.

It must be an industrious youth that provides against age; and he that fools away the one, must either beg or starve in the other. L' Etrange.

He must be happy that knows the true measures of fooling. L' Etrange.

Is this a time for fooling? Dryden, Span, Friar.

To FOOL. v. a.

1. To treat with contempt; to disappoint;
to frustrate; to defeat.

And shall it in more shame be further spoken,
That you are fool'd, discarded, and shook off?

Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

Him over-weaning

To over-reach; but with the serpent meeting,
Fool'd and beguil'd. Milton, P. L.

If men loved to be deceived and fooled about their spiritual estate, they cannot take a surer course than by taking their neighbour's word for that,
which can be known only from their own heart.

South, Serm.

When I consider life, 'tis all a cheat;
For fool'd with hope, men favour the deceit. Dryden.

I'm tir'd with waiting for this chemick gold,
Which fools us young, and beggars us when old.

Dryden.

I would advise this blinded set of men not to give credit to those, by whom they have been so often fooled and imposed upon. Addison, Freeholder.

2. To infatuate; to make foolish.

If it be you that stir these daughters' hearts
Against their father, fool me not so much,
To bear it tamely. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

When I am read, thou feign'st a weak applause,
As if thou wert my friend, but lackest a cause;
This but thy judgment fools; the other way
Would both thy folly and thy spite betray.

B. Jonson.

It were an handsome plot,
But full of difficulties, and uncertain;
And he's so fool'd with downright honesty,
He'll ne'er believe it. Denham, Sophy.

A long and eternal adieu to all unlawful pleasures:
I will no longer be fooled or imposed upon by them. Calamy, Serm.

A boor of Holland, whose cares of growing still richer and richer, perhaps fool him so far as to make him enjoy less in his riches than others in poverty. Temple.

Shakespeare Hen. IV. P. II.

FOOL'ERY† n. s. [from fool.]
1. Habitual folly.

Foolery, sir, does walk about the orb like the sun; it shines every where; I would be sorry, sir, but the fool should be as oft with your master as with my mistress. Shakespeare, Tw. Night.

He keeps the house of pride and foolery.

Beaumont, and Fl. Span. Curate.

2. An act of folly; trifling practice.
Talk not much with a fool, and go not to him that hath no understanding. Beware of him, lest thou have trouble; and thou shalt never be defiled with his fooleries. Ecclesi. xxii. 13.

I shall do that that's fit, sir;

And fit to cross your fooleries.
Beaumont, and Fl. The Pilgrim.

It is meer foolery to multiply distinct particulars in treating of things, where the difference lies only in words. Watts.

3. Object of folly.
That Pythagoras, Plato, or Orpheus believed in any of these fooleries, it cannot be suspected.

Raleigh, Hist.

We are transported with fooleries, which, if we understood, we should despise. L' Etrange.

FOOLHA'PPY adj. [fool and happy.] Lucky without contrivance or judgment.

As when a ship, that flies fair under sail,
An hidden rock escaped unawares,

That lay in wait her wreck for to bewail;
The mariner, yet half amazed, stares

At perils past, and yet in doubt he dares
To joy at his foolhappy oversight. Spenser, F. Q.

FOOLHA'RDINESS† n. s. [from foolhardy.]
The old French language has the similar expression of fol hardement for temerity or imprudence. Chaucer uses folehardiness for rashness.] Mad rash-ness; courage without sense.

There is a difference betwixt daring and fool- hardness; Lucan and Statius often ventured them too far, our Virgil never. Dryden, Dufresnoy.

A false glossing parasite would — call his fool- hardness valour, and then he may go on boldly, because blindly. South, Serm. ii. 347.

FOOLHA'RDISE n. s. [fool and hardiesse,
French.] Foolhardiness; adventurousness without judgment. Obsolete.

More huge in strength than wise in works he was,

And reason with foolhardise over-ran;
Stern melancholy did his courage pass,

And was, for terror more, all arm'd in shining brass. Spenser, F. Q.

FOOLHA'RDY† adj. [fool and hardy.] Old French also fol-hardi, Rog. Gloss.

Suppl.] Daring without judgment;
madly adventurous; foolishly bold.

One mother, when as her foolhardy child
Did come too near, and with his talons play,

Half dead through fear, her little babe reviv'd.
Spenser, F. Q.

Some would be so foolhardy as to presume to be more of the cabinet-council of God Almighty than the angels. Howell.

If any yet be so foolhardy,
T' expose themselves to vain jeopardy;
If they come wounded off, and lame,

No honour's got by such a main. Hudibras.

FOOL'TRAP n. s. [fool and trap.] A snare to catch fools in; as a flytrap.

Betts, at first, were fooltraps, where the wise
Like spiders lay in ambush for the flies. Dryden.

FOOL'ISH adj. [from fool.]
1. Void of understanding; weak of intellect.

Thou foolish woman, seest thou not my mourning. 2 Esdras.

Shakespeare, K. Lear.

He, of all the men that ever my foolish eyes looked upon, was the best deserving a fair lady.

Shakespeare, Merch. of Ven.

2. Imprudent; indiscreet.

We are off

Like Romans; neither foolish in our stands,
Nor cowardly in retire.

Shakespeare, Coriol.

3. Ridiculous; contemptible.

It is a foolish thing to make a long prologue,
and to be short in the story itself. 2 Mac. ii. 32.

What could the head perform alone,
If all their friendly aids were gone?

A foolish figure he must make;
Do nothing else but sleep and ake.

Prior.

He allows himself in foolish hatreds and resentments against particular persons, without considering that he is to love every body as himself. Law.

4. [In Scripture.] Wicked; sinful.

FOO'LISHLY. adv. [from foolish.] Weakly; without understanding. In Scripture, wickedly.

Although we boast our winter sun looks bright,
And foolishly are glad to see it at its height;
Yet so much sooner comes the long and gloomy night.

Swift.

FOO'LISHNESS. n. s. [from foolish.]

1. Folly; want of understanding.

2. Foolish practice; actual deviation from the right.

Foolishness being properly a man's deviation from right reason, in point of practice, must needs consist in his pitching upon such an end as is unsuitable to his condition, or pitching upon means unsuitable to the compassing of his end.

South.

Charm'd by their eyes, their manners I acquire,
And shape my foolishness to their desire.

Prior.

Thrice horse and foot about the fires are led,
And thrice with loud laments they wail the dead.

Dryden.

9. State; character; condition.

See on what foot we stand; a scanty shore,
The sea behind, our enemies before.

Dryden, Æn.

In specifying the word Infantry, it would seem to insinuate that we are not upon the same foot with our fellow subjects in England.

Swift, Drap. Letters.

What colour of excuse can be for the contempt with which we treat this part of our species, the negroes, that we should not put them upon the common foot of humanity, that we should only set an insignificant fine upon the man who murders them?

Addison.

10. Scheme; plan; settlement.

There is no well wisher to his country without a little hope, that in time the kingdom may be on a better foot.

Swift.

I ask whether upon the foot of our constitution, as it stood in the reign of the late king James, a king of England may be deposed?

Swift.

11. A state of incipient existence; first motion. Little used but in the following phrase. See AFoot.

If such a tradition were at any time set on foot, it is not easy to imagine how it should at first gain entertainment; but much more difficult how it should come to be universally propagated.

Tillotson.

12. It seems to have been once proverbially used for the level, the square, par.

Were it not for this easy borrowing upon interest, men's necessities would draw upon them a most sudden undoing, in that they would be forced to sell their means, be it lands or goods, far under foot.

Bacon, Ess.

13. A certain number of syllables constituting a distinct part of a verse.

Feet, in our English versifying, without quantity and joints, be sure signs that the verse is either born deformed, unnatural, or lame.

Ascham, Schoolmaster.

Did'st thou hear these verses?

— O yes, I heard them all, and more too; for some o' them had in them more feet than the verses would bear.

Shakespeare.

And Sydney's verse halts ill on Roman feet.

Pope.

14. Motion; action.

While other jests are something rank on foot,
Her father hath commanded her to slip
Away with Slender to marry.

Shakespeare, Mer. W. of Windsor.

In the government of the world the number and variety of the ends on foot, with the secret nature of most things to which they relate, must make a distinct remark of their congruity, in some cases very difficult, and in some unattainable.

Grew.

15. Step.

This man's son would, every foot and anon, be taking some of his companions into the orchard.

L'Estrange.

16. A measure containing twelve inches; supposed to be the length of a man's foot.

When it signifies measure, it has often, but vitiously, foot in the plural.

An orange, lemon, and apple, wrapt in a linen cloth, being buried for a fortnight's space four foot deep within the earth, came forth no ways mouldy or rotten.

Bacon.

To FOOT. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To dance; to tread wantonly; to trip.

Lonely the vale and full of horror stood,
Brown with the shade of a religious wood;
The moon was up and shot a gleamy light;
He saw a quire of ladies in a round,
That featly footing seem'd to skim the ground.

Dryden.

2. To walk; not ride; not fly.

By this the dreadful beast drew nigh to land,
Half flying and half footing in his haste.

Spenser, F. Q.

Take heed, have open eye; for thieves do foot by night.

Shakespeare.

The man set the boy upon the ass, and footed it himself.

L'Estrange.

If you are for a merry jaunt, I'll try for once, who can foot it farthest.

Dryden, Span. Friar.

With them a man sometimes came to be a penitent, unless he also turns vagabond, and foots it to Jerusalem; or wanders over this or that part of the world, to visit the shrine of such or such pretended saint.

South.

To FOOT.† v. a.

1. To spurn; to kick.

You, that did void your rheum upon my beard,
and foot me as you spurn a stranger cur over your threshold.

Shakespeare.

For there the pride of all her heart will bow,
When you shall foot her from you, not she you.

Beaumont and Fl. Wit al sev. Weapons.

2. To settle; to begin to fix.

What confederacy have you with the traitors
Late footed in the kingdom? Shakespeare, K. Lear.

3. To tread.

Saint Withold footed thrice the wold:
He met the night-mare, and her name told;
Bid her alight, and her troth plight,
And aroynt thee, witch, aroynt thee right.

Shakespeare, K. Lear.

There haply by the ruddy damsel seen,
Or shepherd boy, they featly foot the green.

Tickell.

4. To hold with the foot. Not in use. Dr. Johnson says, citing Herbert. He had forgotten Shakespeare.

The holy eagle

Stoop'd, as to foot us.

Shakespeare, Cymbeline.

We are the earth, and they,
Like moles within us, heave and cast about;
And till they foot and clutch their prey,
They never cool, much less give out.

Herbert.

5. To supply with feet.

New spur-leathers, or stockings by this time footed.

By. Hall, Charact. The Vain-Glorious.

FOO'TBALL. n. s. [from foot and ball.]

1. A ball commonly made of a blown bladder, cased with leather, driven by the foot.

Am I so round with you as you with me,
That like a football you do spurn me thus? Shaks.
Such a Winter-piece should be beautified with all manner of works and exercises of Winter; as footballs, felling of wood, and sliding upon the ice.

Peachment.

As when a sort of lusty shepherds try
Their force at football, care of victory
Makes them salute so rudely, breast to breast,
That their encounter seems too rough for jest.

Waller.

One rolls along a football to his foes,
One with a broken truncheon deals his blows.

Dryden.

2. The sport or practice of kicking the football.

He was sensible the common football was a very imperfect imitation of that exercise.

Arbuthnot and Pope, Mart. Scribl.

FOOTBANDS.* n. s. pl. [foot and band.]

Soldiers that march and fight on foot.

T' whom valliant Audlie, in their feint recoyle,
With his foot-bands alone did give the foyle.

Mir. for Mag. p. 805.

FOOTBOY. n. s. [foot and boy.] A low menial; an attendant in livery.

Was it discretion, lords, to let this man,

This honest man, wait like a lowsy footboy

At chamber-door?

Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

Though I had nobody to assist but a footboy, yet I made shift to try a pretty number of things.

Boyle on Colours.

Whenever he imagines advantages will redound to one of his footboys by oppression of me, he never disputes it.

Swift.

FOOTBREADTH.* n. s. [foot and breadth.]

The space which a foot might cover.

I will not give you of their land, no not so much as a footbreadth, [in the margin, the treading of the sole of the foot.]

Deut. ii. 5.

FOOTBRIDGE. n. s. [foot and bridge.] A bridge on which passengers walk; a narrow bridge.

Palcomn's shepherd, fearing the footbridge was not strong enough, loaded it so long, till he broke that which would have born a bigger burden.

Sidney.

FOOTCLOTH.† n. s. [foot and cloth.] A sumpter cloth; and thence applied to a horse with housings.

Three times to-day my footcloth horse did stumble.

Shakespeare, K. Rich. III.

How should he worshipp'd be, and reverenc'd,
Ride with his furs and footcloths! B. Jonson, Fox.
Milan, and many other cities in Italy, danced at this musick, made a footcloth of their master's livery, and from this time dated themselves free states.

Fuller, Holy War, p. 165.

I still will be a justice in the war,

And ride upon my footcloth.

Benam. and Fl. The Prophetess.

FOOTED. adj. [from foot.] Shaped in the foot.

Snouted and tailed like a boar, and footed like a goat.

Grew.

FOOTFALL.* n. s. [foot and fall.] A stumble; a trip of the foot.

For every tripe are they set upon me:

Sometime like apes, that moe and chatter at me,
And after, bite me; then like hedge-hogs, which Lie tumbling in my barefoot way, and mount
Their prick at my footfall.

Shakespeare, Tempest.

FOOTFIGHT. n. s. [foot and fight.] A fight made on foot, in opposition to that on horseback.

So began our footfight in such sort, that we were well entered to blood of both sides.

Sidney.

FOOTGUARDS.* n. s. pl. [foot and guard.]

Footsoldiers belonging to those regiments called, by way of distinction, the guards.

FOOTHOLD.† n. s. [foot and hold.] Space to hold the foot; space on which one may tread surely.

Getting more universal foothold in other persons,
by dislodging her deformed enemy.

More, Conj. Cabb. p. 242.

All fell to work at the roots of the tree, and left it so little foothold, that the first blast laid it flat upon the ground.

L'Estrange.

He's at the top: he has nothing above him to aspire to, nor any foothold left him to come down by.

L'Estrange.

FOOTHO'T.* adv. [foot and hot.] Immediately; directly; a phrase borrowed, as Dr. Jamieson ingeniously supposes, from hunting, in which the dog pursues

the tract of animals, and is most successful, when the tract is recent, i. e.
when the footsteps of the animal are as it were hot. Not now in use.

And forthwithal anon fo'te-hot

He stale the cove.

Gower, Conf. Am. B. 4.

Custance han they taken anon fo'te-hot.

Chaucer, Man of Lawes Tale.

FOOTING. n. s. [from foot.]

1. Ground for the foot.

I'll read you matter deep and dangerous;

As full of peril and advent'rous spirit

As to o'erwalk a current, roaring loud,

On the unsteadfast footing of a spear.

Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

As Noah's pigeon, which return'd no more,
Did shew she footing found, for all the flood.

Davies.

In ascents, every step gained is a footing and help to the next.

Holder, Elem. of Speech.

2. Support; root.

Set cloven stakes; and, wond'rous to behold,

Their sharpen'd ends in earth their footing place,

And the dry poles produce a living race.

Dryden, Virg.

3. Basis; foundation.

All those sublime thoughts take their rise and footing here: the mind stirs not one jot beyond those ideas which sense or reflection have offered.

Locke.

The reasoning faculties of the soul would not know how to move, for want of a foundation and footing in most men, who cannot trace truth to its fountain and original.

Locke.

4. Place; possession.

Whether they uncious exhalations are,

Fir'd by the sun, or seeming so alone;

Or each some more remote and slippery star,

Which loses footing when to mortals shewn.

Dryden.

5. Tread; walk.

As he forward mov'd his footing old,

So backward still was turned his wrinkled face.

Spenser.

I would outnigh you did nobody come:

But hark, I hear the footing of a man.

Shakespeare, Merch. of Ven.

Break off, break off; I feel the different sound
Of some chaste footing near about this ground.

Milton, Comus.

6. Dance.

Make holyday: your rye straw hats put on,

And these fresh nymphs encounter every one

In country footing.

Shakespeare, Tempest.

7. Steps; road; track.

He grew strong among the Irish: and in his footing his son continuing, hath increased his said name.

Spenser on Ireland.

Like running weeds, that have no certain root;
or like footings up and down, impossible to be traced.

Bacon, Hen. VII.

8. Entrance; beginning; establishment.

Ever since our nation had any footing in this land, the state of England did desire to perfect the conquest.

Davies.

The defeat of colonel Bellasis gave them their first footing in Yorkshire.

Clarendon.

No useful arts have yet found footing here;

But all untought and savage does appear.

Dryden, Ind. Emp.

9. State; condition; settlement.

Gaul was on the same footing with Egypt, as to taxes.

Arbutnot.

FOOTLESS.* adj. Without feet; feetless.
See FEETLESS.

FOOTLICKER. n. s. [foot and lick.] A slave; an humble fawner; one who licks
the foot.

Do that good mischief which may make this island

Thine own for ever; and I, thy Caliban,

For ay thy footlicker.

Shakespeare, Tempest.

FOOTMAN. n. s. [foot and man.]

1. A soldier that marches and fights on foot.

The numbers levied by her lieutenant did consist of footmen three millions, of horsemen one million.

Ralegh, Hist.

2. A low menial servant in livery.

He was carried in a rich chariot, litterwise, with two horses at either end, and two footmen on each side.

Bacon.

Like footmen running before coaches,

To tell the inn what lord approaches.

Prior.

3. One who practises to walk or run.

FOOTMANSHIP. n. s. [from footman.] The art or faculty of a runner.

The Irish archers espying this, suddenly broke up, and committed the safety of their lives to their nimble footmanship.

Hoyward.

Yet, says the fox, I have baffled more of them with my wiles and shifts than ever you did with your footmanship.

L'Estrange.

FOOTMANTLE.* n. s. [foot and mantle.]

A species of petticoat such as is used to this day by market-women, when they ride on horseback, to keep their gowns clean. Obsolete.

A fo'te-mantel about her hippes large.

Chaucer's Wife of Bath, Prolog. C. T.

FOOTPACE. n. s. [foot and pace.]

1. Part of a pair of stairs, whereon, after four or five steps, you arrive to a broad place, where you make two or three paces before you ascend another step, thereby to ease the legs in ascending the rest of the stairs.

Moxon.

2. A pace no faster than a slow walk.

FOOTPAD. n. s. [foot and pad. See PAD.]

A highwayman that robs on foot, not
on horseback.

FOOTPATH. n. s. [foot and path.] A narrow way which will not admit horses or carriages.

Know'st thou the way to Dover?

— Both stile and gate, horseway and footpath.

Shakespeare, K. Lear.

FOOTPOST. n. s. [foot and post.] A post or messenger that travels on foot.

For carrying such letters, every thoroughfare weekly appointeth a footpost, whose dispatch is well near as speedy as the horses.

Carew, Surv. of Cornwall.

FOOTSO'LDIER.* n. s. [foot and soldier.]

A soldier that marches and fights on foot.

FOOTSTALL. n. s. [foot and stall.] A woman's stirrup.

FOOTSTEP. n. s. [foot and step.]

1. Trace; track; impression left by the foot.

Clear-sighted reason wisdom's judgement leads,
And sense, her vassal, in her footsteps treads.

Denham.

A man shall never want crooked paths to walk in, if he thinks that he is in the right way, where-ever he has the footsteps of others to follow.

Locke.

2. Token; mark; notice given.

Let us turn our thoughts to the frame of our system, if there we may trace any visible footsteps of Divine Wisdom and Beneficence.

Bentley, Serm.

3. Example.

FOOTSTOOL. n. s. [foot and stool.] Stool on which he that sits places his feet.

Thus have we swept suspicion from our seat.

And made our footstool of security.

Shaks. Hen. VI.

They whose sacred office 'tis to bring
Kings to obey their God, and men their king,

By these mysterious links to fix and tie
Men to the footstool of the Deity. Denham, Sophy.
Let echoing anthems make his praises known
On earth, his footstool, as in heav'n his throne.

Roscommon.

By the phrase of worshipping his footstool, no more is meant than worshipping God at his footstool.

Stillingfleet.

FOP.† n. s. [A word probably made by chance, and therefore without etymology, Dr. Johnson says. Others think it derived from Horace's vappa, a foolish fellow; which is adopted from vappa, wine that has lost its flavour, evaporated. Serenius proposes the Icelandic. hwopa, levity.] A simpleton; a coxcomb; a man of small understanding and much ostentation; a pretender; a man fond of show, dress, and flutter; an imperfect.

A whole tribe of fops, Shakspeare, K. Lear.
Got 'tween asleep and wake.

When such a positive abandon'd fop,
Among his numerous absurdities,
Stumbles upon some tolerable line,
I fret to see them in such company. Roscommon.

The leopard's beauty, without the fox's wit, is no better than a fop in a gay coat. L'Estrange.

In a dull stream, which moving slow,
You hardly see the current flow;
When a small breeze obstructs the course,
It whirls about for want of force,
And in its narrow circle gathers
Nothing but chaff, and straws, and feathers:
The current of a female mind
Stops thus, and turns with ev'ry wind;
Thus whirling round, together draws
Fools, fops, and rakes, for chaff and straws. Swift.

FOPDOODLE. n. s. [fop and doodle.] A fool; an insignificant wretch.

Where sturdy butchers broke your noddle,
And handled you like a fopdoodle. Hudibras.

FOP'LING.† n. s. [from fop.] A petty fop; an under-rate coxcomb.

Thy works in Chloe's toilet gain a part,
And, with his tailor, share the fopling's heart.

Intrusion with a fopling's face,
Ignorant of time and place.

Granger, Ode on Solitude.

FOPPERY.† n. s. [from fop.]

1. Folly; impertinence.

Let not the sound of shallow foppery enter
My sober house. Shakspeare, Merch. of Ven.

I was three or four times in the thought they were not fairies; and yet the guiltiness of my mind, the sudden surprise of my powers, drove the grossness of the foppery into a received belief, in despite of the teeth of all rhyme and reason, that they were fairies. Shakspeare, Mer. W. of Windsor.

This is the excellent foppery of the world, that when we are sick in fortune, often the surfeits of our own behaviour, we make guilty of our disasters the sun, the moon, and stars, as if we were villains on necessity. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

2. Affectation of show or importance; showy folly.

And as my satire bursts amain,
See feather'd foppery strew the plain. Shenstone.

Cambriks, lace, velvets, and many other prohibited fopperies. Guthrie.

3. Foolery; vain or idle practice; idle affectation.

They thought the people were better let alone in their fopperies, than to be suffered to break loose from that subjection which your superstition kept them in. Stillingfleet.

But though we fetch from Italy and France
Our fopperies of tune, and mode of dance,

Our sturdy Britons scorn to borrow sense. Granville.

I wish I could say quaint fopperies were wholly absent from graver subjects. Swift.

FOP'PISH. adj. [from fop.]

1. Foolish; idle; vain.

Fools ne'er had less grace in a year;
For wise men are grown foppish,
And know not how their wits to wear,
Their manners are so apish. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

2. Vain in show; foolishly ostentatious; vain of dress.

With him the present still some virtues have;
The vain are sprightly, and the stupid grave;
The slothful negligent, the foppish neat;
The lewd are airy, and the sly discreet. Garth.

The Romans grew extremely expensive and foppish; so that the emperor Aurelian forbid men that variety of colours on their shoes, allowing it still to women. Arbutnot.

You would know who is rude and ill-natured, who is vain and foppish, who lives too high, and who is in debt. Law.

FOP'PISHLY.† adv. [from foppish.] Vainly; ostentatiously. Sherwood.

FOP'PISHNESS.† n. s. [from foppish.] Vanity; showy or ostentatious vanity. Sherwood.

I have seen parts of dress, in themselves extremely beautiful, which at the same time subject the wearer to the character of foppishness and affectation. Shenstone.

FOR.† prep. [fop, Saxon; voor, Dutch, faur, Gothick. Skinner and Tyrwhitt derive it from the Latin pro; Junius, from the Greek περ; changing p into f, and transposing the letter r. Mr. Horne Tooke believes it to be no other than the Gothick substantive fairina, cause; and contends, that cause is the real single meaning which belongs to the several instances adduced. See Div. of Purley, i. 367—390.]

1. Because of.

That which we for our unworthiness are afraid to crave, our prayer is, that God for the worthiness of his son would notwithstanding vouchsafe to grant. Hooker.

Edward and Richard,
With fiery eyes sparkling for very wrath,
Are at our backs. Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

Speak, good Cominius;
Leave nothing out for length. Shakspeare.

An astrologer saith, if it were not for two things that are constant, no individual would last one moment. Bacon.

The governor, sallying out, took great store of victual and warlike provision, which the Turks had for haste left behind them. Knolles, Hist.

Their offer he willingly accepted, knowing that he was not able to keep that place three days, for lack of victuals. Knolles.

Quit, quit, for shame; this will not move,
This cannot take her:
If of herself she will not love,
Nothing can make her. Suckling.
Care not for frowns or smiles. Denham, Sophy, Prol.

The hypocrite or carnal man hopes, and is the wickeder for hoping. Hammond, Pract. Catech.

Let no man, for his own poverty, become more oppressing in his bargains; but quietly recommend his estate to God, and leave the success to him. Ep. Taylor.

Persons who have lost most of their grinders, having been compelled to use three or four only in chewing, wore them so low that the inward nerve lay bare, and they would no longer for pain make use of them. Ray on the Creation.

I but revenge my fate; disdain'd, betray'd,
And suff'ring death for this ungrateful maid. Dryden.

Sole on the barren sands, the suff'ring chief Roar'd out for anguish, and indulg'd his grief. Dryden.

For his long absence church and state did groan,
Madness the pulpit, faction seiz'd the throne. Dryden.

Nor with a superstitious fear is aw'd
For what befalls at home, or what abroad. Dryden, Virg.

I, my own judge, condemn'd myself before;
For pity, aggravate my crime no more. Dryden, Aurengzebe.

Matrons of renown,
When tyrant Nero burn't th' imperial town,
Shriek'd for the downfall in a doleful cry,
For which their guiltless lords were doom'd to die. Dryden.

Children, discountenanced by their parents for any fault, find a refuge in the caresses of foolish flatterers. Locke.

A sound mind in a sound body is a short but full description of a happy state in this world: he that has these two has little more to wish for, and he that wants either of them will be but little the better for any thing else. Locke.

The middle of the gulph is remarkable for tempests. Addison.

My open'd thought to joyous prospect raise,
And for thy mercy let me sing thy praise. Prior.

Which best or worst, you could not think;
And die you must, for want of drink. Prior.

It is a most infamous scandal upon the nation, to reproach them for treating foreigners with contempt. Swift.

We can only give them that liberty now for something, which they have so many years exercised for nothing, of railing and scribbling against us. Swift.

Your sermons will be less valuable, for want of time. Swift.

2. With respect to; with regard to.

Rather our state's defective for requital,
Than to stretch it out. Shakspeare, Coriol.

A patry ring
That she did give me, whose poesy was,
For all the world, like cutler's poetry

Upon a knife; love me and leave me not. Shaks.

For all the world.

As thou art at this hour, was Richard then. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

It was young counsel for the persons, and violent counsel for the matters. Bacon, Ess.

Authority followeth old men, and favour and popularity youth; but for the moral part, perhaps, youth will have the pre-eminence, as age hath for the politic. Bacon, Ess.

Comets are rather gazed upon than wisely observed in their effects; that is, what kind of comet for magnitude or colour, produceth what kind of effects. Bacon, Ess.

For me, if there be such a thing as I. Waller.

He saith these honours consisted in preserving their memories, and praising their virtues; but for any matter of worship towards them, he utterly denies it. Stillingfleet.

Our laws were for their matter foreign. Hales.

Now for the government, it is absolute monarchy; there being no other laws in China but the king's command. Temple.

For me, no other happiness I own,
Than to have born no issue to the throne. Dryd. Tyr. Love.

For me, my stormy voyage at an end,
I to the port of death securely tend. Dryd. Zen.

After death, we spirits have just such natures
We had, for all the world, when human creatures. Dryden.

Such little wasps, and yet so full of spite;
For bulk mere insects, yet in mischief strong. Tate, Juv.

Hobbes has given us a correct explanation of the sense in general; but for particulars and circumstances, he continually lops them.

Pope, Pref. to the Iliad.
Lo some are vellum, and the rest as good,
For all his lordship knows, but they are wood.

3. In this sense it has often as before it.

As for Maramaldu's general, they had no just cause to mislike him, being an old captain of great experience.

4. In the character of.

If a man can be fully assured of any thing for a truth, without having examined, what is there that he may not embrace for truth?

She thinks you favour'd:
But let her go, for an ungrateful woman.

A. Philips.

Say, is it fitting in this very field,
This field, where from my youth I've been a carter,

I, in this field, should die for a deserter?

5. With resemblance of.

I hear for certain, and do speak the truth,
The gentle York is up.
Now, now for sure, deliverance is at hand,
The kingdom shall to Israel be restor'd.

Milton, P. R.

The startling steed was seiz'd with sudden fright,
And, bounding, o'er the pommel cast the knight:
Forward he flew, and pitching on his head,
He quiver'd with his feet, and lay for dead.

6. Considered as; in the place of.

Our present lot appears
For happy, though but ill; for ill, not worst,
If we procure not to ourselves more woe.

Milton, P. L.

The council-table and star-chamber held for honourable that which pleased, and for just that which profited.

7. In advantage of; for the sake of.

An ant is a wise creature for itself; but it is a shrewd thing in an orchard.
He refused not to die for those who killed him, and shed his blood for some of those that spilt it.

Boyle.

Shall I think the world was made for one,
And men are born for kings, as beasts for men,
Not for protection, but to be devour'd?

Dryden, Span. Friar.

Read all the prefaces of Dryden,
For those our critics much confide in;
Though merely writ at first for filling,
To raise the volume's price a shilling.

Swift.

8. Conducive to; beneficial to.

It is for the general good of human society, and consequently of particular persons, to be true and just; and it is for men's health to be temperate.

Tillotson.

It can never be for the interest of a believer to do me a mischief, because he is sure, upon the balance of accounts, to find himself a loser by it.

Addison, Spect.

9. With intention of going to a certain place.

We sailed from Peru, for China and Japan.

Bacon.

As she was brought for England, she was cast away near Harwich haven.

Hayward.

We sailed directly for Genoa, and had a fair wind.

Addison.

10. In comparative respect.

For tusks with Indian elephants he strove,
And Jove's own thunder from his mouth he drove.

Dryden.

11. In proportion to.

As he could see clear, for those times, through superstition; so he would be blinded, now and then, by human policy.

Bacon, Hen. VII.

12. With appropriation to.

Shadow will serve for summation: prick him; for we have a number of shadows to fill up the muster book,

Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

13. After O an expression of desire.

O for a muse of fire, that would ascend
The brightest heaven of invention!

Shakespeare, Hen. V. Prologue.

14. In account of; in solution of.

Thus much for the beginning and progress of the deluge.

Burnet, Theory of the Earth.

15. Inducing to as a motive.

There is a natural, immutable, and eternal reason for that which we call virtue, and against that which we call vice.

Tillotson.

16. In expectation of.

He must be back again by one and twenty, to marry and propagate: the father cannot stay any longer for the portion; nor the mother for a new set of babies to play with.

Locke.

17. Noting power or possibility.

For a holy person to be humble, for one whom all men esteem a saint, to fear lest himself become a devil, is as hard as for a prince to submit himself to be guided by tutors.

Bp. Taylor.

18. Noting dependence.

The colours of outward objects, brought into a darkened room, depend for their visibility upon the dimness of the light they are beheld by.

Boyle on Colours.

19. In prevention of; for fear of.

Corn being had down, any way ye allow,
Should wither as needeth for burning in mow.

Tusser.

And, for the time shall not seem tedious,
I'll tell thee what befell me on a day,

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

There must be no alleys with hedges at the hither end for letting your prospect upon this fair hedge from the green: nor at the farther end, for letting your prospect from the hedge through the arches upon the heath.

Bacon, Ess.

Walk off, sirrah,
And stir my horse for catching cold.

Beaum. and Fl. Love's Pilgrimage.

20. In remedy of.

Sometimes hot, sometimes cold things are good for the toothach.

Garretson.

21. In exchange of.

He made considerable progress in the study of the law, before he quitted that profession for this of poetry.

Dryden.

22. In the place of; instead of.

To make him copious is to alter his character; and to translate him line for line is impossible.

Dryden.

We take a falling meteor for a star.

Cowley.

23. In supply of; to serve in the place of.

Most of our ingenious young men take up some cried-up English poet for their model, adore him, and imitate him, as they think, without knowing wherein he is defective.

Dryden.

24. Through a certain duration.

Some please for once, some will for ever please.

Roscommon.

Those who sleep without dreaming can never be convinced that their thoughts are for four hours busy, without their knowing it.

Locke.

The administration of this bank is for life, and partly in the hands of the chief citizens.

Addison, Rem. on Italy.

Since, hir'd for life, thy servile muse must sing
Successive conquests, and a glorious king;

And bring him laurels, whatso'er they cost. Prior.

The youth transported, asks without delay
To guide the sun's bright chariot for a day.

Garth, Ovid.

25. In search of; in quest of.

Philosophers have run so far back for arguments of comfort against pain, as to doubt whether there were any such thing; and yet, for all that, when any great evil has been upon them, they would cry out as loud as other men.

Tillotson.

26. According to.

Chymists have not been able, for aught is vulgarly known, by fire alone to separate true sulphur from antimony.

Boyle.

27. Noting a state of fitness or readiness.
Nay, if you be an undertaker, I am for you.

Shakespeare.

If he be brave, he's ready for the stroke.
28. In hope of; for the sake of; noting the final cause.

Dryden.

How quickly nature
Falls to revolt, when gold becomes her object!
For this the foolish, over-careful fathers
Have broke their sleeps with thought, their brains with care,
Their bones with industry: for this, engross'd
The canker'd heaps of strong achieved gold:
For this they have been thoughtful to invest
Their sons with arts and martial exercises.

Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

The kingdom of God was first by ill counsel; upon which counsel there are set, for our instruction, two marks.

Bacon.

Whether some hero's fate,
In words worth dying for, he celebrate.
For he writes not for money, nor for praise,
Nor to be call'd a wit, nor to wear bays.
There we shall see a sight worthy dying for,
that blessed Saviour, who so highly deserves of us.

Boyle.

He is not disposed to be a fool, and to be miserable for company.
Even death's become to me no dreadful name;
In fighting fields, where our acquaintance grew,
I saw him, and contemn'd him first for you.

Dryden, Aurengzebe.

For this, 'tis needful to prevent her art,
And fire with love the proud Phœnician's heart.

Dryden, Virg.

Some pray for riches; riches they obtain;
But watch'd by robbers, for their wealth are slain.

Dryden.

Let them, who truly would appear my friends,
Employ their swords like mine, for noble ends.

Dryden, Aurengzebe.

29. Of tendency to; towards.

The kettle to the top was hoist;
But with the upside down, to show
Its inclination for below.

Swift.

30. In favour of; on the part of; on the side of.

Ye suppose the laws for which ye strive are found in Scripture; but those not against which we strive.

Hooker, Pref.

It becomes me not to draw my pen in the defence of a bad cause, when I have so often drawn it for a good one.

Dryden.

Jove was for Venus, but he fear'd his wife. Dryden.

He for the world was made, not us alone.

Cowley.

They must be void of all zeal, for God's honour, who do not with sighs and tears intercede with him.

Bp. Smalridge.

Aristotle is for poetical justice.
They are all for rank and foul feeding.

Dennis. Felton.

31. Noting accommodation or adaptation.

Fortune, if there be such a thing as she,
Spies that I bear so well her tyranny,
That she thinks nothing else so fit for me.

Donne.

A few rules of logic are thought sufficient, in this case, for those who pretend to the highest improvement.

Locke.

It is for wicked men to dread God; but a virtuous man may have undisturbed thoughts, even of the justice of God.

Tillotson.

His country has good havens, both for the Adriatick and Mediterranean.

Addison on Italy.

Persia is commodiously situated for trade both by sea and land.

Arbutnot on Coins.

Scholars are frugal of their words, and not willing to let any go for ornament, if they will not serve for use.

Felton.

32. With intention of.

And by that justice hast remov'd the cause
Of those rude tempests, which, for rapine sent
Too oft, alas, involv'd the innocent.

Waller.

Here huntsmen with delight may read
How to chase dogs for scent or speed. Waller.
God hath made some things as for a duration
as they are capable of. Tillotson, Serm.

For this, from Trivia's temple and her wood,
Are coursers driv'n, who shed their master's blood.
Dryden.

Such examples should be set before them, as patterns for their daily imitation. Locke.
The next question usually is, what is it for?
Locke.

Achilles is for revenging himself upon Agamemnon, by means of Hector.

Broome, View of Epick Poem.

33. Becoming; belonging to.

It were not for your quiet, nor your good,
Nor for my manhood, honesty, and wisdom,
To let you know my thoughts. Shaks. Othello.

Th' offers he doth make,
Were not for him to give, nor them to take.
Daniel.

It were more for his honour to raise his siege, than to spend so many good men in the winning
of it by force. Knolles.

Jests for Dutchmen and English boys. Cowley.
Is it for you to ravage seas and land,
Unauthoriz'd by my supreme command!
Dryden, Æn.

His sire already signs him for the skies,
And marks the seat amidst the deities. Dryd. Æn.

It is a reasonable account for any man to give,
why he does not live as the greatest part of the world do, that he has no mind to die as they do,
and perish with them. Tillotson.

34. Notwithstanding.

This, for any thing we know to the contrary, might be the self-same form which Philojudæus expresseth. Hooker.

God's desertion shall, for ought he knows,
the next minute supervene. Decay of Piety.

Probability supposes that a thing may or may not be so, for any thing yet certainly determined on either side. South.

For any thing that legally appears to the contrary, it may be a contrivance to fright us.
Swift, Drap. Letters.

If such vast masses of matter had been situated nearer to the sun, or to each other, as they might as easily have been, for any mechanical or fortuitous agent, they must necessarily have caused a considerable disorder in the whole system. Bentley.

35. To the use of; to be used in.

The oak for nothing ill,
The osier good for twigs, the popular for the mill.
Spenser.

Your understandings are not bright enough for the exercise of the highest acts of reason. Tillotson.

36. In consequence of.

For love they force through thickets of the wood,

They climb the steepy hills and stem the flood.
Dryden.

37. In recompence of; in return of.

Now, for so many glorious actions done,
For peace at home, and for the public wealth,
I mean to crown a bowl for Caesar's health;
Besides, in gratitude for such high matters,
Know I have vow'd two hundred gladiators.
Dryden, Pers.

First the wily wizard must be caught;
For unconstrain'd, he nothing tells for nought.
Dryden, Virg.

38. In proportion to.

He is not very tall, yet for his years he's tall.
Shakspeare.

As he could see clear, for those times, through superstition; so he would be blinded, now and then, by human policy. Bacon, Hen. VII.

39. By means of; by interposition of.

Moral consideration can no way move the sensible appetite, were it not for the will.
Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

Of some calamity we can have no relief but from God alone; and what would men do in such a case, if it were not for God? Tillotson.

40. In regard of; in preservation of. I cannot for my life, is, I cannot if my life might be saved by it.

I bid the rascal knock upon your gate;
But could not get him for my heart. Shakspeare.

I cannot for my heart leave a room, before I have thoroughly examined the papers pasted upon the walls, Addison, Spect.

41. For all. Notwithstanding.

Neither doubt you, because I wear a woman's apparel, I will be the more womanish; since I assure you, for all my apparel, there is nothing I desire more fully than to prove myself a man in this enterprize. Sidney.

For all the carefulness of the Christians the English bulwark was undermined by the enemy, and upon the fourth of September part thereof was blown up. Knolles, Hist.

But as Noah's pigeon, which return'd no more,
Did shew she footing found for all the flood.
Davies.

They resolute, for all this, do proceed
Unto that judgment. Daniel.

If we apprehend the greatest things in the world of the emperor of China or Japan, we are well enough contented for all that, to let them govern at home. Stillingfleet.

Though that very ingenious person has anticipated part of what I should say, yet you will, for all that, expect that I should give you a fuller account. Boyle on Colours.

She might have passed over such businesses;
but my rabble is not to be mumbled up in silence,
for all her pertness. Dryden.

For all his exact plot, down was he cast from all his greatness, and forced to end his days in a mean condition. South.

42. For to. In the language used two centuries ago, for was commonly used before to, the sign of the infinitive mood, to note the final cause. As, I come for to see you, for I love to see you; in the same sense with the French pour. Thus it is used in the translation of the Bible. But this distinction was by the best writers sometimes forgotten; and for, by wrong use, appearing superfluous, is now always omitted.

Who shall let me now
On this vile body for to wreak my wrong?
Spenser, F. Q.

A large posterity
Up to your happy palaces may mount,
Of blessed saints for to increase the count. Spenser.

These things may serve for to reprehend how just cause of fear this kingdom may have towards Spain. Bacon.

FOR.† conj.

The word by which the reason is introduced of something advanced before.

Heav'n doth with us as we with torches deal,
Not light them for themselves; for if our virtues
Did not go forth of us, 'twere all alike
As if we had them not. Shaks. Meas. for Meas.

Old husbandmen I dig Sabinum know,
Who for another year day, plough, and sow:
For never any man was yet so old,
But hop'd his life one Winter more would hold.
Denham.

Tell me what kind of thing is wit?
For the first matter loves variety less. Cowley.

Thus does he foolishly who, for fear of any thing in this world, ventures to displease God; for in so doing he runs away from men, and falls into the hands of the living God. Tillotson.

2. Because; in this sense properly followed by that, and without it is elliptical. This sense is almost obsolete.

I doubt not but great troops would be ready to run; yet for that the worst men are most ready to remove, I would wish them chosen by discretion of wise men. Spenser on Ireland.

I would go forward in this course of seeking hard places and phrases in authors, but for that I have now much other business that nearer concerns me. Minsheu, Span. Gramm. (1599), p. 82.

Jealous souls will not be answer'd so:
They are not ever jealous for a cause,
But jealous for they're jealous. Shakspeare, Othello.

Heaven defend your good souls, that you think
I will your serious and great business scant;
For she is with me. Shakspeare, Othello.

Nor swell'd his breast with uncouth pride,
That heav'n on him above his charge had laid;
But, for his great Creator would the same,
His will increas'd; so fire augmenteth flame. Fairfax.

Many excrescences of trees grow chiefly where the tree is dead or faded; for that the natural sap of the tree corrupteth into some preternatural substance. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

3. FOR as much. In regard that; in consideration of.

For as much as in publick prayer we are not only to consider what is needful in respect of God;
but there is also in men that which we must regard: we somewhat incline to length, lest over-quick dispatch should give occasion to deem, that the thing itself is but little accounted of. Hooker.

For as much as the question cannot be scanned, unless the time of Abraham's journey be considered of, I will search into a tradition concerning his travels. Raleigh, Hist. of the World.

For as much as it is a fundamental law in the Turkish empire, that they may, without any further provocation, make war upon Christendom for the propagation of their laws; so the Christians may at all times, as they think good, be upon the prevention. Bacon, War with Spain.

For as much as it hath pleased Almighty God of his goodness to give you safe deliverance, and hath preserved you in the great danger of childbirth, you shall therefore give hearty thanks unto God. Common Pr. Churching of Women.

For as much as the thirst is intolerable, the patient may be indulged the free use of spa water.
Arbuthnot on Diet.

4. FOR why. Because; for this reason that. In its oldest acceptation, where- for. [Sax. pop-phi.]

For whi tho things that ye han seid in derknessis, shulen be seid in light.

Wicliffe, St. Luke, xii. 3.

Solyman had three hundred field-pieces; for why, Solyman purposing to draw the emperor into battle, had brought no pieces of battery with him. Knolles.

FOR.* In composition for is sometimes privative, as, forbear, and forbid, in its fourth meaning; sometimes merely in- tensive, as, forbear; and sometimes only communicative of an ill sense, as forswear.

To FORAGE.† v. n. [from foris, abroad,
Latin. Dr. Johnson takes no further notice of this word, except that, under the substantive, he adduces the Germ.
fourage, and Fr. fouage; to which may be added the low Lat. forragium. Serenius derives forage from the Icel. fodr, as Du Cange derives fouage from the low Latin fodrum, fodder; Sax. roþpe; whence foderare, forrare, and thus perhaps forage. See also FORAGER.]

1. To wander far; to rove at a distance.
Not in use.

Forage and run
To meet displeasure farther from the doors,
And grapple with him ere he come so nigh.
Shakspeare, K. John.

2. To wander in search of spoil; generally of provisions.

As in a stormy night
Wolves, urged by their raging appetite,
Forage for prey. Denham.
There was a brood of young larks in the corn,
and the dam went abroad to forage for them.
L'Estrange.

Nor dare they stray
When rain is promise'd or a stormy day;
But near the city walls their wat'ring take,
Nor forage far, but short excursions make.
Dryden, Virg.

3. To ravage; to feed on spoil.
His most mighty father on a hill
Stood sunning, to behold his lion's whelp Forage in blood of French nobility. Shaks. Hen. V.
TO FORAGE, v. a. To plunder; to strip; to spoil.

They will both strengthen all the country round, and also be as continual hols for her majesty, if the people should revolt; for without such it is easy to forage and over-run the whole land.
Spenser, on Ireland.

The victorious Philistines were worsted by the captivated ark, which foraged their country more than a conquering army. South.

FORAGE, n. s. [fourage, Germ. fouflage,
French.]

1. Search of provisions; The act of feeding abroad.

One way a band select from forage drives
A herd of bees, fair oxen, and fair kine,
From a fat meadow ground; or fleecy flock,
Ewes and their bleating lambs, over the plains
Their booty. Milton, P. L.

2. Provisions sought abroad.
Some o'er the publick magazines preside,
And some are sent new forage to provide.
Dryden, Georg.

3. Provisions in general
Provided forage, our spent arms renew'd.
Dryden, Fab.

FORAGER, n. s. [from forage; low Lat.
fodarius, forarius, whence also our obsolete word forriour, or fourrier, as in the Vis. of P. Plowman; "Kynde Conscience — sent forth his forriours, fevers and fluxes." See TO FORAGE.]

1. One who wanders in search of spoil; "a waster of a country." Huloet.

Frensiess and foul evil, foragers of Kynde.
Vis. of P. Plowman.
When that the general is not like the hive,
To whom the foragers shall all repair,
What honey is expected. Shaks. Troil. and Cress.
The wild foragers of Libya.
Bp. Taylor, Holy Dying, viii. § 5.
This forager on others wisdom.
Young, Night Th. 5.

2. A provider of food, fodder, or forage;
a merchant of corn.

Barret and Cockeram.
3. Any animal which feeds.
Down so smooth a slope,
The fleecy foragers will gladly browse.
Mason, Eng. Garden.

FORAGING, n. s. [from the verb forage.]
Predatory inroad; roving in search of provisions.

A Libian tiger drawn from his wilder foragings.
Bp. Taylor, Serm. (1651,) p. 216.

I chose to observe some kind of military advantages to await him at his foragings, his waterings, &c. Milton, Apol. for Smectymnus.

FORAMINOUS, adj. [from foramen, Lat.]
Full of holes; perforated in many places; porous.

Soft and foraminous bodies, in the first creation of the sound, will deaden it; but in the passage of the sound they will admit it better than harder bodies. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

TO FORBATH, v. a. [for and bathe.]
To bathe; to imbue.

With conquerors' hands forbath'd in their own blood. Sackville, Induct. Mir. for Mag.

TO FORBEAR, v. n. pret. I forbore, anciently forbare; part. forborn. [for- bæpan, Saxon. For has in composition the power of privation; as, forbear; or depravation: as, forswear, and other powers not easily explained.]

1. To cease from any thing; to intermit.

Who can forbear to admire and adore him who weighed the mountains in scales and the hills in a balance. Cheyne.

2. To pause; to delay.

I pray you tarry; pause a day or two,
Before you hazard; for in chusing wrong,
I lose your company, therefore forbear awhile.
Shakspeare.

3. To omit voluntarily; not to do; to abstain.

He forbare to go forth. 1 Sam. xxiii. 13.
At this he started and forbore to swear;
Not out of conscience of the sin, but fear.
Dryden, Jew.

The wolf, the lion, and the bear, }
When they their prey in pieces tear, }
To quarrel with themselves forbear. } Denham.

4. To restrain any violence of temper; to be patient.

By long forbearing is a prince persuaded, and a soft tongue breaketh the bone. Prov. xxv. 15.

TO FORBEAR, v. a.
To decline; to avoid voluntarily.

Forbear his presence, until time hath qualified the heat of his displeasure. Shakspeare, K. Lear.
So angry bulls the combat do forbear,
When from the wood a lion does appear. Waller.

2. To abstain from; to shun to do; to omit.

If it passed only by the house of peers, it should be looked upon as invalid and void, and execution should be thereupon forborn, or suspended.

There is not any one action whatsoever which a man ought to do, or to forbear, but the Scripture will give him a clear precept or prohibition for it.
South.

3. To spare; to treat with clemency.

With all lowliness and meekness, with long suffering, forbearing one another in love. Eph. iv. 2.

4. To withhold.

Forbear thee from meddling with God, who is with me, that he destroy thee not. 2 Chron. xxxv. 21.

FORBEARANCE, n. s. [from forbear.]

1. The care of avoiding or shunning any thing; negation of practice.

True nobleness would
Learn him forbearance from so foul a wrong.
Shakspeare.

This may convince us how vastly greater a pleasure is consequent upon the forbearance of sin, than can possibly accompany the commission of it. South.

Liberty is the power a man has to do, or for- bear doing any particular action, according as its doing or forbearance has the actual preference in the mind. Locke.

2. Intermission of something.

- 3 Command of temper.

Have a continent forbearance, till the speed of his rage goes slower. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

4. Lenity; delay of punishment; mildness.

Nor do I take notice of this instance of severity in our own country to justify such a proceeding;
but only to display the mildness and forbearance
made use of under the reign of his present majesty. Addison Freeholder.

He applies to our gratitude by obligations of kindness and beneficence, of long suffering and forbearance. Rogers.

FORBEARER, n. s. [from forbear.] An intermitter; interceptor of any thing.

The West as a father all goodness doth bring,
The East, a forbearer, no manner of thing. Tusser.
TO FORBID, v. a. pret. I forbade, and formerly forbid; part. forbidden or for- bid. [*for*bæban, Sax. verbieden. Dutch.]

1. To prohibit; to interdict any thing.

A witch, a quean, an old cozening queen; have
I not forbid her my house? Shaks. Mer. W. of Winds.

It is
The practice and the purpose of the king,
From whose obedience I forbid my soul. Shaks.

By tasting of that fruit forbid,
Where they sought knowledge, they did errour find. Danvers.

The voice of reason, in all the dictates of natural morality, ought carefully to be attended to,
by a strict observance of what it commands, but especially of what it forbids. South.

All hatred of persons, by very many Christian principles, we are most solemnly and indispensably forbid. Sprat.

The chaste and holy race
Are all forbidden this polluted place. Dryden, Æn.

2. To command to forbear any thing.

She with so sweet a rigour forbade him, that he durst not rebel. Sidney.

They have determined to consume all those things that God hath forbidden them to eat by his laws. Judith, xi. 12.

3. To oppose; to hinder.

The moisture being forbidden to come up in the plant, stayth longer in the root, and so dilateth
it. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

The plaister alone would pen the humour, and so exasperate it as well as forbid new humour.
Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Thy throne is darkness in th' abyss of light,
A blaze of glory that forbids the sight!
O teach me to believe thee thus conceal'd,
And search no farther than thyself reveal'd. Dryd.

4. To accuse; to blast. Now obsolete.

To bid is in old language to pray; to forbid therefore is to curse. [German, verbieten; Su. Goth. forebiuda; To interdict.]

Sleep shall neither night nor day
Hang upon thy penthouse lid;
He shall live a man forbid. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

TO FORBID, v. n. To utter a prohibition.

Now the good gods forbid,
That our renowned Rome
Should now eat up her own! Shakspeare, Coriol.

FORBIDDANCE, n. s. [from forbid.] Prohibition; edict against any thing.

Commands do not so much whet our desires as forbiddances. Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 27.

How hast thou yielded to transgress
The strict forbiddance! how to violate
The sacred fruit forbidden! Milton, P. L.

FORBIDDENLY, adv. [from forbid.] In an unlawful manner.

With all confidence he swears, as he had seen't,
That you have touch'd his queen forbiddenly.
Shakspeare, Wint. Tale.

FORBIDDENNESS, n. s. [from forbidden.]

The state of being forbidden.

The sinfulness of swearing does consist, not in the diversity of our oaths, but in their forbiddenness. Boyle against Customary Swearing, p. 37.

FORBIDDER. n. s. [from forbid.] One that prohibits; one that enacts a prohibition. This was a bold accusation of God, making the fountain of good the contriver of evil, and the forbiddor of the crime an abettor of the fact prohibited. Brown.

Other care, perhaps,
May have diverted from continual watch
Our great forbiddor. Milton, P. L.

FORBIDDING. part. adj. [from forbid.] Raising abhorrence; repelling approach; causing aversion.

Tragedy was made forbidding and horrible.

FORBIDDING.* n. s. [from forbid.] Hindrance; opposition.

But all these poor forbiddings could not stay him;
He in the worst sense construes their denial:
The doors, the wind, the glove that did delay him,
He takes for accidental things of trial.

Shakspeare, Rape of Lucrece.
Whom, and her race, only forbiddings drive.

Donne, Progress of the Soul.

FORBY.* See FOREBY.

FORCE.† n. s. [Su. Goth. fors, vehemence; old Fr. force, strength; fortis, Latin.]

1. Strength; vigour; might; active power. He never could maintain his part but in the force of his will. Shakspeare, Much ad.

A ship, which hath struck sail, doth run

By force of that force which before it won. Donne.

2. Violence.

Thus got the house of Lancaster the crown,
Which now they hold by force and not by right.

Shakspeare.

The shepherd Paris bore the Spartan bride
By force away, and then by force enjoy'd;
But I by free consent. Dryden.

3. Virtue; efficacy.

Manifest it is, that the very majesty and holiness of the place where God is worshipped, hath, in regard of us, great virtue, force, and efficacy; for that it serveth as a sensible help to stir up devotion. Hooker.

No definitions, no suppositions of any sect, are of force enough to destroy constant experience. Locke.

4. Validness; power of law.

A testament is of force after men are dead.

Heb. ix. 17.

Not long in force this charter stood;
Wanting that seal, it must be seal'd in blood.

Denham.

5. Armament; warlike preparation. Often forces in the plural.

They that fled stood under the shadow of Heshbon, because of the force. Jerem. xlviii. 45.

O Thou! whose captain I account myself,
Look on my forces with a gracious eye.

Shakspeare, Rich. III.

The secret of the power of Spain consisteth in a veteran army, compounded of miscellany forces of all nations. Bacon.

A greater force than that which here we find,
Ne'er press'd the ocean, nor employ'd the wind.

Waller.

Those victorious forces of the rebels were not able to sustain your arms. Dryden.

6. Destiny; necessity; fatal compulsion.

What you will have, I'll give, and willing too;
For do we must what force will have us do.

Shakspeare, Rich. II.

7. A water-fall. [Su. Goth. fors, a cataract.] Common in Westmoreland and Cumberland.

VOL. II.

To FORCE.† v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To compel; to constrain.

Dangers are light, if they once seem light, and more dangers have deceived men than forced them. Bacon.

I have been forced to use the cant words of Whig and Tory. Swift, Examiner.

The actions and operations did force them upon dividing the single idea.

Broome, View of Enjick Poem.

2. To overpower by strength.

O that fortune

Had brought me to the field where thou art fam'd
To have wrought such wonders with an ass's jaw,
I should have forc'd thee soon with other arms.

Milton, S. A.

With fates averse, the rout in arms resort,
To force their monarch and insult the court.

Dryden, Æn.

3. To impel; to press; to draw or push by main strength.

Thou shalt not destroy the trees by forcing an ax against them, Deut. xx. 19.

Stooping, the spear descended on his chine,
Just where the bone distinguish'd either loin:
It stuck so fast, so deeply buried lay,
That scarce the victor forc'd the steel away.

Dryden, Æn.

4. To enforce; to urge.

Three blust'ring nights, borne by the southern blast,
I floated, and discover'd land at last:

High on a mounting wave my head I bore,
Forcing my strength, and gathering to the shore.

Dryden, Æn.

Ye myrtles brown, with ivy never sere,
I come to pluck your berries harsh and crude,
And with forc'd fingers rude
Shatter your leaves before the mellowing year.

Milton, Lycidas.

5. To drive by violence or power.

This way of flattering their willing benefactors out of part, contrived another of forcing their unwilling neighbours out of all their possessions.

Decay of Piety.

To free the ports, and ope the Punick land
To Trojan guests, lest, ignorant of fate,
The queen might force them from her town and state.

Dryden.

6. To gain by violence or power.

My heart is yours; but, oh! you left it here
Abandon'd to those tyrants hope and fear:
If they forc'd to those tyrants hope and fear,
Could you not that, nor that small part afford?

Dryden.

7. To storm; to take or enter by violence.

Troy wall'd so high,

A countryman sounded a river up and down, to try where it was most fordable; and where the water ran too smooth, he found it deepest; and, on the contrary, shallowest where it most noise. L'Estrange.

TO FORDO.* v. a. [Sax. forþon, to waste, to destroy. Dr. Johnson has given this ancient word as fordo, with a pretended derivation from for and do; but the Saxon fordo is the true word. It is one of our oldest verbs, part. fordone. Yet Mr. Horne Tooke, as Dr. Jamieson also notices, has strangely interpreted Chaucer's usage of it by "forth-done, i. e. done to go forth, or caused to go forth, i. e. out of doors. In modern language, turned out of doors!" Divers. of Purley, i. 495. This he gives as an illustration of the adverb forth. Johnson might have laughed at this, as much as Mr. Tooke has thought proper to laugh at some of Johnson's wanderings. It is clearly ruined, undone.]

1. To ruin; to destroy: opposed to making happy. A word obsolete.

I see no more but that I am fordo:

Min heritage mote I nedes sell, And ben a beggar; here I n'll not dwell. Chaucer, Prol. Tale.

Beseeching him with prayer, and with praise, If either selves, or oils, or herbs, or charms, A fordone wight from dore of death mote raise, He would at her request prolong her husband's daies. Spenser, F. Q. i. v. 41.

This doth betoken, The corse they follow did, with desperate hand, Fordo its own life. Shakespeare, Hamlet.

This is the night, That either makes me, or fordoes me quite. Shakespeare, Othello.

He hath commission from thy wife and me To hang Cordelia in the prison, and To lay the blame upon her own despair, That she fordid herself. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

2. To weary; to overcome.

The heavy ploughman snores, All with weary task fordone. Shakespeare, Mids. N. Dream.

FORE. adj. [rope, Saxon.]

1. Anterior; that which is before; not behind.

Though there is an orb or spherical area of the sound, yet they move strongest and go farthest in the fore lines from the first local impression. Bacon.

2. That which comes first in a progressive motion.

Resistance in fluids arises from their greater pressing on the fore than hind part of the bodies moving in them. Cheyne.

FORE.† adv. [formerly forne, Sax. popne.]

1. Anteriorly; in the part which appears first to those that meet it.

Each of them will bear six demiculverins and four sakers, needing no other addition than a slight spar deck fore and aft, which is a slight deck throughout. Raleigh, Ess.

2. Fore is a word much used in composition to mark priority of time, or situation; of which some examples shall be given. A vitious orthography has confounded fore and for in composition.

3. Fore and aft. The whole length of a ship.

TO FOREADMO'NISH.* v. a. [fore and admonish.] To counsel before the event.

But while he thought to steal the single ten,
The king was slyly finger'd from the deck!

Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

He makes this difference to arise from the forecast and predetermination of the gods.

Addison on Medals.

The last, scarce ripen'd into perfect man,
Saw helpless him from whom their life began:

Mem'ry and forecast just returns engage;

That pointed back to youth, this on to age. Pope.

FORECASTER. n. s. [from forecast.] One who contrives beforehand.

FO'RECASTLE.† n. s. [fore and castle.] The name perhaps, as a learned friend thinks, originates from the circumstance of ships of war having formerly parapets, and battlements, like land-fortifications, with small castles built fore and aft. In a ship, is that part where the foremast stands, and is divided from the rest of the floor by a bulk-head: that part of the forecastle which is aloft, and not in the hold, is called the prow. Harris.

The commodity of the new cook-room the merchants have found to be so great, as that, in all their ships, the cook-rooms are built in their fore-castles, contrary to that which had been anciently used.

Raleigh, Ess.

grew a small green branch of palm.

Bacon, New Atlantis.

FOREFATHER. n. s. [fore and father.] Ancestor; one who in any degree of ascending genealogy precedes another.

The custom of the people of God, and the decrees of our forefathers, are to be kept, touching those things whereof the Scripture hath neither one way or other given us charge.

Hooker.

If it be a generous desire in men to know from whence their own forefathers have come, it cannot be displeasing to understand the place of our first ancestor.

Raleigh, Hist.

Conceit is still deriv'd

From some forefather grief; mine is not so.

Shakspeare, Rich. II.

Shall I not be distraught,

And madly play with my forefather's joints?

Shakspeare.

Our great forefathers
Had left him nought to conquer but his country.

Addison.

When a man sees the prodigious pains our forefathers have been at in these barbarous buildings, one cannot but fancy what miracles of architecture they would have left us, had they been instructed in the right way.

Addison, on Italy.

Blest peer! his great forefathers ev'ry grace

Reflecting, and reflected in his race. Pope.

To FOREFE'ND. v. a. It is doubtful whether from fore or for and defend. If from fore, it implies antecedent provision; as forearm: if from for, prohibitory security; as forbid. Of the two following examples one favours for, and the other fore.]

1. To prohibit; to avert.

I would not kill thy unprepared spirit;
No, heav'n's forefend! I would not kill thy soul.

Shakespeare.

Whitlock, Mann. of the Engl. p. 29.

TO FOREGO. v. a. [for and go.] Sax. for-gan. In the first sense the word should be written, as Spenser writes it, for-go.]

1. To quit; to give up; to resign.

Is it her nature, or is it her will,
To be so cruel to an humbled foe?
If nature, then she may it mend with skill;
If will, then she at will may will for-go. Spenser.

Having all before absolute in his power, it remaineth so still, he having already neither forgiven nor for-gone any thing thereby unto them, but having received something from them. Spenser on Ireland.

He is a great adventurer, said he,
That hath his sword through hard assay for-gone;
And now hath vowed, till he avenged be
Of that despatch, never to wear on none.

Spenser, F. Q.

Special reason oftentimes causeth the will to prefer one good thing before another; to leave one for another's sake, to for-go meaner for the attainment of higher degrees.

Hooker.

Must I then leave you? Must I needs for-go

So good, so noble, and so true a master?

Shakespeare.

Let us not for-go
That for a trifle which was bought with blood.

Shakespeare.

How can I live without thee! how for-go
Thy sweet converse, and love so dearly join'd,
To live again in these wild woods forlorn!

Milton, P. L.

This argument might prevail with you to for-go a little of your repose for the public benefit.

Dryden, Juv. Dedic.

What they have enjoyed with great pleasure at one time, has proved insipid or nauseous at another; and therefore they see nothing in it, for which they should for-go a present enjoyment. Locke.

2. To go before; to be past. [from fore and go.]

By our remembrances of days foregone,
Such were our faults, O! then we thought them not.

1. Early; timely.

If by thus doing you have not secured your time by an early and forehand care, yet be sure, by a timely diligence, to redeem the time.

Bp. Taylor, Rule of Living Holy.

2. Formed in the foreparts.

He's a substantial true-bred beast, bravely fore-handed: mark but the cleanness of his shapes too.

Dryden.

FORERHEAD. n. s. [fore and head.] Sax. forpeheapob.]

1. That part of the face which reaches from the eyes upward to the hair.

The breast of Hecuba,
When she did suckle Hector, look'd not lovelier
Than Hector's forehead when it spit forth blood
At Grecian swords contending. Shakespeare, Coriol.
Some angel copy'd, while I slept, each grace,
And molded ev'ry feature from my face:
Such majesty does from her forehead rise,
Her cheeks such blushes cast, such rays her eyes.

Dryden.

2. Impudence; confidence; assurance; audaciousness; audacity. The forehead is the part on which shame visibly operates.

Here, see the forehead of a Jesuit!

Bp. Hall, Hon. of the Marr. Clergy, p. 61.

A man of confidence presseth forward upon every appearance of advantage; where his force is too feeble, he prevails by dint of impudence: these men of forehead are magnificent in promises, and infallible in their prescriptions.

Collier.

I would fain know to what branch of the legislature they can have the forehead to apply.

Swift, Presbyterian Plea.

TO FOREHEAR. v. n. [fore and hear.] To be informed before. With of.

The Turks, whom they account for barbarous, Having foreheard of Basilisco's worth,
A number underprop me with their shoulders.

Trag. of Soliman and Perseda, (1599.)

TO FOREHEND. v. a. [fore and hend.] To see TO HEND.] To seize. The early editions of Spenser read forhend; but forehend is right, meaning, in the following passage, taken before she can escape.

Like as a fearful dove —
Having farre off espyde a tassell gent,
Which after her his nimble wings doth strain,
Doubtleth her haste for fear to be forehend,
And with her pinions cleaves the liquid firmament.

Spenser, F. Q. iii. iv. 49.

TO FOREHEW. v. a. [fore and hew.] To cut in front.

His face forehew'd with wounds.

Sackville, Induct. Mir. for Mag.

FOREHOLDING. n. s. [fore and hold.] Predictions; ominous accounts; superstitious prognostications.

How are superstitious men hagg'd out of their wits with the fancy of omens, foreholdings, and old wives' tales!

L'Estrange.

FORERHORSE. n. s. [fore and horse.] The foremost horse of the team.

As if

We were two carriers at two several ways,
And, as the fore-horse guides, cry God be with you.

Beaumont and Fl. Coxcomb.

The forehorse gingles on the road,

The waggoner lugs on his load.

Cotton, Morning Quat. st. 18.

FOREIGN. adj. [forain, Fr. forano, Spanish; from foras, Lat.]

1. Not of this country; not domestic.

Your son, that with a fearful soul
Leads discontented steps in foreign soil,
This fair alliance quickly shall call home.

Shakespeare, Rich. III.

The learned correspondence you hold in foreign parts.

Milton.

The positions are so far from being new, that they are commonly to be met with in both ancient and modern, domestic and foreign writers.

Atterbury.

The parties and divisions amongst us may several ways bring destruction upon our country, at the same time that our united force would secure us against all the attempts of a foreign enemy.

Addison, Freeholder.

2. Alien; remote; not allied; not belonging; without relation. It is often used with to; but more properly with from.

I must dissemble,
And speak a language foreign to my heart.

Addison, Cato.

Fame is a good so wholly foreign to our natures, that we have no faculty in the soul adapted to it, nor any organ in the body to relish it, placed out of the possibility of fruition.

Addison.

This design is not foreign from some people's thoughts.

Swift.

3. Excluded; not admitted; held at a distance.

They will not stick to say you envied him; And fearing he would rise, he was so virtuous, Kept him a foreign man still; which so griev'd him, That he ran mad and died. Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

4. [In-law.] A foreign plea, placitum forinsecum; as being a plea out of the proper court of justice.

5. Extraneous; adventitious in general.

There are who, fondly studious of increase,
Rich foreign mold in their ill-natur'd land Induce,

Philips.

FO'REIGNER. n. s. [from foreign.] A man that comes from another country; not a native; a stranger.

Joy is such a foreigner,
So mere a stranger to my thoughts, I know
Not how to entertain him. Denham, Sophy.
To this false foreigner you give your throne,
And wrong a friend, a kinsman, and a son.

Dryden, Æn.

Water is the only native of England made use of in punch; but the lemons, the brandy, the sugar, and the nutmegs, are all foreigners.

Addison, Freeholder.

Nor could the majesty of the English crown appear in a greater lustre, either to foreigners or subjects.

Swift.

FO'REIGNNESS. n. s. [from foreign.] Remoteness; want of relation to something.

Let not the foreignness of the subject hinder you from endeavouring to set me right.

Locke.

TO FOREIMAGINE. v. a. [fore and imagine.] To conceive or fancy before proof.

We are within compass of a foreimagined possibility in that behalf.

Camden, Rem.

TO FOREJUDGE.† v. a. [fore and judge; old Fr. forjurer.] To judge beforehand; to be prepossessed; to prejudge.

Sherwood.

FOREJUDGEMENT.* n. s. [fore and judgement.] Judgement formed beforehand.

Sherwood.

But seldom seen, forejudgement proveth right.

Spenser, Maiopotmos, v. 320.

TO FOREKNOW. v. a. [fore and know.] To have prescience of; to foresee.

We foreknow that the sun will rise and set, that all men born in the world shall die again; that after Winter the Spring shall come; after the Spring, Summer and Harvest; yet is not our foreknowledge the cause of any of those. Raleigh.

He foreknew John should not suffer a violent death, but go into his grave in peace.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

Calchas the sacred seer, who had in view Things present and the past, and things to come foreknew.

Dryden, Thiad.

Who would the miseries of man foreknow?
Not knowing, we but share our part of woe.

Dryden.

FOREKNOWABLE. adj. [from foreknow.]

Possible to be known before they happen.

It is certainly foreknowable what they will do in such and such circumstances.

More, Divine Dialogues.

FOREKNOWER.* n. s. [from foreknow.] He who knows what is to happen.

He will make God the foreknower — of evil.

Stapleton, Fortr. of the Faith, (1565,) fol. 41. b.

FOREKNOWLEDGE. n. s. [fore and knowledge.] Prescience; knowledge of that which has not yet happened.

Our being in Christ by eternal foreknowledge, saveth us not without our actual and real adoption into the fellowship of his saints in this present world.

Hooker.

I told him you was asleep: he seems to have a foreknowledge of that too, and therefore chooses to speak with you.

Shakespeare.

If I foreknew,
Foreknowledge had no influence on their fault,
Which had no less prov'd certain unforeknown.

Milton, P. L.

I hope the foreknowledge you had of my esteem for you, is the reason that you do not dislike my letters.

Pope.

FO'REL.* n. s. [forellus, forulus, Latin, fourreau, Fr. "id quo aliquid tegitur et obvolvitur, &c." Carpent. Suppl. Du Cange. "Vagina: parmi les anciens auteurs signifie l'armoire à livres." Ménage in V. FOURREAU.] A kind of parchment; sheepskin dressed on one side only, commonly used for covers of account-books. The word is still familiar among stationers.

No manner of person shall sell this present book, unbounce, above the price of two shillings and two-pence; and bounde in forel for us. xd. and not above.

The Booke of the Common Praier, fol. 1549, last leaf.

FO'RELAND. n. s. [fore and land.] A promontory; headland; high land jutting into the sea; a cape.

As when a ship, by skillful steersman wrought,
Nigh river's mouth, or foreland, where the wind
Veers oft, as oft so steers, and shifts her sails.

Milton, P. L.

TO FORELAY.† v. a. [fore and lay, Dr. Johnson says. It is in the first meaning the Teut. verlaegen; and our own word was formerly, and should be always, in the sense of laying wait for, written forlay.]

1. To lay wait for; to entrap by ambush. Some secret detractor hath forlaid thee by a whispering misintimation.

Seasonable Sermon, (1644,) p. 30.

A serpent shoots his sting at unaware;

An ambush'd thief forlays a traveller:

The man lies murder'd, while the thief and snake,
One gains the thickets, and one thrids the brake.

Dryden, Pal. and Arcite.

2. To contrive antecedently; to prevent. [fore and lay.]

That our serious humiliations may forelay his too well deserved judgements. Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 45.

3. To lay down before-hand.

These grounds being forlaid and understood,
I affirm, first, that presbyters, &c.

Made, Disc. 1642, p. 110.

FORELEADER.* n. s. [fore and leader.] One who leads others by his example.

Would God that we learned not, by the fore-leaders before named, to charge and conjure each other unto the pledge!

Gascoigne, Diet for Drunkards, 1576.

TO FO'RELEND.* v. a. [fore and lend.]

As if that life to loss they had forelent.

Spenser, F. Q. iv. iii. 6.

TO FO'RELIFT. v. a. [fore and lift.] To raise aloft any anterior part.

So dreadfully he towards him did pass,
Forelifting up aloft his speckled breast;
And often bounding on the bruised grass,
As for great joy of new comen guest. Spenser, F. Q.

FO'RELOCK. n. s. [fore and lock.] The hair that grows from the forehead of the head.

Tell her the joyous time will not be staid,
Unless she do him by the forelock take. Spenser.

Hyacinthine locks

Round from his parted forelock manly hung,
Clust'ring, but not beneath his shoulders broad.

Milton, P. L.

Zeal and duty are not slow,
But on occasion's forelock watchful wait,

Milton, P. R.

Time is 'painted with a lock before, and baid behind, signifying thereby that we must take time by the forelock; for, when it is once past, there is no recalling it.

Swift.

TO FORELO'OK.* v. n. [fore and look.] To see beforehand.

Then did I forelook,

And saw this day mark'd white in Clotho's book.
B. Jonson, King's Entertainment.

Addison on Italy.

FO'REMOST.† adj. [from fore. Sax. forpmeȝt.]

1. First in place.

All three were set among the foremost ranks of fame, for great minds to attempt, and great force to perform what they did attempt.

Sidney.

Our women in the foremost ranks appear;
March to the fight, and meet your mistress there.

Dryden.

The bold Sempronius,
That still broke foremost through the crowd of patriots,

As with a hurricane of zeal transported,
And virtuous even to madness. Addison, Cato.

2. First in dignity.

These ride foremost in the field,
As they the foremost rank of honour held. Dryden.

FO'REMOSTLY.* adv. [from foremost.] Among the foremost.

But when he saw his daughter dear

Coming on foremostly,

He wrung his hands, and tore his hair,
And cried out most piteously.

Old Ballad of Jephthah, Percy's Rel. i. ii. 3.

FO'REMOTHER.* n. s. [fore and mother.]

A female ancestor.

I would have you my daughters, so to look to your feet, when you enter into the house of God, that your devotions through irreverent unseemliness prove not the sacrifice of fools. It was the modesty and humility of some of your foremothers not to seat themselves in the church, before they had performed a reverent respect to the minister then officiating.

Bp. Prideaux, Euch. p. 58.

FORENAME'D. adj. [fore and name.] Nominated before.

And such are sure ones,
As Curius and the forenamed Lentulus.

B. Jonson, Catiline.

FO'RENOON. n. s. [fore and noon.] The time of day reckoned from the middle point, between the dawn and the meridian, to the meridian: opposed to afternoon.

The manner was, that the forenoon they should run at tilt, the afternoon in a broad field in manner of a battle, till either the strangers or the country knights won the field.

Sidney.

Curio, at the funeral of his father, built a temporary theatre, consisting of two parts turning on hinges, according to the position of the sun, for the convenience of forenoon's and afternoon's diversion.

Arbutnot on Coins.

FORENOT'ICE. n. s. [fore and notice.] Information of an event before it happens.

So strange a revolution never happens in poetry, but either heaven or earth gives some forenotice of it.

Rymer on Tragedy.

FORENSICK. adj. [forensis, Latin.] Belonging to courts of judicature.

Person is a forensick term, appropriating actions and their merit; and so belongs only to intelligent agents, capable of a law, and happiness and misery. This personality extends itself beyond present existence to what is past, only by consciousness.

Locke.

The forum was a public place in Rome, where lawyers and orators made their speeches before the proper judges in matters of property, or in criminal cases: thence all sorts of disputations in courts of justice, where several persons make their distinct speeches, may come under the name of forensick disputes.

Watts on the Mind.

To FOREORDA'IN. v. a. [fore and ordain.] To predestinate; to predetermine; to preordain.

The church can discharge, in manner convenient, a work of so great importance, by foreordaining some short collect wherein briefly to mention thanks.

Hooker.

FOREORDINA'TION.* n. s. [fore and ordination.] Predetermination.

Whether this foreordination were in St. Jude's intent or meaning a foreordination from eternity.

Dr. Jackson, Works, iii. 171.

FO'REPART. n. s. [fore and part.]

1. The part first in time.

Had it been so raised, it would deprive us of the sun's light all the forepart of the day.

Raleigh, Hist.

2. The part anterior in place.

The ribs have no cavity in them, and towards the forepart or breast are broad and thin, to bend and give way without danger or fracture.

Ray on the Creation.

FOREPA'SSED.† } part. adj. [fore and
FOREPA'ST. } pass.] Passed before a certain time.

Some — with shrieks, sobs, sighs, and tears,
Did tell the woes of their forepassed years.

Sackville, Induct. Mir. for Mag.

I keep no table

To character my forepassed conflicts.

Trag. of Soliman and Perseda.

Now cease, ye damsels, your delights forepast;
Enough it is that all the day is your's.

Spenser, Epithalam.

My forepast proofs, howe'er the matter fall,
Shall tax my fears of little vanity,
Having vainly fear'd too little.

Shakespeare.

Such is the treaty which he negotiates with you, an offer and tender of a reconciliation, an act of oblivion, of all forepast sins, and of a new covenant.

Hammond on Fundamentals.

FOREPOSSE'SSED.† adj. [fore and possess.]

1. Holding formerly in possession.

He must give place to such an owner, as that the same was never meant to by the forepossessed elders; and must be removed in one day out of the possessions, which his ancestors had continued in many score years.

Knight, Trial of Truth, (1580.) fol. 11.

2. Preoccupied; prepossessed; preengaged.

The testimony either of the ancient fathers, or of other classical divines, may be clearly and abundantly answered, to the satisfaction of any rational man, not extremely forepossessed with prejudice.

Bp. Sanderson.

So fares it with him, that to the reading of Scripture comes fore-possess with some opinion.

Hales, Rem. p. 4.

FOREPRO'MISED.* part. adj. [fore and promise.] Promised beforehand.

Answer was returned, that it was forepromised to one of my fellow-chaplains.

Bp. Hall, Specialties in his Life.

To FOREPRI'ZE.* v. a. [fore and prize.]

To rate beforehand.

God hath foreprized things of the greatest weight, and hath therein precisely defined as well that which every man must perform, as that which no man may attempt; leaving all sorts of men, in the rest, either to be guided by their good discretion, if they be from subjection to others; or else to be ordered by such commandments and laws, as proceed from those superiors under whom they live.

Hooker, v. § 71.

FO'RERANK. n. s. [fore and rank.] First rank; front.

Yet leave our cousin Catharine here with us; She is our capital demand, compris'd Within the forerank of our articles.

Shakespeare, Hen. V.

To FORERE'ACH.* v. n. [fore and reach.]

In naval language, to sail better than another ship, to get before it; as, one ship forereaches upon another.

To FORERE'AD.* v. n. [fore and read.]

To signify by tokens.

With fruitful hope his aged breast he fed
Of future good, which his young toward years
Did largely promise; and to him foreured,
That he in time would sure prove such an one,
As should be worthy of his father's throne.

Spenser, Muioptomos.

FORERE'ADING.* n. s. [fore and read.]

Previous perusal.

By reason of your fore-reading of Suetonius, you shall find yourself, for a good part of the story, furnished beforehand.

My words concerning S. Gregory, and his times, are these, after the foreremembered imputation.

Mountagu, App. to Cass. p. 250.

FO'RERIGHT.* adv. [fore and right.]

Right forward; onward.

Can ye go back? Is there a safety left yet

But foreright? Benven. and Fl. Kut. of Malta.

FO'RERIGHT.* adj. Ready; forward; quick.

A foreright gale of liberty. Massinger, Renegado.

To FORERUN. v. a. [fore and run.]

1. To come before as an earnest of something following; to introduce as an harbinger.

Against ill chances men are ever merry;

But heaviness foreruns the good event.

Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

The sun

Was set, and twilight from the East came on,

Forerunning night. Milton, P. L.

She bids me hope: oh heav'n's, she pities me!

And pity still foreruns approaching love,

As lightning does the thunder. Dryd. Span. Friar.

2. To precede; to have the start of.

I heard it to be a maxim at Dublin to follow, if not forerun, all that is or will be practised in London.

Graunt.

FORERU'NNER.† n. s. [from forerun.]

1. An harbinger; a messenger sent before to give notice of the approach of those that follow.

The six strangers seek for you, madam, to take their leave; and there is a forerunner come from a seventh, the prince of Morocco.

Shakespeare, Merch. of Ven.

A cock was sacrificed as the forerunner of day and the sun, thereby acknowledging the light of life to be derived from the divine bounty, the daughter of providence.

Stilling fleet.

My elder brothers, my forerunners came,
Rough draughts of nature, ill design'd, and lame:
Blown off, like blossoms, never made to bear;
Till I came finish'd, her last labour'd care.

Dryden, Aurengzebe.

2. An ancestor; a predecessor.

Arthur, the great forerunner of thy blood.

Shakespeare, K. John.

3. A prognostick; a sign foreshowing any thing.

O Eve! some further change awaits us nigh,
Which heav'n, by these mute signs in nature,
shews

Forerunners of his purpose. Milton, P. L.

Loss of sight is the misery of life, and usually the forerunner of death.

South.

The keeping insensible perspiration up in due measure is the cause as well as sign of health, and the least deviation from that due quantity, the certain forerunner of a disease.

Arbutnot.

Already opera prepares the way,

The sure forerunner of her gentle sway.

Pope, Dunciad.

A thousand pounds a year for pure respect!
No other obligation?

That promises more thousands: honour's train
Is longer than his foreskirt. Shaks. Hen. VIII.

TO FORESLA'CK.† v. a. [fore and slack.] Spenser writes it foreslack in the Fairy Queen.] To neglect by idleness.

It is a great pity that so good an opportunity was omitted, and so happy an occasion foreslack'd, that might have been the eternal good of the land.

Spenser on Ireland.

TO FORESLO'W.† v. a. [fore and slow.]

1. To delay; to hinder; to impede; to obstruct.

No stream, no wood, no mountain could fore-slow

Their hasty pace. Fairfax.

Now the illustrious nymph return'd again,
Brings every grace triumphant in her train:
The wond'ring Nereids, though they rais'd no storm,

Foreslow'd her passage to behold her form. Dryd.

If they be any time foreslowed and trashed by either outward or inward restraints.

Hammond, Works, iv. 565.

2. To neglect; to omit.

When the rebels were on Blackheath, the king knowing well that it stood him upon, by how much the more he had hitherto protracted the time in not encountering them, by so much the sooner to dispatch with them, that it might appear to have been no coldness in foreslowing, but wisdom in chusing his time, resolved with speed to assail them.

Bacon, Hen. VII.

Our good purposes foreslowed are become our tormentors upon our death-bed.

Bp. Hall.

Chromis, how many fishers do you know
That rule their boats, and use their nets aright;
That neither wind, nor time, nor tide foreslow?
Some such have been: but, ah! by tempests' spite
Their boats are lost; while we may sit and moan,
That few were such; and now these few are none.

P. Fletcher, Pisc. Ecl. iv. 12.

TO FORESLO'W. v. n. To be dilatory; to loiter.

This may plant courage in their quailing breasts;
For yet is hope of life and victory:
Foreslow no longer, make us hence again.

Shakspeare, Hen. VI. P. III.

TO FORESPE'AK.† v. n. [fore and speak. Sax. poþe-ræcan.]

1. To predict; to foresay; to foreshow; to foretell.

My mother was half a witch; never any thing that she forespoke, but came to pass.

Beaumont and Fl. Hon. Man's Fortune.

2. To forbid. [From for and speak.]

Thou hast forespoke my being in these wars,
And say'st it is not fit. Shakspeare, Ant. & Cleop.

3. To bewitch. This is a very ancient sense of the word, though unnoticed by Dr. Johnson. "For-spoken or char- men." Ort. Vocab. "To forespeak, to bewitch." Barret's Aliv.

Urging

That my bad tongue, by their bad usage made so,
Forspeaks their cattle, doth bewitch their corn.

Rowley, Decker, & Ford's Witch of Edmonton.

Or to forespeak whole flocks as they did feed.
Dryden, Ep. from El. Cobb. to Duke Humph.

FORESPE'AKING.* n. s. [from forespeak.]

1. A prediction.

Old Godfrey of Winchester thinketh no ominous forespeaking to lie in names.

Camden, Rem.

2. A preface; a forespeech. Huloet.

FO'RESPEECH.* n. s. [Sax. poþe-ræc.] A preface; something spoken introductory to the main design.

Sherwood.

FORESPE'NT. adj.

1. Forepassed; past. [fore and spent.]

Is not enough thy evil life forespent?

Spenser, F. Q.

You shall find his vanities forespent,
Where but the outside of the Roman Brutus,
Covering discretion with a coat of folly.

Shakspeare, Hen. V.

2. Bestowed before.

We must receive him
According to the honour of his sender;
And towards himself, his goodness forespent on us,
We must extend our notice.

Shakspeare.

3. Wasted; tired; spent. [for and spent.]

After him came spurring hard
A gentleman, almost forespent with speed.

Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

FORESPURRER. n. s. [fore and spur.] One that rides before.

A day in April never came so sweet,
To show how costly Summer was at hand,
As this forespurrier comes before his lord. Shaks.

FOREST.† n. s. [forest, French; foresta, Italian. So far Dr. Johnson. He might have added the Welsh forest. The many derivations of this word are also too curious to be overpassed. Menage derives it from the Low Latin foresta; a word, which first occurs in the capitulars of Charlemagne; and Vossius deduces that from the German forst, i. e. de foris, meaning that forests are out of or beyond towns: Spelman from foris and stare, meaning a place, says Cotgrave, "whereto the access or entry is forbidden to others:" Others from feris, i. e. ferarum statio, a station for wild beasts. See Du Cange in V. FORESTA. The last seems the most probable etymology. In the Black Book of the Exchequer, foresta is feresta, with a view, as it has been supposed, to this derivation.]

1. A wild uncultivated tract of ground interspersed with wood.

By many tribulations we enter into the kingdom of heaven, because, in a forest of many wolves, sheep cannot choose but feed in continual danger of life. Hooker.

Macbeth shall never vanquish'd be, until Great Birnam-wood to Dunsinane's high hill
Shall come against him.

— That will never be:

Who can impress the forest, bid the tree

Unfix his earth-bound root? Shakespeare, Macbeth.

There be airs which the physicians advise their patients to remove unto, which commonly are plain champains, but grasing, and not overgrown with heath; or else timber-shades, as in forests.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

How the first forest rais'd its shady head.

Roscommon.

2. [In law.] A certain territory of woody grounds and fruitful pastures, privileged for wild beasts, and fowls of forest, chase, and warren, to rest and abide in, in the safe protection of the king for his pleasure. The manner of making forests is this: the king sends out his commission, directed to certain persons, for viewing, perambulating, and bounding the place that he has a mind to afforest: which returned into Chancery, proclamation is made, that none shall hunt any wild beasts within that precinct, without licence; after which he appoints ordinances, laws, and officers for the preservation of the vert and venison; and this becomes a forest by matter of record. The properties of a forest are these: a forest, as it is strictly taken, cannot be in the hands of any but the king, who hath power to grant commission to a justice in eyre for the forest; the courts; the officers for preserving the vert and venison, as the justices of the forest, the warden or keeper, the verders, the foresters, agistors, regards, bailiffs, and beadles. The chief property of a forest is the swainmote, which is no less incident to it than the court of pycpowders to a fair. Cowel.

FO'REST.* adj. [Ital. foresto, agrestis.] Sylvan; rustick.

In a lodge, or forest house.

Sir G. Buck, Hist. of K. Rich. III. p. 118.

FO'RESTAFF.* n. s. [fore and staff.] An instrument used at sea for taking the altitudes of heavenly bodies. See CROSS-STAFF.

FO'RESTAGE.* n. s. [Fr. forestage; low Latin, forestagium.] An ancient service paid by foresters to the king; also, the right of foresters.

To FORESTALL.† v. a. [fore and tall, Saxon, i. e. pope, before, and tal, station. In Domesday Book forestal is an obstructing a person in the highway, an intercepting or stopping in the road. A forestaller, stopping the articles coming to market, hence took his disreputable name.]

1. To anticipate; to take up beforehand.

If thou be master-gunner, spend not all
That thou can'st speak at once; but husband it,
And give men turns of speech: do not forestall
By lavishness thine own and others wit,

Herbert.

What need a man forestall his date of grief,
And run to meet what he would most avoid?

Milton, Comus.

2. To hinder by preoccupation or prevention.

And though good luck prolonged hath thy date,
Yet death then would the like mishap forestall.

Spenser, F. Q.

What's in prayer, but this twofold force

To be forestalled ere we come to fall,

Or pardon'd being down. Shakespeare, Hamlet.

But for my tears,

I had forestall'd this dear and deep rebuke,
Ere you with grief had spoke. Shaks. Hen. IV.

If thou covet death, as utmost end

Of misery, so thinking to evade
The penalty pronounc'd, doubt not but God
Hath wiselier arm'd his vengeful ire, than so
To be forestall'd.

Milton, P. L.

I will not forestall your judgement of the rest.

Pope.

3. To seize or gain possession of before another; to buy before another in order to raise the price.

He bold spake, Sir knight, if knight thou be,
Abandon this forestalled place at erst,
For fear of further harm, I counsel thee.

Spenser, F. Q.

4. To deprive by something prior; with of. Not now in use.

May

This night forestall him of the coming day.

Shakespeare, Cymbeline.

Perhaps forestalling night prevented them.

Milton, Comus.

FORESTALLER. n. s. [from forestall.] One that anticipates the market; one that purchases before others to raise the price.

Commodities, good or bad, the workman must take at his master's rate, or sit still and starve; whilst, by this means, this new sort of engrossers or forestallers having the feeding and supplying this numerous body of workmen, set the price upon the poor landholder.

Locke.

FORESTBOR'N. adj. [forest and born.] Born in a wild.

This boy is forestborn,

And hath been tutor'd in the rudiments

Of desperate studies. Shakespeare, As you like it.

FO'RESTED.* adj. [from forest.] Supplied with trees.

Whereby she [Newforest] became first forested.

Drayton, Polyol. S. 1.

FO'RESTER.† n. s. [forestier, French; forestarius, low Latin.]

1. An officer of the forest.

Forester, my friend, where is the bush,

That we may stand and play the murderier in?

— Here by, upon the edge of yonder copse.

Shakespeare.

2. An inhabitant of the wild country.

Foresters and borderers are not generally so civil and reasonable, as might be wished.

Evelyn, iii. vii. § 3.

3. One who understands the nature and the laws of forests.

You are cried up, my lord, to be an excellent horseman, huntsman, forester.

Howell, Letter to Lord Lindsey, iv. 16.

The greatest forester, they say, that ever was in England, was king Canutus the Dane; and after him, St. Edward; at which time Liber Rufus, the Red-Book for Forest-Laws was made. Ibid.

4. A forest-tree.

This niceness is more conspicuous in flowers, and the herbaceous offspring, than in foresters.

Evelyn.

FO'RESWAT. } adj. [of for and swat, from FO'RESWART. } sweet.] Spent with heat.

Miso and Mopsa, like a couple of forestal melters, were getting the pure silver of their bodies out of the ore of their garments.

Sidney.

To FORETASTE. v. a. [fore and taste.]

1. To have antepast of; to have prescience of.

2. To taste before another.

Perhaps the fact

Is not so heinous now, forestasted fruit,

Profan'd first by the serpent, by him first

Made common, and unhallow'd, ore our taste.

Milton, P. L.

FO'RETASTE. n. s. Anticipation of.

A pleasure that a man may call as properly his own as his soul and his conscience, neither liable to accident, nor exposed to injury: it is the foretaste of heaven, and the earnest of eternity. South.

FORETASTER.* n. s. [from foretaste.] One that tastes before another.

Sherwood.

To FORETEACH.* v. a. [fore and teach.]

To teach before; to inculcate aforetime.

Mr. Upton reads, in the following passage, fortaught, making it a verb, with the meaning of misinterpreted, or wrongly and wicked taught; but it is a participle agreeing with hests or commandments. Spenser himself reads foretaught.

And underneath his filthy feet did tread

The sacred things, and holy heastes foretaught.

Spenser, F. Q. i. vii. 18.

To FORETELL.† v. a. preter. and part. pass. foretold [fore and tell.]

1. To predict; to prophesy.

What art thou, whose heavy looks foretell

Some dreadful story hanging on thy tongue?

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

I found

The new-created world, which fame in heaven

Long had foretold.

Milton, P. L.

Mercia's king,

Warn'd in a dream, his murder did foretell,

From point to point, as after it befell.

Dryden.

When great Ulysses sought the Phrygian shores,
Deeds then undone my faithful tongue foretold;
Heaven scald'd my word and you those deeds behold.
Pope.

2. To foretoken; to foreshow.

These ill's prophetic signs have oft foretold.

Dr. Warren, Virgil.

TO FORETELL. v. n. To utter prophecy.
All the prophets from Samuel, and those that follow after, have likewise foretold of these days.

Acts, iii. 24.

FORETELLER. n. s. [from foretell.] Pre-dictor; foreshower.

Others are proposed, not that the foretold events should be known; but that the accomplishment that expounds them may evince, that the foreteller of them was able to foresee them. Boyle on Colours.

FORETELLING.* n. s. [from foretell.] A declaration of something future.

These predictions are very rare foretellings, wont to be lapped in obscure folds.

Feltham, Resolv. i. §2.

TO FORETHINK.† v. a. [from fore and think. Sax. poþe-ðincan.]

1. To anticipate in the mind; to have prescience of.

The soul of every man

Prophetically does forethink thy fall.

Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

I do pray to thee,

Thou virtuous Dauphin, alter not the doom

Forethought by heav'n. Shakespeare, K. John.

Adam could not be ignorant of the punishments due to neglect and disobedience; and felt, by the proof thereof, in himself another terror than he had forethought, or could imagine.

Raleigh, Hist. of the World.

Friday, the fatal day! when next it came,
Her soul forethought the fiend would change his game.

Dryden.

2. To contrive antecedently.

Blessed be that God which hath given you an heart to forethink this, and a will to honour him with his own.

Bp. Hall.

TO FORETHINK. v. n. To contrive beforehand.

What's my frenzy will be call'd my crime:
What then is thine? Thou cool deliberate villain!
Thou wise, forethinking, weighing politician!

Smith.

FORETHOUGHT.† n. s. [from forethink. Sax. poþe-ðenc.]

1. Prescience; anticipation.

He that is undone, is equally undone, whether it be by spitefulness of forethought, or by the folly of oversight, or evil counsel.

L'Estrange.

2. Provident care.

Devises by last will and testament are always more favoured in construction, than formal deeds, which are presumed to be made with great caution, forethought, and advice.

Blackstone.

FORETHOUGHT.* adj. Prepense.

The second is, where a man is slain upon forethought malice, which the law terms murder.

Bacon, Charge at the Sess. of the Verge.

FORETOKEN.† n. s. [Sax. poþe-tacn.]

Prevent sign; prognostick.

It may prove some ominous foretoken of misfortune.

Sidney.

They misliked nothing more in king Edward the Confessor, than that he was Frenchified; and accounted the desire of foreign language then to be a foretoken of bringing in of foreign powers, which indeed happened.

Camden, Rem.

TO FORETOKEN.† v. a. [from the noun. Sax. poþe-tacnian.] To foreshow; to prognosticate as a sign.

The king from Ireland hastes; but did no good; Whilst strange prodigious signs foretoken blood.

Daniel.

FORETOOTH. n. s. [from fore and tooth.] The tooth in the anterior part of the mouth; the incisor.

The foreteeth should be formed broad, and with a thin sharp edge like chizzles. Ray on the Creation.

FORETOP.† n. s. [from fore and top.] That part of a woman's head-dress that is forward, or the top of a periwig. So far Dr. Johnson, who cites Dryden in proof of this definition. It equally meant, within remembrance, the top of men's hair fantastically frizzled or shaped; and was in former days also a male ornament, according to Ben Jonson.

Each after other came in statelie dance,
And nimble cap'ring on the purple wave,
With lotie foretops did the welkin brave.

Mir. for Mag. p. 777.

You must first have an especial care so to wear your hat, that it oppress not confusedly this your predominant or foretop.

B. Jonson, Every Man out of his Humour.

Fair trees, those comely foretops of the field,
Are cut to maintain head-tires.

Tournepain, Revenger's Tragedy.

So may your hats your foretops never press,
Untouch'd your ribbons, sacred be your dress.

Dryden.

FOREVOUCHED. part. [from fore and vouch.]

Affirmed before; formerly told.

Sure her offence

Must be of such unnatural degree,

That monsters it; or your forevouch'd affection

Fall'n into taint. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

FO'WARD, n. s. [from fore and ward.] The front; the front.

They that marched in the foreward were all mighty men.

1 Mac. ix. 11.

TO FOREWARN.† v. a. [from fore and warn. Sax. poþþýnnan.]

1. To admonish beforehand.

I will forewarn you whom you shall fear: fear him which, after he hath killed, hath power to cast into hell.

St. Luke, xii. 5.

2. To inform previously of any future event.

Divine interpreter, by favour sent

Down from the empyrean, to forewarn

Us timely of what might else have been our loss

Unknown. Milton, P. L.

3. To caution against any thing beforehand.

Well I will arm me, being thus forewarn'd.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

Thy pride,

And wand'ring vanity, when least was safe,

Rejected my forewarning, and disdain'd

Not to be trusted. Milton, P. L.

Though Phœbus had forewarn'd him of singing wars, yet the search of nature was free.

Dryden, Virg. Ded.

Young Chærebus, who by love was led

To win renown and fair Cassandra's bed,

Had lately brought his troops to Prima's aid;

Forewarn'd in vain by the prophetic maid.

Dryden, Æn.

TO FOREWARN.† v. a. See TO FORWASTE.

TO FOREWEARY.† v. a. See TO FORWEARY.

TO FOREWEND.* v. a. [from fore and wend.]

To go before.

And now they be to be heaven forewent.

Spenser, Shep. Cal. July.

FO'REWIND.* n. s. [from fore and wind.] A favourable wind; a wind that blows a vessel right forward in its course.

Long sail'd I on smooth seas, by forewinds borne.

Sundays, Job, p. 25.

TO FOREWISH. v. a. [from fore and wish.] To desire beforehand.

The wiser sort ceased not to do what in them lay, to procure that the good commonly forewished might in time come to effect.

Knolles, Hist. of the Turks.

FOREWORN. part. [from for and worn, from wear.] Worn out; wasted by time or use.

Neither the light was enough to read the words, and the ink was already foreworn, and in many places blotted.

Sidney.

FORFEIT.† n. s. [from forfait, French, for-fed, Welsh. The word seems connected with the low Latin forisfacere, which, in old glossaries, is interpreted, to offend, to hurt; "forisfacere, quasi foris facere, i. e. extra rationem." Du Cange in voce.]

1. Something lost by the commission of a crime; something paid for expiation of a crime; a fine; a mulct.

Thy slanders I forgive, and therewithal

Remit thy other forfeits. Shaks. Meas. for Meas.

The execution leave to high disposal,

And let another hand, not thine, exact

Thy penal forfeit from thyself. Milton, S. A.

Thy life, Melantius! I am come to take,

Of which foul treason does a forfeit make. Waller.

2. Something deposited, and to be redeemed by a jocular fine, whence the game of forfeits; one of our festive sports, not yet forgotten; and observed, especially in the country, about Christmas time.

Some, haply, cards adopt;

Or if to forfeits they the sport confine,

The happy folk, adjacent to the fire,

Their stations take; excepting one alone

(Sometimes the social mistress of the house)

Who sits within the centre of the room,

To cry the pawns.

R. J. Thorne's Christmas, (1795.) v. 289.

3. A person obnoxious to punishment; one whose life is forfeited by his offence. Now obsolete.

Your brother is a forfeit of the law,

And you but waste your words.

Shakespeare, Meas. for Meas.

Claudio, whom here you have warrant to execute, is no greater forfeit to the law than Angelo, who hath sentenced him. Shaks. Meas. for Meas.

TO FORFEIT. v. a. [from the noun.] To lose by some breach of condition; to lose by some offence.

If then a man, on light conditions, gain

A great estate to him, and his, for ever;

If wilfully he forfeit it again,

Who doth bemoan his heir, or blame the giver?

Davies.

Men displeased God, and consequently forfeited all right to happiness.

Boyle.

A father cannot alien the power he has over his child: he may perhaps to some degrees forfeit it, but cannot transfer it.

Locke.

FORFEIT, participial adj. [from the verb.] Liable to penal seizure; alienated by a crime; lost either as to the right or possession, by breach of conditions.

All the souls that are, were forfeit once;

And he that might the 'vantage best have took,

Found out the remedy. Shaks. Meas. for Meas.

Beg that thou may'st have leave to hang thyself;

And yet, thy wealth being forfeit to the state,

Thou hast not left the value of a cord. Shakespeare.

This now fenceless world,

Forfeit to death.

Milton, P. L.

Straight all his hopes exhal'd in empty smoke,
And his long toils were forfeit for a look.

Dryden, Virg.
Methought with wond'rous ease he swallow'd down
His forfeit honour to betray the town.

Dryden, Ind. Emp.
How the murd'rer paid his forfeit breath;
What lands so distant from that scene of death,
But trembling heard the fame. Pope, Odyssey.

FORFEITABLE.† adj. [from forfeit.] Possessed on conditions, by the breach of which any thing may be lost.

To the trackless deep they trust
Their forfeitable cargo. Crowe's Lewiston Hill.

FORFEITER.* n. s. [from forfeit.] One who incurs punishment, by forfeiting his bond. Formerly printed, in the following passage, incorrectly, forfeiture.

Lovers,
And men in dangerous bonds, pray not alike;
Though forfeiter you cast in prison, yet
You clasp young Cupid's tables. Shakespeare, Cymb.

FORFEITURE.† n. s. [forfeiture, French; from forfeit.]

1. The act of forfeiting; the punishment discharged by loss of something possessed.

His father's care,
That for the want of issue, took him home,
(Though with the forfeiture of my own fame,)
Will look unto his safety.

Beaumont and Fl. Span. Curate.

2. The thing forfeited; a mulct; a fine.

The court is as well a Chancery to save and debar forfeitures, as a court of common law to decide rights; and there would be work enough in Germany and Italy, if Imperial forfeitures should go for good titles. Bacon, War with Spain.

Ancient privileges and acts of grace indulged by former kings, must not, without high reason, be revoked by their successors; nor forfeitures be exacted violently, nor penal laws urged rigorously.

Bp. Taylor, Rule of Living Holy.

He fairly abdicates his throne,
He has a forfeiture incur'd. Swift.

FORFEX.* n. s. [Latin.] A pair of scissors.

The peer now spreads the glittering forfex wide,
To enclose the lock; now joins it, to divide.

Pope, Rape of the Lock.

FORGAVE. The preterite of forgive.

FORGE.† n. s. [forge, French; probably corrupted from the Latin, fabrica, a shop or workhouse. The Icel. fergia, however, is to compact or put together, and to press; and accordingly, Mr. Callander thinks that the name of a smith's forge may be thence derived.]

1. The place where iron is beaten into form. In common language we use forge for large work, and smithy for small; but in books the distinction is not kept.

Now behold,
In the quick forge and working-house of thought,
How London doth pour out her citizens.

Shakespeare, Hen. V.

In other part stood one who at the forge
Labouring, two massy clods of iron and brass
Had melted. Milton, P. L.

The o'er-labour'd Cyclop from his task retires,
The Æolian forge exhausted of its fires.

Pope, Statius.

2. Any place where any thing is made or shaped.

From no other forge hath proceeded a strange conceit, that to serve God with any set form of common prayer is superstitious. Hooker.

3. Manufacture of metalline bodies; the act of working.

In the greater bodies the forge was easy, the matter being ductile and sequacious and obedient to the stroke of the artificer, and apt to be drawn, formed, and moulded. Bacon.

To FORGE.† v. a. [forger, old French.]

1. To form by the hammer; to beat into shape.

The queen of martials,
And Mars himself conducted them; both which being forg'd of gold,
Must needs have golden furniture. Chapman, Iliad.

These are still but sparks of odium and scorn, which fly from the vulgar anvils and hammers; which commonly both overhear, and overlabor, what they undertake to forge or reform.

Bp. Taylor, Artif. Hands. p. 163.

If the substantial subject be well forged out, we need not examine the sparks which irregularly fly from it. Brown, Chr. Mor. ii. 2.

Tyger with tyger, bear with bear you'll find
In leagues offensive and defensive join'd;
But lawless man the anvil dares profane,
And forge that steel by which a man is slain,
Which earth at first for plough-shares did afford,
Nor yet the smith had learn'd it to form a sword.

Tate, Jew.

2. To make by any means.

He was a kind of nothing, titleless,
Till he had forg'd himself a name i'th' fire
Of burning Rome. Shakespeare, Corioli.

His heart's his mouth:

What his breast forges, that his tongue must vent. Shakespeare.

Those names that the schools *forge*d, and put into the mouths of scholars, could never get admittance into common use, or within the licence of public approbation. Locke.

3. To counterfeit; to falsify.

Were I king,
I should cut off the nobles for their lands:
For my more having would be but as sauce
To make me hunger more, that I should forge
Quarrels unjust against the good and loyal,
Destroying them for wealth. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

FORGER.† n. s. [from forge.]

1. One who makes or forms.

Tough holly and smooth birch must altogether burn;
What should the builder serve, supplies the forger's turn. Drayton, Polyolb. S. 17.

2. One who counterfeits any thing; a falsifier.

As in stealing, if there were no receivers there would be no thieves; so in slander, if there were fewer spreaders there would be fewer forgers of libels. Gou. of the Tongue.

No forger of lies willingly and wittingly furnishes out the means of his own detection.

West on the Resurrection.

FORGERY. n. s. [from forge.]

1. The crime of falsification.

Has your king married the lady Gray?
And now, to sooth your forgery and his,
Sends me a paper to persuade me patience.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

Nothing could have been easier than for the Jews, the enemies of Jesus Christ, to have disproved these facts, had they been false, to have shewn their falsehood, and to have convicted them of forgery. Stephens, Serm.

A forgery, in setting a false name to a writing, which may prejudice another's fortune, the law punishes with the loss of ears; but has inflicted no adequate penalty for doing the same thing in print, though books sold under a false name are so many forgeries. Swift.

2. Smith's work; fabrication; the act of the forge.

[He] ran on embattled armies clad in iron;
And, weaponless himself,
Made arms ridiculous, useless the forger's
Of brazen shield and spear, the hammer'd cuirass,
Chalybean temper'd steel, and frock of mail

To FORGE.† v. a. preter. forgot; part. forgotten, or forgot. [forgetan, Saxon; vergeten, Dutch.]

1. To lose memory of; to let go from the remembrance.

That is not forgot

Which ne'er I did remember; to my knowledge,
I never in my life did look on him. Shaks. Rich. II.

When I am forgotten, as I shall be,
And sleep in dull cold marble, where no mention
Of me must more be heard. Shaks. Hen. VIII.

Forget not thy friend in thy mind, and be not unmindful of him in thy riches. Ecclesi. xxxvii. 6.

No sooner was our deliverance completed, but we forgot our danger and our duty. Atterbury.

Alive, ridiculous; and dead, forgot. Pope.

2. Not to attend; to neglect.

Can a woman forget her sucking child? Yes, they may forget: yet will I not forget thee.

Isaiah, xlix. 5.

If we might forget ourselves, or forget God; if we might disregard our reason, and live by humour and fancy in any thing, or at any time, or at any place, it would be as lawful to do the same in every thing, at every time, and every place. Law.

The mass of mean forgotten things. Anon.

FORGETFUL.† adj. [from forget.]

1. Not retaining the memory of.

But didst thou tell me so?

I am forgetful. Beaumont and Fl. Philaster.

2. Causing oblivion; oblivious.

If the sleepy drench

Of that forgetful lake bennum not still. Mil. P. L.

But when a thousand rolling years are past,
So long their punishments and penance last,
Whole droves of minds are by the driving god
Compell'd to drink the deep Lethæan flood,
In large forgetful draughts to steep the cares
Of their past labours, and their irksome years.

Dryden, Æn.

3. Inattentive; negligent; neglectful; careless.

Be not forgetful to entertain strangers.
Heb. xiii. 2.

The queen is comfortless, and we forgetful
In our long absence. Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

Have you not love enough to bear with me,
When that rash humour, which my mother gave me,
Makes me forgetful? Shakespeare, Jul. Cas.

I, in fact, a real interest have,
Which to my own advantage I would save;
And with the usual courtier's trick, intend
To serve myself, forgetful of my friend. Prior.

FORGETFULNESS. n. s. [from forgetful.]

1. Oblivion; cessation to remember; loss of memory.

O gentle sleep!

Nature's soft nurse, how have I frighted thee,
That thou no more wilt weigh my eyelids down,
And steep my senses in forgetfulness!

Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

All birds and beasts lie hush'd; sleep steals away.

The wild desires of men and toils of day:
And brings, descending through the silent air,
A sweet forgetfulness of human care. Pope, Stat.

2. Negligence; neglect; inattention.

The church of England is grievously charged with forgetfulness of her duty. Hooker.

FORGETTIVE. adj. [from forget.] That may forget or produce. A word, I believe, peculiar to Shakespeare.

Good sherrie sack ascends me into the brain, dries me there all the foolish, dull vapours, makes it apprehensive, quick, forgetive, full of nimble shapes, which, delivered to the voice, becomes excellent wit. Shakspeare.

FORGETTER.† n. s. [from forget.]

1. One that forgets.

I think her

A strange forgetter of herself.

Beaumont and Fletcher. The Captain.

2. A careless person.

FORGETTING.* n. s. [from forget.] Inattention; forgetfulness.

Without attention; forgetfully.

I fear I have (forgettingly) transgress'd against the dignity of the court. B. Jonson, Fox.

FORGIVABLE.* adj. [from forgive.] That may be pardoned. Sherwood.

To FORGIVE. v. a. [popgīvan, Saxon.]

1. To pardon a person; not to punish.

Then heaven forgive him too! Shaks. Macbeth.

I do beseech your grace for charity;

If ever any malice in your heart

Were hid against me, now forgive me frankly.

— Sir Thomas Lovell, I as free forgive you,

As I would be forgiven; I forgive all.

Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

2. To pardon a crime.

The people that dwell therein shall be forgiven their iniquity. Isaiah, xxxiii. 24.

If prayers

Could alter high decrees, I to that place

Would speed before thee, and be louder heard,

Than on my head all might be visited,

Thy frailty and infirmer sex forgiven,

To me committed, and by me expos'd. Milt. P. L.

3. To remit; not to exact debt or penalty.

The lord of that servant was moved with compassion, loosed him, and forgave him the debt.

St. Mat. xviii. 27.

FORGIVENESS. n. s. [popgīvennesse, Saxon.]

1. The act of forgiving.

To the Lord our God belong mercies and for-givenesses. Dan. ix. 9.

2. Pardon of an offender.

Thou hast promised repentance and forgiveness
to them that have sinned against thee.

Prayer of Manas.

Exchange forgiveness with me, noble Hamlet;

Mine and my father's death come not upon thee;

Nor thine on me. Shakspeare.

Forgiveness to the injur'd does belong;

But they ne'er pardon who commit the wrong.

Dryden.

3. Pardon of an offence.

God has certainly promised forgiveness, of sin to every one who repents. South.

4. Tenderness; willingness to pardon.

Here are introduced more heroic principles of meekness, forgiveness, bounty and magnanimity, than all the learning of the heathens could invent.

Sprat.

Mercy above did hourly plead

For her resemblance here below;

And mild forgiveness intercede

To stop the coming blow. Dryden.

5. Remission of a fine, penalty, or debt.

FORGIVER. n. s. [from forgive.] One who pardons.

To FORGO.* See To FOREGO.

FORGO'T. } part. pass. of forget. Not FORGOTTEN. } remembered.

This song shall not be forgotten. Deut. xxxi. 21.

Great Stratford! worthy of that name, though all

Of thee could be forgotten, but thy fall. Denham.

The soft ideas of the cheerful note,
Lightly receiv'd, were easily forgot. Prior.

To FORHA'IL.† [perhaps from the Saxon, pop-healban, to detain.] To draw, or distress; as the contemporary commentator on Spenser defines it. Not now in use.

All this long tale

Nought easeth the care that me doth forhaile.

Spenser, Shep. Cal. Sept. v. 248.

To FORHE'ND.* See To FOREHEND.

FOR'NESECAL.* adj. [Lat. forinsecus, from without.] Foreign; alien.

Submitting ourselves principally to forinsecal
potentates and powers. Surrender of the Monks of Betledsen, 30 Hen. 8. Burnet.

To FORISFAM'LIATE.* v. a. [Lat. foris
and familia.] To put a son in possession of land in the life-time of a father. A term of the civil law.

Provided the eldest son had not received a provision in lands from his father, or, as the civil law would call it, had not been forisfamiliarit, in his life-time. Blackstone.

FORK.† n. s. [popc, Saxon; furca, Latin; forch, Welsh; fourche, French. Our eating-forks were introduced late in the sixteenth or early in the seventeenth century. Beaumont and Fletcher ridicule a traveller by the title of fork-carving.]

1. An instrument divided at the end into two or more points or prongs, used on many occasions.

They had a file for the mattocks, and for the coulters, and for the forks. 1 Sam. xiii. 21.

At Midsummer down with the brembles and brakes,

And after abroad with thy forks and thy rakes.

Tusser.

The vicar first, and after him the crew,
With forks and staves the felon to pursue,
Ran Coll our dog. Dryden, Neri's Priest.

The laudable use of forks,
Brought into custom here as they are in Italy.

B. Jonson, Dev. is an Ass.

I dine with forks that have but two prongs.

Swift.

2. It is sometimes used for the point of an arrow.

The bow is bent and drawn: make from the shaft.

— Let it fall rather, though the fork invade

The region of my heart. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

3. A point.

Several are amazed at the wisdom of the ancients that represented a thunderbolt with three forks, since nothing could have better explained its triple quality of piercing, burning, and melting.

Addison on Medals.

4. A gibbet. [old Fr. fourc; Lat. furca.]

They had run through all punishments, and just 'scaped the fork. Bulter, Rem. ii. 195.

To FORK. v. n. [from the noun.] To shoot into blades, as corn does out of the ground.

The corn beginneth to fork. Mortimer, Husb.

FO'RKED.† adj. [from fork.]

1. Opening into two or more parts.

Naked he was, for all the world, like a forked
radish, with a head fantastically carved upon it with a knife. Shakspeare.

Sometimes we see a cloud that's dragonish,

A forked mountain, or blue promontory. Shaks.

Come, shall we go and kill us venison?

And yet it irks me the poor dappled fools

Should in their confines, with forked heads,
Have their round haunches go'd.

Shakspeare, As you like it.

He would have spoke;

But hissed for his return'd with forked tongue
To forked tongue. Milton, Par. Lost.

Ye dragons, whose contagious breath
Peoples the dark retreats of death,
Change your fierce hissing into joyful song,
And praise your Maker with your forked tongue.
Roscommon.

2. Having two or more meanings.

I oft have heard him say, how he admir'd
Men of a higher profession, that could speak
To every cause, and things more contraries,
Till they were hoarse again, yet all be law;
That with most quick agility, could turn,
And re-turn; make knots and untie them;
Give forked counsel. B. Jonson, Fox.

FO'RKEDLY.† adv. [from forked.] In a forked form. Sherwood.

FO'RKEDNESS.† n. s. [from forked.] The quality of opening into two parts or more. Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

FO'RKHEAD. n. s. [fork and head.] Point of an arrow.

It seizing, no way enter might;
But back rebounding, left the forkhead keen,
Eftsoons it fled away, and might no where be seen.
Spenser, F. Q.

FO'RKINESS.* n. s. [from forky.] A fork-like division. Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

FO'RKTAIL.* n. s. A name given by English fishermen to a young salmon, in his fourth year's growth.

FO'RKY.† adj. [from fork.] Forked; fur-cated; opening into two parts.

A forky staff we dextrously applied.

Addison, Part of the third Æneid.

The smiling infant in his hand shall take
The crested basilisk and speckled snake;
Pleas'd the green lustre of the scales survey,
And with their forky tongue and pointless sting shall play. Pope, Messiah.

To FORL'A.Y.* See To FORELAY.

To FORLE'ND.* See To FORELEND.

FORLO'RE. [The preterite and participle of the Saxon *forleo*pan, in Dutch verloren.] Deserted; forsook; forsaken.
Obsolete.

Such as Diana by the sandy shore
Of swift Eurotas, or on Cynthus' green,
Where all the nymphs have her forlore.

Spenser, F. Q.

That wretched world he 'gan for to abhor,
And mortal life 'gan loath, as thing forlore.

Spenser, F. Q.

Thus fell the trees, with noise the desarts roar;
The beasts their caves, the birds their nests forlore;

Fairfax.

FORLO'RN.† adj. [poplopen, from forleo- pan, Saxon; verloren, Dutch.]

1. Deserted; destitute; forsaken; wretched; helpless; solitary.

Make them seek for that they want to scorn;
Of fortune and of hope at once forloren.

Spenser, Hub. Tale.

Tell me, good Hobinol, what gars thee greet?
What! hath some wolf thy tender lambs young?

Or is thy bagpipe broke that sounds so sweet?
Or art thou of thy loved lass forlorne?

Spenser, Shep. Cal.

In every place was heard the lamentation of women and children; every thing shewed the heaviness of the time, and seemed as altogether lost and forloren. Knolles, Hist.

How can I live without thee! how forego
Thy sweet converse, and love so dearly join'd,
To live again in these wild woods forloren!

Milton, Par. Lost.

Their way
Lies through the perplex'd paths of this drear
wood;
The nodding horror of whose shady brows,
Threats the forlorn and wandering passenger.
Milton, Comus.

My only strength and stay! forlorn of thee,
Whither shall I betake me, where subsist!

Milton, P. L.
Like a declining statesman, left forlorn
To his friends pity and pursuers scorn. Denham.
The good old man forlorn of human aid,
For vengeance to his heav'nly patron pray'd
Dryden, Æd.

Philomel laments forlorn. Penton.
As some sad turtle his lost love deplores,
Thus far from Delia to the winds I mourn;
Alike unheard, unpy'd and forlorn. Pope, Aut.

2. Taken away. This sense shews that it is the participle of an active verb, now lost, Dr. Johnson says, citing the authority of Spenser. The older authority of Chaucer presents the verb in the sense of to lose.

Aurelius, that his cost hath all forlorne,
Curseth the time that ever he was borne.
Chaucer, Frankl. Tale.

When as night hath us of light forlorn,
I wish that day would shortly reascend. Spenser.
What is become of great Acrates' son?
Or where hath he hung up his mortal blade,
That hath so many haughty conquests won?
Is all his force forlorn, and all his glory done?
Spenser, F. Q.

3. Small; despicable; in a ludicrous sense.

He was so forlorn, that his dimensions to any thick sight were invincible. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

- FORLORN.† n. s.
1. A lost, solitary, forsaken person.

Henry
Is of a king become a banish'd man,
And forc'd to live in Scotland a forlorn.
Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

Advise, whether I shall, or ought to be,
prevailed upon by the impertinencies of my own sex, to give way to the importunities of yours. I assure you I am surrounded with both, though at present a forlorn. Tatler, No. 210.

2. FORLORN Hope. The soldiers who are sent first to the attack, and are therefore doomed or expected to perish.

Criticks in plume,
Who lolling on our foremost benches sit,
And still charge first, the true forlorn of wit.
Dryden.

If death be not more formidable to you than hell, you are fit for a reserve or forlorn hope, for the cannon's mouth. Ham. Works, iv. 522.

- FORLORNNESS.† n. s. [Sax. folpone.]
Destitution; misery; solitude.

Men displeased God, and consequently forfeited all right to happiness; even whilst they completed the forlornness of their condition by the lethargy of not being sensible of it. Boyle.

Our natives without a foreign degeneracy, without an importation, of sin could never have been guilty to such a forlornness, could never have designed such contradictions to religion and nature. Mannyngham, Disc. p. 154.

- TO FORLYE. v. n. [from fore and lye.] To lye before.

Knit with a golden baldrick, which forlay
Athwart her snowy breast, and did divide
Her dainty paps, which like young fruit in May,
Now little can to swell; and being ty'd,
Through her thin weed their places only signify'd.
Spenser, F. Q.

- FORM.† n. s. [forma, Latin; forme,
French; by metathesis, from the Doric μάρμα, as some contend; the past part.

of the Sax. *formen*man, to make, according to Mr. H. Tooke. The sound of our word is in most cases with the o short; but in the ninth, tenth, and eleventh senses, it is with o long, as if it were foarm.]

1. The external appearance of any thing; representation; shape.

Nay, women are frail too.
— Ay, as the glasses where they view themselves,
Which are as easy broke as they make forms.
Shakespeare.

It stood still; but I could not discern the form.
thereof. Job, iv. 16.

Gold will endure a vehement fire without any change, and after it has been divided by corrosive liquors into invisible parts; yet may presently be precipitated, so as to appear again in its form.
Grew, Cosmol. Sac.

Matter, as wise logicians say,
Cannot without a form subsist;
And form, say I as well as they,
Must fail, if matter brings no grist. Swift.

2. Being, as modified by a particular shape.

When noble benefits shall prove
Not well dispos'd, the mind grown once corrupt,
They turn to vicious forms, ten times more ugly,
Than ever they were fair. Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

Here toils and death, and death's half-brother,
sleep,
Forms terrible to view, their sentry keep;
With anxious pleasures of a guilty mind,
Deep frauds before, and open force behind.
Dryden, Æn.

3. Particular model or modification.

He that will look into many parts of Asia and America, will find men reason there perhaps as acutely as himself, who yet never heard of a syllogism, nor can reduce any one argument to those forms. Locke.

It lengthens out every act of worship, and produces more lasting and permanent impressions on the mind, than those which accompany any transient form of words that are uttered in the ordinary method of religious worship. Addison.

4. Beauty; elegance of appearance.

He hath no form nor comeliness. Isaiah, lii. 2.

5. Regularity; method; order.

What he spoke, though it lack'd form a little,
Was not like madness. Shakespeare, Hamlet.

6. External appearance without the essential qualities; empty show.

Then those whom form of laws
Condemn'd to die, when traitors judg'd their cause. Dryden.

They were young heirs sent only for forms from schools, where they were not suffered to stay three months. Swift.

7. Ceremony; external rights.

Though well we may not pass upon his life,
Without the form of justice, yet our pow'r
Shall do a court'sy to our wrath, which men
May blame, but not control. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

A long table, and a square table, or seat about the walls seem things of form, but are things of substance; for at a long table, a few at the upper end, in effect, sway all the business; but in the other form, there is more use of the counsellors' opinions that sit lower. Bacon, Ess.

That the parliaments of Ireland might want no decent or honourable form used in England, he caused a particular act to pass that the lords of Ireland should appear in parliament robes.

Davies on Ireland.
Their general used, in all dispatches made by himself, to observe all decency in their forms.
Clarendon.

How am I to interpret, sir, this visit?
Is it a compliment of form, or love?

A. Philips, Distrest Mother.

8. Stated method; established practice;
ritual and prescribed mode.

He who affirmeth speech to be necessary amongst all men, throughout all the world, doth not thereby import that all men must necessarily speak one kind of language; even so the necessity of polity and regimen in all churches may be held, without holding any one certain form to be necessary in them all. Hooker.

Nor are constant forms of prayer more likely to flatter and hinder the spirit of prayer and devotion, than unpremeditated and confused variety to distract and lose it. King Charles.

Nor seek to know
Their process, or the forms of law below.
Dryden, Æn.

9. A long seat.

If a chair be defined a seat for a single person, with a back belonging to it, then a stool is a seat for a single person without a back; and a form is a seat for several persons, without a back.

Watts, Logick.

I was seen with her in the manorhouse, sitting with her upon the form, and taken following her into the park. Shakespeare.

10. A class; a rank of students.

It will be necessary to see and examine those works which have given so great a reputation to the masters of the first form. Dryden, Dufresnoy.

11. The seat or bed of a hare.

Now for a clod like hare in form thy peer;
Now bolt and cudgel squirrels leap do move;
Now the ambitious larck, with mirror clear,
They catch, while he, fool! to himself makes love.
Sidney.

Have you observ'd a sitting hare,
List'ning and fearful of the storm
Of horns and hounds, clap back her ear,
Afraid to keep or leave her form. Prior.

12. Form is the essential, specifical, or distinguishing modification of the matter of which any thing is composed, so as thereby to give it such a peculiar manner of existence. Harris.

In definitions, whether they be framed larger to augment, or stricter to abridge the number of sacraments, we find grace expressly mentioned as their true essential form, and elements as the matter whereunto that form doth adjoin itself. Hooker.

13. A formal cause; that which gives essence.

They inferred, if the world were a living creature, it had a soul and spirit, by which they did not intend God, for they did admit of a deity beside, but only the soul or essential form of the universe. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

TO FORM.† v. a. [formo, Latin.]

1. To make out of materials.
God formed man of the dust of the ground. Gen. ii. 7.

The liquid ore he drain'd
Into fit moulds prepar'd; from which he form'd
First his own tools: then what might else be wrought

Determin'd to advance into our room

A creature form'd of earth. Milton, P. L.

She form'd the phantom of well-bodied air.
Pope.

2. To model to a particular shape or state.

Creature in whom excell'd
Whatever can to sight or thought be form'd,
Holy, divine, good, amiable, or sweet.
Milton, P. L.

Let Eve, for I have drench'd her eyes,
Here sleep below, while thou to foresight wak'st;
As once thou sleep'st, while she to life was form'd.
Milton, P. L.

3. To modify; to scheme; to plan.

Lucretius taught him not to form his hero, to give him piety or valour for his manners.

Dryden, Æn. Dedicate.

4. To arrange; to combine in any particular manner; as, he formed his troops.

5. To adjust; to settle.

Our differences with the Romanists are thus formed into an interest, and become the design, not of single persons, but of corporations and successions.

Decay of Piety.

6. To contrive; to coin.

The defeat of the design is the routing of opinions formed for promoting it. Decay of Piety.

He dies too soon;

And fate, if possible, must be delay'd:

The thought that labours in my forming brain,
Yet crude and immature, demands more time,

Rowe.

7. To model by education or institution.

Let him to this with easy pains be brought,
And seem to labour when he labours not:
Thus form'd for speed he challenges the wind,
And leaves the Scythian arrow far behind.

Dryden, Virg.

8. To seat. See the eleventh definition of the substantive.

Where the hearth was warm'd with winter's feasting fires,

The melancholy here is form'd in brakes and briers.

Drayton, Polyolb. S. 2.

To FORM,* v. n. To take any particular form. Chiefly, perhaps, a military expression.

FORMAL. adj. [formel, French; formalis, Latin.]

1. Ceremonious; solemn; precise; exact to affectation.

The justice,

In fair round belly with good capon lin'd,

With eyes severe, and beard of formal cut,

Full of wise saws and modern instances,

And so he plays his part. Shaksp. As you like it.

Formal in apparel,

In gait and countenance surely like a father.

Shaksppeare.

Ceremonies be not to be omitted to strangers and formal natures; but the exalting them above the mean is not only tedious, but doth diminish the credit of him that speaks.

Bacon.

2. Done according to established rules and methods; not irregular; not sudden; not extemporaneous.

There is not any positive law of men, whether it be general or particular, received by formal express consent, as in councils; or by secret approbation, as in customs it cometh to pass, but may be taken away, if occasion serve.

Hooker.

As there are formal and written leagues, respective to certain enemies; so there is a natural and tacit confederation amongst all men against the common enemies of human society, so as there needs no intimation or denunciation of the war; but all these formalities the law of nature supplies, as in the case of pirates.

Bacon, Holy War.

3. Regular; methodical.

The formal stars do travel so,

As we their names and courses know;

And he that on their changes looks,

Would think them govern'd by our books. Waller.

4. External; having the appearance but not the essence.

Of formal duty, make no more thy boast;
Thou disobey'st where it concerns me most.

Dryden, Aurengz.

5. Depending upon establishment or custom.

Still in constraint your suffering sex remains,
Or bound in formal or in real chains. * Pope.

6. Having the power of making any thing what it is; constituent; essential.

Of letters the material part is breath and voice: the formal is constituted by the motions and figure of the organs of speech affecting breath with a peculiar sound, by which each letter is discriminated.

Holder, Elem. of Speech.

Bellarmino agrees in making the formal act of adoration to be subjection to a superior; but withal he makes the mere apprehension of excellency to include the formal reason of it: whereas mere excellency, without superiority, doth not require any subjection, but only estimation. Stillingfleet.

The very life and vital motion, and the formal essence and nature of man, is wholly owing to the power of God.

Bentley.

7. Retaining its proper and essential characteristic; regular; proper.

Thou shoud'st come like a fury cover'd with snakes,

Not like a formal man. Shaksppeare, Ant. & Cleop.

I will not let him stir,

Till I have us'd th' approved means I have;

With wholesome syrups, drugs, and holy prayers,

To make of him a formal man again.

Shaksppeare, Com. of Err.

FO'RMALIST.† n. s. [formaliste, French; from form.]

1. One who practises external ceremony; one who prefers appearance to reality; one who seems what he is not.

It is a ridiculous thing, and fit for a satyr to persons of judgement, to see what shifts formalists have, and what prospectives to make superficialities to seem a body that hath depth and bulk.

Bacon.

A grave, stanch, skilfully managed face, set upon a grasping aspiring mind, having got many a sly formalist the reputation of a primitive and severe piety.

South.

2. An advocate for form in disputations.

It may be objected by certain formalists, that we can prove nothing duly without proving it in form.

Ld. Shaftesbury.

FORMALITY. n. s. [formalité, French; from form.]

1. Ceremony; established mode of behaviour.

The attire, which the minister of God is by order to use at times of divine service, is but a matter of mere formality, yet such as for comeliness sake hath hitherto been judged not unnecessary.

Hooker.

Formalities of extraordinary zeal and piety are never more studied and elaborate than in desperate designs.

King Charles.

Many a worthy man sacrifices his peace to formalities of compliment and good manners.

L'Estrange.

Nor was his attendance on divine offices a matter of formality and custom, but of conscience.

Atterbury.

2. Solemn order, method, mode, habit, or dress.

If men forswear the deeds and bonds they draw,
Though sign'd with all formality of law;
And though the signing and the seal proclaim
The barefac'd perjury, and fix the shame.

Dryden, Juv.

The pretender would have infallibly landed in our northern parts, and found them all sat down in their formalities, as the Gauls did the Roman senators.

Swift.

3. External appearance.

To fix on God the formality of faculties, or affections, is the imposture of our fancies, and contradictory to his divinity. Glanville, Scepis.

4. Essence; the quality by which any thing is what it is.

May not a man vow to A. and B. that he will give a hundred pound to an hospital? Here the vow is made both to God and to A. and B. But here A. and B. are only witnesses to the vow; but the formality of the vow lies in the promise made to God.

Stillingfleet.

To FO'RMALIZE. v. a. [formelizer, French; from formal.] To model; to modify. A word not now in use.

The same spirit which anointed the blessed soul of our Saviour Christ, doth so formalize, unite, and actuate his whole race, as if both he and they were so many limbs compacted into one body.

Hooker.

To FO'RMALIZE.* v. n. To affect formality; to be fond of ceremony.

Our gallants can formalize in other words.

Hales, Rem. p. 84.

They turned their poor cottages into stately palaces, their true fasting into formalizing and partial abstinence.

Hales, Rem. p. 111.

He formalized so long upon this, that Ireland remained still unsupplied.

Clarendon, Hist. Rebell. b. xi.

There were many particulars in it, which the officers on the king's side, who had no mind to a cessation, formalized much upon.

Ld. Clarendon, Life, i. 148.

FO'RMALLY. adv. [from formal.]

1. According to established rules, methods, ceremonies, or rites.

Formally, according to our law,

Depose him.

Shaksppeare, Rich. II.

2. Ceremoniously; stiffly; precisely.

To be stiff and formally reserved, as if the company did not deserve our familiarity, is a downright challenge of homage.

Collier on Pride.

3. In open appearance; in a visible and apparent state.

You and your followers do stand formally divided against the authorised guides of the church, and the rest of the people.

Hooker.

4. Essentially; characteristically.

This power and dominion is not adequately and formally the image of God, but only a part of it.

South.

The Heathens and the Christians may agree in material acts of charity; but that which formally makes this a Christian grace, is the spring from which it flows.

Bp. Smalbridge.

FORMATION. n. s. [formation, French; from formo, Latin.]

1. The act of forming or generating.

The matter discharged forth of volcano's, and other spiracles, contributes to the formation of meteors.

Woodward.

The solids are originally formed of a fluid, from a small point, as appears by the gradual formation of a fetus.

Arluothot.

Complicated ideas, growing up under observation, give not the same confusion, as if they were all offered to the mind at once, without your observing the original and formation of them.

Watts on the Mind.

2. The manner in which a thing is formed.

The chorian, a thick membrane obscuring the formation, the dam doth tear asunder.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

FO'RMATIVE. adj. [from formo, Latin.] Having the power of giving form; plastick.

As we have established our assertion of the seminal production of all kinds of animals; so likewise we affirm, that the meaneast plant cannot be raised without seed, by any formative power residing in the soil.

Bentley, Serm.

FO'RMER.† n. s. [from form.] He that forms; maker; contriver; planner.

No more; I have too much on't,

Too much by you, ye whettors of my follies,

Ye angel-formers of my sins, but devils!

Beaumont and Fl. Valentinian.

The wonderful art and providence of the contriver and former of our bodies, appears in the multitude of intentions he must have in the formation of several parts for several uses.

Ray on the Creation.

FORMER.† adj. [from popma, Saxon, first; whence former, and formost, now commonly written foremost, as if derived from before. Foremost is generally applied to place, rank, or degree, and former only to time; for when we say, the last rank of the procession is like the former, we respect time rather than place, and mean that which we saw before, rather than that which had precedence in place. Dr. Johnson. — This distinction is just, as to present usage. But it was not always so. Spenser uses "former feat" for the first adventure of one of his heroes, F. Q. v. x. 15. And again, in the sense of antérieur or fore, F. Q. vi. vi. 10. "Yet did her face and former parts profess a fair young maiden."] 1. Before another in time.

Thy air,

Thou other gold-bound brow, is like the first: — a third is like the former. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

2. Mentioned before another.

A bad author deserves better usage than a bad critic: a man may be the former merely through the misfortune of an ill judgement; but he cannot be the latter without both that and an ill temper. Pope.

3. Past: as, this was the custom in former times.

The present point of time is all thou hast, The future doubtful, and the former past. Harte.

FORMERLY.† adv. [from former.]

1. In times past.

The places were all of them formerly the cool retirements of the Romans, where they used to hide themselves among the woods and mountains, during the excessive heats of their summer. Addison on Italy.

As an animal degenerates by diseases, the animal salts, formerly benign, approach towards an alkaline nature. Arbuthnot.

2. At first. Obsolete.

Her fair locks, which formerly were bound up in one knot, She low adown did loose. Spenser, F. Q. ii. xii. 67.

FORMFUL.* adj. [from form and full.] Ready to create forms; imaginative.

As fleets the vision o'er the formful brain, This moment hurrying wild the impass'd soul, The next in nothing lost. Thomson, Summer.

FORMICA'TION.* n. s. Latin, formicatio, from formica, a pismire.] A sensation like that of the creeping or stinging of ants.

One of the most considerable signs of the disorder [spasmus] is a sense of formication.

Dr. James, Med. Dict.

FORMIDABLE.† adj. [from formidabilis, Latin; formidabile, French.] Terrible; dreadful; tremendous; terrific; to be feared.

Such an accident that afflicts him is an evil, and such an object formidable.

By. Taylor, Lib. of Proph. § 13.

I swell my preface into a volume, and make it formidable, when you see so many pages behind.

Dryden, Æn. Dedication.

They seem'd to fear the formidable sight, And roll'd their billows on, to speed his flight. Dryden.

FORMIDABLENESS. n. s. [from formidable.]

1. The quality of exciting terror or dread. 2. The thing causing dread.

They rather chuse to be shewed the formidableness of their danger, than, by a blind embracing it, to perish. Dec. of Piety.

FORMIDABLY. adv. [from formidable.] In a terrible manner.

Behold! e'en to remotest shores, A conquering navy proudly spread; The British cannot formidably roar. Dryden.

TO FORMILL.* v. a. [from pinel, Sax. a bargain.] To order. "Formill'd, ordered, bespoke." Craven Dial. 1824.

FORMLESS.† adj. [from form.] Shapeless; without regularity of form.

All form is formless, order orderless, Save what is opposite to England's love. Shakespeare, K. John.

Countless multitudes

Of formless cures, projects unmade-up, Abuses yet unfashion'd. Donne, Poems, p. 95. The only unamiable, undesirable, formless, beautiful reprobate in the mass. Hammond, Works, iv. 510.

FORMOSITY.* [old Fr. formosité, beauté; Latin, formositas.] Beauty; fairness.

Cockeram.

FORMULA.* n. s. [Latin.] A prescribed form or order.

There are certain formulas of prayer to be used before they make the inspection, which they term a call. Aubrey, Miscell. p. 129.

FORMULARY.† n. s. [from formulaire, French; from formule.]

1. A prescribed model; a form usually observed.

In the practice of all law, the formularies have been few, and certain; and not varied according to every particular case. Bacon on a Libel in 1592. These poems abound with modern words, and modern formularies of expression. Warton, Rowley Eng. p. 23.

2. A book containing stated forms.

By way of innovating still further on our established formularies, he versified the decalogue. Warton, Hist. E. Poet. iii. 168.

FORMULARY. adj. Ritual; prescribed; stated.

FORMULE. n. s. [from formule, French; formula, Latin.] A set or prescribed model.

TO FORNICATE.† v. n. [French, forniquer, from fornix, Latin, an arch, or vault; and also a brothel-house; such places being anciently in vaults. Milton apparently uses the word fornicated with a view to this double meaning. See FORNICATED.] To commit lewdness.

The heroic spirit of Luther — chose rather to be an honest husband than a fornicating friar.

By. Hall, Hon. of the Marr. Clergy, p. 42.

FORNICATED.* adj. [from fornicate.] Polluted by fornication.

She gives up her body to a mercenary whoredom under those fornicated arches. Milton, Reason of Ch. Gov. B. 2.

FORNICA'TION.† n. s. [from fornication, French; fornicatio, Latin.]

1. Concubinage or commerce with an unmarried woman.

Bless me! what a fry of fornication is at the door.

Shakespeare.

The law ought to be strict against fornications and adulteries; for, if there were universal liberty, the increase of mankind would be but like that of foxes at best. Graunt.

2. In scripture, sometimes idolatry.

Thou didst trust in thine own beauty, and playdest the harlot, because of thy renown, and pourest out thy fornications, on every one that passed by. Ezek. xvi. 15.

3. Among builders, a kind of arching or vaulting. [Latin, fornicatio, from the verb fornico.] This word is erroneously printed, in some editions of Chamber's Cyclopædia, fornication, and is so continued in Dr. Ash's vocabulary.

FORNICATOR. n. s. [from fornicateur, French; from fornix, Latin.] One that has commerce with unmarried women.

A fornicator or adulterer steals the soul as well as dishonours the body of his neighbour.

By. Taylor, Rule of Living Holy.

FORNICATRESS. n. s. [from fornicator.] A woman who without marriage cohabits with a man.

See you the fornicatress be remov'd; Let her have needful but not slavish means. Shakespeare, Meas. for Meas.

TO FORPA'SS.* v. n. [for and pass.] To go by; to pass unnoticed.

Scarce can a bishoprick forepass them by, But that it must be gelt in privacy. Spenser, Hubb. Tale.

TO FORP'NE.* v. a. [for and pine.] To waste away.

Through long anguish, and self-murdering thought, He was so wasted and fornipined quite, That all his substance was consum'd to nought. Spenser, F. Q. iii. x. 57.

TO FORRAY.* v. a. [from fouagerie, French, "to forage, prey, forray, ravage, &c." Cotgrave. The same meaning is assigned to the French fouirer; low Latin, for-rare.] To ravage; to spoil a country.

They themselves were evil grooms, they said, Unwont with herds to watch, or pasture sheep, But to forray the land, or scour the deep. Spenser, F. Q. vi. xi. 40.

They that morn had forraid all the land. Fairfax, Tass. iii. 14.

FORRAY.* n. s. [from the verb. In the Border History forray is similar to in-road.] The act of ravaging, or making hostile incursion upon a country.

In dead of night, when all the thieves did rest, After a late forray, and slept full sound, Sir Calidore him arm'd. Spenser, F. Q. vi. xi. 42.

TO FORSAKE.† v. a. preter. forsook; part. pass. forsook, or forsaken, [Saxon, forpagan; versaeken, Dutch.]

1. To leave in resentment, neglect, or dislike.

'Twas now the time when first Saul God forsook, God Saul; the room in's heart wild passions took. Cowley.

Orestes comes in time

To save your honour: Pyrrhus cools apace; Prevent his falsehood, and forfake him first: I know you late him. A. Philips, Distrest Mothers.

Daughter of Jove! whose arms in thunder wield Th' avenging bolt, and shake the dreadful shield, Forsook by thee, in vain I sought thy aid. Pope, Odyssey.

2. To leave; to go away from; to depart from.

Unwilling I forsook your friendly state, Commanded by the gods, and forc'd by fate. Dryden, Æn.

3. To desert; to fail.

Truth, modesty, and shame the world forsook;
Fraud, avarice, and force their places took.

Dryden, Ovid.
When ev'n the flying sails were seen no more,
Forsaken of all sight she left the shore. Dryden.
Their purple majesty,
And all those outward shows which we call greatness,
Languish and droop, seem empty and forsaken,
And draw the wond'ring gazers eyes no more.

Rowe.
FORS'A'KER. n. s. [from forsake.] Deserter; one that forsakes.

Thou didst deliver us into the hands of lawless enemies, most hateful forsakers of God.

Song of the Three Children, Apocryph. v. 9.

FORS'A'KING.* n. s. [from forsake.] Dereliction.

Until there be a great forsaking in the midst of the land.

Isaiah, vi. 12.

To FORSA'Y.* v. a. [for and say.]

1. To renounce.

But shepherd must walke another way,
Sike worldly soverain he must forsay.

Spenser, Shep. Cal. May.

2. To forbid.

And sithens shepherds been foresayd
From places of delight. Spenser, Shep. Cal. July.

To FORSLA'CK.* v. a. [for and slack.]

To delay. See TO FORESLACK.

Ne rested he himself —
For dread of danger not to be redrest,
If he for slouth forslackt so famous quest.

Spenser, F. Q. vi. ix. 3.

To FORSLO'W.* See TO FORESLOW.

FORSOO'TH. adv. [forsoðe, Sax.]

1. In truth; certainly; very well. It is used almost always in an ironical or contemptuous sense.

Wherefore dost Lysander
Deny your love, so rich within his soul,
And tender me, forsooth, affection!

A fit man, forsooth, to govern a realm, who had so goodly government in his own estate. Hayward.

Unlearned persons use such letters as justly express the power or sound of their speech; yet forsooth, we say, write not true English, or true French.

In the East Indies a widow, who has any regard to her character, throws herself into the flames of her husband's funeral pile, to shew, forsooth, that she is faithful to the memory of her deceased lord.

Addison, Freeholder.

She would cry out murder, and disturb the whole neighbourhood; and when John came running down the stairs to enquire what the matter was, nothing, forsooth, only her maid had stuck a pin wrong in her gown.

Arbutnot, Hist. of J. Bull.

Some question the genuineness of his books, because, forsooth, they cannot discover in them that fumen orationis that Cicero speaks of.

Baker on Learning.

2. It is supposed to have been once a word of honour in address to women. It is probable that an inferior, being called, shewed his attention by answering in the word yes, forsooth, which in time lost its true meaning; and instead of a mere exclamatory interjection, was supposed a compellation. It appears in Shakspeare to have been used likewise to men.

Our old English word forsooth has been changed for the French madam. Guardian.

FORSTER.* n. s. A forester. So used by Chaucer, who also writes the word foster.
See FOSTER.

An horne he bare, the baudrik was of grene:
A forster was he sothly as I gesse.

Chaucer, C. T. Prol.

To FORSPE'AK.* See the second and third senses of TO FORESPEAK.

To FORESPE'ND.* See the third sense of
TO FORESPEND.

FORSWA'T.* adj. [for and swat, from swat.] Overwearied; spent with heat.

See FORESWAT.

Albe forswonk and forswat I am.

Spenser, Shep. Cal. April.

To FORSWE'AR. v. a. pret. forswore; part.
forsworn. [forþwæpian, forþwopen, Sax.]

1. To renounce upon oath.

I firmly vow
Never to wooe her more; but do forswear her,
As one unworthy all the former favours,
That I have fondly flatter'd her withal. Shakspeare.

2. To deny upon oath.

And that self chain about his neck,
Which he forswore most monstrously to have.

Shakspeare.

Observe the wretch who hath his faith forsook,
How clear his voice, and how assur'd his look!
Like innocence, and as serenely bld
As truth, how loudly he forswears thy gold!

Dryden, Jew.

3. With the reciprocal pronoun: as, to forswear himself; to be perjured; to swear falsely.

To leave my Julia, shall I be forsworn?
To leave fair Silvia, shall I be forsworn?
To wrong my friend, shall I be much forsworn?
And ev'n that power which gave me first my oath,
Provokes me to this threefold perjury. Shakspeare.

One says, he never should endure the sight
Of that forsworn, that wrongs both land and laws.

Daniel.

I too have sworn; ev'n at the altar sworn,
Eternal love and endless faith to Theseus;
And yet am false, forsworn: the hallow'd shrine,
That heard me swear, is witness to my falsehood.

Smith.

To FORSWE'AR. v. n. To swear falsely; to commit perjury.

Take heed; for he holds vengeance in his hand,
To hurl upon their heads that break his law.
— And that same vengeance doth hurl on thee,
For false forswearing, and for murder too.

Shakspeare, Rich. III.

FORSWE'ARER. n. s. [from forswear.] One who is perjured.

FORSWO'NK.* n. s. [for and swink, to labour.] Overlaboured.

Albe forswonk and forswat I am,

Spenser, Shep. Cal. April.

FORSWO'RNNESS.* n. s. [Sax. forþwopenj.]
The state of being forsworn. Manning.

FORTH.† n. s. [fort, Fr.]

1. A fortified house; a castle.

They erected a fort, which they called the fort de l'or; and from thence they bolted like beasts of the forest. Bacon.

Now to their fort they are about to send
For the loud engines which their isle defend.

Waller.

He that views a fort to take it,
Plants his artillery 'gainst the weakest part.

Denham, Sophy.

My fury does, like jealous forts pursue
With death ev'n strangers who but come to view.

Dryden.

2. A strong side, in opposition to foible;
probably, as Mr. Bagshaw also supposes, adopted from the terms of the fencing-school; fort being applied to the strong part of the foil. See FOIBLE.

We thus say, it is a man's fort, meaning that in which he excels. The French use, what comes near it, "le fort d'une affaire, the chiefest point in, the hardest part of, a business." Cotgrave in V.

FORT.

FOR'TE.* adv. [Italian.] In musick, loudly, with strength and spirit.

FOR'ted. adj. [from fort.] Furnished or guarded by forts. Not used now.

Your desert speaks loud, and I should wrong
To lock it in the wards of covert bosom,
When it deserves with characters of brass
A forted residence, 'gainst the tooth of time
And rasure of oblivion. Shaks. Meas. for Meas.

FORTH.† adv. [forð, Saxon; whence further and furthest. The Saxon word is from the old French fors, (modern, hors,) as that is from the Latin fores,
Mr. H. Tooke.]

1. Forward; onward in time.

From that day forth I lov'd that face divine;
From that day forth I cast in careful mind
To seek her out. Spenser, F. Q.

It came to pass from that time forth, that the half of my servants wrought in the work.

Nehem. iv. 16.

2. Forward in place or order.

Look at the second admonition, and so forth, where they speak in most unchristian manner.

Whitgift.

Mad Pandarus' steps forth, with vengeance vow'd
For Bitias' death. Dryden, B.

3. Abroad; out of doors.

Uncle, I must come forth. Shaks. Othello.

I have no mind of feasting forth to-night. Shaks.

Attend you here the door of our stern daughter?
Will she not forth!

Shakspeare.

When Winter past, and Summer scarce begun,
Invites them forth to labour in the sun. Dry. Virg.

4. Out away; beyond the boundary of any place.

They will privily relieve their friends that are forth; they will send the enemy secret advertisements; and they will not also stick to draw the enemy privily upon them. Spenser.

Even that sunshine brew'd a show'r for him,
That wash'd his father's fortunes forth of France.

Shakspeare.

5. Out into a publick character; publick view.

You may set forth the same with farmhouses.

Peacham.

But when your troubled country call'd you forth,
Your flaming courage, and your matchless worth,
To fierce contention gave a prosp'rous end. Waller.

6. Thoroughly; from beginning to end.
Out of use.

You, cousin,

Whom it concerns to hear this matter forth,
Do with your injuries as seems you best. Shaks.

7. To a certain degree. Obsolete.

Hence we learn, how far forth we may expect justification and salvation from the sufferings of Christ; no further than we are wrought on by his renewing grace. Hammond.

8. On to the end. Out of use.

I repeated the Ave Maria: the inquisitor bade me say forth;

I said I was taught no more. Memoir in Strype.

9. Away; be gone; go forth.

Artisick, that best knowest
How to draw out, fit to this enterprise,
The prim'st for this proceeding, and the number
To carry such a business; forth, and levy
Our worthiest instruments.

Beaumont and Fl. Two Noble Kinsmen.

FORTH. prep. Out of.

And here's a prophet, that I brought with me
From forth the streets of Pomfret. Shakspeare.

Some forth their cabins peep,
And trembling ask what news, and do hear so
As jealous husbands, what they would not know.
Donne.

FORTH.* n. s. [Su. Goth. forth, a common way; Welsh, fford; Cornish, ford; Germ. furt.] A way; "a forthe, or a cart-way." Ort. Vocab. 1514. Not now in use.

Of it be not too bolde,
Lest thou forththink it when art too olde.

Old Interlude of Youth.

Then can he think, perforce with sword and targe

Her forth to fetch, and Proteus to constrain;
But soon he gan such folly to forthinke again.

Spenser, F. Q. iv. xii. 14.

FORTH'ISSUING. adj. [forth and issue.] Coming out; coming forward from a covert.

Forthissuing thus, she gave him first to wield
A weighty ax, with truest temper steel'd,
And double edged. Pope, Odyssey.

FORTH'IGHT. adv. [forth and right.] Strait forward; without flexions. Not in use.

He ever going so just with the horse, either forthright or turning, that it seemed as he borrowed the horse's body, so he lent the horse his mind.

Sidney.

The river not running forthright, but almost continually winding, as if the lower streams would return to their spring, or that the river had a delight to play with itself. Sidney.

Arrived there, they passed in forthright;
For still to all the gate stood open wide.

Spenser, F. Q.

Thither forthright he rode to rouse the prey.
Dryden.

FORTH'IGHT. n. s. A straight path.

Here's a maze trod, indeed,
Through forthrights and meanders. Shaks. Temp.

FO'RTHWARD.* adv. In our old authors this word is used for forward.

profyte in it [penance] joye. Bp. Fisher, Ps. 25.

FORTHWI'TH. adv. [forth and with.] Immediately; without delay; at once; strait.

Forthwith he runs, with feigned faithful haste,
Unto his guest; who, after troublous sights
And dreams, gan now to take more sound repast.

Spenser.

Few things are so restrained to any one end or purpose, that the same being extinct, they should forthwith utterly become frustrate. Hooker.

Neither did the martial men dally or prosecute the service faintly, but did forthwith quench that fire. Davies on Ireland.

Forthwith began these fury-moving sounds,
The notes of wrath, the musick brought from hell,
The rattling drums. Daniel, Civil Wars.

The winged heralds, by command
Of sov'reign pow'r, throughout the host proclaim
A solemn council forthwith to be held
At Pandæmonium. Milton, P. L.

In his passage thither one put into his hand a note of the whole conspiracy, desiring him to read it forthwith, and to remember the giver of it as long as he lived. South.

FO'RTHY.* adv. [Sax. forþi.] Therefore. A common word with Wicliffe, Gower, and Chaucer. Now obsolete.

Thomalin, have no care forthi;
Myselfe will have a double eye;
Ylike to my flocke and thine.

Spenser, Shep. Cal. March.

Faire lady, through foule sorrow ill bedight,
Great pity is to see you thus dismay'd,
And marre the blossom of your beauty bright;
Forthi appease your grief and heavy plight,
And tell the cause of your conceived payne.

Spenser, F. Q. ii. i. 14.

FO'RTIETH. adj. [from forty.] The fourth tenth; next after the thirty-ninth.

What doth it avail

To be the fortieth man in an entail? Donne.
Burnet says, Scotland is not above a fortieth part in value to the rest of Britain; and, with respect to the profit that England gains from hence, not the forty thousandth part. Swift.

FO'RTIFIABLE.† adj. [fortifiable, French.]
What may be fortified.

Colgrave, and Sherwood.

FORTIFICA'TION. n. s. [fortification, French;
from fortify.]

1. The science of military architecture.

Fortification is an art shewing how to fortify a place with ramparts, parapets, moats, and other bulwarks; to the end that a small number of men within may be able to defend themselves, for a considerable time, against the assaults of a numerous army without; so that the enemy, in attacking them, must of necessity suffer great loss. It is either regular or irregular; and with respect to time, may be distinguished into durable and temporary. Harris.

The Phœnicians, though an unwarlike nation,
yet understood the art of fortification.

Broome, on the Odyssey.

2. A place built for strength.

The hounds were uncoupled, and the stag thought it better to trust to the nimbleness of his feet, than to the slender fortification of his lodging.

Sidney.

Excellent devices were used to make even their sports profitable; images, battles, and fortifications being then delivered to their memory, which, after stronger judgements, might dispense some advantage. Sidney.

3. Addition of strength. Not much used.

To strengthen the infested parts, give some few advices by way of fortification and antidote.

Gov. of the Tongue.

FO'RTIFIER. n. s. [from fortify.]

1. One who erects works for defence.

The fortifier of Pendennis made his advantage of the commodity afforded by the ground.

Carew, Surv. of Cornwall.

2. One who supports or secures; one who upholds.

He was led forth by many armed men, who

To fortify the former opinions Tostatus adds, that those which dwell near the falls of water are deaf from their infancy; but this I hold as feigned.

Raleigh.

3. To fix; to establish in resolution.

But in-born worth that fortune can controul,
New-strung and stiffer bent her softer soul:
The heroine assum'd the woman's place,
Confirm'd her mind, and fortify'd her face. Dryd.
A young man, before he leaves the shelter of his father's house, should be fortified with resolution to secure his virtues. Locke.

TO FO'RTIFY.† v. n. To raise strong places. Dr. Johnson cites the following passage from Milton as an illustration of this definition; but the verb here is active, and means to strengthen the dark abyss by the works constructed.

Thou us impower'd

To fortify thus far, and overlay,
With this portentous bridge, the dark abyss.

Milton, P. L.

FO'RTILAGE. n. s. [from fort.] A little fort; a block-house.

Yet was the fence thereof but weak and thin,
Nought fear'd their force that fortilage to win.

1. Courage; bravery; magnanimity; greatness of mind; power of acting or suffering well.

The king-becoming graces,

Devotion, patience, courage, fortitude,
I have no relish of them. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

The better fortitude

Of patience, and heroic martyrdom
Unsung. Milton, P. L.

Fortitude is the guard and support of the other virtues; and without courage, a man will scarce keep steady to his duty, and fill up the character of a truly worthy man. Locke.

They thought it reasonable to do all possible honour to the memories of martyrs; partly that others might be encouraged to the same patience and fortitude, and partly that virtue, even in this world, might not lose its reward. Nelson.

2. Strength; force. Not in use.

He wrongs his fame,
Despairing of his own arm's fortitude,
To join with witches and the help of hell!

Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

FO'RTLET. n. s. [from fort.] A little fort.

FO'RTNIGHT. n. s. [contracted from fourteen nights, peopepene niht, Saxon. It was the custom of the ancient northern nations to count time by nights: thus we say, this day seven night. So Tacitus, "Non diem numerum ut nos, sed noctium computant."] The space of two weeks.

She would give her a lesson for walking so late,
that should make her keep within doors for one fortnight. Sidney.

Hanging on a deep well, somewhat above the water, for some fortnights' space, is an excellent means of making drink fresh and quick.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

About a fortnight before I had finished it, his majesty's declaration for liberty of conscience came abroad.

Dryden.

He often had it in his head, but never, with much apprehension, till about a fortnight before.

Swift.

Breaking forth like a sudden tempest, he overran all, breaking down all the holds and fortresses.

Spenser on Ireland.

The trump of death sounds in their hearing shrill;

Their weapon, faith; their fortress was the grave.

Fairfax.

God is our fortress, in whose conquering name Let us resolve to scale their flinty bulwarks.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

There is no such way to give defence to absurd doctrines, as to guard them round about with legions of obscure and undefined words; which yet make these retreats more like the dens of robbers, or holes of foxes, than the fortresses of fair warriors.

Locke.

TO FORTRESS.* v. a. [from the noun.]

To guard; to fortify.

Honour and beauty, in the owner's arms, Are weakly fortress'd from a world of harms.

Shakespeare, Rape of Lucrece.

FORTUITOUS.† adj. [fortuit, French;

fortuitus, Lat. Our own word, was originally fortuit. Chaucer uses it in his translation of Boethius. So late as in 1566 fortuitous was thought, according to Heylin, new and uncouth. Fortuit was not then disused. Sir K. Digby employs that word.] Accidental; casual; happening by chance.

A wonder it must be, that there should be any man found so stupid as to persuade himself that this most beautiful world could be produced by the fortuitous concourse of atoms.

Ray.

If casual concourse did the world compose, And things and acts fortuitous arose, Then any thing might come from any thing; For how from chance can constant order spring?

Blackmore.

FORTUITOUSLY. adv. [from fortuitous.]

Accidentally; casually; by chance.

It is partly evaporated into air, and partly diluted into water, and fortuitously shared between all the elements.

Rogers.

Accident; chance; hit.

FORTUITV.* n. s. [from fortuit, Fr. and

Eng. See the etym. of FORTUITOUS.]

Chance; accident.

The only question, which the adversaries to Providence have to answer is, How they can be sure, that those deserved judgements were the effect of mere fortuity, without the least intervention on the part of the Lord of the universe?

Forbes on Incredulity, p. 79.

FORTUNATE. adj. [fortunatus, Latin.]

Lucky; happy; successful; not subject to miscarriage. Used of persons or actions.

I am most fortunate thus accidentally to encounter you: you have ended my business, and I will merrily accompany you home.

Shakespeare, Coriol.

He sigh'd; and could not but their fate deplore, So wretched now, so fortunate before.

Dryden, Knight's Tale.

No, there is a necessity in fate

Why still the brave bold man is fortunate:

He keeps his object ever full in sight,

And that assurance holds him firm and right:

True, 'tis a narrow path that leads to bliss,

But right before there is no precipice;

Fear makes men look aside, and so their footing

miss.

Dryden.

FORTUNATELY. adv. [from fortunate.]

Happily; successfully.

Bright Eliza rul'd Britannia's state,

And boldly wise, and fortunately great.

Prior.

FORTUNATENESS. n. s. [from fortunate.]

Hath bred you to this hour.

B. Jonson, Masques at Court.

FOTHER.* n. s. [Sax. foþer, as fixtiza foþpa, sixty loads; German, fuder, a cart-load, fuhren, to carry.] A load; a large quantity. Fudder is so used in the north of England. A fother of lead is still a term for a certain weight, about as much as a cart would carry.

With him there was a plowman, was his brother,
That had ylaide of dong ful many a fother.

Chaucer, C. T. Prol.

FOUGADE. n. s. [French.] In the art of war, a sort of little mine in the manner of a well, scarce more than ten feet wide and twelve deep, dug under some work or fortification, and charged with barrels or sacks of gunpowder to blow it up, and covered over with earth.

Dict.

FOUGHT. The preterite and participle of fight.

Though unknown to me, they sure fought well,
Whom Rupert led, and who were British born.

Dryden.

FOUGHTEN.† [The passive participle of fight.] Rarely used, Dr. Johnson says, citing only the example from Milton.

But it was common. Bishop Lowth objected to this participle, as not agreeable to the analogy of derivation, which obtains in irregular verbs in ght. It is the Teut. vechten.] Contested; disputed by arms.

As in this glorious and well-foughten field.

Shakespeare, K. Hen. V.

In seven brave foughten fields.

Drayton, Polygl. S. 12.

The sad sports we riot in,
Are tales of foughten fields, of martial scars,
And things done long ago.

Beaumont and Fl. Laws of Candy.

On the foughten field
Michael and his angels, prevalent
Encamping, plac'd in guard their watches round
Cherubick waving fires.

Milton, P. L.

FOUL.† adj. [Su. Goth. ful; M. Goth. fuls; Fr. Theotisc. ful; Sax. ful. See TO FILE and FILTH.]

1. Not clean; filthy; dirty; miry. Through most of its significations it is opposed to fair.

My face is foul with weeping.

Job. xvi. 16.

It's monstrous labour when I wash my brain,
And it grows fouler.

He that can travel in deep and foul ways, ought not to say that he cannot walk in fair.

The stream is foul with strains
Of rushing torrents and descending rains.

Addison.

2. Impure; polluted; full of filth.

n 2

- With foul mouth,
And in the witness of his proper ear,
To call him villain. Shakespeare, Meas. for Meas.
Kill thy physician, and the fee bestow
Upon the foul disease. Shakespeare, K. Lear.
Intemperance and sensuality debase men's minds, clog their spirits, and make them gross, foul, listless, and inactive. Tillotson.
3. Wicked; detestable; abominable.
Jesus rebuked the foul spirit. St. Mark, ix. 25.
He hates foul leavings and vile flattery.
Two filthy blots in noble gentry. Spem. Hubb. Tale.
This is the grossest and most irrational supposition, as well as the foulest atheism, that can be imagined. Hale.
Satire has always shone among the rest,
And is the boldest way, if not the best,
To tell men truly of their foultest faults,
To laugh at their vain deeds, and vainer thoughts. Dryden.
4. Not lawful; not according to the established rules.
By foul play were we heav'd thence,
But blessedly help'd higher. Shakespeare, Tempest.
5. Hateful; ugly; loathsome.
Th' other half did woman's shape retain,
Most loathsome like, filthy, foul, and full of vile disdain. Spenser, F. Q.
Hast thou forgot
The foul witch Sycorax, who with age and envy
Was grown into a hoop! Shakespeare, Tempest.
Foul sights do rather displease, in that they excite the memory of foul things than in the immediate objects; and therefore, in pictures, those foul sights do not much offend. Bacon.
All things that seem so foul and disagreeable in nature, are not really so in themselves, but only relatively. More.
6. Disgraceful; shameful.
Too well I see and rue the dire event,
That with sad overthrow and foul defeat
Hath lost us heav'n, Milton, P. L.
Who first seduc'd them to that foul revolt?
Milton, P. L.
Reason half extinct,
Or impotent, or else approving sees
The foul disorder. Thomson, Spring.
7. Coarse; gross.
You will have no notion of delicacies, if you table with them: they all for rank and foul feeding, and spoil the best provisions in cooking. Felton on the Classics.
8. Full of gross humours, or bad matter; wanting purgation or mundification.
You perceive the body of our kingdom,
How foul it is; what rank diseases grow,
And with what danger near the heart of it. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.
9. Not bright; not serene.
It will be foul weather to day; for the sky is red and louring. St. Matt. xvi. 3.
Who's there besides foul weather?
One minded like the weather, most inquisitely. Shakespeare, K. Lear.
Be fair or foul, or rain or shine,
The joys I have profess'd, in spite of fate are mine. Dryden.
10. With rough force; with unseasonable violence.
So in this through bright Sacharissa far'd,
Oppress'd by those who strove to be her guard:
As ships, though never so obsequious, fall
Foul in a tempest on their admiral. Waller.
In his sallies their men might fall foul of each other. Clarendon.
The great art of the devil, and the principal deceit of the heart, is to keep fair with God himself, while men fall foul upon his laws. South.
11. [Among seamen.] Entangled; as, a rope is foul of the anchor.
12. [Among seamen.] Unfavourable; contrary to the course of the ship; as, a foul wind.

To foul the man he chiefly flatters. Swift.

She fouls a smock more in one hour than the kitchen-maid doth in a week. Swift, Direct. to Servants.

To FO'ULDER.* v. n. [Fr. fouldroyer, "to cast or dart thunderbolts; hence also to bear down with great violence all that comes in the way." Cotgrave. Mr. Church, a commentator on Spenser, is for substituting smouldring in the example, and for dismissing fouldring as an useless repetition, because thunder occurs just before it. This is not to be admitted. The poet's fouldring heat is burning heat.] To emit great heat.

Loud thunder with amazement great
Did rend the rattling skyes with flames of fouldring heat. Spenser, F. Q. ii. ii. 20.

FO'ULFACED. adj. [foul and faced.] Having an ugly or hateful visage.

If black scandal, or foulfaçé reproach,
Attend the sequel of your imposition,
Your mere enforcement shall acquaintance me
From all the impure blots and stains thereof. Shakespeare, Richard III.

FO'ULFEEDING.* adj. [foul and feeding.] Gross; of coarse food.

There is an appetitus carnis, that passing by wholesome viands, falls upon unmeet and foul-feeding morsels. Bp. Hall, Fashions of the World.

FO'ULLY. adv. [from foul.]

1. Filthily; nastily; odiously; hatefully; scandalously; disgracefully; shamefully.
We in the world's widely mouth
Live scandaliz'd, and foully spoken of. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

The letter to the protector was gilded over with many smooth words; but the other two did fully and foully set forth his obstinacy, avarice and ambition. Hayward.

O brother, brother! Filbert still is true;
I foully wrong'd him: do, forgive me, do. Gay.

2. Not lawfully; not fairly.
Thou play'st most foully for't. Shakespeare.

FOULMOUTHED. adj. [foul and mouth.] Scurrilous; habituated to the use of opprobrious terms and epithets.

My lord, he speaks most vilely of you, like a foulmouth'd man as he is, and said he would cudgel you. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

It was allowed by every body, that so foulmouthed a witness never appeared in any cause. Addison.

My reputation is too well established in the world to receive any hurt from such a foulmouthed scoundrel as he. Arbutnot.

Now singing shrill, and scolding oft between,
Scolds answer foulmouth'd scolds; bad neighbourhood I ween. Pope.

FO'ULNESS. n. s. [from foul.]

1. The quality of being foul; filthiness; nastiness.

The ancients were wont to make garments that were not destroyed but purified by fire; and whereas the spots or foulness of other cloaths are washed out, in these they were usually burnt away. Wilkins, Math. Magic.

2. Pollution; impurity.
It is no vicious blot, murder, or foulness,
No unchaste action, or dishonour'd step,
That hath depriv'd me of your grace and favour. Shakespeare.

There is not so chaste a nation as this, nor so free from all pollution or foulness: it is the virgin of the world. Bacon.

3. Hatefulness; atrociousness.
Consul, you are too mild:

The foulness of some facts takes thence all mercy. B. Jonson.

It is the wickedness of a whole life, discharging all its filth and foulness into this one quality, as into a great sink or common shore. South.

4. Ugliness; deformity.

FOUND. The preterite and participle passive of find.

I am sought of them that asked not for me: I am found of them that sought me not. Is. lxxv. 1.

Authors now find, as once Achilles found,
The whole is mortal if a part's unsound. Young.

To FOUND. v. a. [fundare, Latin; fonder, French.]

1. To lay the basis of any building.
It fell not; for it was founded upon a rock. Matt. vii.

He hath founded it upon the seas, and established it upon the floods. Ps. xxiv. 2.

2. To build; to raise.
These tunes of reason are Amphion's lyre,
Wherewith he did the Theban city found. Davies.

They Gabian walls, and strong Fidenæ rear,
Nomentum, Bola with Pometia found,
And raise Colatian tow'rs on rocky ground. Dryden, En.

3. To establish; to erect.
This also shall they gain by their delay
In the wide wilderness; there they shall found
Their government, and their great senate choose,
Through the twelve tribes, to rule by laws ordain'd. Milton, P. L.

He founding a library, gathered together the acts of the kings and prophets. 2 Mac. ii. 13.

4. To give birth or original to: as, he founded an art; he founded a family.

5. To raise upon, as on a principle or ground.

Though some have made use of the opinion of some schoolmen, that dominion is founded in grace;

were it admitted as the most certain truth, it could never warrant any such sanguinary method.

Decay of Piety.
A right to the use of the creatures is founded originally in the right a man has to subsist. Locke.
Power, founded on contract, can descend only to him who has right by that contract. Locke.

The reputation of the Iliad they found upon the ignorance of his times. Pope, Pref. to the Iliad.

6. To fix firm.

Fleance is escap'd.
— Then comes my fit again: I had else been perfect,

Whole as the marble, founded as the rock,
Shakespeare, Macbeth.

TO FOUND. v. a. [fundere, Latin; fondre, French.] To form by melting and pouring into moulds; to cast.

A second multitude
With wonderous art founded the massy ore,
Severing each kind, and scum'd the bullion dross.
Milton, P. L.

FOUNDATIO*N.* n. s. [fondation, French.]

1. The basis or lower parts of an edifice.

The stateliness of houses, the goodness of trees, when we behold them, delighteth the eye; but that foundation which beareth up the one, that root which ministereth unto the other nourishment, is in the bosom of the earth concealed. Hooker.

That is the way to make the city flat,
To bring the roof to the foundation,
To bury all. Shakespeare, Coriol.

O Jove, I think,
Foundations fly the wretched; such, I mean,
Where they should be reliev'd. Shakespeare, Coriol.
I draw a line along the shore;
I lay the deep foundations of a wall,
And Enos, nam'd from me, the city call.
Dryden, Æn.

2. The act of fixing the basis.

Ne'er to these chambers where the mighty rest,
Since their foundation, came a nobler guest.

3. The principles or ground on which any notion is raised.

If we give way to our passions, we do but gratify ourselves for the present, in order to our future disquiet; but if we resist and conquer them, we lay the foundation of perpetual peace in our minds. Villoston.

That she should be subject to her husband, the laws of mankind and customs of nations have ordered it so; and there is a foundation in nature for it. Locke.

4. Original; rise.

Throughout the world, even from the first foundation thereof, all men have either been taken as lords or lawful kings in their own houses. Hooker.

5. A revenue settled and established for any purpose, particularly charity.

He had an opportunity of going to school on a foundation. Swift.

6. Establishment; settlement.

FOUNDATIO*NLESS.* * adj. [foundation and less.] Without foundation.

A flattering, fallacious, foundationless, because unconditional, hope; which the bigger it swells, the more dangerous it proves.

Hammond, Works, iv. 506.

FOUNDER. n. s. [from found.]

1. A builder; one who raises an edifice; one who presides at the election of a city.

Of famous cities we the founders know;
But rivers, old as seas to which they go,
Are nature's bounty: 'tis of more renown
To make a river than to build a town. Waller.
Nor was Præneste's founder wanting there,
Whom fame reports the son of Mulciber.

Dryde

2. One who establishes a revenue for any purpose.

The wanting orphans saw with wat'ry eyes
Their founders charity in the dust laid low. Dryden.

This hath been experimentally proved by the honourable founder of this lecture in his treatise of the air. Bentley.

3. One from whom any thing has its original or beginning.

And the rude notions of pedantic schools
Blaspheme the sacred founder of our rules.

Roscommon.

When Jove, who saw from high, with just disdain,

The dead inspir'd with vital breath again,
Struck to the centre with his flaming dart
Th' unhappy founder of the godlike art. Dryd. Æn.

King James I. the founder of the Stuart race, had he not confined all his views to the peace of his own reign, his son had not been involved in such fatal troubles. Addison, Freeholder.

Nor can the skilful herald trace
The founder of thy ancient race. Swift.

4. [Fondeur, French.] A caster; one who forms figures by casting melted matter into moulds.

Founders add a little antimony to their bell-metal, to make it more sonorous; and so pewterers to their pewter, to make it sound more clear like silver. Grew, Museum.

TO FOUNDER. v. a. [fondre, French.]

To cause such a soreness and tenderness in a horse's foot, that he is unable to set it to the ground.

Phœbus' steeds are founder'd,
Or night kept chain'd below. Shakespeare, Tempest.

I have founder'd nine score and odd posts; and here, travel-tainted as I am, have, in my pure and immaculate valour, taken Sir John Coleville of the Dale, a most furious knight: but what of that? he saw me and yielded. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

Thy stumbling founder'd jade can trot as high
As any other Pegasus can fly;
So the dull eel moves nimbler in the mud,
Than all the swift-finn'd racers of the flood. Dorset.

Brutes find out where their talents lie;
A bear will not attempt to fly;
A founder'd horse will oft debate,
Before he tries a five-bar'd gate. Swift.
If you find a gentleman fond of your horse, persuade your master to sell him, because he is vicious, and founder'd into the bargain.

Swift, Direct. to the Groom.

Men of discretion, whom people in power may with little ceremony load as heavy as they please, drive them through the hardest and deepest roads, without danger of foundering or breaking their backs, and will be sure to find them neither resty nor vicious. Swift.

TO FOUNDER. † v. n. [from fond, French, the bottom.]

1. To sink to the bottom.

New ships, built at those rates, have been ready to founder in the seas with every extraordinary storm. Raleigh, Ess.

2. To fail; to miscarry.

In this point
All his tricks founder; and he brings his physick
After his patient's death. Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

3. To trip; to fall. Applied to a horse.

His horse for fear began to turn
And lepe aside, and foundrid as he lepe.

Chaucer, Kn. Tale.

It chaunst sir Satyrane his steed at last,
Whether through foundrings, or through sodein feare,
To stumble, that his rider night he cast.

Spenser, F. Q.

FOUNDEROUS. * adj. [fondre, Fr. "destruire, ruiner," Borel. Cotgrave renders fondriere "a bog or quagmire."] This word occurs in our acts of parliament concerning the high-ways. Whoever indicts or presents a road, swears that it is founderous, or in a founderous state. This implies failing, not equal to use, ruinous.

I have travelled through the negociation, and a sad founderous road it is.

Burke, Letter on a Regicide Peace, L. iii.

FOUNDERY. n. s. [fonderie, French, from found.] A place where figures are formed of melted metal; a castinghouse.

FOUNDLING. n. s. [from found of find.] A child exposed to chance; a child found without any parent or owner.

We, like bastards, are laid abroad, even as foundlings, to be trained up by grief and sorrow. Sidney.

I pass the founding by, a race unknown,
At doors expos'd, whom matrons make their home,
And into noble families advance
A nameless issue; the blind work of chance.

Dryden, Juv.

A piece of charity practised by most of the nations about us, is a provision for foundlings, or for those children who are exposed to the barbarity of cruel and unnatural parents. Addison.

The goddess long had mark'd the child's distress,
And long had sought his sufferings to redress;
She prays the gods to take the foundling's part,
To teach his hands some beneficial art. Gay, Trivia.

FOUNDER. † n. s. [from founder.]

1. A woman that founds, builds, establishes causes, or begins any thing. Mr. Mason is ridiculously angry with Dr. Johnson for shortening founderess in the example of the next definition from Spenser, and also contends that foundress, in the example from Dryden, is only a poetical contraction. He has offered no other example either of founderess or foundress. The word foundress is common in both senses.

Forgetfull of himselfe, his birth, his country,
friends, and all,
And only minding (whom he mist) the foundress
of his fall. Warner, Albion's England.

Pride — became the first precedent of God's lessening his family, and the foundress of hell.

Osborne, Advice to a Son, p. 28.

2. A woman that establishes any charitable revenue.

For of their order she was patroness,
Albe Charissa was their chiefest foundress.

Spenser, F. Q.

For zeal like hers, her servants were to show;
She was the first, where need requir'd to go;
Herself the foundress, and attendant too. Dryde.

The great foundress of the Pietists, Madame de Bourignon. Tatler, No 126.

Against the north wall of the north cross is erected a stone monument for Sir John Trussell, and Maud his wife, who were the founder and foundress of this church. Ashmole, Berk. ii. 487.

FOUNT. † } n. s. [fons, Latin; fontaine, French; fontana, low Latin, fontanaria, anc. Prov.]

1. A well; a spring.

He set before him spread
A table of celestial food divine,
Ambrosial fruits fetcht from the tree of life;
And from the fount of life ambrosial drink.

Milton, P. R.

2. A small bason of springing water.

Proofs as clear as fountains in July, when
We see each grain of gravel. Shaks. Hen. VIII.

Can a man drink better from the fountain finely paved with marble, than when it spews out the green turf.

Narcissus on the grassy verdure lies;
But whilst within the crystal fountain he tries
To quench his heat, he feels new heat arise.

Adison.

3. A jet; a spout of water.

Fountains I intend to be of two natures: the one that sprinkle or spouteth water; the other a fair receipt of water, without fish, or slime, or mud.

Bacon.

4. The head or first spring of a river.

All actions of your grace are of a piece, as waters keep the tenour of their fountains: your compassion is general, and has the same effect as well on enemies as friends.

Dryden.

5. Original; first principle; first cause.

Almighty God, the fountain of all goodness,

Common Prayer.

You may reduce many thousand bodies to these few general figures, as unto their principal heads and fountains.

Peachment.

This one city may well be reckoned not only the seat of trade and commerce, not only the fountain of habits and fashions, and good breeding, but of morally good or bad manners to all England.

Spirit, Serm.

6. [In printing.] A set or quantity of characters or letters. See FONT.

FO'UNTAINHEAD.* n. s. [fountain and head.] Original; first principle.

Above our atmosphere's intestine wars,
Rain's fountain-head, the magazine of hail.

Young, Night. Th. 9.

FO'UNTAINLESS. adj. [from fountain.] Having no fountain; wanting a spring.

So large

The prospect was, that here and there was room
For barren desert, fountainless and dry.

Milton, P. R.

FO'UNTFUL. adj. [fount and full.] Full of springs.

But when the fountful Ida's top they scal'd with utmost haste,
All fell upon the high-hair'd oaks.

Chapman, Iliads.

To FOUPPE.† v. a. To drive with sudden impetuosity. A word out of use, Dr. Johnson says. He would not have said, that it ever was in use, if he had consulted the editions of the book, from which he cites the example. The first edition of Camden's Remains in 1605 reads soupe. A very incorrect edition of 1637 reads foupe, but it is corrected in the improved one of 1674. See To SOUP. Dr. Ash gravely admits foupe into his vocabulary. The following is the passage, in which the mistaken word occurs, as given by Dr. Johnson, but now with more than one correction. To soup is to draw, to breathe out.

We pronounce, by the confession of strangers, as [sweetly,] smoothly, and moderately, as any of the northern nations, who [are noted to] foupe [soupe] their words out of the throat with fat and full spirits,

Camden, Rem. on Languages.

FOUR. adj. [peopep, Sax. fidwoor, Goth. quatuor, Latin.] Twice two.

Just as I wish'd, the lots were cast on four;
Myself the fifth.

Pope, Odyssey.

FOURBE. n. s. [French.] A cheat; a tricking fellow. Not now in use.

Jove's envoy, through the air,
Brings dismal tidings; as if such low care
Could reach their thoughts, or their repose disturb!
Thou art a false imposter, and a fourbe, Denham.

FOURFO'LD. adj. [four and fold.] Four times told.

He shall restore the lamb fourfold, because he had no pity.

2 Sam. xii. 6.

FOURFO'OTED. adj. [four and foot.] Quadruped; having four feet.

Augur Astylos, whose art in vain
From sight dissuaded the fourfooted train,
Now beat the hoof with Nessus on the plain.

Dryden.

FO'URRIER.* n. s. [French, fourier, Cotgrave.] An harbinger.

The Duke of Buckingham's revolt was the preparative and fourrier of the rest.

Sir G. Buck, Hist. Rich. III. p. 34.

FOURSCO'RE. adj. [four and score.]

1. Four times twenty; eighty.

When they were out of reach, they turned and crossed the ocean to Spain, having lost fourscore of their ships, and the greater part of their men.

Bacon, War with Spain.

The Chiots were first a free people, being a common-wealth, maintaining a navy of fourscore ships.

Sandys.

The Liturgy had, by the practice of near fourscore years, obtained great veneration from all sober Protestants.

Clarendon.

2. It is used elliptically for fourscore years in numbering the age of man.

At seventeen years many their fortunes seek;
But at fourscore it is too late a week.

Shakespeare, As you like it.

Some few might be of use in council upon great occasions, till after threescore and ten; and the two late ministers in Spain were so till fourscore.

Temple.

FOURSQUA'RE. adj. [four and square.] Quadrangular; having four sides and angles equal.

The temple of Bel was invironed with a wall carried foursquare, of great height and beauty; and on each square certain brazen gates curiously engraven.

Raleigh, Hist.

FOURTE'EN. adj. [peopep'tyn, Saxon.] Four and ten; twice seven.

I am not fourteen pence on the score for sheer ale.

Shakespeare.

FOURTE'ENTH. adj. [from fourteen.] The ordinal of fourteen; the fourth after the tenth.

I have not found any that see the ninth day, few before the twelfth, and the eyes of some not open before the fourteenth day.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

FOURTH. adj. [from four.] The ordinal of four; the first after the third.

A third is like the former: filthy hags!

Why do you shew me this? A fourth? I start eye!
What! will the line stretch out to th' crack of doom?

Shakespeare.

FO'URTHLY. adv. [from fourth.] In the fourth place.

Fourthly, plants have their seed and seminal parts uppermost, and living creatures have them lowermost.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

FOURWHE'ELED. adj. [four and wheeled.] Running upon twice two wheels.

Scarce twenty fourwheel'd cars, compact and strong,

The massy load could bear, and roll along.

Pope, Odyssey.

FO'UTER.* n. s. A despicable fellow. See FOUTY. This contemptuous expression is both a northern and a west-country word. See Brockett and Jennings.

FO'UTRA. n. s. [from foutre, French.] A fig; a scoff; a word of contempt. Not used.

A foutra for the world, and wordlings base.

Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

FOWL.† n. s. [fugel, ruhl, Saxon; fugl, Icel. and Su. Goth. from fuga, to fly, whence the Sax. phozan, and the Germ. fugel, wing; voghel, Teut. vogel, Germ.] A winged animal; a bird. It is colloquially used of edible birds, but in books of all the feathered tribes. Fowl is used collectively: as, we dined upon fish and fowl.

The beasts, the fishes, and the winged fowls,
Are their male subjects, and at their controuls.

Shakespeare.

Lucullus entertained Pompey in a magnificent house: Pompey said, this is a marvellous house for the summer: but methinks very cold for winter. Lucullus answered, do you not think me as wise as divers fowls, to change my habitation in the winter season?

Bacon, Apophthegms.

This mighty breath
Instructs the fowls of heaven.

Thomson, Spring.

To FOWL.† v. n. [from the noun.] To kill birds for food or game.

Such persons as may lawfully hunt, fish, or fowl, have only a qualified property in these animals.

Blackstone.

FO'WLER. n. s. [from fowl.] A sportsman who pursues birds.

The fowler warn'd

By those good omens, with swift early steps
Treads the crimp earth, ranging through fields and glades,
Offensive to the birds.

Philips.

With slaughter'd guns th' unwear'd fowler roves,
When frosts have whiten'd all the naked groves.

Pope.

FO'WLING.* n. s. [from fowl.] The act of catching birds with birdlime, nets, and other devices; the employment of shooting birds; and also falconry or hawking.

FO'WLINGPIECE. n. s. [fowl and piece.] A gun for the shooting of birds.

'Tis necessary that the countryman be provided with a good fowlingspiece.

Mortimer.

FOX.† n. s. [fox, Saxon; vos, vosch, Dutch; fox, Su. Goth. foxa, to deceive; Icel. the same, and fox, false. Hence, perhaps, the name of the animal.]

1. A wild animal of the canine kind, with sharp ears and a bushy tail, remarkable for his cunning, living in holes, and preying upon fowls or small animals.

The fox barks not when he would steal the lamb.

Shakespeare.

He that trusts to you,
Where he should find you lions, finds you hares;
Where foxes, geese.

Shakespeare, Macbeth.

These retreats are more like the dens of robbers, or holes of foxes, than the fortresses of fair warriors.

Locke.

2. By way of reproach, applied to a knave or cunning fellow.

O how the old fox stunk, I warrant thee,

When the rank fit was on him.

Otway, Venice Preserved.

3. Formerly a cant expression for a sword.

O signieur Dew; thou diest on point of fox!

Shakespeare, Hen. V.

He's hurt too, he cannot go far, I made my father's old fox fly about his ears.

Beaumont and Fl. Philaster.

The whinyard of the house of Shrewsbury is not like it, nor the twohanded fox of John Falstaff, which hewed in sundry fourteen out of seven principal assassins!

Gayton on D. Quix. p. 87.

To FOXY.* v. a. [Su. Goth. foxa, to deceive.] To stupify; to make drunk.

The Dutch—by reason of their custom of immoderate bibbing, and so often being foxy, were by the best nations of Europe pointed at as aging-stocks. Trans. of Boccacini, (1626,) p. 51. The drunkard that should offer to justify his beastliness by affirming, that he never foxes himself but with one sort of wine.

Boyle against Cust. Swearing, p. 34.

FO'XCASE. n. s. [fox and case.] A fox's skin.

One had better be laughed at for taking a foxcase for a fox, than be destroyed by taking a live fox for a case.

L'Estrange.

FOXCHASE. n. s. [fox and chase.] The pursuit of the fox with hounds.

See the same man, in vigour, in the gout;

Alone, in company; in place or out;

Early at business, and at hazard late;

Mad at a foxchase, wise at a debate. Pope.

FO'XERY.* n. s. [from fox.] Behaviour like that of a fox. An old forgotten word, but full as good as foxship given by Dr. Johnson.

And wrie [hide] me in my fozerie.

Chaucer, Rom. R. 6795.

FO'XEVL. n. s. [fox and evil.] A kind of disease of the hair sheds.

Atyp. Cramer on the Sacrament, fol. 110.

FOY. n. s. [foi, Fr.] Faith; allegiance. An obsolete word.

He Easterland subdued, and Denmark won, And of them both did foy and tribute raise.

Spenser, F. Q.

FOY.* n. s. [probably from the Teut. foey, an agreement, a compact.] A feast given by one who is about to leave a place. In Kent, according to Grose, a treat to friends "either at going abroad or coming home."

He is a passionate lover of morning-draughts, which he generally continues till dinner-time; a rigid exactor of num-groats, and collector general of foys and jibbers [beverage].

England's Jest, Character. of a Bad Husband, 1687.

FO'YSON.† See POISON.

TO FRACT. v. a. [fractus, Latin.] To break; to violate; to infringe. Found perhaps only in the following passage.

His days and times are past,

And my reliance on his fracted dates

Has smit my credit. Shakespeare, Timon.

FRACTION. n. s. [fraction, Fr. fractio, Latin.]

1. The act of breaking; the state of being broken.

The surface of the earth hath been broke, and the parts of it dislocated; several parcels of nature retain still the evident marks of fraction and ruin.

Burnet, Th. of the Earth.

2. A broken part of an integral.

The fractions of her faith, orts of her love, The fragments, scraps, the bits and greasy reliques Of her o'er-eaten faith, are bound to Diomedes.

Shakespeare.

Neither the motion of the moon, whereby months are computed, nor the sun, whereby years are accounted, consisteth of whole numbers, but admits of fractions and broken parts.

Pliny put a round number near the truth, rather than a fraction.

Arbutnot on Coins.

FRACTIONAL. adj. [from fraction.] Belonging to a broken number; comprising a broken number.

We make a cypher the medium between increasing and decreasing numbers, commonly called absolute or whole numbers, and negative or fractional numbers.

Cocker's Arithmetick.

FRACTIONOUS.* adj. [perhaps from fractus, Lat.] Cross; peevish; fretful: as, a fractionous child.

FRACTURE. n. s. [fractura, Lat.]

1. Breach; separation of continuous parts.

That may do it without any great fracture of the more stable and fixed parts of nature, or the infringement of the laws thereof.

Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

2. The separation of the continuity of a bone in living bodies.

But thou wilt sin and grief destroy,

That so the broken bones may joy,

And tune together in a well-set song,

Full of his praises,

Who dead men raises;

Fractures well cur'd, make us more strong.

Herbert.

Fractures of the skull are dangerous, not in consequence of the injury done to the cranium itself, but as the brain becomes affected.

Sharp, Surgery.

TO FRACTURE.† v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To break a bone.

Huloet.

Huloet.

The leg was dressed, and the fractured bones united together.

Wiseman, Surgery.

2. To break any thing.

Behold his chair, whose fractur'd seat infirm

An aged cushion hides. Shenstone, Economy, P. iii.

FRA'GILE. adj. [fragile, French: fragilis, Latin.]

1. Brittle; easily snapped or broken.

To ease them of their griefs,

Their pangs of love, and other incident throes,

That nature's fragile vessel doth sustain

In life's uncertain voyage. Shakespeare, Timon.

The stalk of ivy is tough, and not fragile.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

When subtle wits have spun their threads too fine,

'Tis weak and fragile, like Arachne's line.

Denham.

A dry stick will be easily broken, when a green one will maintain a strong resistance; and yet in the moist substance there is less rest than in what is drier and more fragile.

Glanville.

2. Weak; uncertain; easily destroyed.

Much ostentation, vain of fleshly arms,

And fragile arms, much instrument of war,

Long in preparing, soon to nothing brought,

Before mine eyes thou'st set. Milton, P. R.

FRA'GILITY.† n. s. [fragilité, French.]

1. Brittleness; easiness to be broken.

To make an induration with toughness, and less fragility, decoct bodies in water for two or three days.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

2. Weakness; uncertainty; easiness to be destroyed.

Fear the uncertainty of man's fragility, the common chance of war, the violence of fortune.

Knolles, Hist.

3. Frailty; lability to fault.

All could not be right, in such a state, in this lower age of fragility.

Wotton.

FRA'GMENT. n. s. [fragmentum, Latin.]

A part broken from the whole; an imperfect piece.

He who late a sceptre did command,

Now grasps a floating fragment in his hand.

Dryden.

Cowley, in his unfinished fragment of the Davideis, has shewn us this way to improvement.

Watts on the Mind.

If a thin or plated body, which being of an even thickness, appears all over of one uniform colour, should be slit into threads, or broken into fragments of the same thickness, with the plate, I see no reason why every thread or fragment should not keep its colour.

Newton, Opticks.

Some on painted wood

Transfix'd the fragments, some prepar'd the soap.

Pope, Odyssey.

FRA'GMENTARY. adj. [from fragment.]

Composed of fragments. A word not elegant, nor in use.

She, she's gone; she's gone: when thou know'st

this,

What fragmentary rubbish this world is,

Thou know'st, and that it is not worth a thought;

He knows it too too much that thinks it nought.

Donne.

FRA'GOR.† n. s. [Latin.]

1. A noise; a crack; a crash. Not used, Dr. Johnson says, citing only the first of the examples from Sandys; in whose writings alone I find it in this sense, and who was certainly fond of the word. Sir T. Herbert uses it in a very different sense, that of fragrance.

To earth's extent his winged lightnings flies.

Pursued by hideous fragors; though before

The flames descend, they in their breaches roar.

Sandys, Job, p. 54

The clouds in storms of rain descend;
The air Thy hideous fragors rend. Sandys, Ps. 77.
Arms clashing, trumpets, from the rising sun
Horrible fragors, heard by all.

- Sandys, Christ's Pass. Notes. p. 111.*
2. A sweet smell; a strong smell.
A word not justifiable in this sense.

Gardens here for grandeur and fragour are such as no city in Asia outvies.

Sir T. Herbert, Travels, p. 165.

[The musk] by its fragor is oft discovered by the careless passenger. Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 363.

FRA'GRANCE. } n. s. [fragrantia, Latin.]
FRA'GRANCY. } Sweetness of smell;
pleasing scent; grateful odour.

Eve separate he spies,

Veil'd in a cloud of fragrance, where she stood
Half-spy'd. Milton, P. L.

I am more pleas'd to survey my rows of cole-worts and cabbages springing up in their full fra-grancy and verdure, than to see the tender plants of foreign countries kept alive by artificial heats.

Addison, Spect.

Not lovelier seem'd Narcissus to the eye;
Nor, when a flower, could boast more fragrantcy.

Garth.

Such was the wine: to quench whose fervent steam

Scarce twenty measures from the living stream
To cool one cup suffic'd: the goblet crown'd,
Breath'd aromatic fragrances around.

Pope, Odyssey.

FRA'GRANT.† adj. [fragrant, Fr. fra-grans, Lat.] Odorous; sweet of smell.

Fragrant the fertile earth

After soft showers; and sweet the coming on
Of grateful evening mild. Milton, P. L.

The nymph vouchsaf'd to place

Upon her head the various wreath:
The flow'rs, less blooming than her face;
Their scent less fragrant than her breath. Prior.

FRA'GRANTLY. adv. [from fragrant.] With sweet scent.

As the hops begin to change colour, and smell fragrantly, you may conclude them ripe.

Mortimer, Husbandry.

FRAIL.† n. s. [old Fr. fraile, a basket, Kel-ham.]

1. A basket made of rushes.

A frail of figs.

Barrel's Abo. 1580.

What would you now give for her? some five frail

Of rotten figs, good godson?

Beaumont and Fl. Hon. Man's Fortune.

Three froils of sprats carried from mart.

Beaumont and Fl. Q. of Corinth.

2. A rush for weaving baskets.

FRAIL.† adj. [old Fr. fraile, i. e. fragile, brittle; from fragilis, Lat. Cotgrave and Roquefort.]

1. Weak; easily decaying; subject to casualties; easily destroyed.

I know my body's of so frail a kind,

As fever with, fevers within can kill. Davies.

When with care we have raised an imaginary treasure of happiness, we find, at last, that the materials of the structure are frail and perishing, and the foundation itself is laid in the sand.

Rogers.

2. Weak of resolution; liable to error or seduction.

The truly virtuous do not easily credit evil that is told them of their neighbours; for if others may do amiss, then may these also speak amiss:
man is frail, and prone to evil, and therefore may soon fall in words. Bp. Taylor, Guide to Devotion.

FRA'ILNESS.† n. s. [from frail.] Weakness; instability.

Such is the frailness of our nature.

Dr. Jackson, Works, iii. 54.

There is nothing among all the frailnesses and uncertainties of this sublunary world so tottering and unstable as the virtue of a coward. Norris.

FRA'ILTY.† n. s. [from frail; Norm. Fr.
frealté. Kelham.]

1. Weakness of resolution; instability of mind; infirmity.

Though Page be a secure fool, and stands so firmly on his wife's frailty, yet I cannot put off my opinion so easily. Shakespeare.

Nor shouldst thou have trusted that to woman's frailty:

Ere I to thee, thou to thyself wast cruel.

Milton, S. A.

God knows our frailty, pities our weakness, and requires of us no more than we are able to do.

Locke.

2. Fault proceeding from weakness; sins of infirmity: in this sense it has a plural.

Love did his reason blind,

And love's the noblest frailty of the mind.

Dryden, Ind. Emp.

Kind wits will those light faults excuse;
Those are the common frailties of the muse.

Dryden.

Death, only death, can break the lasting chain;
And here, ev'n then, shall my cold dust remain;
Here all its frailties, all its flames resign,
And wait, till 'tis no sin to mix with thine. Pope.

That Christians are now not only like other men in their frailties and infirmities, might be in some degree excusable; but the complaint is, they are like heathens in all the main and chief articles of their lives. Law.

FRAISCHUR. n. s. [French.] Freshness; coolness. A word foolishly in-novated by Dryden.

Hither in Summer-ev'nings you repair,

To taste the fraischur of the purer air. Dryden.

FRAISE.† n. s. [French.]

1. A pancake with bacon in it. See FROISE.

2. Fraises are pointed stakes in fortification.

FRAM.* adj. [Icel. framur, mollis.] Tender;
brittle: written also frem and frim.
Craven Dialect, and Wilbraham's Gloss.

To FRAME.† v. a. [Sax. framman, to frame; Goth. framna, to produce.]

1. To form or fabricate by orderly construction and union of various parts.

The double gates he findeth locked fast;

The one fair fram'd of burnish'd ivory,

The other all with silver overcast. Spenser, F. Q.

2. To fit one to another.

They rather cut down their timber to frame it,
and to do necessities to their convenient use, than to fight. Abbot.

Hew timber, saw it, frame it, and set it together.

Mortimer.

3. To make; to compose.

Then chusing out few words most horrible,

Thereof did verses frame. Spenser, F. Q.

As wine mingled with water is pleasant, and delighteth the taste; even so speech, pleasantly framed, delighteth the ears of them that read the story.

2 Macc. xv. 39.

Fight valiantly to day;

And yet I do thee wrong to mind thee of it;

For thou art fram'd of the firm truth of valour.

Shakespeare.

4. To regulate; to adjust.

Let us not deceive ourselves by pretending to this excellent knowledge of Christ Jesus our Lord, if we do not frame our lives according to it.

Tillotson.

5. To form to any rule or method by study or precept.

Thou art their soldier, and, being bred in broils,
Hast not the soft way; but thou wilt frame

Thyself forsooth hereafter theirs. Shakspeare, Coriol.

I have been a truant to the law;

I never yet could frame my will to it,

And therefore frame the law unto my will.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

6. To form and digest by thought.

The most abstruse ideas are only such as the understanding frames to itself, by joining together ideas that it had either from objects of sense, or from its own operations about them. Locke.

Full of that flame his tender senses he warms,
And frames his goddess by your matchless charms.

Granville.

Urge him with truth to frame his sure replies,
And sure he will; for wisdom never lies.

Pope, Odyssey.

How many excellent reasonings are framed in the mind of a man of wisdom and study in a length of years. Watts.

7. To contrive; to plan.

Unpardonable the presumption and insolence in contriving and framing this letter was.

Clarendon.

8. To settle; to scheme out.

Though I cannot make true wars,

I'll frame convenient peace. Shakespeare, Coriol.

9. To invent; to fabricate, in a bad sense:
as, to frame a story or lie.

Astronomers, to solve the phenomena framed to their conceit eccentricities and epicycles. Bacon.

- To FRAME.* v. n. To contrive; to attempt: and in this sense it is now a northern expression.

Then said they to him, Say now Shibboleth;
and he said Shibboleth; for he could not frame to pronounce it right. Judges, xii. 6.

FRAME. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A fabric; any thing constructed of various parts or members.

If the frame of the heavenly arch should dissolve itself, if celestial spheres should forget their wonted motions, and by irregular volubility turn themselves any way, as it might happen. Hooker.

Castles made of trees upon frames of timber, with turrets and arches, were anciently matters of magnitude. Bacon.

These are thy glorious works, parent of good!
Almighty! thine this universal frame.

Milton, P. L.

Divine Cecilia came,
Inventress of the vocal frame. Dryden.

The gate was adamant; eternal frame,
Which hew'd by Mars himself, from Indian quarries came,

The labour of a god; and all along,
Tough iron plates were clench'd, to make it strong.

Dryden.

We see this vast frame of the world, and an innumerable multitude of creatures in it; all which we, who believe a God, attribute to him as the author. Tillotson.

2. Any thing made so as to enclose or admit something else.

Put both the tube and the vessel it leaned on into a convenient wooden frame, to keep them from mischances. Boyle.

His picture scarcely would deserve a frame.

Dryden, Juv.

A globe of glass, about eight or ten inches in diameter, being put into a frame where it may be swiftly turned round its axis, will, in turning, shine where it rubs against the palm of one's hand.

Newton, Opticks.

3. Order; regularity; adjusted series or disposition.

A woman, that is like a German clock,
Still a repairing, ever out of frame,
And never going aright. Shakespeare.

Your steady soul preserves her frame:
In good and evil times the same. Swift.

4. Scheme; order.

Another party did resolve to change the whole frame of the government in state as well as church.
Clarendon.

5. Contrivance; projection.

John the Bastard,
Whose spirits toil in frame of villanies. Shaksp.

6. Mechanical construction.

7. Shape; form; proportion.

A bear's a savage beast,
Whelp'd without form, until the dam
Has lick'd it into shape and frame. Hudibras.

FRA'MER. n. s. [from frame; fræmman, Sax.] Maker; former; contriver; schemer.

The forger of his own fate, the framer of his fortune, should be improper, if actions were pre-determined. Hammond.

There was want of accurateness in experiments in the first original framer of those medals.
Arbutnot on Coins.

FRA'MEWORK.* n. s. [frame and work.] Work done in a frame.

Doubtless a staunch and solid piece of frame-work.
Milton, Areopagitica.

FRA'MING.* n. s. [from frame.] Adjoining together; as the framing of a house, i. e. the timber-work in it.

FRA'MPOLD.† adj. [This word is written by Dr. Hacket, frampul. I know not its original. Dr. Johnson.—It is written old, frampal, or frampel, frampared, and frampold; for they all are evidently the same word. Ray thinks that, like froward, it comes from the Sax. fram, our from.] Peevish; boisterous; rugged; crossgrained.

Her husband! Alas, the sweet woman leads an ill life with him: she leads a very frampold life with him.
Shakespeare.

The frampul man could not be pacified.

Hacket, Life of Aph. Williams.
Is Pompey grown so malapert, so frampol?
Beaumont and Fl. Wit. at Sea. Weapons.
I pray thee, grow not frampull now.

B. Jonson, Tale of a Tub.
Like faithless wife, that by her frampared guise,
Peevish demeanour, sullen sad disdain,
Doth inly deep the spright melancholize
Of her aggrieved husband.

More, Song of the Soul, l. iii. 40.
As if a child should govern the house, because he will be frampold, and disquieted, otherwise!

Thorndike on Forbearance, &c. (1670), p. 83.

FRA'NCHISE. n. s. [franchise, French.]

1. Exemption from any onerous duty.

2. Privilege; immunity; right granted.

They granted them markets, and other franchises, and erected corporate towns among them.

Davies on Ireland.
His gracious edict the same franchise yields
To all the wild increase of woods and fields.

Dryden.

3. District; extent of jurisdiction.

There are other privileges granted unto most of the corporations, that they shall not be travelled forth of their own franchises. Spenser on Ireland.

TO FRA'NCHISE.† v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To enfranchise; to make free; to keep free.

I lose no honour
In seeking to augment it; but still keep
My bosom franchis'd, and allegiance clear.
Shakespeare, Macb.

2. To possess a right or privilege.

To speak we franchis'd are,
Because we sav'd for peace.

Mir. for Mag. p. 477.

FRA'NCHISEMENT.* n. s. [from franchise.]

Release; freedom.

To work Irena's *franchise*ment,
And eke Grantorto's worthy punishment.

Spenser, F. Q. v. xi. 36.

FRA'NGIBLE.† adj. [frangible, Fr. from frango, Lat.] Fragile; brittle; easily broken.

Though it seem the solidest wood, if wrought before it be well seasoned, it will show itself very frangible.
Boyle.

FRA'NION.†. n. s. [Of this word I know not the derivation. Dr. Johnson.—It is not peculiar to Spenser, whom alone Dr. Johnson cites, but is used with the same epithet by Heywood. It may be merely a cant expression; or perhaps may be referred to the Goth. frion, Sax. fræon, to love, whence our friend.] A paramour; a boon companion.

First, by her side did sit the bold Sansloy,
Fit mate for such a mincing minion,
Who in her looseness took exceeding joy;
Might not be found a franker franon,
Of her lewd parts to make companion.

Spenser, F. Q.
He's a frank franon, a merry companion.

Heywood, Edw. IV. (1600), sign. c. 5.

FRANK.† adj. [franc, Fr.]

1. Liberal; generous; not niggardly.

The moister sorts of trees yield little moss, for the reason of the frank putting up of the sap into the boughs.
Bacon.

They were left destitute, either by narrow provision, or by their frank hearts and their open hands, and their charity towards others.

Sprat, Serm.
'Tis the ordinary practice of the world to be frank of civilities that cost them nothing.

L'Estrange.

2. Open; ingenuous; sincere; not reserved.

I shall have reason
To shew the love and duty, that I bear you,
With franker spirit. Shakespeare, Othello.

3. Without conditions; without payment.

Thou hast it won; for it is of frank gift,
And he will care for all the rest to shift.

Spenser, Hubb. Tale.
We will that all the Jews, that either before or since have been taken and led away,—shall be sent frank and free.

Donne, Hist. of the Septuagint, p. 25.

4. Not restrained; licentious. Not in use.

Might not be found a franker franon.

Spenser, F. Q.

5. Fatted; in good condition. [from franc, old Fr. a place to feed hogs in.] This seems to be the primary sense.

When they were once franke and fat they stoode up together proudly againste the Lord and his worde.
Bale on the Revel. P. 1. sign. I. iii.

FRANK.† n. s. [Fr. franc, a frank or sty.

Cotgrave. See the last sense of the adjective frank.]

1. A place to feed hogs in; a sty.

Where sups he? Doth the old boar feed in the old frank?
Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

He feeds like a boar in a frank. Ray, Prov.

2. A letter which pays no postage [from the third sense of the adjective.]

You'll have immediately, by several franks, my epistle to lord Cobham,
Pope to Swift.

3. A French coin.

TO FRANK.† v. a.

1. To shut up in a frank or sty. Hammer.

In the sty of this most bloody boar,
My son George Stanly is frank'd up in hold.

Shakespeare.

2. To feed high; to fat; to cram.

Junius, and Ainsworth.
The husbandmen and farmers never franke them [hogs] above three or four months.

Hollingshed, Descript. of Brit. B. 3. p. 1096.

Our desire is rather to franke up ourselves with that which we should abhor.

Ahp. Sands, Serm. fol. 155. b.

3. To exempt letters from postage.

My lord Orrery writes to you to-morrow; and you see I send this under his cover, or at least franked by him. Swift.

Gazette's sent gratis down, and frank'd,

For which thy patron's weekly thank'd. Pope.

FRANKALMOIGNE. n. s. The same which we in Latin call libera elemosyna, or free alms in English; whence that tenure is commonly known among our English lawyers by the name of a tenure in frank aumone, or frankalmoigne, which, according to Britton, is a tenure by divine service. Ayliffe, Parergon.

FRANKCHASE.* n. s. [frank and chase.]

A free chase; the liberty of free chase.

A forest is of so princely a tenure, that, according to our laws, none but the king can have a forest; if he chance to pass one over to a subject, 'tis no more forest, but frank-chase.

Howell, Lett. iv. 16.

FRA'NKINCENSE. n. s. [frank and ainsence; so called perhaps from its liberal distribution of odour.]

Frankincense is a dry resinous substance in pieces or drops, of a pale yellowish white colour; a strong smell, but not disagreeable, and a bitter, acrid, and resinous taste. It is very inflammable. The earliest histories inform us, that frankincense was used among the sacred rites and sacrifices, as it continues to be in many parts. We are still uncertain as to the place whence frankincense is brought, and as to the tree which produces it. Hill.

Take unto thee sweet spices, with pure frankincense. Ezod.

I find in Dioscorides record of frankincense gotten in India. Brewerwood on Languages.

Black ebony only will in India grow,

And od'rous frankincense on the Sabæan bough.

Dryden, Virg.

Cedar and frankincense, an od'rous pile,

Flam'd on the earth, and wide perfum'd the isle.

Pope.

FRA'NKLIN.† n. s. [from frank.] A steward; a bailiff of land. It signifies originally a little gentleman, and is not improperly Englished a gentleman servant. Not in use. So far Dr. Johnson. But his definition is not correct, and the word is also common, though he cites only Spenser. A franklin is a freeholder of considerable property; and the name has given rise to that of many families in England.

A spacious court they see,
Both plain and pleasant to be walk'd in,
Where them does meet a franklin fair and free.

Spenser, F. Q.

A franklin; his outside is an ancient yeoman of England; though his inside may give arms, (with the best gentleman,) and never see the herald. Overbury, Charact. sign. O. 6.

There are many now grown into families, now called franklin; who are men in the county of Middlesex, and other parts, magnis ditati possessionibus. Waterhouse, Comm. on Fortac. p. 288.

There's a franklin in the wild of Kent, hath brought three hundred marks with him in gold.

Shakespeare, K. Hen. IV. P. I.

She can start our franklin's daughters,
In their sleep, with shrieks and laughers.

B. Jonson, Entertainments.

FRA'NKLY. adv. [from frank.]

1. Liberally; freely; kindly; readily.

Oh, were it but my life,

I'd throw it down for your deliverance,
As frankly as a pin. Shakespeare, Meas. for Meas.

If ever any malice in your heart

Were hid against me, now forgive me frankly.
Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

When they had nothing to pay, he frankly forgave them both. St. Luke, vii. 42.

By the toughness of the earth the sap cannot get up to spread so frankly as it should do.

I value my garden more for being full of blackbirds than cherries, and very frankly give them fruit for their songs. Bacon, Nat. Hist. Spectator.

2. Without constraint.

The lords mounted their servants upon their own horses; and they, with the volunteers, who frankly listed themselves, amounted to a body of two hundred and fifty horse. Clarendon.

3. Without reserve.

He entered very frankly into those new designs which were contrived at court. Clarendon.

FRA'NKNESS. n. s. [from frank.]

1. Plainness of speech; openness; inge-nuousness.

When the conde duke had some eclaireissement with the duke, in which he made all the protestations of his sincere affection, the other received his protestations with all contempt; and declared, with a very unnecessary frankness, that he would have no friendship with him. Clarendon.

Tom made love to a woman of sense, and always treated her as such during the whole time of courtship; his natural temper and good breeding hindered him from doing any thing disagreeable, as his sincerity and frankness of behaviour made him converse with her before marriage in the same manner he intended to do afterwards.

Addison, Guardian.

2. Liberality; bounteousness.

3. Freedom from reserve.

He delivered with the frankness of a friend's tongue, word by word, what Kalandar had told him touching the strange story. Sidney.

The ablest men that ever were, have had all an openness and frankness of dealing, and a name of certainty and veracity. Bacon, Essay.

FRANKPLEDGE. n. s. [from franciplegium, Lat.
of franc, i. e. liber & pleige, i. e. fidei

jussor.] A pledge or surety for freemen. For the ancient custom of England, for the preservation of the publick peace was that every free born man at fourteen years of age, religious persons, clerks, knights, and their eldest sons excepted, should find security for his fidelity to the king, or else be kept in prison: whence it became customary for a certain number of neighbours to be bound for one another, to see each man of their pledge forthcoming at all times, or to answer the transgression of any one absenting himself. This was called frankpledge, and the circuit thereof was called decenna, because it commonly consisted of ten households; and every particular person thus mutually bound, was called decennier. This custom was so strictly observed, that the sheriffs in every county, did from time to time take the oaths of young ones as they grew to the age of fourteen years, and see that they combined in one dozen or other: this branch of the sheriff's authority was called visus fran- ciplegii, view of frankpledge. Covel.

FRANKS.* n. s. [Lat. Franci.]

1. People of Franconia in Germany; and the ancient French.

Part of these Sicambers, saith Sebastian Munster, leaving their habitation, where the Rhine entereth into the sea, went up higher, and inhabited about the river of Main, and called themselves Franks. And from these Franks the French or Frenchmen are descended; who seem to have been so called, for having chosen, in some sort, to live in more freedom and liberty than some other of the Germans did.

Versteegan, Rest. of Dec. Intell. ch. 1.

2. An appellation given by the Turks, Arabs, and Greeks, to all the people of the western parts of Europe.

FRA'NTICK. adj. [corrupted from phre- netick, phreneticus, Lat. phrenitis, Gr.
See FRENETICK.]

1. Mad; deprived of understanding by violent madness; outrageously and tur-bulently mad.

Far off, he wonders what makes them so glad;
Of Bacchus merry fruit they did invent,
Or Cybel's frantick rites have made them mad.

Spenser, F. Q.

2. Transported by violence of passion; outrageous; turbulent.

Esteeming, in the frantick error of their minds,
the greatest madness in the world to be wisdom,
and the highest wisdom foolishness. Hooker.

To such height their frantick passion grows,
That what both love, both hazard to destroy.

Dryden.

She tears her hair, and frantick in her griefs,
Calls out on Lucia. Addison, Cato.

3. Simply mad.

The lover frantick,

Sees Helen's beauty in a brow of Egypt. Shaks.

FRA'NTICKLY. adv. [from frantick.] Madly; distractedly; outrageously.

What wise men do thynke of them that so frantyktye on their ale-benches do prattle, it is easy to conjecture. Bale, Leland's New Year's Gift.
Fie, fie, how frantickly I square my talk.

Shakespeare,

Yet still would they his sacred laws transgress—
Against their Saviour frantickly rebel.

Sandys's Ps. 78.

FRA'NTICKNESS. † n. s. [from frantick.]
Madness; fury of passion; distraction.

Sherwood.

FRATE'RNAL. adj. [from fraternal, French;
fraternus, Lat.] Brotherly; pertaining to brothers; becoming brothers.

One shall rise

Of proud ambitious heart; who, not content
With fair equality, fraternal state,
Will arrogate dominion undeserv'd
Over his brethren. Milton, P. L.

The admonitions, fraternal or paternal, of his fellow Christians, or of the governors of the church, then more publick reprehensions; and upon their unsuccessfulness, the censures of the church, until he reform and return. Hammond.

Plead it to her,

With all the strength and heats of eloquence
Fraternal love and friendship can inspire.

Addison, Cato.

FRATE'RNALLY. adv. [from fraternal.]
In a brotherly manner. Cotgrave.

*

FRATE'RNITY. n. s. [from fraternité, French; fraternitas, Latin.]

1. The state or quality of a brother.
2. Body of men united; corporation; society; association; brotherhood.

'Tis a necessary rule in alliances, societies, and fraternities, and all manner of civil contracts, to have a strict regard to the humour of those we have to do withal. L'Estrange.

3. Men of the same class or character.

With what terms of respect knaves and sots will speak of their own fraternity. South, Serm.

FRATERNIZA'TION.* n. s. [from fraternize.]

A sort of brotherhood. See To FRA- TERNIZE.

I hope that no French fraternization, which the relations of peace and amity with systematized regicide would assuredly, sooner or later, draw after them, even if it should overturn our happy constitution itself, could so change the hearts of Englishmen, as to make them delight in representations, and processions, which have no other merit than that of degrading and insulting the name of royalty. Burke on a Regicide Peace.

To FRATE'RNIZE. v. n.* [Fr. fraterniser.]

This word has been supposed to have been introduced at the commencement of the French democratical revolution;
when pretensions of universal brotherhood were made the cloak of universal villainy. But the word, both in French and English, is at least of two hundred years' age; for thus Cotgrave renders the French fraterniser, "to fraternize, to concur with, to be near unto, to agree as brothers." In the cant of modern philosophy, the verb has been actively employed.

FRAT'RICIDE. † n. s. [from fratricide, Fr. fra- tridicidium, Lat.]

1. The murder of a brother.

In an hour and a half we came to a small village called Sinie; just by which is an ancient structure on the top of an high hill, supposed to be the tomb of Abel, and to have given the adjacent country in old times the name of Abilene. The fratricide also is said by some to have been committed in this place.

Mauvrel, Journ. to Aleppo, p. 134.

2. One who kills a brother.

The infamous fratricide was presently thrown from his usurped greatness.

L. Addison, West. Barbary, p. 16.

FRAUD. † n. s. [from fraus, Lat. fraus, Cornish; fraude, French.]

1. Deceit; cheat; trick; artifice; subtlety; stratagem.

Our better part remains

To work in close design, by fraud or guile,
What force effected not. Milton, P. L.

None need the frauds of sly Ulysses fear.

Dryden, Æn.

If success a lover's toil attends,

- Who asks if force or fraud obtain'd his ends. Pope.

2. Misfortune; damage.

At least our envious foe hath fail'd who thought
All like himself rebellious, by whose aid
This inaccessible high strength, the seat
Of Deity supreme, us dispossess'd,
He trusted to have seiz'd, and into fraud
Drew many, whom their place knows here no more. Milton, P. L.

To all his angels he propos'd
To draw the proud king Ahab into fraud,
That he might fall in Ramoth. Milton, P. R.

FRA'UDFUL. adj. [from fraud and full.]

Treacherous; artful; trickish; deceitful; subtle.

The welfare of us all
Hangs on the cutting short that fraudful man.
Shakespeare, Hen. VI.
He, full of fraudful arts,
This well-invented tale for truth imparts.

Dryden, En.

FRA'UDFULLY. adv. [from fraudful.] Deceitfully; artfully; subtly; treacherously; by stratagem.

FRA'UDULENTIA. n. s. [fraudulentia, FRA'UDULENCY. } Lat.] Deceitfulness; trickishness; proneness to artifice.

We admire the providence of God, in the continuance of Scripture, notwithstanding the endeavours of infidels to abolish, and the fraudulence of heretics always to deprave the same. Hooker.
The malice, wickedness, and fraudulency of those spirits. M. Casaubon, of Credulity, p. 35.

FRA'UDULENT. adj. [fraudent, Fr. Cotgrave; fraudentus, Latin.]

1. Full of artifice; trickish; subtle; deceitful.

He, with serpent tongue,
His fraudent temptation thus began. Milt. P. L.
She mix'd the potion, fraudent of soul;
The potion mantled in the golden bowl.

Pope, Odys.

2. Performed by artifice; deceitful; treacherous.

Now thou hast aveng'd
Supplanted Adam,
And frustrated the conquest fraudent.

Milton, P. R.

FRA'UDULENTLY. adv. [from fraudent.] By fraud; by deceit; by artifice; deceitfully.

The prophete Jeremie pronounceth hym accursed, that doeth his mayster's busnesse fraudently. Woolton, Chr. Man. (1576), sign. L. 8.
He that by fact, word, or sign, either fraudently or violently, does hurt to his neighbour, is bound to make restitution.

Bp. Taylor, Rule of Living Holy.

FRAUGHT. particip. pass. [from fraight, now written freight.] Dr. Johnson. But this participle is from the Teut. verb, wrachten, "vectare, vehere, et vectura onerare, implere navim, Sax. frachten," Kilian.

1. Laden; charged.

In the narrow seas that part
The French and English, there miscarried
A vessel of our country, richly fraught. Shaks.
With joy
And tidings fraught, to tell he now return'd.

Milton, P. L.

And now approach'd their fleet from India, fraught
With all the riches of the rising sun,
And precious sand from southern climates brought.
Dryden.

2. Filled; stored; thronged.

The Scripture is fraught even with laws of nature. Hooker.
By this sad Una, fraught with anguish sore,
Arriv'd, where they in earth their blood had spilt.

Spenser, F. Q.

I am so fraught with curious business, that I leave out ceremony. Shakspeare, Wint. Tale.
Whosoever hath his mind fraught with many thoughts, his wits and understanding do clarify and break up in the communicating and discoursing with another. Bacon.

Hell, their fit habitation, fraught with fire,
Unquenchable, the house of woe and pain.

Milton, P. L.

Abdallah and Belfora were so fraught with all kinds of knowledge, and possessed with so constant a passion for each other, that their solitude never lay heavy on them. Addison.

FRAUGHT. n. s. [Teut. vracht; Swed. frakt; Fr. fret, "the freight or fraught of a ship," Cotgrave.] A freight; a cargo.

Yield up, oh love, thy crown and parted throne
To tyrannous hate! swell, bosom, with thy fraught:

For 'tis of aspicks' tongues. Shaks. Othello.
The bark that all our blessings brought,
Charg'd with thyself and James, a doubly royal fraught. Dryden.

To FRAUGHT. v. a. [for freight, by corruption, Dr. Johnson. But see FRAUGHT. Teut. wrachten.] To load; to crowd.

Hence from my sight:

If after this command thou fraught the court
With thy unworthiness, thou dy'st. Shaks. Cymb.
Being fraught with sundry base scoffs, and cold amplifications. Bacon, Obs. on a Libel in 1592.
Having now full fraught himself with wealth.

Fuller, Holy State, p. 126.

Which shameful libels were *fraught*ed only with odious and scurrilous calumnations.

Sir G. Paul, Life of Abp. Whitgift, p. 52.

FRAUGHTAGE. n. s. [from fraught.] Lading; cargo. A bad word.

Our fraughtage, sir,
I have convey'd abroad. Shaks. Comedy of Err.
On that persuasion am I returned, as to a famous and free port, myself also bound by more than a maritime law, to expose as freely what fraughtage I conceive to bring of no trifles.

Milton, Tetrachordon.

FRAY. n. s. [effrayer, to fright, French.]

1. A battle; a fight.

Time tells, that on that ever blessed day,
When Christian swords with Persian blood were dy'd,
The furious prince Tancredie from that fray
His coward foes chased through forests wide.

Fairfax.

After the bloody fray at Wakefield fought.
Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

He left them to the fates in bloody fray
To toil and struggle through the well-fought day.

Pope.

2. A duel; a combat.

Since, if we fall before th' appointed day,
Nature and death continue long their fray. Denham.

The boaster Paris oft desir'd the day
With Sparta's king to meet in single fray.

Pope, Iliad.

3. A broil; a quarrel; a riot of violence.

I'll speak between the change of man and boy
With a reed voice, and turn two mincing steps
Into a manly stride; and speak of frays
Like a fine bragging youth. Shak. Merch. of Ven.

To FRAY. v. a. [effrayer, Fr.]

1. To fright; to terrify.

The panther, knowing that his spotted hide
Doth please all beasts, but that his looks them fray,
Within a bush his dreadful head doth hide,
To let them gaze, whilst he on them may prey.

Spenser, F. Q.

So diversely themselves in vain they fray,
Whilst some more bold to measure him stand nigh.

Spenser, F. Q.

Fishes are thought to be frayed with the motion caused by noise upon the water.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

These vultures prey only on carcases, on such stupid minds as have not life and vigour to fray them away.

Gov. of the Tongue.

2. [frayer, Fr.] To rub; to wear.

Six round-about aprons with pockets, and four striped muslin night-rails very little frayed.

Tatler, No. 245.

3. To burnish, as a deer his head, by rubbing.

Cotgrave.

A deer is said to fray her head, when she rubs it against a tree. Whalley, Notes on B. Jonson.

FRA'YING. n. s. [from fray.] Peel of a deer's horn.

For by his slot, his entries, and his port,
His frayings, fewmets, he doth promise sport.

B. Jonson, Sad Shepherd.

FREAK. n. s. [frech, German, saucy, petulant; pnæ, Saxon, fugitive. Dr. Johnson.—Wachter defines the German frech by the Latin nimis liber; i. e. too free, deducting it from the Sax. freah, free. But may it not be from the Icel. freka, to quicken motion, to hasten; Sax. frucian, to dance?] 1. A sudden and causeless change of place.

2. A sudden fancy; a humour; a whim; a capricious prank.

O! but I fear the fickle freaks, quoth she,
Of fortune, and the odds of arms in field.

Spenser, F. Q.

When that freak has taken possession of a fantastical head, the distemper is incurable. L'Estre.
She is restless and peevish, and sometimes in a freak will instantly change her habitation.

Spectator.

To vex me more, he took a freak
To slit my tongue, and make me speak.

Swift.

To FREAK. v. a. [a word, I suppose, Scotch, brought into England by Thomson, Dr. Johnson says. The word is not Scotch. Nor is our language indebted to Thomson for it. It had been used, nearly a century before his time, by Milton. And Milton, who loved our ancient language, might adopt this verb from the old word freken, a freckle or spot. See FRECKLE.] To variegate; to chequer.

The white pink, and the pansy freak'd with jet.
Milton, Lycidas.

There furry nations harbour:
Sables of glossy black, and dark embrown'd,
Or beauteous, freak'd with many a mingled hue.

Thomson.

FRE'AKISH. adj. [from freak.] Capricious; humoursome.

Folly is freakish and humoursome.

Barrow, vol. i. S. 1.

One grain of true sense and true wisdom, in real worth and use, doth outweigh loads of freakish wit.

Barrow, Serm. on Ephes. v. 4.

It may be a question, whether the wife or the woman was the more freakish of the two; for she was still the same uneasy fop.

L'Estrange.

FRE'AKISHLY. adv. [from freakish.] Capriciously; humoursomely.

FRE'AKISHNESS. n. s. [from freakish.] Capriciousness; humoursomeness; whimsicalness.

Some of the Cartesians bid fair towards this freakishness.

Annot. on the Disc. of Truth, (1689,) p. 175.

To FREAM. v. n. [fremere, Latin; fremir, French.] To growl or grunt as a boar.

Bailey.

FRE'CKLE. n. s. [flech, a spot, German; whence flecke, freckle. Dr. Johnson.—Our old word is freken or fraken. Thus in the ancient dictionary of Huloet: "Freken, a mole or spot in the body or face." And thus Chaucer: "A few fraknes in his face ysprent." Kn. Tale. Mr. Tyrwhitt says, the word is Saxon;

but he produces no proof. Fraken, I may add, is rendered in our old lexicography "Lentigo, id est, vestigium parvularum macularum in facie, scilicet lenticulæ."

1. A spot raised in the skin by the sun.

Ruddy his lips, and fresh and fair his hue;
Some sprinkled freckles on his face were seen,
Whose dusk set off the whiteness of the skin.

Dryden.

2. Any small spot or discolouration.

The crowsills tall her pensioners be;
In their gold coats spots you see:
Those be rubies fair favours;
In those freckles live their favours.

Shakespeare, Mids. N. Dream.

The farewell frosts and easterly winds now spot your tulips; therefore cover such with mats, to prevent freckles.

Evelyn.

FRECKLED.† adj. [from freckle.] Spotted; maculated; discoloured with small spots. It is a freckled spot that groweth in the skin.

Levit. xiii. 39.

Sometimes we'll angle at the brook,

The freckled trout to take

With silken worms. Drayton, Cynthia.

The even mead that erst brought sweetly forth

The freckled cowslip

Wanting the scythe, all uncorrected, rank,

Conceives by idleness. Shakespeare, Hen. V.

Now thy face charms ev'ry shepherd,

Spotted over like a leopard;

And, thy freckled neck display'd,

Envy breeds in ev'ry maid.

Swift.

FRECKLEDNESS.* n. s. [from freckle.] The state of being freckled; as, "freckledness of the face."

Sherwood.

FRECKLEFACED.* adj. [freckle and face.] Having a face full of freckles.

He that's freckle-fac'd.

Beaumont, and Fl. Two Noble Kinsmen.

FRECKLY.† adj. [from freckle.] Full of freckles.

Sherwood.

FRED. The same with peace; upon which our forefathers called their sanctuaries fredstole, i. e. the seats of peace. So Frederic is powerful or wealthy in peace; Winfred, victorious peace; Reinfred, sincere peace. Gibson's Camden.

FREE.† adj. [peah, pfeo, Saxon; vry, Dutch; frija, Gothick. "Vox antiquissima." Serenius.]

1. At liberty; not a vassal; not enslaved; not a prisoner; not dependant.

A free nation is that which has never been conquered, or thereby entered into any conditions of subjection.

Temple.

Free, what, and fetter'd with so many chains?

Dryden.

How can we think any one freer than to have the power to do what he will?

Locke.

This wretched body trembles at your pow'r;
Thus far could fortune; but she can no more:
Free to herself my potent mind remains,
Nor fears the victor's rage, nor feels his chains.

Prior.

Set an unhappy pris'ner free,

Who ne'er intended harm to thee.

Prior.

2. Uncompelled; unrestrained.

Their use of meats was not like unto our ceremonies, that being a matter of private action in common life, where every man was free to order that which himself did; but this is a public constitution for the ordering of the church. Hooker.

Do faithful homage, and receive free honours,
All which we pine for now. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

It was free, and in my choice whether or no I should publish these discourses; yet the publication being once resolved, the dedication was not so indifferent.

South.

3. Not bound by fate; not necessitated.

Freely they stood who stood, and fell who fell:
Not free, what proof could they have giv'n sincere
Of true allegiance, constant faith, or love,
Where only what they needs must do, appear'd;
Not what they would?

Milton, P. R.

4. Permitted; allowed.

Why, sir, I pray, are not the streets as free
For me as for you? Shak. Tam. of the Shrew.
Defaming as impure what God declares
Pure; and commands to some, leaves free to all.

Milton, P. L.

To gloomy cares my thoughts alone are free,
Ill the gay sports with troubled thoughts agree.

Pope.

5. Licentious; unrestrained.

O conspiracy!

Sham'st thou to shew thy dang'rous brow by night,

When evils are most free. Shaksp. Jul. Cæs.

Castalo, I have doubts within my heart;
Will you be free and candid to your friend?

Otway, Orphan.

7. Acquainted; conversing without reserve.

'Tis not to make me jealous;

To say my wife is fair, feeds well, loves company,
Is free of speech, sings, plays, and dances well,
Where virtue is, these make more virtuous.

Shakespeare, Othello.

Being one day very free at a great feast, he suddenly broke forth into a great laughter.

Hakewill on Providence.

Free and familiar with misfortune grow,
Be us'd to sorrow, and inur'd to woe.

Prior.

8. Liberal; not parsimonious; with of.

Glo'ster too, a foe to citizens

O'ercharging your free purses with large fines,
That seeks to overthrow religion. Shaksp. Hen. IV.

No statute in his favour says,

How free or frugal I shall pass my days;
I, who at sometimes spend as others spare.

Pope, Horace.

Alexandrian verses, of twelve syllables, should never be allowed but when some remarkable beauty or propriety in them atones for the liberty:
Mr. Dryden has been too free of these in his latter works.

Pope.

9. Frank; not gained by importunity; not purchased.

We wanted words to express our thanks: his noble free offers left us nothing to ask.

Bacon, New Atlantis.

10. Clear from distress.

Who alone suffers, suffers most i'th' mind,
Leaving free things and happy shows behind.

Shakespeare, K. Lear.

What dost thou make a ship-board? To what end
Art thou of Bethlem's noble college free?
Stark-staring mad, that thou should'st tempt the sea?

Dryden.

14. Without expence; by charity, as a free school.

Countenance all legal, allowed, free grammar-schools, by causing, as much as in you lies, the youth of the nation to be bred up there.

South, Serm. v. 48.

15. Accomplished; genteel; charming. [a very ancient application of free to our females; Su. Goth. and Icel. frid, handsome; Germ. frey. Ihre says, that fru once denoted, exclusively, a woman of rank. See Frow. Dr. Johnson overpasses the present sense of free.]

Fayre young Venus, fresh and free.

Chaucer, Kn. Tale.

Now were they liegemen to this ladie free, [the fair Britomart.] Spenser, F. Q. iii. l. 44.

I meant to make her fair, and free, and wise,
Of greatest blood, and yet more good than great.

B. Jonson on Lucy, Countess of Bedford.

16. Ready; eager. We still use the phrase, "a free horse."

Raunging the forest wide on courser free.

Spenser, F. Q. i. ix. 12.

To FREE. v. a. [from the adjective.]

1. To set at liberty; to rescue from slavery or captivity; to manumit; to loose.

The child was prisoner to the womb, and is
By law and process of great nature thence Free'd and enfranchis'd; not a party to
The anger of the king, nor guilty of,
If any be, the trespass of the queen.

Shakespeare, Wint. Tale.

He recovered the temple, free'd the city,
and upheld the laws which were going down.

2 Mac. ii. 22.

Canst thou no other master understand,
Than him that free'd thee by the pretor's wand?

Dryden.

Should thy coward tongue
Spread its cold poison through the martial throng,
My jav'lin shall revenge so base a part,
And free the soul that quivers in thy heart.

Pope.

2. To rid from; to clear from any thing ill: with of or from.

It is no marvel, that he could think of no better way to be free'd of these inconveniences the passions of those meetings gave him, than to dissolve them.

Clarendon.

Hercules

Free'd Erymanthus from the foaming boar. Dryd.
Our land is from the rage of tygers free'd.

Dryden, Virg.

3. To clear from impediments or obstructions.

The chaste Sibylla shall your steps convey,
And blood of offer'd victims free the way. Dryden.
Fierce was the fight; but hast'ning to his prey,
By force the furious lover free'd his way. Dryden.

This master key

Free's every lock, and leads us to his person. Dryd.

4. To banish; to send away; to rid. Not in use.

We may again

Give to our tabernacles meat, sleep to our nights,
Free from our feasts and banquets bloody knives.

Shakespeare.

Never any sabbath of release

Could free his travels and afflictions deep. Daniel.

5. To exempt.

For he that is dead is free'd from sin. Rom. vi. 7.

FREERO'OTER.† n. s. [free and booty.]

Dr. Johnson. Our word, it may be added, is, in French, flibustier or flibustier; sometimes also written fribustier. And our old orthography is freebutter. See Sidney State-Papers, vol. 2. p. 78. "The freebutters of Flushenge spoyle all the contribution." Lett. in 1597. A robber; a plunderer; a pillager.

Perkin was not followed by any English of name, his forces consisted mostly of base people and freebooters, fitter to spoil a coast than to recover a kingdom. Bacon.

The earl of Warwick had, as often as he met with any Irish frigates, or such freebooters as sailed under their commission, taken all the sea-men. Clarendon.

FREERO'OTING. n. s. Robbery; plunder; the act of pillaging.

Under it he may cleanly convey any fit pillage, that cometh handsomely in his way; and when he goeth abroad in the night on freebooting, it is his best and surest friend. Spenser on Ireland.

FREEBORN.† n. s. [free and born. Sax. freo-beorn.] Not a slave; inheriting liberty.

The chief captain answered. With a great sum obtained I this freedom. And Paul said, But I was free-born. Acts, xxii. 28.

This is true liberty, when freborn men, Having to advise the publick, may speak free. Milton, Tr. from Euripides.

O baseness, to support a tyrant's throne,
And crush your freborn brethren of the world!

Dryden.

I shall speak my thoughts like a freborn subject, such things perhaps as no Dutch commentator could, and I am sure no Frenchman durst.

Dryden, Æn. Dedic.

Shall freborn men, in humble awe,
Submit to servile shame;

Who from consent and custom draw

The same right to be rul'd by law.

Which kings pretend to reign?

Dryden.

FREECHA'PEL. n. s. [free and chapel.]

Such chapels as are of the king's foundation, and by him exempted from the jurisdiction of the ordinary. The king may also license a subject to found such a chapel, and by his charter exempt it from the ordinary's visitation. Cowel.

FREECO'ST. n. s. [free and cost.] Without expence; free from charges.

We must not vouch any man for an exact master in the rules of our modern policy, but such a one as has brought himself so far to hate and despise the absurdity of being kind upon freecost, as not so much as to tell a friend what it is o'clock for nothing. South.

TO FREE-DE'NIZEN.* v. a. [free and denizen, or denision.] To make free.

No worldly respects can free-denizen a Christian here, and of "peregrinus," make him "civis."

Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 202.

FREE-DE'NIZEN.* n. s. A citizen.

Plato thought it meet, that in every city or commonwealth, as often as any good or harm did happen to any citizen or freedenison thereof, it should not be counted that man's good or harm only, but the good or harm of the whole city.

Dr. Jackson, Works, iii. 619.

FRE'EDMAN. n. s. [free and man.] A slave manumitted. Libertus.

The freedman jostles, and will be preffer'd;

First come, first serv'd, he cries. Dryden, Juv.

FRE'EDOM.† n. s. [Sax. frýðom, fræobom.]

1. Liberty; exemption from servitude; independence.

The laws themselves they do specially rage at, as most repugnant to their liberty and natural freedom. Spenser on Ireland.

O freedom! first delight of human kind!
Not that which bondmen from their masters find,
The privilege of doles; not yet 't' inscribe
Their names in this or t'other Roman tribe:
That false enfranchisement with ease is found;
Slaves are made citizens by turning round.

Dryden, Pers.

2. Privileges; franchises; immunities.

By our hold sabbath have I sworn

To have the due and forfeit of my bond:

If you deny it, let the danger light

Upon your charter, and your city's freedom. Shaks.

3. Power of enjoying franchises.

This prince first gave freedom to servants, so as to become citizens of equal privileges with the rest, which very much increased the power of the people. Swift.

4. Exemption from fate, necessity, or predetermination.

I else must change

Their nature, and revoke the high decree

Unchangeable, eternal, which ordain'd

Their freedom: they themselves ordain'd their fall.

Milton, P. L.

In every sin, by how much the more free will is in its choice, by so much is the act the more sinful; and where there is nothing to importune, urge, or provoke the will to any act, there is so much an higher and perfecter degree of freedom about that act. South.

5. Unrestraint.

I will that all the feasts and sabbaths shall be all days of immunity and freedom for the Jews in my realm. 1 Mac. x.

6. The state of being without any particular evil or inconvenience.

The freedom of their state lays them under a greater necessity of always chusing and doing the best things. Law.

7. Ease or facility in doing or showing any thing.

8. Assumed familiarity; a colloquial expression: in which sense the plural is used; as, he will not suffer any freedoms to be taken with him.

FREFO'OTED. adj. [free and foot.] Not restrained in the march.

We will fetters put upon this fear,

Which now goes too frefooted. Shaks. Hamlet.

FREEHE'ARTED.† adj. [free and heart.] Liberal; unrestrained.

A frehearted woman, and a chaste.

Homilies, Of the State of Matrimony.

Sir Roger Aston, an Englishman born, but had his breeding wholly in Scotland, and had served the king many years as his barber; an honest and frehearted man.

Sir A. Weldon, Court of K. James, p. 4.

Love must frehearted be, and voluntary;

And not inchant'd, or by fate constrain'd. Davies.

FRE'EHOLD. n. s. [free and hold.] That land or tenement which a man holdeth in fee, fee-tail, or for term of life. Freehold in deed is the real possession of lands or tenements in fee, fee-tail, or for life. Freehold in law is the right that a man has to such land or tenements before his entry or seizure. Freehold is sometimes taken in opposition to villenage. Land, in the time of the Saxons, was called either bockland, that is holden by book or writing, or folkland, that is, holden without writing. The former was held by far better conditions, and by the better sort of tenants, as noblemen and gentlemen, being such as we now call freehold. The latter was commonly in the possession of clowns, being that which we now call at the will of the lord. Cowel.

No alienation of lands holden in chief should be available, touching the freehold or inheritance thereof, but only where it were made by matter of record. Bacon, Off. of Alienation.

There is an unspeakable pleasure in calling any thing one's own: a freehold, though it be but in ice and snow, will make the owner pleased in the possession, and stout in the defence of it.

Addison, Freeholder.

My friends here are very few, and fixed to the freehold from whence nothing but death will remove them. Swift.

I should be glad to possess a freehold that could not be taken from me by any law to which I did not give consent. Swift.

FREE'HOLDER. n. s. [from freehold.] One who has a freehold.

As extortion did banish the old English freeholder, who could not live but under the law; so the law did banish the Irish lord, who could not live but by extortion. Davies.

FREELY.† adv. [from free. Sax. freolice.]

1. At liberty; without vassalage; without slavery; without dependence.

2. Without restraint; heartily; with full gust.

If my son were my husband, I would freeliter rejoice in that absence wherein he won honour, than in the embracements of his bed, where he would shew most love. Shakespeare, Coriol.

The vilest persons breathing have passed their lives freely and jocosely, without the least misgiving or suspicion about their eternal concerns, who yet at length have met with a full payment of wrath and vengeance in the other world for all their confidence and jollity in this. South Sermon, ix. 36.

3. Plentifully; lavishly.

I pledge your grace; and if you knew what pains

I have bestow'd to breed this present peace,

You would drink freely. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

4. Without scruple; without reserve.

Let such teach others who themselves excel,
And censure freely who have written well. Pope.

5. Without impediment.

To follow rather the Goths in rhyming than the Greeks in true versifying, were even to eat acorns with swine, when we may freely eat wheat-bread among men. Ascham.

The path to peace is virtue: what I show,
Thyself may freely on thyself bestow:
Fortune was never worshipp'd by the wise;
But set aloft by fools, usurps the skies.

Dryden, Juv.

6. Without necessity; without predetermination.

Freely they stood who stood, and fell who fell.

Milton, P. L.

He leaves us to chuse with the liberty of reasonable beings: they who comply with his grace, comply with it freely; and they who reject it, do also freely reject it. Rogers.

7. Frankly; liberally; without cost.

By nature all things have an equally common use: nature freely and indifferently opens the bosom of the universe to all mankind. South.

8. Spontaneously; of its own accord.

FRE'EMAN. n. s. [free and man.]

1. One not a slave; not a vassal.

Had you rather Cæsar were living, and die all slaves, than that Cæsar were dead, to live all freemen? Shakespeare.

If to break loose from the conduct of reason, and to want that restraint of examination and judgement which keeps us from chusing or doing the worse, be liberty, true liberty, mad men and fools are only the freemen. Locke.

2. One partaking of rights, privileges, or immunities.

He made us freemen of the continent, Whom nature did like captives treat before. Dryden.

What this union was is expressed in the preceding verse, by their both having been made freemen on the same day. Addison on Italy.

FREEMA'SON.* See MASON.

FREEMINDED. adj. [free and mind.] Unperplexed; without load of care.

To be freeminded, and cheerfully disposed at hours of meat, sleep, and exercise, is one of the best precepts of long lasting. Bacon.

FREENESS.† n. s. [from free. Sax. frigne.]

1. The state or quality of being free.

Besides this largeness in the will of man And winged freeness, now let's think upon His understanding. More, Song of the Soul, ii. iii. 9.

2. Openness; unreservedness; ingenuousness; candour.

The reader may pardon it, if he please, for this freeness of the confession. Dryden.

3. Generosity; liberality.

I hope it will never be said that the laity, who by the clergy are taught to be charitable, shall in their corporations exceed the clergy itself, and their sons, in freeness of giving. Sprat.

FREER.* n. s. [from free.] One who gives freedom. Sherwood.

FREESCHOOL. n. s. [free and school.] A school in which learning is given without pay.

To give a civil education to the youth of this land in the time to come, provision was made by another law, that there should be one freeschool at least erected in every diocese. Davies.

Two clergymen stood candidates for a small freeschool; a gentleman who happened to have a better understanding than his neighbours, procured the place for him who was the better scholar. Swift.

FREESPO'KEN.† adj. [free and spoken.] Accustomed to speak without reserve.

Nerva one night supped privately with some six or seven; amongst whom there was one that was a dangerous man, and began to take the like courses as Marcellus and Regulus had done: the emperor fell into discourse of the injustice and tyranny of the former time, and, by name, of the two accusers; and said, what should we do with them, if we had them now? One of them that was at supper, and was a freespoken senator, said, Marry, they should sup with us. Bacon.

These freespoken and plainhearted men, that are the eyes of their country.

Milton, Anim. Rem. Defence.
The old freespoken shepherd, or those mercenary flatterers. More against Idolatry. Pref.

FRE'ESTONE.† n. s. [free and stone.] Stone commonly used in building, and dug up in many parts of England; so called from its being of such a constitution, as to be dug up freely in any direction.

Chambers.

Freestone is so named from its being of such a constitution as to be wrought and cut freely in any direction. Woodward.

I saw her hand: she has a leathern hand, a freestone-coloured hand. Shakespeare, As you like it.
The streets are generally paved with brick or freestone, and always kept very neat.

Addison on Italy.

FREETH'NKER. v. s. [free and think.] A libertine; a contemner of religion.

Atheist is an old-fashioned word: I'm a freethinker, child. Addison.

Of what use is freedom of thought, if it will not produce freedom of action, which is the sole end, how remote soever in appearance, of all objections against Christianity? And therefore the freethinkers consider it as an edifice, wherein all the parts have such a mutual dependence on each other, that if you pull out one single nail, the whole fabric must fall to the ground.

Swift, Arg. against abolishing Christianity.

FREETH'NKING.* n. s. [free and think.] Contempt of religion; licentious ignorance.

Are we not grown drunk and giddy with vice, and vanity, and presumption, and freethinking, and extravagance of every kind?

Bp. Berkeley, Sermon. Feb. 18. 1781.

We see France and Italy overrun with the worst kind of deism. There our travelling gentry first picked it up for a rarity. And indeed, at first, without much malice. It was brought home in a cargo of new fashions; and worn, for some time, with that levity by the importers, and treated with that contempt by the rest, as suited and was due to the apishness of foreign manners; till a set of solemn blockheads, grown insolent by liberty, and malicious by unsuccessful attempts towards distinction, abused the indulgence of a free government, in reducing those vague imputes into a system. And so it was, that licentious ignorance came to be distinguished with the name of freethinking. Warburton, Sermon. in 1746.

FREET'NGUED.* adj. [free and tongue.] Accustomed to speak freely and openly.

Where ministers depend upon voluntary benevolences, if they do but, upon some just reproof, gall the conscience of a guilty hearer; or preach some truth, which disrelishes the palate of a prepossessed auditor; how he straight flies out! and not only withholds his own pay, but also withdraws the contributions of others; so as the freetongued preacher must either live by air, or be forced to change his pasture.

Bp. Hall, Cases of Conscience. D. iii. C. 7.

FREEWARREN.* n. s. [free, and warren.] A privilege of preserving and killing game. See WARREN.

Freewarren is a franchise erected for preservation of beasts and fowls of warren. Blackstone.

FREEWILL. n. s. [free and will.]

1. The power of directing our own actions without constraint by necessity or fate.

We have a power to suspend the prosecution of this or that desire: this seems to me the source of all liberty! in this seems to consist that which is improperly called freewill. Locke.

2. Voluntariness; spontaneity.

I make a decree, that all they of the people of Israel in my realm, which are minded of their own freewill to go up to Jerusalem, go with thee.

Exra, vii. 13.

FREEWOMAN. n. s. [free and woman.] A woman not enslaved.

All her ornaments are taken away of a freewoman; she is become a bondslave. 1 Mac. ii. 11.

To FREEZE. v. n. preter. froze. [frigesco, Dutch.]

1. To be congealed with cold.

The aqueous humour of the eye will not freeze, which is very admirable, seeing it hath the perspicuity and fluidity of common water.

Ray on the Creation.

The freezing of water, or the blowing of a plant, returning at equidistant periods in all parts of the earth, would as well serve men to reckon their years by as the motions of the sun. Locke.

2. To be of that degree of cold by which water is congealed.

Orpheus with his lute made trees

And mountain tops, that freeze,

Bow themselves when he did sing.

Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

Thou art all ice, thy kindness freezes.

Shakespeare, Rich. III.

Heav'n froze above severe, the clouds congeal, And through the crystal vault appear'd the standing hail. Dryden.

To FREEZE.† v. a. pret. froze, and formerly, freeted; part. frozen or froze.

1. To congeal with cold.

O'er many a frozen, many a fiery Alp.

Milton, P. L.

2. To kill by cold.

When we both lay in the field, Frozen almost to death, how did he lap me, Ev'n in his garments! Shakespeare, Rich. III.

My master and mistress are almost frozen to death. Shakespeare.

3. To chill by the loss of power or motion.

I have a faint cold fear thrills through my veins, That almost freezes up the heat of life.

Shakespeare, Rom. and Jul.

What was that snaky-headed Gorgan shield, That wise Miæra wore, unconquer'd virgin, Wherewith she frees'd her foes to congeal'd stone?

Milton, Comus.

Death came on amain, And exercis'd below his iron reign; Then upward to the seat of life he goes; Sense fled before him, what he touch'd he froze.

Dryden.

To FREIGHT.† v. a. preter. freighted; part. freught; which being now used as an adjective, freighted is adopted. [fretter, French. Dr. Johnson. Rather the Teut. vrachten. See To FRAUGHT. Icel. fracke, "rudens, à fretten, onerare."

Wachter.]

1. To load a ship or vessel of carriage with goods for transportation.

The princes

Have to the port of Athens sent their ships, Fraught with the ministers and instruments

Of cruel war. Shakespeare, Troil. and Cress. Prol.

Not is, indeed, that man less mad than these, Who freights a ship to venture on the seas; With one frail interposing plank to save

From certain death, roll'd on by ev'ry wave.

Dryden, Juv.

Freighted with iron, from my native land I steer my voyage. Pope, Odyssey.

2. To load as the burthen; to be the thing with which a vessel is freighted.

I would

Have sunk the sea within the earth, or ere It should the good ship so have swallow'd, and The freighting souls within her. Shaks. Tempest.

FREIGHT. n. s.

1. Any thing with which a ship is loaded.

He clears the deck, receives the mighty freight; The leaky vessel groans beneath the weight.

Dryden, Æn.

2. The money due for transportation of goods.

FREIGHTER.† n. s. [fretteur, French.] One who freights a vessel.

The ship, the goods, the freighters, being all free.
Sir L. Jenkins's Life and Lett. vol. 2. p. 724.

FREM.* See FRAM.

FREMMED.* adj. Pronounced frem'd. [Dan. fremmet, German and Sax. frem'd.] Strange; not related; foreign; uncommon. Craven Dial. and Brockett's N. C. Words. Inimical, as well as strange. Wilbraham's Cheshire Gloss, and Grose.

FREN.† n. s. [Dr. Johnson offers no etymology. The German fremd, Dutch, vremd, and Sax. fremis, signify an alien, a stranger, "from the preposition fiam, or fpa, from." Ray. Chaucer thus uses fremde or fremed for strange. But the contemporary commentator on Spenser considers fren as a contraction of foreign: "Frenne, a stranger. The word I thinke was first poetically put, and and afterward used in common custome of speech for forrene." Notes on the Shep. Cal. April.] A stranger. An old word wholly forgotten here; but retained in Scotland. Beattie.

But now from me his madding mind is start,
And woos the widow's daughter of the glen;
So now fair Rosalind hath bred his smart;
So now his friend is changed for a fren.

Spenser, Shep. Cal.

FRENCH.* n. s.

1. The people of France. [Franci, Lat.] From the Franks the French or Frenchemen are descended, who seem to have been so called for having chosen in some sort to live in more freedom, and liberty, than some other of the Germans did. Versagan, Rest. of Dec. Intell. ch. 1. I come to the French, a people breathing liberty, by the very derivation of their name.

Bewailing of the Peace of Germany, p. 110.

2. The language of the French.

The present French is composed of Latin, German, and the old Gaulick. Camden, Rem. The English of Chaucer has a great mixture of French in it.

Tyrwhitt on the Lang. and Versif. of Chaucer.

FRENCH.* adj. Belonging to the character or language of the French.

Liveliness and assurance are, in a peculiar manner, the qualifications of the French nation.

Addison, Spect. No. 435.

We have few Latin words among the terms of domestick use, which are not French; but many French, which are very remote from Latin.

Johnson, Pref. to his Dictionary.

FRENCH Chalk. n. s.

French chalk is an indurated clay, extremely dense, of a smooth glossy surface, and soft and unctuous to the touch; of a greyish white colour, variegated with a dusky green.

Hill.

French chalk is unctuous to the touch, as steatites is, but harder, and nearer approaching the consistence of stone.

Woodward.

FRENCH Grass.* n. s. Saint-foin; so named, as coming originally to this country from France.

FRENCH Horn.* n. s. [French, corne de chasse.] A musical instrument of the wind kind, used in hunting; and in modern times employed, with fine effect, in regular concerts.

As the road led them by degrees towards the extremity of the moor, they heard, at a distance, the sound of a French-horn; which a little revived

Tugwell's spirits, though it revived at the same time the jeopardy he had been in amongst the stag-hunters.

Graves, Spirit. Quiz. x. 7.

TO FRENCHIFY. v. a. [from French.] To infect with the manner of France; to make a coxcomb.

They misliked nothing more in king Edward the Confessor than that he was frenchified; and accounted the desire of foreign language then to be a foretoken of bringing in foreign powers, which indeed happened.

Camden, Rem.

Has he familiarly
Dislik'd your yellow starch, or said your doublet
Was not exactly frenchified?

Beaum and Fl. Qu. of Corinth.

FRENCHLIKE.* adj. [French and like.] Imitating the French fashion.

His hair Frenchlike stares on his frighted head.

Bp. Hall, Sat. iii. 7.

FRENETICK.† adj. [frenetique, French; φρενιτικός; generally therefore written phrenetick; and sometimes frentick; as, "frentike persons," Huloet's Dict.] Mad; distracted.

Sometimes he shuts up, as in frenetick or infectious diseases. Milton, Reas. of Ch. Gov. B. 2. A foreign, frentick, and unlucky proud king.

Hakewill on Providence, p. 394

He himself impotent,
By means of his frenetick malady.

Daniel, Civil Wars.

FRENZICAL.* adj. [from frenzy.] Approaching to madness.

The narrowness of her income, the coldness of her lover, the loss of her reputation, all contributed to make her miserable, and to encrease the frenzical disposition of her mind. Ortery on Swift, p. 112.

FRENZY.† n. s. [φρενις; phrenitis, Latin: whence phrenetisy, phrenetisy, phrenzy, or frenzy; Fr. frenaisie. Chaucer writes our word frenseie.] Madness; distraction of mind; alienation of understanding; any violent passion approaching to madness.

That knave, Ford, hath the finest mad devil of jealousy in him that ever governed frenzy.

Shakespeare, M. Wives of Windsor.

True fortitude is seen in great exploits,
That justice warrants, and that wisdom guides;
All else is touring frenzy and distraction.

Addison, Cato.

Why such a disposition of the body induceth sleep, another disturbs all the operations of the soul, and occasions a lethargy or frenzy; this knowledge exceeds our narrow faculties. Bentley.

FREQUENCY.† n. s. [frequency, old Fr. frequentia, Latin.]

1. Crowd; concourse; assembly.

The frequency of degree,

From high to low throughout. Shaksp. Timon.

I was encouraged with a sufficient frequency of auditors. Bp. Hall, Spec. of his Life, p. 11.

2. Repetition.

I might here have done with the frequency; but let me add this one consideration more, that often inculcation of warning necessarily implies a danger.

Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 5.

He, in full frequency bright
Of angels, thus to Gabriel smiling spake.

Milton, P. L.

FREQUENCY. n. s. [frequentia, Latin.]

1. Common occurrence; the condition of being often seen or done.

Should a miracle be indulged to one, others would think themselves equally intitled to it; and if indulged to many, it would no longer have the effect of a miracle; its force and influence would be lost by the frequency of it.

Atterbury.

2. Concourse; full assembly.

Thou cam'st ere while into the senate: who
Of such a frequency, so many friends
And kindred thou hast here, saluted thee?

B. Jonson, Catiline.

FREQUENT.† adj. [frequent, French; frequens, Latin.]

1. Often done; often seen; often occurring.

The frequenter these times are, the better.

Duty of Man.

An ancient and imperial city falls;
The streets are fill'd with frequent funerals.

Dryden, Æn.

Frequent heres shall besiege your gates.

Pope.

2. Used often to practise any thing.

The Christians of the first times were generally frequent in the practice of it.

Duty of Man.

Every man thinks he may pretend to any employment, provided he has been loud and frequent in declaring himself hearty for the government.

Swift.

3. Full of concourse.

'Tis Caesar's will to have a frequent senate.

B. Jonson, Sejanus.

The purpose of this frequent senate

Is, first, to give thanks to the gods of Rome.

Massing, Roman Actor.

A thousand demigods on golden seats,
Frequent and full.

Milton, P. L.

TO FREQUENT. v. a. [frequent, Latin; frequenter, French.] To visit often; to be much in any place; to resort often to; to haunt.

They in latter day,

Finding in it fit ports for fisher's trade,
Gan more the same frequent, and further to invade.

Spensers, F. Q.

There were synagogues for men to resort unto: our Saviour himself and the apostles frequented them.

Hooker.

This fellow here, this thy creature,

By night frequents my house. Shaksp. Timon.

At that time this land was known and frequented by the ships and vessels.

Bacon.

With tears

Watering the ground, and with our sighs the air
Frequenting, sent from hearts contrite, in sign
Of sorrow unfeign'd, and humiliation meek.

Milton, P. L.

To serve my friends, the senate I frequent;
And there what I before digested, vent.

Denh.

That he frequented the court of Augustus, and was well received in it, is most undoubted.

Dryd.

FREQU'NTABLE. adj. [from frequent.]

Conversable; accessible. A word not now used, but not inelegant.

While youth lasted in him, the exercises of that age and his humour, not yet fully discovered, made him somewhat the more frequenterable, and less dangerous.

Sidney.

FREQUENTATION.* n. s. [Fr. frequentation; Lat. frequentatio.] Resort; the act of visiting.

We are separated from other nations, to the end we be not polluted with sin by their frequentation and company.

Donne, Hist. of the Septuagint, p. 100.

These inhabitants were much more civilized, than those of the inland country, by the commerce and frequentation of other nations.

Temple, Introd. Hist. of Eng. p. 7.

FREQU'NTATIVE. adj. [frequentatif, Fr.; frequentativus, Latin.] A grammatical term applied to verbs signifying the frequent repetition of an action.

FREQU'ENTER.† n. s. [from frequent.] One who often resorts to any place.

Daily frequenters of publick prayers.

Dr. Jackson, Works, iii. 60.

Persons under bad imputations are no great frequenters of churches. Swift.

FREQUENTLY. adv. [frequentier, Latin.] Often; commonly; not rarely; not seldom: a considerable number of times; manifold times.

I could not, without much grief observe how frequently both gentlemen and ladies are at a loss for questions and answers. Swift.

FRESCO. † n. s. [Italian.]

1. Coolness; shade; duskiness, like that of the evening or morning.

Hellish sprites

Love more the fresco of the nights. Prior.

2. A picture not drawn in glaring light, but in dusk. Dr. Johnson. — But it is a painting on fresh plaster, or on a wall laid with mortar not yet dry; and, being used for alcoves and other buildings in the open air, obtained from the Italians this name of fresco.

The spaces, that lie between, are painted in fresco, by the same hand that has enriched my ceiling. Tatler, No. 179.

Here thy well-study'd marbles fix our eye;
A fading fresco here demands a sigh. Pope.

3. It has been sometimes used for any cool, refreshing liquor.

FRESH. † adj. [ƿreƿe, Saxon; fresche, old Fr. fraische, mod. Fr. frisch, Teut.]

1. Cool; not vapid with heat.

I'll cull the farthest mead for thy repast;
The choicest herbs I to thy board will bring,
And draw thy water from the freshest spring. Prior.

2. Not salt.

They keep themselves unmixed with the salt water; so that, a very great way within the sea, men may take up as fresh water as if they were near the land. Abbot, Descript. of the World.

3. New; not had before.

No borrowed bays his temples did adorn,
But to our crown he did fresh jewels bring. Dryden.

4. New; not impaired by time.

The fame of a good knight would ever live
Fresh on my memory. Beaumont and Fl. Kn. of Malta.

This second source of men, while yet but few,
And while the dread of judgment past remain
Fresh in their minds, fearing the Deity,
With some regard to what is just and right,
Shall lead their lives. Milton, P. L.

That love which first was set, will first decay;
Mine of a fresher date will longer stay. Dryden, Indian Emp.

5. In a state like that of recentness.

We will revive those times, and in our memories
Preserve and still keep fresh, like flowers in water. Denham.

With such a care

As roses from their stalks we tear,
When we would still preserve them new,
And fresh as on the bush they grew. Waller.

Thou sun, said I, fair light!
And thou enlighten'd earth, so fresh and gay!
Milton, P. L.

Think not, 'cause men flatter say,
Y' are as fresh as April, sweet as May,
Bright as the morning star,
That you are so. Carew.

6. Recent; newly come.

Amidst the spirits Palinurus pressed;
Yet fresh from life, a new admitted guest,
Dryden, Æn.

Fresh from the fact, as in the present case,
The criminals are seiz'd upon the place;

Stiff in denial, as the law appoints,
On engines they distend their tortur'd joints.

Dryden.

Like a fresh tenant of Newgate, when he has refused the payment of garnish.

Swift, Tale of a Tub.

7. Repaired from any loss or diminution.
Nor lies she long; but, as her fates ordain,
Springs up to life, and fresh to second pain;
Is sav'd to-day, to-morrow to be slain. Dryden.

8. Florid; vigorous; cheerful; unfaded; unimpaired.

This pope is decrepid, and the bell goeth for him: take order that when he is dead there be chosen a pope of fresh years, between fifty and threescore. Bacon, Holy War.

Two swains,

Fresh as the morn, and as the season fair. Pope.

9. Healthy in countenance; ruddy.

Tell me,

Hast thou beheld a fresher gentlewoman,
Such war of white and red within her cheeks?

Shakespeare.

It is no rare observation in England to see a fresh coloured lusty young man yoked to a consumptive female, and him soon after attending her to the grave. Harvey on Consumptions.

They represent to themselves a thousand poor, tall, innocent, fresh coloured young gentlemen. Addison, Spect.

10. Brisk; strong; vigorous.

He shall drink nought but brine; for I'll not shew him
Where the quick freshes are. Shaksp. Tempest.

2. A flood, or overflowing of a river.

This heavy rain will bring down the freshes. North. Grose.

They have cut new channels, and even whole rivers, with particular drains from one river to another, to carry off the great flux of waters when floods or freshes come down. Crutwell, Tour through Gr. Brit. Lincolnshire.

To FRESH.  v. a.* To refresh. One of our oldest verbs.

He thought of thilke water shene
To drinke, and fresh he wele withall. Chaucer, Rom. R. ver. 1513.

But quickly she it overpast, so soone
As she her face had wypt to fresh her blood. Spenser, F. Q. v. v. 45.

FRESH-BLOWN.  adj.* [fresh and blown.] Newly blown.

Beds of violets blue,
And fresh-blown roses wash'd in dew. Milton, L. Allegro.

To FRESHEN. v. a. [from fresh.] To make fresh.

Prelusive drops let all their moisture flow
In large effusion o'er the freshen'd world. Thomson, Spring.

To FRESHEN. v. n. To grow fresh.

A freshening breeze the magic power supply'd,
While the wing'd vessel flew along the tide. Pope, Odyssey.

FRESHET. † n. s. [from fresh.] A stream of fresh water.

Now love the freshet, and then love the sea.

Browne, Brit. Past. (1613.) ii. 3.

All fish from sea or shore,

Freshet or purling brook, of shell or fin. Milton, P. R.

FRESHFOURCE.  n. s.* [low Lat. frisca fortia.] In law, a force done within forty days.

If a man be disseised of lands or tenements, within any city or borough; or deforced from them after the death of his ancestors to whom he is heir; or after the death of his tenant for life, or in tail; he may, within forty days after his title accrued, have his remedy by an assize, or bill of fresh-force. Cowel, and Chambers.

The space of forty days hath with us divers applications, as in the assize of freshforce in cities and boroughs, &c.

Seldon, on Drayton's Polyolb. §. 17.

FRESHLY. † adv. [from fresh.]

2. Newly; in the former state renewed.

The weeds of heresy being grown unto such ripeness as that was, do, even in the very cutting down, scatter oftentimes those seeds which for a while lie unseen and buried in the earth; but afterwards freshly spring up again, no less pernicious than at the first. Hooker.

Then shall our names,
Familiar in their mouth as household words,
Be in their flowing cups freshly remember'd. Shakespeare, Hen. V.

They are now freshly in difference with him. Bacon.

3. With a healthy look; ruddily.

Looks he as freshly as he did the day he wrestled?

4. Gaily. Shakespeare. Huloet.

FRESHMAN.  n. s.* [fresh and man.] A novice; one in the rudiments of any knowledge.

The parasite, or freshman in their friendship. B. Jonson, Discoveries.

I would be a graduate, sir, no freshman. Beaumont and Fl. Fair Maid of the Inn.

See the dull freshman, just arriv'd from school,
A coxcomb ripening from a rustic fool!

The Student, i. 240.

FRESHMANSHIP.  n. s.* [from freshman.] The state of a freshman.

You have practis'd thus
Upon my freshmanship. B. Jonson, Fox.

Instead of a post, this young fencer hath set himself up one of the deepest mysteries of our profession, to practise his freshmanship upon.

Hales, Rem. p. 5.

FRESHMENT.  n. s.* [from fresh.] Refreshment. Not now in use.

To enjoy the freshment of the air and river. Cortwright's Preacher's Travels, (1611,) p. 19.

FRESHNESS. n. s. [from fresh.]

1. Newness; vigour; spirit; the contrary to vapidity.

Most odorous smell best broken or crushed;
but flowers pressed or beaten, do lose the freshness and sweetness of their odour. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

2. Freedom from diminution by time; not lessening.

For the constant freshness of it, it is such a pleasure as can never cloy or overwork the mind; for surely no man was ever weary of thinking that he had done well or virtuously. South.

3. Freedom from fatigue; newness of strength.

The Scots had the advantage both for number and freshness of men. Hayward.

4. Coolness.

There are some rooms in Italy and Spain for freshness, and gathering the winds and air in the heats of Summer; but they be but pennings of the winds, and enlarging them again, and making them reverberate in circles. Bacon.

Say, if she please, she hither may repair,
And breathe the freshness of the open air.

Dryden, Aurengzebe.

She laid her down to rest,
And to the winds expos'd her glowing breast,
To take the freshness of the morning air.

Addison on Italy.

5. Ruddiness; colour of health.

The secret venom, circling in her veins,
Works through her skin, and burst in bloating stains;

Her cheeks their freshness lose and wonted grace,
And an unusual paleness spreads her face.

Granville.

6. Freedom from saltiness.

FRESHNE'W.* adj. [fresh and new.]
Wholly unacquainted; unpractised.

This fresh-new sea-farer. Shakspeare, Pericles.

FRESHWA'TER. [A compound word of fresh and water, used as an adjective.] Raw; unskilled; unacquainted. A low term borrowed from the sailors, who stigmatise those who come first to sea as fresh-water men or novices.

The nobility, as freshwater soldiers which had never seen but some light skirmishes, in their vain bravery made light account of the Turks.

Knolles, Hist. of the Turks.

FRESHWA'TERED.* adj. [fresh and water.]
Supplied with fresh water, or perhaps newly watered.

That rocky pile thou seest, that verdant lawn
Fresh-water'd from the mountains.

Akenside, Pleas. of Imag. B. 2.

FRET.† n. s. [Of this word the etymology is very doubtful: some derive it from fretan, to eat; others from πρεπαν, to adorn; some from φρενω; Skinner more probably from fremo, or the French fretiller: perhaps it comes immediately from the Latin fretum. Dr. Johnson. — A more probable etymology perhaps, is the Saxon freoðan, or the Fr. frotter, to rub, to wear away; whence the figurative application of the word, to vex, to cause any agitation or commotion. We use to rub in the sense of to excite. Wicliffe writes frotynge for fretting. B. Jonson also uses froted for rubbed. In the first of the definitions, viz. a strait of the sea, frot, it may likewise be observed, is the Cornish word for it.]

1. A frith, or strait of the sea, where the water by confinement is always rough.

Euripus generally signifieth any strait, fret, or channel of the sea, running between two shores. Brown.

2. Any agitation of liquors by fermentation, confinement, or other cause.

Of this river the surface is covered with froth and bubbles; for it runs along upon the fret, and is still breaking against the stones that oppose its passage.

Addison on Italy.

The blood in a fever, if well governed, like wine upon the fret, dischargeth itself of heterogeneous mixtures. Derham.

3. That stop of the musical instrument which causeth or regulates the vibrations of the string.

It requireth good winding of a string before it will make any note; and in the tops of lutes, the higher they go, the less distance is between the frets. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

The harp

Had work, and rested not: the solemn pipe
And dulcimer, all organs of sweet stop,
All sounds on fret by string or golden wire,
Temper'd soft tunings, intermix'd with voice
Choral or unison. Milton, P. L.

They are fitted to answer the most variable harmony: two or three pipes to all those of a church-organ, or to all the strings and frets of a lute. Grew, Cosmolog. Sacra.

4. Work rising in protuberances.

The frets of houses, and all equal figures, please; whereas unequal figures are but deformities.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Some making garlands were —
The columbine amongst they sparingly do set
The yellow kingcup, wrought in many a curious fret. Drayton, Polyolb. S. 15.

5. Agitation of the mind; commotion of the temper; passion.

Calmness is great advantage: he that lets
Another chafe, may warm him at his fire,
Mark all his wand'rings, and enjoy his frets,
As cunning fencers suffer heat to tire. Herbert.
The incredulous Pheac, having yet
Drank but one round, reply'd in sober fret.

Tate, Juv.

You, too weak, the slightest loss to bear,
Are on the fret of passion, boil and rage.

Creech, Juv.

Yet then did Dennis rave in furious fret;
I never answer'd, I was not in debt. Pope.

6. In heraldry, a bearing composed of bars crossed and interlaced, and called the herald's true lover's knot.

To FRET.† v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To agitate violently by external impulse or action.

You may as well forbid the mountain pines
To wag their high tops, and to make a noise
When they are fretted with the gusts of heav'n.

Shakspeare.

2. To wear away by rubbing.

Drop them still upon one place,
Till they have fretted us a pair of graves
Within the earth. Shakspeare, Rich. II.

In the banks of rivers, with the washing of the water, there were divers times fretted out big pieces of gold. Abbot.

Before I ground the object metal on the pitch,
I always ground the putty on it with the concave copper, till it had done making a noise; because, if the particles of the putty were not made to stick fast in the pitch, they would, by rolling up and down, grate and fret the object metal, and fill it full of little holes. Newton, Opticks.

3. To hurt by attrition.

Antony

Is valiant and dejected; and, by starts,
His fretted fortunes give him hope and fear
Of what he has and has not. Shaks. Ant. & Cleop.

You grey lines,
That fret the clouds, are messengers of day. Shakspeare, Jul. Cæs.

7. To make angry; to vex.

The better part with Mary and with Ruth
Chosen thou hast; and they that over-ween,
And at thy growing virtues fret their spleen,
No anger find in thee, but pity and ruth.

Milton, Sonnet.

Because thou hast fretted me in all these things,
behold I will recompence thy way upon this head.

Ezek. xvi. 43.

Such an expectation, cries one, will never come to pass: therefore I'll even give it up, and go and fret myself. Collier.

Injuries from friends fret and gall more, and the memory of them is not so easily obliterated. Arbutnot, Hist. of John Bull.

To FRET.† v. n.

1. To be in commotion; to be agitated.

He guesses now, and chafes, and frets like tinsel. Beechum, and El. The Pilgrim.

No benefits whatsoever shall ever alter or allay that diabolical rancour, that frets and ferments in some hellish breasts, but that it will foam out in slander and invective. South.

Th' adjoining brook, that purls along
The vocal grove, now fretting o'er a rock,
Now scarcely moving through a reedy pool.

Thomson, Summer.

2. To be worn away; to be corroded.

Take a piece of glover's leather that is very thin, and put your gold therein, with sal armoniac, binding it close, and then hang it up: the sal armoniac will fret away, and the gold remain behind.

Peacham on Drawing.

That his courties might not unravel or fret out, he hath bound them with a strong border, and a rich fringe. Fuller, Inaug. Serni. (1643.) p. 23.

3. To make way by attrition or corrosion.

These do but indeed scrape off the extuberances, or fret into the wood, and therefore they are very seldom used to soft wood.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Resinous or unctuous bodies, and such as will flame, attract vigorously, and most thereof without frication, as good hard wax, which will convert the needle almost as actively as the loadstone.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

FRI'CTION. n. s. [friction, Fr. frictio, from frico, Latin.]

1. The act of rubbing two bodies together.

Do not all bodies which abound with terrestrial parts, and especially with sulphureous ones, emit light as often as those parts are sufficiently agitated, whether the agitation be made by heat, friction, percussion, putrefaction, or by any vital motion?

Newton, Opticks.

2. The resistance in machines caused by the motion of one body upon another.

3. Medical rubbing with the fleshbrush or cloths.

Frictions make the parts more fleshy and full, as we see both in men and in the currying of horses; for that they draw a greater quantity of spirits to the parts.

Bacon.

FRI'DAY. n. s. [from frige-dæg, Saxon.] The sixth day of the week, so named of Freya, a Saxon deity.

An' she were not kin to me, she would be as fair on Friday as Helen is on Sunday.

Shakespeare, Troil. and Cress.

For Venus, like her day, will change her cheer, And seldom shall we see a Friday clear.

Dryden.

To FRIDGE.* v. n. [Sax. frucian, to dance. To move quickly.]

The little notes or atoms that fridge and play in the beams of the sun.

Hallywell, Melamprom. (1681,) p. 3.

To FRIDGE. v. a. [frico, Lat.] To fret, or fray; to rub to pieces. A northern word. Grose, Wilbraham, and Craven Dialect.

FRI'DSTOLE. n. s. A sanctuary; the seat of peace. See FRED.

FRIEND. n. s. [friend, Dutch; freond, Saxon; from freon, to love; so the Goth. frijons, a friend, frijan, to love.] This word, with its derivatives, is pronounced friend, friendly: the i totally neglected.

1. One joined to another in mutual benevolence and intimacy: opposed to foe or enemy.

Friends of my soul, you twain
Rule in this realm, and the god'd state sustain.

Some man is a friend for his own occasion,
and will not abide in the day of thy trouble.

God's benison go with you, and with those
That would make good of bad, and friends of foes.

Wonder not to see this soul extend
The bounds, and seek some other self, a friend.

2. One without hostile intentions.

Who comes so fast in silence of the night?
— A friend.
— What friend? your name?

3. One reconciled to another: this is put by the custom of the language somewhat irregular in the plural number.

In state of health thou say'st, and thou say'st free.
My son came then into my mind; and yet my mind
Was then scarce friends with him.

4. An attendant; or companion.

The king ordains their entrance, and ascends
His regal seat, surrounded by his friends.
I am friends with all the world, but thy base malice.
Bid her but send me hers, and we are friends.

5. Favourer; one propitious.

Aurora riding upon Pegasus, sheweth her swiftness, and how she is a friend to poetry and all ingenious inventions.

6. A familiar compellation.

Friend, how camest thou in hither?
What supports me, do'st thou ask?
The conscience, friend, I have lost mine eyes o'er-ply'd
In liberty's defence.

7. Formerly a cant expression for a paramour of either sex.

Lady, will you walk about with your friend?
Never come in visor to my friend,
Nor woo in rhyme.

8. A FRIEND in Court. This is an old expression for one who is supposed to possess sufficient interest to serve another.

Friend in courtie aie better is
Than peny is in purse, certis.

9. A FRIEND in Court. This is an old expression for one who is supposed to possess sufficient interest to serve another.

Friend in courtie aie better is
Than peny is in purse, certis.

A friend i' the court is better than a penny in purse.
I tell thee, parson, if I get her, reckon
Thou hast a friend in court; and shalt command
A thousand pound, &c.

10. FRIEND† v. a. [from the noun.] To favour; to befriend; to countenance; to support.

So Fortune friends the bold.
I know that we shall have him well to friend.

When vice makes mercy, mercy's so extended,
That, for the fault's love, is th' offender *friend*ed.

If ever fortune friend us with a barque,
Largely supply us with all provision.

*FRIEND*ED, adj. Well disposed; inclined to love.

Not *friend*ed by his wish to your high person,
His will is most malignant, and it stretches
Beyond you to your friends.

*FRIEND*LESS† adj. [Sax. pfreonblear.]

1. Wanting friends; wanting support; without countenance; destitute; forlorn.

Alas! I am a woman, friendless, hopeless.
Woe to him that is alone, is verified upon none
so much as upon the friendless person,
To some new clime, or to thy native sky,
Oh friendless and forsaken virtue fly.

To what new clime, what distant sky,
Forsaken, friendless, will ye fly?

2. FRIENDLESS Man. The Saxon word for him whom we call an outlaw, because he was, upon his exclusion from the king's peace and protection, denied all help of friends.

A man who could not find the security of some tiding or friborough for his behaviour, was, upon account of this universal desertion, called Friendless man.

*FRIEND*LIKE,* adj. [friend and like. Sax. pfreonblíc.] Having the disposition of a friend.

But soon my soul had gathered up her powers,
Which in this need might, friendlike, give her aid.

*FRIEND*LINES.† n. s. [from friendly.]

1. A disposition to friendship.

Such a liking and friendliness as hath brought forth the effects.
They love discreetly,
And place their friendliness upon desert.

2. Exertion of benevolence.

Let all the intervals be employed in prayers, charity, friendliness and neighbourhood, and means of spiritual and corporal health.

*FRIEND*LY.† adj. [from friend. Saxon, pfreonblíc.]

1. Having the temper and disposition of a friend; kind; favourable; benevolent.

They gave them thanks, desiring them to be friendly still unto them.
Thou to mankind
Be good, and friendly still, and oft return!

How art thou

To me so friendly grown above the rest
Of brutal kind?
Let the Nassau-star in rising majesty appear,
And guide the prosperous mariner
With everlasting beams of friendly light.

2. Disposed to union; amicable.

Like friendly colours found our hearts unite,
And each from each contract new strength and light.

3. Salutary; homogeneal.

Not that Nepenthe, which the wife of Thone
In Egypt gave to Jove-born Helena,
Is of such power to stir up joy as this,
To life so friendly, or so cool to thirst.

4. Favourable; convenient.

On the first friendly bank he throws him down,
Or rests his head upon a rock till morn.

*FRIEND*LY.† adv. [Sax. pfreonblíce.]

1. In the manner of friends; with appearance of kindness; amicably.

Thou hast spoken friendly unto thine hand-maid.

Here between the armies,
Let's drink together friendly, and embrace;
That all their eyes may bear those tokens home
Of our restored love and amity.

I urg'd him gently,
Friendly, and privately, to grant a partage
Of this estate to her who owns it all.

2. Concurrently; in union.

In whom all graces that can perfect beauty,
Are friendly met.

*FRIEND*SHIP.† n. s. [Sax. pfreonbyrpe.]

1. The state of minds united by mutual benevolence; amity.

There is little friendship in the world, and least of all between equals, which was wont to be magnified: that that is, is between superiour and inferiour, whose fortunes may comprehend the one the other.

He lived rather in a fair intelligence than any friendship with the favourites.

2. Highest degree of intimacy.

My sons, let your unseemly discord cease,
If not in friendship, live at least in peace.

3. Favour; personal kindness.

His friendships, still to few confin'd,
Were always of the middling kind.
Raw captains are usually sent only preferred by friendship, and not chosen by sufficiency.

4. Assistance; help.

Gracious, my lord, hard-by here is a hovel:
Some friendship will it lend you 'gainst the tempest;

5. Conformity; affinity; correspondence; aptness to unite.

We know those colours which have a friendship with each other, and those which are incompatible, in mixing together those colours of which we would make trial.

FRIEZE. n. s. [drap de frise, Fr.] A coarse warm cloth, made perhaps first in Friesland.

If all the world
Should in a pet of temperance feed on pulse, Drink the clear stream, and nothing warm but frizee,
The All-giver would be unthank'd.

The captive Germans of gigantic size,
Are rank'd in order, and are clad in frizee.

He could no more live without his frizee coat than without his skin.

See how the double nation lies,
Like a rich coat with skirts of frizee;
As if a man, in making posies,
Should bundle thistles up with roses.

FRIEZE.† n. s. [Fr. frize; probably from

FRIEZE. } the Lat. phrygio, an em-broiderer.] A large flat member which separates the architrave from the cor-nicé; of which there are as many kinds as there are orders of columns.

Buttress, nor coigne of vantage, but this bird
Hath made his pendant-bed, and procreant cradle.

Nor did there want
Cornice or frizee with bossy sculptures grav'n;
The roof was fretted gold.

Polydore designed admirably well, as to the practical part, having a particular genius for friezes.
FRIEZED.† adj. [from frieze. Fr. frisé.] Shagged or napped with frieze; as, "garments frysed only on the one side."

Huioet.
FRIEZELIKE. adj. [frieze and like.] Resembling a frieze.

I have seen the figure of Thalia, the comick muse, sometimes with an entire headpiece and a little frieze-like tower, running round the edges of the face, and sometimes with a mask for the face only.
Addison on Italy.

FRI'GAT. n. s. [frigate, French; fregata, Italian.]

1. A small ship. Ships under fifty guns are generally termed frigates.

The treasure they fought for was, in their view, embezzled in certain frigats. Raleigh, Apology.
 On high rais'd decks the haughty Belgians ride,
 Beneath whose shades our humble frigats go.

Dryden.

2. Any small vessel on the water.

Behold the water work and play
 About her little frigate, therein making way

Spenser, F. Q.

FRIGEFAC'TION. n. s. [frigus and facio, Lat.] The act of making cold.

To FRIGHT. v. a. [p[ri]htan, Sax.] To terrify; to disturb with fear; to shock with fear; to daunt; to dismay. This was in the old authors more frequently written affright, as it is always found in the Scripture.

The herds.

Were strongly clam'rous in the frighted fields.

Shaksp. Hen. IV.

Such a numerous host
 Fle'd not in silence through the frighted deep,
 With ruin upon ruin, rout on rout,
 Confusion worse confounded.

Milton, P. L.

Cherubick watch, and of a sword the flame
 Wide-waving, all approach far off to fright,
 And guard all passage to the tree of life.

Milton, P. L.

Nor exile or danger can fright a brave spirit,
 With innocence guarded,
 With virtue rewarded.

I make of my sufferings a merit.

Dryden, Albion and Alb.

The mind frights itself with any thing reflected on in gross, and at a distance: things thus offered to the mind, carry the shew of nothing but difficulty.

Locke.

Whence glaring oft with many a broaden'd orb,
 He frights the nations.

Thomson, Autumn.

FRIGHT. n. s. [from the verb.] A sudden terrour.

You, if your goodness does not plead my cause,
 May think I broke all hospitable laws,
 To bear you from your palace-yard by might,
 And put your noble person in a fright.

Dryden.

To FRIGHTEN. v. a. To terrify; to shock with dread.

The rugged bear's, or spotted lynx's brood,
Frighten the valleys and infest the wood.

Prior.

FRIGHTFUL. adj. [from fright.]

1. Terrible; dreadful; full of terrour.

Tetchy and wayward was thy infancy,
 Thy schooldays frightful, despicable, wild, and furious.

Shaksppeare.

 This frightful passage o'er the Stygian lake.

Dryden, En.

2. A cant word among women for any thing unpleasant.

FRIGHTFULLY. adv. [from frightful.]

1. Dreadfully; horribly.

This will make a prodigious mass of water, and looks frightfully to the imagination; 'tis huge and great.

Burnet.

2. Disagreeably; not beautifully. A woman's word.

Then to her glass; and Betty, pray,

Don't I look frightfully to-day?

Swift.

FRIGHTFULNESS.† n. s. [from frightful.] The power of impressing terrour.

All this serveth chiefly to cover the frightfulness of mortality. Nelson, Life of Bp. Bull. p. 5.

FRIGID.† adj. [frigidus, Lat.]

1. Cold; wanting warmth. In this sense it is seldom used but in science.

In the torrid zone the heat would have been intolerable, and in the frigid zones the cold would have destroyed both animals and vegetables.

Cheyne, Phil. Principles.

2. Wanting warmth of affection.

3. Impotent; without warmth of body.

4. Dull; without fire of fancy.

If one considers with how great affectation they utter their frigid conceits, commiseration immediately changes itself into contempt.

Tatler, No. 184.

If justice Phillip's costive head

Some frigid rhymes disbursts,

They shall like Persian tales be read,

And glad both babes and nurses.

Swift.

FRIGIDITY. n. s. [frigiditas, Lat.]

1. Coldness; want of warmth.

2. Dulness; want of intellectual fire.

Driving at these as at the highest elegancies, which are but the frigidities of wit.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

Of the two extremes, one would sooner pardon phrenzy than frigidly.

Pope.

3. Want of corporeal warmth.

The boiling blood of youth hinders that serenity which is necessary to severe intenseness; and the frigidity of decrepit age is as much its enemy, by reason of its dulling moisture.

Glanville, Scyphis.

4. Coldness of affection.

FRIGIDLY.† adv. [from frigid.] Coldly; dully; without affection.

The life of Erasmus, which deserves the finest pen, has been wretchedly and frigidly written by Knight; although, indeed, the materials he has collected are curious and useful.

Dr. Warton, Essay on Pope.

FRIGIDNESS. n. s. [from frigid.] Coldness; dulness; want of affection.

FRIGORIFICK.† adj. [frigorificus, frigus, and facio, Lat.] Causing cold. A word used in science, Dr. Johnson says; and, it may be added, well applied by himself to general use.

Frigorifick atoms or particles mean those nitrous salts which float in the air in cold weather, and occasion freezing.

Quincy.

The hand of death is 'upon me; a frigorifick torpor encroaches upon my veins.

Johnson, Rambler, No. 120.

The fatal influence of frigorifick wisdom.

Johnson, Rambler, No. 129.

To FRILL. v. n. [friller, French.] To quake or shiver with cold. Used of a hawk; as, the hawk frills.

Dict.

FRIM.* adj. [Saxon, p[ri]em, strong.]

1. Flourishing; luxuriant. It is used in the north of England for thriving; as a frim tree.

My plenteous bosom strew'd

With all abundant sweets; my frim and lusty flank

Her bravery then displays, with meadows hugely rank.

Drayton, Polyolb. S. 13.

2. Brittle; tender; a corruption of fram. See FRAM.

FRINGE.† n. s. [friggio, Italian; frange, French.]

1. Ornamental appendage added to dress or furniture. It is in conversation used of loose and separate threads.

Those offices and dignities were but the facings or fringes of his greatness.

Watson.

The golden fringe ev'n set the ground on flame,
 And drew a precious trail.

Dryden, Flower and Leaf.

The shadows of all bodies, in this light, were bordered with three parallel fringes, or bands of coloured light, whereof that which was contiguous to the shadow was broadest and most luminous; and that which was remotest from it was narrowest, and so faint as not easily to be visible.

Newton, Opt.

2. The edge; margin; extremity.

The fringe or confines of hell.

Mountagu, App. to Cæs. p. 237.

The sun — gilds the fringes of a cloud.

Bp. Taylor, Holy Dying, § iii. ch. 1.

To FRINGE. v. a. [from the noun.] To adorn with fringes; to decorate with ornamental appendages.

Either side of the bank, fringed with most beautiful trees, resisted the sun's darts.

Sidney.

Of silver wings he took a shining pair,
Fringed with gold.

Fairfax.

Here, by the sacred bramble ting'd,

My petticoat is doubly fring'd.

Swift.

FRINGEMAKER.* n. s. [fringe and maker.]

A manufacturer of fringe.

A player, hired for the purpose by the corporation of fringemakers, acted his part in a new comedy, all covered with silver fringe.

Swift, Tale of a Tub, § 2.

FRINGY.* adj. [from fringe.] Adorned with fringes.

Lord of my time, my devious path I bend

Through fringy woodland, or smooth-shaven lawn.

Shenstone, Eleg. 21.

FRIPPER.* n. s. [Fr. frippier.] A better word than fripperer, which Dr. Johnson gives us solely on his own authority. Both, however, are in Sherwood's old dictionary, where they are termed fripier and friperer.] A dealer in old things; a broker.

This little island of England, notwithstanding the continual waste and havoc that hath been made, since the days of king Henry the eighth, by gloves, bookbinders, fripplers, and others; or the continual purloining and conveying of old books beyond the seas; hath at this day remaining, if they were all brought together, more Latin manuscripts than any country else that is of a far greater extent.

James, on the Corrupt of Script. Councils, &c. (1688.) p. 530.

FRIPPERER.† n. s. [from frippier, French.]

One who deals in old things vamped up.

Sherwood.

FRIPPERY.† n. s. [fripperie, French; fripperia, Ital.]

1. The place where old clothes are sold.

We know what belongs to a frippery. Shaksp.
 Luvana is a frippery of bankrupts, who fly thither from Druina to play their after-game.

Howell, Voc. For.

2. Old clothes; cast dresses; tattered rags.

Poor poet ape, that would be thought our chief,
Whose works are e'en the frillery of wit;
From brocade is become so bold a thief,
As we, the robb'd, leave rage, and pity it.

B. Jonson.
The fighting-place now seaman's rags supply,
And all the tackling is a frillery.

Donne, Poems, p. 144.
Ragfair is a place near the Tower of London,
where old clothes and frillery are sold. Pope.

3. Trumpery; trifles.

You will gather more advantage by listening to them, than from all the nonsense and frillery
of your own sex.

Swift.
They tell me it [the Philosophick Dictionary] is frillery, and blasphemy, and wit.

Gray, Lett. to Mason.

FRIPPERY.* adj. Trifling; contemptible.

My master's bo-peep with me,
With his sly popping in and out again,
Argued a frillery and frillery cause.

Beaumont and Fl. The Chances.
That city, though the capital of a duchy, made so frillery an appearance, that instead of spending some days there, as had been intended, we only dined, and went on to Parma.

Gray, Lett. to his Mother.

FRISEUR. n. s. [French.] A hair-dresser. See To FRIZZ.

Who now can pedant rules endure?

Go, boy, and bid the best friseur
At six precise be w' me:

My hair in wires exact and nice, &c.

Poems by Gent. of Oxford, 1757, p. 19.

To curl the grove, &c. was surely to derogate from the dignity of the high office and character of his genius, who is degraded to a friseur.

Watson, Notes on Milton.

To FRISK.† v. n. frizzare, Italian. Dr. Johnson.—I should rather pronounce the old Fr. frisque, lively, brisk, jolly, as the parent of our word. V. Cotgrave and Roquefort in V. FRISQUE.]

1. To leap; to skip.

Put water into a glass, and wet your finger, and draw it round about the lip of the glass, pressing it somewhat hard; and after drawing it some few times about, it will make the water frisk and sprinkle up in a fine dew. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

The fish fell frisking in the net. L'Estrange.

Whether every one hath experimented this troublesome intrusion of some frisking ideas, which thus importune the understanding, and hinder it from being better employed, I know not. Locke.

2. To dance in frolick or gaiety.

We are as twinn'd lambs, that did frisk i' the sun,

And bleat the one at the other: what we chang'd,
Was innocence for innocence; we knew not
The doctrine of ill-doing. Shakespeare, Wint. Tale.

About them frisking play'd
All beasts of th' earth. Milton, P. L.

A wanton heifer frisk'd up and down in a meadow, at ease and pleasure. L'Estrange.

Watch the quick motions of the frisking tail,
Then serve their fury with the rushing mail.

Dryden.
So Bacchus through the conquer'd Indies rode,
And beasts in gambols frisk'd before their honest
god. Dryden.

Off to the mountains airy tops advanc'd,
The frisking satyrs on the summits danc'd.

Addison.
Those merry blades,
That frisk it under Pindus' shades. Prior.

Peg faints at the sound of an organ, and yet will dance and frisk at the noise of a bagpipe.

Arbutnot, Hist. of John Bull.
Sly hunters thus, in Borneo's isle,
To catch a monkey by a wile,
The mimic animal amuse;

They place before him gloves and shoes;

Which when the brute puts aukward on,

All his agility is gone:

In vain to frisk or climb he tries;

The huntsmen seize the grinning prize. Swift.

FRISK.* adj. [French, frisque.] Lively;
jolly; blithe. Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

Fain would she seem all frisk and frolick still.

Bp. Hall, Sat. vi. 6.

FRISK.† n. s. A frolick; a fit of wanton
gaiety.

Tumbler-like frisks and motions.

Florio, Tr. of Montaigne, (1613,) p. 228.

The frisks and levatoes of our dancing blood.

Feltham, Res. i. 13.

FRISKAL.* n. s. [from frisk.] A leap;
a caper.

She fetched a friscoll, when she was dawdling in a tavern.

Extr. in Fulke's Ansv. to

P. Frariner, (1580,) p. 12.

Ixon, — turned dancer, does nothing but cut caperols, fetch friskals, and leads levatoes with the Lamiae. B. Jonson, Masques.

FRISKER. n. s. [from frisk.] A wanton;
one not constant or settled.

Now I will wear this, and now I will wear that;

Now I will wear I cannot tell what:

All new fashions be pleasant to me;

Now I am a frisker, all men on me look;

What should I do but set cock on the hoop?

Camden.

FRISKET.* n. s. A part of a printing-press; a frame of iron, very thin, covered with parchment or paper, cut in the necessary places, that the sheet, which is between the great tympan and frisket, may receive the ink, and that nothing may hurt the margins.

The frisket, thy preventing grace,

Keeps us from many a sullied face.

Poem at the end of Watson's Hist. of Printing.

FRISKFUL.* adj. [from frisk and full.] Full of gaiety.

His sportive lambs,

This way and that convolv'd, in friskful glee

Their frolics play. Thomson, Spring.

FRISKINESS. n. s. [from frisk.] Gaiety;
liveliness. A low word.

FRISKING.* n. s. [from frisk.] Frolick-some dancing; wild gaiety.

Other objects, that are

Inserted 'tween her mind and eye, become the pranks

And friskings of her madness.

Beaumont, and Fl. Two Nob. Kinsmen.

As if religion were nothing else but a dancing up and down upon the same piece of ground, and making several motions and friskings on it.

Cudworth, Serm. p. 58.

FRISKY. adj. [from frisque, French; from frisk.]
Gay; airy. A low word.

To FRISKLE.* See To FRIZZLE.

FRIT. n. s. [among chymists.] Ashes or salt baked or fried together with sand.

Dict.

FRITH. n. s. [from fretum, Latin.]

1. A strait of the sea where the water being confined is rough.

What desp'rate madman then would venture o'er
The frith, or haul his cables from the shore?

Dryden, Virg.

Batavian fleets

Defraud us of the glittering finny swarms

That heave our friths and crowd upon our shores.

Thomson.

2. A kind of net. I know not whether this sense be now retained.

The Wear is a frith, reaching through the Ose, from the land to low water mark, and having in it a bunt or cod with an eye-book; where the fish entering, upon their coming back with the ebb, are stoppt from issuing out again. Carew.

FRITH.* n. s. [Welsh, ffrith, ffrid, a plantation, a small field taken out of a common, a tract enclosed from the mountains, and sometimes a woodland; Gael.
frith, a wild mountainous place, a forest.]

1. A woody place; a forest.

Overholt and heath, as thorough frith and fell.

Drayton, Polyolb. S. 11.

The Sylvans that about the neighbouring woods
did dwell,

Both in the tufty frith and in the mossy fell.

Drayton, Polyolb. S. 17.

2. A small field taken out of a common.

There is a market town in Derbyshire called Chapel in the Frith, which is situated in a valley amongst such enclosures. Hist. Guedir Fam. p. 131.

Thus stode I in the frithly forest of Galtres.

Skelton, Poems, p. 9.

FRITILLARY. n. s. [from fritillaire, French.]

A plant. Miller.

FRITINANCY. n. s. [from fritinnio, Latin.]

The scream of an insect, as the cricket or cicada.

The note or fritinancy thereof is far more shrill than that of the locust, and its life short.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

FRITTER. n. s. [from friture, French.]

1. A small piece cut to be fried.

Maid, fritters and pancakes ynow see ye make;
Let Slut have one pancake for company sake.

Tusser.

2. A fragment; a small piece.

Sense and putter! have I lived to stand in the taunt of one that makes fritters of English.

Shakespeare, Merr. W. of Windsor.

If you strike a solid body that is brittle, as glass or sugar, it breaketh not only where the immediate force is, but breaketh all about into shivers and fritters; the motion, upon the pressure, searching all ways, and breaking where it findeth the body weakest. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

The ancient errand knights

Won all their ladies hearts in fights;

And cut whole giants into fritters,

To put them into amorous twitters. Hudibras.

3. A cheesecake; a wig. Ainsworth.

To FRITTER. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To cut meat into small pieces to be fried.

2. To break into small particles or fragments.

Joy to great chaos! let division reign!

My racks and tortures soon shall drive them hence,
Break all their nerves, and fritter all their sense.

Pope, Dunciad.

How prologues into prefaces decay,

And these to notes are fritter'd quite away.

Pope, Dunciad.

FRIVO'LITY.* n. s. [Fr. frivoleté.] Trifling-ness. Both the French and English words are modern.

FROLICK.† adj. [vrolick, Dutch. Dr. Johnson.—The word is originally, perhaps, from the Goth. fro, recreation; whence the German frolh, glad, and frolhlich, full of gaiety; Danish, fro, the same; and the Sax. preo, whence preolche, in a free or unrestrained manner. Frollick is merely fro, i. e. free or gay, with the adverbial termination like or ly. Free and frollick are combined in one of the prose-examples which I add.] Gay; full of levity; full of pranks.

We fairies, that do run

By the triple Hecate's team,

From the presence of the sun,

Following darkness like a dream,

Now are frollick. Shakespeare, Mids. N. Dream.

Whether, as some sages sing,

The frollick wind that breathes the Spring,

Zephyr with Aurora playing,

As he met her once a Maying;

There on beds of violets blue,

And fresh blown-roses wash'd in dew,

Fill'd her with thee a daughter fair,
So buxom, blithe, and debonaire. Milton, L' Allegro.
Who ripe, and frollick of his full-grown age,
Roving the Celtic and Iberian fields,
At last betakes him to this ominous wood.

Deut. vi. 8.

To the forehead frontlets were applied, to restrain and intercept the influx. Wisem. Surgery.

FRONTROOM. n. s. [from front and room.] An apartment in the forepart of the house.

If your shop stands in an eminent street, the frontrooms are commonly more airy than the back-rooms; and it will be inconvenient to make the frontroom shallow. Mazon.

FRO'PISH.* adj. [of uncertain etymology.] Peevish; froward.

His enemies — had still the same power, and the same malice, and a froppish kind of insolence, that delighted to deprive him of any thing that pleased him, and manifestly pleased itself in vexing him. Ld. Clarendon, Life, iii. 968.

FRORE.† part. adj. [bevoren, Dutch, frozen.] Frozen. This word is not used since the time of Milton, Dr. Johnson says. He had overlooked Philips; and his contemporary, T. Warton, has somewhere used it.

The parching air
Burns frore, and cold performs th' effect of fire. Milton, P. L.

When the aged year
Inclines, and Boreas' spirit blusters frore, Beware the inclement heavens. Philips, Cyder, B. 2.

FRORNE. part. adj. [bevoren, frozen, Dutch.] Frozen; congealed with cold. Obsolete.

My heartblood is well nigh frorne I feel,
And my galage grown fast to my heel. Spenser, Shep. Cal.

FRO'RY.* adj. [from frore.]

1. Frozen.
Her up betwixt his rugged hands he rear'd,
And with his frory lips full softly kist. Spenser, F. Q. iii. viii. 35.

2. Covered with a froth resembling hoar frost.

She used with tender hand
The foaming steed with frory bit to steer. Fairfax, Tuss. ii. 40.

FROST.† n. s. [froste, Saxon; and Dr. Johnson might have added that this word is in most of the northern languages; as frost, Germ. Dan. Sw. and Icel. vrost, Dutch; probably from the Lat. frigus, and that from the Gr. κρυός, cold, ice, the κ being changed into f.]

1. The last effect of cold; the power or act of congelation.

This is the state of man: to-day he puts forth
The tender leaves of hopes, to-morrow blossoms,
And bears his blushing honours thick upon him;
The third day comes a frost, a killing frost,
And when he thinks, good easy man, full surely
His greatness is a ripening, nips his root,
And then he falls. Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

When the frost seizes upon wine, only the more waterish parts are congealed; there is a mighty spirit which can retreat into itself, and within its own compass lie secure from the freezing impression. South.

2. The appearance of plants and trees sparkling with congelation of dew.

Behold the groves that shine with silver frost,
Their beauty wither'd, and their verdure lost. Pope, Winter.

FRO'SBITTEN. adj. [frost and bitten.]
Nipped or withered by the frost.

The leaves are too much frostbitten. Mortimer.

FRO'STED. adj. [from frost.] Laid on in inequalities like those of the hoar frost upon plants.

The rich brocaded silk unfold,
Where rising flow'rs grow stiff with frosted gold. Gay.

FRO'STILY. adv. [from frosty.]

1. With frost; with excessive cold.

2. Without warmth of affection.

Courtling, I rather thou should'st utterly Dispraise my work, than praise it frostily. B. Jonson.

FRO'STINESS. n. s. [from frosty.] Cold;
freezing cold.

FRO'STNAIL. n. s. [frost and nail.] A nail with a prominent head driven into the horse's shoes, that it may pierce the ice.

The claws are straight only to take hold, for better progression; as a horse that is shod with frostnails. Grew, Cosmol. Sacra.

FRO'STWORK.† n. s. [frost and work.]
Work in which the substance is laid on with inequalities, like the dew congealed upon shrubs.

By nature shap'd to various figures, those
The fruitful rane, and these the hail compose;
The snowy fleece and curious frostwork these,
Produce the dew, and those the gentle breeze. Blackmore.

No sooner did the warm aspect of good fortune shine out again, but all those exalted ideas of virtue and honour, raised, like a beautiful kind of frost-work, in the cold season of adversity, dissolved and disappeared. Warburton on Prodigies, p. 17.

FRO'STY.† adj. [Sax. frostig.]

1. Having the power of congelation; excessive cold.

For all his blood in Rome's great quarrel shed,
For all the frosty nights that I have watch'd,
Be pitiful to my condemned sons. Titus Andron.
The air, if very cold, irritateth the flame, and maketh it burn more fiercely; as fire scorseth in frosty weather. Bacon.

A gnat, half starved with cold and hunger,
went out one frosty morning to a bee-hive. L'Estrange.

2. Chill in affection; without warmth of kindness or courage.

What a frosty spirited rogue is this?
Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

3. Hoary; grey-haired; resembling frost.

Where is loyalty?
If it be banish'd from the frosty head,
Where shall it find a harbour in the earth?
Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

FROTH.† n. s. [frae, Danish and Scottish. Dr. Johnson. — The Su. fra is also spume. These northern words correspond with the Gr. ἀφρός, foam, spray.]

1. Spume; foam; the bubbles caused in liquors by agitation.

His hideous tail then hurled he about,
And therewith all enrap the nimble thighs
Of his froth foamy steed. Spenser, F. Q.

When wind expieth from under the sea, as it causeth some resounding of the water, so it causeth some light motions of bubbles, and white circles of froth. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Surging waves against a solid rock,
Though all at shivers dash'd, th' assault renew;
Vain batt'ry, and in froth or bubbles end. Milton, P. R.

The useless froth swims on the surface, but the pearl lies covered with a mass of waters. Glanville.

The scatter'd ocean flies;
Black sands, discolour'd froth, and mingled mud arise. Dryden.

They were the froth my raging folly mov'd
When it boil'd up; I knew not then I lov'd,
Yet then lov'd most. Dryden, Aurengzebe.

If now the colours of natural bodies are to be mingled, let water, a little thickened with soap, be agitated to raise a froth: and after that froth has stood a little, there will appear, to one that shall view it intently, various colours every where in the surfaces of the bubbles; but to one that shall go so far off that he cannot distinguish the colours from one another, the whole froth will grow white with a perfect whiteness. Newton.

A painter, having finished the picture of a horse, excepting the loose froth about his mouth and his bridle: and after many unsuccessful essays, despairing to do that to his satisfaction, in a great rage threw a sponge at it, all besmeared with the colours, which fortunately hitting upon the right place, by one bold stroke of chance most exactly supplied the want of skill in the artist. Bentley, Serm.

2. Any empty or senseless show of wit or eloquence.

3. Any thing not hard, solid, or substantial.

Who eateth his veal, pig, and lamb, being frothy,
Shall twice in a week go to bed without broth. Tusser.

TO FROTH. v. n. [from the noun.] To foam; to throw out spume; to generate spume.

He frets within, froths treason at his mouth,
And churns it through his teeth. Dryden, Don Sebastian.

Excess muddies the best wit, and only makes it flutter and froth high. Grew.

TO FROTH.* v. a. To make to froth; as to froth beer, i. e. to make it rise on the top.

Fill me a thousand pots, and froth 'em, froth 'em.
Beaumont and Fl. The Pilgrim.

FRO'THILY.† adv. [from frothy.]

1. With foam; with spume. Sherwood.

2. In an empty, trifling manner.

FRO'THINESS.* n. s. [from frothy.] Emptiness; triflingness.

The vanity of his conversation, and the profaneness and frothiness of his discourse. South, Serm. viii. 264.

It would, doubtless, be as much more delightful as beneficial, if, when we meet, we were accustomed, instead of censures and reflections, news and impertinence, or frothiness and lightness, to discourse of some worthy and noble subject, becoming the genius and hope of a Christian. Lucas, Serm. on Prov. xiii. 20.

FRO'THY. adj. [from froth.]

1. Full of foam, froth, or spume.

The sap of trees is of different natures; some watery and clear, as vines, beeches, pears; some thick, as apples; some gummy, as cherries; and some frothy, as elms. Bacon.

Behold a frothy substance rise;
Be cautious, or your bottle flies. Swift.

2. Soft; not solid; wasting.
Their bodies are so solid and hard as you need not fear that bathing should make them frothy. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

3. Vain; empty; trifling.

What's a voluptuous dinner, and the frothy vanity of discourse that commonly attends these pompous entertainments? What is it but a mortification to a man of sense and virtue? L'Estr.

Though the principles of religion were never so clear and evident, yet they may be made ridiculous by vain and frothy men; as the gravest and wisest person in the world may be abused by being put in a fool's coat. Tillotson.

FROUNCE. n. s. A word used by falconers for a distemper, in which white spittle gathers about the hawk's bill. Skinner.

TO FROUNCE.† v. a. [Fr. froncer, or fronser, "to plait, to fold, to wrinkle," Cotgrave; fronzen, Teut.] To frizzle or curl the hair about the face. This word was at first probably used in contempt.

Some frounce their curled hair in courtly guise,
Some prank their ruffs, and others timely dight
Their gay attire. Spenser, F. Q.

Some warlike sign must be used; either a slovenly buskin, or an overstrung frounced head.
Ascham, Schoolmaster.

Thus, Night, oft see me in thy pale career,
Till light suited Morn appear;
Not trick'd and frounc'd as she was wont,
With the Attick boy to hunt. Milton, Il Pens.

FROUNCE.* n. s. [from the verb.] A wrinkle, a plait; and thence contemptuously, a fringe or curl, or some ornament of dress. Bullokar notices the first meaning. See also FROUNCELESS.
What! shall I leave my state to pins and poking-sticks,
To farthingales and frounces?
Beaumont and Fl. Mons. Thomas.

FRO'UNCELESS.* adj. [frounce and less.] without wrinkle. Obsolete.
Her forehead frouncles all plain.
Chaucer, Rom. R. 860.

FRO'UZY. adj. [A cant word.]

1. Fetid; musty.
Petticoats in frouzy heaps. Swift.

2. Dim; cloudy.
When first Diana leaves her bed,
Vapours and steams her looks disgrace;
A frouzy dirty-colour'd red
Sits on her cloudy wrinkled face. Swift.

FROW.* n. s. [fraw, German; frau, old French; wrowe, Dutch; all signifying a woman; fru, Su. Goth. a woman of rank; Lat. vira, a woman, a manly woman.] A woman; generally applied to Dutch or German women. In the north of England, a frow, according to Grose, is an idle, dirty woman.

They are now
Buxom as Bacchus' frows, revelling, dancing.
Beaumont and Fl. Wit at sev. Weapons.
A Dutch frow's colour hath no grace,
Seen in a Roman lady's face.
Florio, Transl. of Montaigne, p. 269.

Your alewives, like the German frows, are all cheeks to the belly. Junius, Sin Stigmatized, p. 38.
Frow.* adj. Brittle. Used in Berkshire.
It is frough in the north. Ray, and Grose.
That [timber] which grows in gravel is subject to be frow (as they term it) and brittle.
 Evelyn, i. iii. § 5.

FROWARD.† adj. [ppampearb, Saxon,
i. e. from ward, in opposition to to ward.
Thus the word was originally used for averse. "So froward is it from sadness," Chaucer, Rom. R. 4940, i. e.
so far from it.] Peevish; ungovernable;
angry; perverse; the contrary to toward.

The froward pain of mine own heart made me delight to punish him, whom I esteemed the chiefest let in the way. Sidney.
She's not froward, but modest as the dove:
She is not hot but temperate as the morn.
Shakespeare.

Whose ways are crooked, and they froward in their paths. Prov. ii. 15.
Time moveth so round, that a froward retention of custom is as turbulent a thing as innovation.
Bacon, Essays.

'Tis with froward men, and froward factions too, as 'tis with froward children; they'll be sooner quieted by fear than by any sense of duty.
L'Estrange.

Motions occasion sleep, as we find by the common use and experience of rocking froward children in cradles. Temple.

FRO'WARDLY. adv. [from froward.] Peev-ishly; perversely.

I hid me and was wroth, and he went frowardly
in the way of his heart. Is. lvii. 17.

FRO'WARDNESS. n. s. [from froward.] Peev-ishness; perverseness.

How many frowardnesses of ours does he smother? how many indignities does he pass by?
how many affronts does he put up at our hands?
South.

We'll mutually forget
The warmth of youth and frowardness of age.
Addison, Cato.

FRO'WER. n. s. [I know not the etymology.]
A cleaving tool.

A frower of iron for cleaving of lath,
With roll for a sawpit, good husbandry hath.
Tusser.

TO FROWN.† v. n. [frogner, old Fr. to wrinkle. Skinner. To this etymology
Dr. Johnson accedes. But I do not find this French verb in the old glossaries. Moreover, frown has been better traced to the Goth. ufryn, grim or stern, by Serenius; which corresponds with the Greek opēds, bearing the sense of a severe or haughty look.] To express displeasure by contracting the face to wrinkles; to look stern.

Say, that she frowns: I'll say, she looks as clear
As morning roses newly wash'd with dew.
Shakespeare.

They choose their magistrate
And such a one as he, who puts his shall,
His popular shall, against a graver bench
Than ever frown'd. Shakespeare, Coriol.

How now, daughter, what makes that frowntlet on? You are too much of late i'th' frown.
— Thou wast a pretty fellow, when thou hadst not need to care for her frowning. Shaks. K. Lear.
Heroes in animated marble frown. Pope.

The wood,
Whose shady horrors on a rising brow
Wav'd high, and frown'd upon the stream below.
Pope.

TO FROWN.* v. a. To drive back with a look of haughtiness or displeasure.

Ventidius fix'd his eyes upon my passage,
Severely, as he meant to frown me back.
Dryden, All for Love.

FROWN. n. s. [from the verb.] A wrinkled look; a look of displeasure.

Patiently endure that frown of fortune, and by some notable exploit win again her favour.
Knolles, Hist. of the Turks.

In his half-clos'd eyes
Stern vengeance yet and hostile terror stand;
His front yet threatens and his frowns command.
Prior.

FRO'WNINGLY. adv. [from frown.] Sternly;
with a look of displeasure.

What, look'd he frowningly?
A countenance more in sorrow than in anger.
Shakespeare, Hamlet.

FRO'WY. adj. Musty; mossy. This word is now not used; but instead of it frouzy.

But if they with thy gotes should yede,
They soon might be corrupted;
Or like not of the frouwy fede,
Or with the weeds be glutted. Spenser, Shep. Cal.

FRO'ZEN. part. pass. of freeze.

1. Congealed with cold.
What was the waste of war, what fierce alarms
Shook Asia's crown with European arms;
Ev'n such have heard, if any such there be,
Whose earth is bounded by the frozen sea.
Dryden, Æn.

Fierce Boreas, with his offspring, issues forth
T' invade the frozen waggon of the North.
Dryden, Ovid.

A cheerful blaze arose, and by the fire
They warn'd their frozen feet, and dry'd their wet attire. Dryden, Flower and Leaf.

2. Chill in affection.
Against whom was the fine frozen knight, frozen in despair; but his armour naturally representing ice, and all his furniture lively answering thereto.
Sidney.

Be not ever frozen, coy,
One beam of love will soon destroy,
And melt that ice to floods of joy. Carew.

3. Void of heat of appetite.
Even here, where frozen chastity retires,
Love finds an altar for forbidden fires. Pope.

FRO'ZENNESS.* n. s. [from frozen.] State of being frozen.
They soon return to that frozenness which is hardly dissolved.

Bp. Gauden, Hieraspistes, 1653, p. 486.
F.R.S. Fellow of the Royal Society.

Who virtū profess,
Shine in the dignity of F.R.S. Pope.

TO FRU'BISH.* v. a. To furbish. Barret.

This corruption also sometimes occurs in our old authors. See TO FURBISH.

FRU'CTED.* adj. [Lat. fructus.] An heraldick term, given to all trees bearing fruit.

FRU'CTIFEROUS. adj. [fructifer, Lat.]
Bearing fruit. Ainsworth.

FRUCTIFICATION. n. s. [from fructify.]
The act of causing or of bearing fruit;
fecundation; fertility.

That the sap doth powerfully rise in the Spring,
to put the plant in a capacity of fructification, he that hath beheld how many gallons of water may be drawn from a birch-tree, hath slender reason to doubt. Brown, Vulg. Err.

TO FRU'CTIFY.† v. a. [fructifier, Fr.]
To make fruitful; to fertilise.

Neither, doth the earth bring forth budde, or leaves, or other frute, unless it receives moysture of the raine; nor the raine doeth fructify without earth.

Martin, Marr. of Priests, (1554.) sign. Ee. i. b.
The legal levies the sovereign raises are as vapours which the sun exhales, which fall down in sweet showers to fructify the earth.

Where'er she looks, behold some sudden birth
Adorns the trees, and fructifies the earth.
Granville.

TO FRU'CTIFY. v. n. To bear fruit.

It watereth the heart, to the end it may fructify;
maketh the virtuous, in trouble, full of magnanimity and courage; and serveth as a most approved remedy against all doleful and heavy accidents which befall men in this present life.
Hooker.

Thus would there nothing fructify, either near or under them, the sun being horizontal to the poles. Brown.

FRUCTUA'TION.* n. s. [from fructuous.]
Product; fruit.

Knowing — with what superabundant population the first fructuation of an advancing society is loaded. Pownal on Antig. (1782.) p. 60.

FRU'CTUOUS.† adj. [fructueus, Fr. from fructify.] This is one of our oldest words. Chaucer uses it. "Be fructuos," Parson's Prol.] Fruitful; fertile;
impregnating with fertility.

Apples of price, and pteuous sheaves of corn
Oft interlac'd occur; and both imblibe

Fitting congenial juice, so rich the soil,
So much does fructuous moisture o'erbound!

Philips.

FRU'CTURE.* n. s. [Fr. fructure.] The fructure, use, fruition, possession, or enjoyment of.

Cotgrave.

FRU'GAL. adj. [frugalis, Lat. frugal, Fr.] Thrifty; sparing; parsimonious; not prodigal; not profuse; not lavish.

Reasoning, I oft admire,
How nature wise and frugal could commit
Such disproportions, with superfluous hand
So many nobler bodies to create,
Greater so manifold to this one use. Milton, P. L.
And wing'd purveyors his sharp hunger fed
With frugal scraps of flesh and maslin bread.

Harte.

If through mists he shoots his sullen beams,
Frugal of light, in loose and straggling streams,
Suspect a drisling day.

Dryden, Virg.

FRUGA'LITY. n. s. [frugalité, Fr. frugalitas, Lat.] Thrift; parsimony; good husbandry.

As for the general sort of men, frugality may be the cause of drinking water; for that is no small saving, to pay nothing for one's drink.

Bacon.

Frugality and bounty too,
Those diff'ring virtues, meet in you.

Walker.

In this frugality of your praises some things I
I cannot omit.

Dryden, Fab. Dedic.

The boundaries of virtues are indivisible lines:
it is impossible to march up close to the frontiers of frugality, without entering the territories of parsimony.

Arbutnot, John Bull.

FRU'GALLY.† adv. [from frugal.] Parsimoniously; sparingly; thriftily.

He would have us live soberly, that is to say, honestly, shamefacedly, chastely, temperately, and frugally.

Woolton, Christ. Manual, (1576.) sign. L. iii. b.
Mean time young Parsimond his marriage
press'd,

And frugally resolv'd, the charge to shun,
To join his brother's bridal with his own.

Dryd.

FRU'GGIN.* n. s. [Fr. fourgon.] An oven-fork, termed in Lincolnshire a fruggin.
Cotgrave. The pole, with which the ashes in the oven are stirred. North.
Grose, and Praise of Yorkshire Ale.

FRUG'FEROUS.† adj. [frugifer, Lat.] Bearing fruit.

Ainsworth.

Every frugiferous herb which is upon the face of the earth.

More, Conf. Cabo. (1653.) p. 8.

FRUIT.† n. s. [fructus, Lat. fruit, old Fr. fruit, modern; frwyth, Welsh.]

1. The product of a tree or plant in which the seeds are contained.

The strawberry grows underneath the nettle,
And wholesome berries thrive and ripen best,
Neighbour'd by fruit of baser quality.

Shakespeare, Hen. V.

2. That part of a plant which is taken for food.

By tasting of that fruit forbid,
Where they sought knowledge, they did error find.

Davies.

See how the rising fruits the gardens crown,
Imbibe the sun, and make his light their own.

Blackmore.

3. Production.

The fruit of the spirit is in all goodness and righteousness, and truth.

Ephes. v. 9.

4. The offspring of the womb; the young of any animal.

Blessed shall be the fruit of thy body.

Deut. xxviii. 4.

Shall the women eat their fruit, and the children of a span long?

Lament. ii. 20.

Can'st thou their reck'nings keep? the time
compute,

When their swol'n bellies shall enlarge the fruit.

Sandys.

5. Advantage gained by any enterprise or conduct.

What is become of all the king of Sweden's victories? Where are the fruits of them at this day? Or of what benefit will they be to posterity?

Swift.

Another fruit, from considering things in themselves, will be, that each man will pursue his thoughts in that method which will be most agreeable to the nature of the thing, and to his apprehension of what it suggests to him.

Locke.

6. The effect or consequence of any action.

She blushed when she considered the effect of granting; she was pale when she remembered the fruits of denying.

Sidney.

They shall eat of the fruit of their own way.

Prov.

7. The desert after the meat.

Give first admittance to the ambassadors;

My news shall be the fruit to that great feast.

Shakspeare, Hamlet.

To FRUIT.* v. n. To produce fruit.

As it is three years before they fruit, I might as well at my age plant oaks, and hope to have the advantage of their timber.

Ld. Chesterfield.

FRU'ITAGE, n. s. [fruitage, Fr.] Fruit collectively; various fruits.

In heav'n the trees

Of life ambrosial fruitage bear, and vines

Yield nectar.

Milton, P. L.

Greedily they pluck'd

The fruitage, fair to sight, like that which grew

Near that bituminous lake where Sodom flam'd.

Milton, P. L.

What is more ordinary with them than the taking in flowers and fruitage for the garnishing of their work?

More.

FRU'ITBEARER. n. s. [fruit and bearer.] That which produces fruit.

Trees, especially fruitbearers, are often infected with the measles.

Mortimer, Husbandry.

FRU'ITBEARING. adj. [fruit and bear.] Having the quality of producing fruit.

By this way graft trees of different kinds one on another, as fruitbearing trees on those that bear not.

Mortimer.

FRU'ITERER. n. s. [fruitier, Fr.] One who trades in fruit.

I did fight with one Samson Stockfish, a fruiterer, behind Gray's-inn.

Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

Walnuts the fruit'er's hand in Autumn stain;

Blue plumbs and juicy pears augment his gain.

Gay.

FRU'ITERIE. n. s. [fruiterie, Fr.]

1. Fruit collectively taken.

Oft, notwithstanding all thy care

To help thy plants, on the small fruitery

Exempt from ills, an oriental blast

Disastrous flies.

Philips.

2. A fruit-loft; a repository for fruit.

FRU'ITFUL. adj. [fruit and full.]

1. Fertile; abundantly productive; liberal of vegetable product.

If she continued cruel, he could no more sustain his life than the earth remain fruitful in the sun's continual absence.

Sidney.

The Earth,

Though in comparison of Heav'n, so small,
Nor glist'ring may of solid good contain

More plenty than the sun that barren shines,

Whose virtue on itself works no effect,

But in the fruitful earth.

Milton, P. L.

2. Actually bearing fruit.

Adonis' gardens,

That one day bloom'd, and fruitful were the next.

Shakspeare.

3. Prolifick; childbearing, not barren.

Hear, Nature, hear; dear goddess, hear a father
Suspend thy purpose, if thou did'st intend
To make this creature fruitful;

Into her womb convey sterility; Shakspeare, K. Lear.

Male he created thee, but thy consort

Female for race; then bless'd mankind, and said,

Be fruitful, multiply, and fill the Earth;

Subdue it, and throughout dominion hold.

Milton, P. L.

I have copied Nature, making the youths amorous and the damsels fruitful.

Gay, Pref. to the What d'ye Call it.

4. Plenteous; abounding in any thing.

While you, my lord, the rural shades admire,

And from Britannia's publick posts retire,

Me into foreign realms my fate conveys,

Through nations fruitful of immortal lays. Addison.

FRU'ITFULLY. adv. [from fruitful.]

1. In such a manner as to be prolific.

How sacred seeds of sea, and air, and earth,

And purer fire through universal night,

And empty space did fruitfully unite. Roscommon.

2. Plenteously; abundantly.

You have many opportunities to cut him off: if your will want not, time and place will be fruitfully offered.

Shakspeare.

Fruitfully abound.

Dryden.

FRU'ITFULNESS. n. s. [from fruitful.]

1. Fertility; fecundity; plentiful production.

Neither can we ascribe the same fruitfulness to any part of the earth, nor the same virtue to any plant thereon growing, that they had before the flood.

Raleigh, Hist.

2. The quality of being prolific, or bearing many children.

The goddess, present at the match she made,
So bless'd the bed, such fruitfulness convey'd,
That ere ten moons had sharpen'd either horn,

To crown their bliss, a lovely boy was born.

Dryden, Ovid.

3. Exuberant abundance.

The remedy of fruitfulness is easy, but no labour will help the contrary: I will like and praise some things in a young writer, which yet, if he continues in, I cannot but justly hate him for.

B. Jonson, Discoveries.

FRU'ITGROVES. n. s. [fruit and groves.] Shades, or close plantations of fruit trees.

The faithful slave,

Whom to my nuptial train Icarus gave,

To tend the fruitgroves?

Pope, Odys.

FRU'ITION.† n. s. [old Fr. fruition, from fruior, Lat.] Enjoyment; possession; pleasure given by possession or use.

Man doth not seem to rest satisfied either with fruition of that wherewith his life is preserved, or with performance of such actions as advance him most deservedly in estimation.

Hooker.

I am driv'n, by breath of her renown,
Either to seek shipwreck, or to arrive
Where I may have fruition of her love.

Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

God riches and renown to men imparts,

Ev'n all they wish; and yet their narrow hearts

Cannot so great a fluency receive,

But their fruition to a stranger leave.

Sandys, Paraph. of Ps.

Wit once, like beauty, without art or dress,

Naked and unadorn'd, could find success;

Till by fruition, novelty destroy'd,

The nymph must find new charms to be enjoy'd.

Granville.

Affliction generally disables a man from pursuing those vices in which the guilt of men consists; if the affliction be on his body, his appetites are weakened, and capacity of fruition destroyed.

Rogers, Serm.

FRUITIVE. adj. [from the noun.] Enjoying; possessing; having the power of enjoyment. A word not legitimate.

To whet our longings for fruitive or experimental knowledge, it is reserved among the prerogatives of being in heaven, to know how happy we shall be, when there.

Boyle.

FRUITLESS. adj. [from fruit.]

1. Barren of fruit; not bearing fruit.

The Spaniards of Mexico, for the first forty years, could not make our kind of wheat bear seed; but it grew up as high as the trees, and was fruitless.

Raleigh, Hist.

2. Vain; productive of no advantage; idle; unprofitable.

O! let me not, quoth he, return again
Back to the world, whose joys so fruitless are;
But let me here for ay in peace remain,
Or straightway on that last long voyage fare.

Spenser, F. Q.

Serpent! we might have spar'd our coming hither;

Fruitless to me, though fruit be here t' excess.

Milton, P. L.

The other is for entirely waving all searches into antiquity, in relation to this controversy, as being either needless or fruitless.

Waterland.

3. Having no offspring.

Upon my head they plac'd a fruitless crown,
And put a barren sceptre in my gripe;
No son of mine succeeding. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

FRUITLESSLY. adv. [from fruitless.] Vainly; idly; unprofitably.

After this fruit curiosity fruitlessly enquireth, and confidence blindly determineth.

Brown, Vald. Err.

Walking they talk'd and fruitlessly divin'd
What friend the priestess by those words design'd.

Dryden.

FRUITLESSNESS.* n. s. [from fruitless.] Barrenness; unfruitfulness; vanity.

Christ whips our fruitlessness in the innocent fig-tree; like as the manner was among the Persians, when their great men had offended, to take their garments and beat them. Hales, Rem. p. 26.

Certainly the fruitlessness and inexcusableness of their vice [swearing] considered, almost no sinners have more to answer for.

Boyle against Cust. Swearing, p. 120.

FRUIT-TIME. n. s. [from fruit and time.] The Autumn; the time for gathering fruit.

FRUIT-TREE. n. s. [from fruit and tree.] A tree of that kind whose principal value arises from the fruit produced by it.

Lady, by yonder blessed mound I vow,
That tips with silver all these fruittree tops. Shaks.

They possessed houses full of all goods, wells digged, vineyards and oliveyards, and fruittrees in abundance.

Neh. ix. 25.

All with a border of rich fruittrees crown'd,
Whose loaded branches hide the lofty mound.

Waller.

FRUMENTACEOUS. adj. [from frumentum, Latin.] Made of grain.

Dict.

FRUMENTATION.* n. s. [Lat. frumentatio.] A general dose of corn.

Cockeram.

FRUMENTY.† n. s. [from frumentée, Fr. Cotgrave; from frumentum, corn, Latin.] Food made of wheat boiled in milk. Pronounced, and sometimes written, frummetty.

Frumenty makes the principal entertainment of all our country wakes. Our country people call it frumty. It is an agreeable composition of boiled wheat, milk, spice, and sugar.

Dr. Gower, Mat. for Hist. of Cheshire, p. 10.

TO FRUMP.† v. a. [this is an old word, occurring both in Sherwood's and Cotgrave's dictionaries, and rendered by the French moquer, i. e. "to mock, flout, frump, scoff, deride; to gull; to frustrate; to disappoint;"] so that one is led almost to believe it a corruption of the Fr. tromper, to deceive, to delude. Dr. Johnson barely notices the word, without etymology, or example, from Skinner and Ainsworth; but Skinner, as well as Minshew, offers as the etymology the Teut. krum, crooked; or the verb krumpelen. i. e. krimpeusen, to turn up the nose in contempt.] To mock; to insult.

I am abus'd and frump'd, sir.

Beaum. and Fl. Maid in the Mill.

Was ever gentlewoman

So frump'd off with a fool?

Beaum. and Fl. The Chances.

You must learn to mock too, frump your own father on occasion.

Ruggles, Comedy of Ignoramus, (1690.) v. 2.

FRUMP.* n. s. [from the verb.] A joke; a flout; a trick of mockery.

From hence this orator, this parcel of wit, flies out into a pleasant frump, as he thinks, but indeed an ugly, inhuman, loathsome ribaudie.

Ep. Hall, Hon. of the Marr. Clergy, p. 164.

You must look to be envied, and endure a few court-frumps for it.

B. Jonson, Poetaster.

Sweet widow, leave your frumps, and be edified.

Beaum. and Fl. Sornf. Lady.

FRUMPER.* n. s. [from frump.] A mocker; a scoffer.

Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

TO FRUSH.† v. a. [froisser, French.]

To break, bruise, or crush.

Hammer.

I like thy armour well;
I'll frush it, and unlock the rivets all,
But I'll be master of it. Shaks. Troil. and Cress.

They are sore frushed with sickness, or too farre withered with age.

Holinshed, Descript. of Ireland, p. 29.

Rinaldo's armour frush'd and hack'd they had.

Fairfax, Tasso.

FRUSH. n. s. [from the verb.] A sort of tender horn that grows in the middle of the sole, and at some distance from the toe: it divides into two branches, running towards the heel, in the form of a fork.

Farrier's Dict.

FRUSTRA'NEOUS. adj. [frustra, Lat.] Vain; useless; unprofitable; without advantage.

Their attempts being so frustraneous, and the demonstrations to the contrary so perspicuous, it is a marvel that any man should be zealously affected in a cause that has neither truth nor any honest usefulness in it.

More.

He timely withdraws his frustraneous baffled kindness, and sees the folly of endeavouring "to stroke a tyger into a lamb, or to court an Ethiopian out of his colour.

South.

TO FRUSTRATE. v. a. [frustror, Latin; frustrer, French.]

1. To defeat; to disappoint; to balk.

I survive,

To mock the expectations of the world;
To frustrate prophecies, and to raise out
Rotten opinion. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

Not more almighty to resist our might,
Than waste to frustrate all our plots and wiles.

Milton, P. L.

2. To make null; to nullify.

The act of parliament which gave all his lands to the queen, did cut off and frustrate all such conveyances.

Spenser.

Now thou hast avenged
Supplanted Adam; and by vanquishing
Temptation, hast regain'd lost paradise,
And frustrated the conquest fraudulent.

Milton, P. R.

The peculiar strength of the motive may of itself perhaps contribute to frustrate the efficacy of it, rendering it liable to be suspected by him to whom it is addressed.

Atterbury.

FRUSTRATE.† part. adj. [from the verb.]

1. Vain; ineffectual; useless; unprofitable.

He is drown'd,

Whom thus we stray to find, and the sea mocks
Our frustrate search on land. Shakespeare, Temp.

The ruler of the province of Judea being by Julian busied in the re-edifying of this temple, flaming balls of fire issuing near the foundation, and oft consuming the workmen, made the enterprise frustrate.

Raleigh, Hist.

All at once employ their thronging darts;
But out of order thrown, in air they join,
And multitude makes frustrate the design.

Dryden, Ovid.

2. Null; void.

Few things are so restrained to any one end or purpose, that, the same being extinct, they should forthwith utterly become frustrate.

Hooker.

3. Disappointed; defeated; balked.

That my lord be not defeated and frustrate of his purpose.

Judith, xi. 11.

It is an axiom of nature that natural desire cannot utterly be frustrate.

Hooker.

Go to him, Dolabella, bid him yield;
Being so frustrate, tell him he mocks us by

The pauses that he makes. Shaks. Ant. and Cleop.

Stern look'd the fiend, as frustrate of his will;

Not half suffic'd, and greedy yet to kill. Dryden.

FRUSTRA'TION.† n. s. [Fr. frustration;

Lat. frustratio.] Disappointment; defeat.

If inculpable frustration were intolerable.

Barrow, vol. i. S. 1.

Vain heats and presumptuous conceits, to which no answer will be given but shame and frustration.

More on the Sev. Churches, Pref.

In states notoriously irreligious, a secret and irresistible power countermands their deepest projects, splits their counsels, and smites their most refined policies with frustration and a curse. South.

FRUSTRATIVE. adj. [from frustrate.] Fallacious; disappointing.

Ainsworth.

FRUSTRATORY.† adj. [Fr. frustratoire, Cotgrave.] That makes any procedure void; that vacates any former process.

Bartolus restrains this to a frustratory appeal.

Ayliffe.

FRUSTRUM. n. s. [Latin.] A piece cut off from a regular figure. A term of science.

FRUTICANT.† adj. [fruticans, Lat.] Full of shoots.

These we shall divide into the greater and more edacious, fruticant and shrubby. Evelyn, Introd. § 3.

FRY.† n. s. [from froe, foam, Danish. Skinner, according to Dr. Johnson, who makes no further etymological remark. The word is probably from the Goth. fraivo, seed. Old French. "le frie des salmons." Kelham.

1. The swarm of little fishes just produced from the spawn.

They come to us but as love draws;
He swallows us, and never chaws:

By him, as by chain'd shot, whole ranks do die;
He is the tyrant pike, and we the fy. Donne.

Forthwith the sounds and seas, each creek and bay,

With fy innumerable swarm, and shoals

Of fish, that with their fins and shining scales

Glide under the green wave in sculls that oft

Bank the mid-sea Milton, P. L.

The angler had the hap to draw up a very little fish from among the fry.
So close behind some promontory lie
The huge leviathans, 't attend their prey;
And give no chase, but swallow in the fry,
Which through their gaping jaws mistake the way.

Dryden.

2. Any swarm of animals; or young people in contempt.

Out of the fry of these rakehell horseboys, growing up in knavery and villany, are their kern continually supplied and maintained.

Spenser on Ireland.

Them before the fry of children young,
Their wanton sports and childish mirth did play,
And to the maidens sounding timbrels sung.

Spenser, F. Q.

Draw me no constellations there,
Nor dog, nor goat, nor bull, nor bear;
Nor any of that monstrous fry
Of animals that stock the sky.

Oldham.

The young fry must be held at a distance, and kept under the discipline of contempt.

Collier on Pride.

3. A swarm or heap of any materials.

A flood of mischief flows,
An heap of hurts, a frie of foule decays,
A flock of faeres, and thralls a thousand waies.

Mir. for Mag. p. 56.

FRY. n. s. A kind of sieve.

He dressthe dust from malt, by running it through a fan or fry.

Mortimer, Husbandry.

To FRY. v. a. [frigo, Lat. frío, Welsh; frjick, Erse.] To dress food in a pan on the fire.

To FRY. v. n.

1. To be roasted in a pan on the fire.

2. To suffer the action of fire.

So when with crackling flames a cauldron fries,
The bubbling waters from the bottom rise;
Above the brims they force their fiery way,
Black vapours climb aloft, and cloud the day.

Dryden, Æn.

3. To melt with heat.

Spices and gums about them melting fry,
And, phoenix like, in that rich nest they die.

Waller.

4. To be agitated like liquor in the pan on the fire.

Oil of sweet almonds newly drawn, with sugar, and a little spice, spread upon bread toasted, is an excellent nourisher; but then, to keep the oil from frying in the stomach, drink mild beer after it.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Where no ford he finds, no water fries,
Nor billows with unequal murmurs roar,
But smoothly slide along, and swell the shore,
That course he steer'd.

Dryden, Æn.

FRY. n. s. [from the verb.] A dish of things fried.

FRY'INGPAN. n. s. [from fry and pan.] The vessel in which meat is dressed on the fire.

If I pass by sea, I may chance to fall from the fryingpan into the fire.
We understand by out of the fryingpan into the fire, that things go from bad to worse.

L'Estrange.

A freeman of London has the privilege of disturbing a whole street with the twinkling of a brass kettle or a fryingpan.

Addison, Spect.

FRYTH.* See FRITH.

To FUB.† v. a. To put off; to delay by false pretences; to cheat. It is generally written fob. See FOB.

A hundred mark is a long lone for a poor lone woman to bear! and I have borne, and borne, and borne, and have been fubb'd off and fubb'd off from this day to that day, that it is a shame to be thought on.

Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

Why Doll, why Doll, I say, my letter fubb'd too,

And no access without I mend my manners?

Beaum. and Fl. Mons. Thomas.

FUB.† n. s. A plump chubby boy, according to Ainsworth; applied also to a woman, as Mr. Malone observes. Written also fubs; which word is thought to have been applied by King Charles II. to the Duchess of Portsmouth, who is supposed to have been in her person rather full and plump. See Nichols, Literary Anecd. vol. ix. p. 339.

That same foule deformed fubs.

Rub and a Great Cast, (1614,) Ep. 44.

FU'BBY.* adj. [from sub.] Plump; chubby.

The sculptors and painters apply this epithet fubs to children, and say for instance of the boys of Fiammengo, that they are fubby.

Nichols, Lit. Anecd. vol. ix. p. 339.

FU'CATE.* adj. [fucatus, Lat. from fucus; Heb. puch, lead.] Painted; whence, disguised by false show.

In virtue nothing may be fucate or counterfeit.

Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 152.

FU'CATED. adj. [fucatus, Latin.]

1. Painted; disguised with paint.

2. Disguised by false show.

FU'CUS.† n. s. [Latin.]

1. Paint for the face. Not now in use.

Women chat

Of fucus this and fucus that.

B. Jonson.

Those who paint for debauchery should have the fucus pulled off, and the coarseness underneath discovered.

Collier.

2. Disguise; false show.

No fucus, nor vain supplement of art,

Shall falsify the language of my heart.

Sandys, Job, p. 52.

3. [In botany.] The name of a genus of submarine plants. The Latin plural.

The various authors who have written upon the fuci have very unwarrantably divided the varieties, included in the denomination "vesiculosus," into numerous species.

Obs. on the Brit. Fuci by Dr. Goodenough, &c.

Lin. Tr. iii. 19.

FU'DDER of Lead.* Among the miners, a load of lead. See FOTHER.

To FU'DDLE.† v. a. [of unknown etymology. It has been derived indeed from food and ale, as though ale had been the chief food of him who is fuddled. See Craven Dialect, and Brockett's N. C. Words in V. FUDDLE. But I cannot think this the origin of the word.] To make drunk.

Piso.

He thinks there's no man

Can give him drink enough.

Host. That's note enough, I'll fuddle him,

Or lie i' the suds. Beaum. and Fl. The Captain.

I am too fuddled to take care to observe your orders.

Steele, Epist. Corresp. i. 162.

The table floating round,

And pavement faithless to the fuddled feet.

Thomson.

To FU'DDLE. v. n. To drink to excess.

Men will be whoring and fuddling on still.

L'Estrange.

FU'DDLER.* n. s. [from fuddle.] A drunkard.

The last I heard of him was, that he was grown a fuddler, and raller at strict men.

Baxter's Life and Times, 1696, p. 4.

FUDGE.* interj. An expression of the utmost contempt, usually bestowed on absurd or lying talkers. It probably was introduced in Goldsmith's time, and is now common in colloquial language.

I should have mentioned the very impolite behaviour of Mr. Burchell; who, during this discourse, sat with his face turned to the fire, and at the conclusion of every sentence, would cry out fudge! Goldsmith, Vicar of Wakefield, ch. xi.

FUE'ILLEMORTE. n. s. [French.] Corruptly pronounced and written philomot.

Fucillemort colour signifies the colour of withered leaves in autumn.

FU'EL.† n. s. [fuyal, Norm. French, from feu, fire.] The matter or aliment of fire.

This shall be with burning and fuel of fire.

Isaiah, ix. 5.

This spark will prove a raging fire, If wind and fuel be brought to feed it with.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

Mov'd by my charms, with them your love may cease,

And as the fuel sinks the flame decrease. Prior.

To FU'EL. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To feed fire with combustible matter.

And yet she cannot waste by this,

Nor long endure this torturing wrong;

For more corruption needless is

To fuel such a fever long. Donne, Poems, p. 16.

Never, alas! the dreadful name

That fuels the infernal flame. Cowley.

The fuel'd chimney blazes wide. Thomson, Aut.

2. To store with firing.

Some are plainly economical, as that the seat be well watered, and well fuelled. Wotton, Architect.

FU'ELLER.* n. s. [from fuel.] That which supplies fuel; that which kindles.

Shops of fashions,

Love's fuellers, and the rightest company Of players. Donne, Poems, p. 258.

To FU'EL.* v. n. [Germ. pfuffen.]

To blow or puff. A northern word. Grose gives it in the form of fuff, to blow in puffs. But the Craven Dialect and Mr. Brockett, rightly, in the spelling before us.

FU'FFY.* adj. [from the verb.] Light and soft. Craven Dialect, and Brockett's N. C. Words.

FUGA'CIOUS.† adj. [fugax, fugacis, Latin.] Volatile.

[They] require some nutriment to supply the place of the fugacious atoms.

Hallywell, Melampr. (1681,) p. 100.

A thing so fine and fugacious, as to escape our nicest search.

Ep. Berkeley, Stris, § 43.

He had hastily snatched at some little fugacious pleasures.

Sterne, Sermon 2.

FUGA'CIOUSNESS. n. s. [fugax, Latin.]

Volatility; the quality of flying away.

FUGA'CITY. n. s. [fugax, Latin.]

1. Volatility; quality of flying away.

Spirits and salts, which, by their fugacity, colour, smell, taste, and divers experiments that I purposely made to examine them, were like the salt and spirit of urine and soot.

Boyle.

2. Uncertainty; instability.

FUGH. interj. [perhaps from fēv.] An expression of abhorrence. Commonly foh.

A very filthy fellow: how odiously he smells of his country garlic! fugh, how he stinks of Spain!

Dryden, Don Sebast.

FUGITIVE.† adj. [fugitiſ, French; fugitivus, Latin.]

1. Not tenable; not to be held or detained.

Our idea of infinity is a growing and fugitive idea, still in a boundless progression, that can stop no where. Locke.

Happiness, object of that waking dream,
Which we call life, mistaking; fugitive theme
Of my pursuing verse, ideal shade,
Notional good, by fancy only made. Prior.

2. Unsteady; unstable; not durable.

These momentary pleasures, fugitive delights.
Daniel, Cleopatra, (1596.)

3. Volatile; apt to fly away.

The vexed chymick vainly chases
His fugitive gold through all her faces.

Crashaw, Poems, p. 77.
The more tender and fugitive parts, the leaves of many of the more sturdy vegetables, fall off for want of the supply from beneath: those only which are more tenacious, making a shift to sussist without such recruit. Woodward, Nat. Hist.

4. Flying; running from danger.

Whilst yet with Parthian blood thy sword is warm,

The fugitive Parthians follow. Shaksp. Ant. & Cleop.
The Trojan chief

Thrice fugitive about Troy wall. Milton, P. L.

5. Flying from duty; falling off.

Can a fugitive daughter enjoy herself, while her parents are in tears? Richardson, Clarissa.

6. Wandering; runagate; vagabond.

Putting off his glorious apparel, and discharging his company, he came like a fugitive servant through the mid-land unto Antioch, having very great dishonour for that his host was destroyed.

2 Macc. viii. 35.
They are still seeking change, restless, fickle, fugitive; they may not abide to tarry in one place long. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 185.

The most malicious surmise was countenanced by a libellous pamphlet of a fugitive physician.

Wotton.

7. Perishable; as, a fugitive piece; i. e.
a little composition printed on a sheet, or less; a small pamphlet. Literary men of modern times have introduced this meaning, no doubt, from the circumstances usually attending such pieces of being soon forgotten, or soon lost;
and have accordingly given occasion to collections of some fugitive performances, which ought not so to perish.

FUGITIVE. n. s. [from the adjective.]

1. One who runs from his station or duty.

Unmarried men are best friends, best masters, best servants, but not always best subjects; for they are light to run away, and almost all fugitives are of that condition. Bacon.

Back to thy punishment,
False fugitive! and to thy speed add wings,
Lest with a whip of scorpions I pursue
Thy ling'ring. Milton, P. L.

We understand by some fugitives that he hath commanded

The generals to return with victory, or expect
A shameful death. Denham, Sophy.

2. One who takes shelter under another power from punishment.

Too many, being men of good inheritance, are fled beyond the seas, when they live under princes which are her majesty's professed enemies; and converse and are confederates with other traitors and fugitives there abiding. Spenser on Ireland.

Your royal highness is too great and too just, either to want or to receive the homage of rebellious fugitives. Dryden.

3. One hard to be caught or detained.

What muse but his can Nature's beauties hit,
Or catch that airy fugitive, call'd wit. Harte.

FUGITIVENESS.† n. s. [from fugitive.]

1. Volatility; fugacity.

That divers salts, emerging upon the analysis of many concretes, are very volatile, is plain from the fugitiveness of salt and of hartshorn ascending in distillation. Boyle.

2. Instability; uncertainty.

The ludicrousness and fugitiveness of our wanton reason. More, Antid. against Idolatry, ch. 1.

FUGUE. n. s. [French; from fuga,
Latin.] In music, some point consisting of four, five, six, or any other number of notes begun by some one single part, and then seconded by a third, fourth, fifth and sixth part, if the composition consists of so many; repeating the same, or such like notes, so that the several parts follow, or come in one after another in the same manner, the leading parts still flying before those that follow. Harris.

The reports and fugues have an agreement with the figures in rhetoric of repetition and traduction. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

The skilful organist plies his grave and fancied descent in lofty fugues. Milton on Education.

His volant touch
Instinct through all proportions, low and high,
Fled, and pursu'd transverse the resonant fugue.

Milton, P. L.

Long has a race of heroes fill'd the stage,
That rant by note, and through the gamut rage;
In songs and airs express their martial fire,
Combat in trills, and in a fugue expire. Addison.

FULCIBLE.* adj. [Latin, fulcibilis.]

That may be propped up. Cockeram.

FULCIMENT.† n. s. [fulcimen, fulcimen-tum, Latin.] That on which a body rests, which acts or is acted upon at each end, as a balance or a lever.

The power that equiponderates with any weight must have the same proportion unto it as there is betwixt their several distances from the centre or fulciment. Wilkins.

It had need of another fulciment, upon which it might the more firmly rest.

Smith, Portr. of Old Age, p. 75.

FULCRUM.† n. s. [Latin.] In me-chanicks, now common for prop; as,
the fulcrum of a lever.

To FULFIL.† v. a. [full and fill. Sax.
pull-ſyllan.]

1. To fill till there is no room for more.
This sense is now not used, Dr. Johnson says, citing only Shakspeare.—He had forgotten a most expressive passage in our Liturgy.

Six gates i' the city, with massy staples,
And corresponsive and fulfilling bolts,
Spar up the sons of Troy.

Shakspeare, Troil. and Cress. Prol.

Humbly beseeching Thee, that all we, who are partakers of this Holy Communion, may be fulfilled with thy grace and heavenly benediction.

Communion Service.

2. To answer any prophecy or promise by performance.

They knew him not, nor yet the voices of the prophets which are read every sabbath-day, they have fulfilled them in condemning him.

Acts, xiii. 27.

The fury bath'd them in each other's blood;
Then, having fix'd the fight, exulting flies,
And bears fulfill'd her promise to the skies.

Dryden, Æn.

3. To answer any purpose or design.

Here nature seems fulfill'd in all her ends.
Milton, P. L.

4. To answer any desire by compliance or gratification.

I make your grace my executor, and I beseech ye see my poor will fulfilled.

Bacon, and Fl. Hum. Lieut.

If on my wounded breast thou drop'st a tear,

Think for whose sake my breast that wound did bear;

And faithfully my last desires fulfill.

As I perform my cruel father's will. Dryden, Ovid.

5. To answer any law by obedience.

This I my glory account

My exaltation, and my whole delight,

That thou in me well-pleas'd declar'st thy will

Fulfill'd, which to fulfill is all my bliss.

Milton, P. L.

FULFILLER.* n. s. [from fulfil.] One that accomplishes or fulfils.

That he might not supplant him in his hope of

To lapse in fulness
Is sorer than to lie for need; and falsehood
Is worse in kings than beggars. Shaks. Cymb.

8. Struggling perturbation; swelling in the mind.

A principal fruit of friendship is the ease and discharge of the fulness of the heart, which passions of all kinds do cause and induce.

Bacon, Essays.

9. Largeness; extent.

There wanted the fulness of a plot, and variety of characters to form it as it ought; and perhaps something might have been added to the beauty of the style. Dryden.

10. Force of sound, such as fills the ear; vigour of sound.

This sort of pastoral derives almost its whole beauty from a natural ease of thought and smoothness of verse; whereas that of most other kinds consists in the strength and fulness of both. Pope.

FULSOME. adj. [from pulle, Saxon; fuls, Goth. stinking, foul.]

1. Nauseous; offensive.

I come to tell my lady,
There is a fulsome fellow would fain speak with her.
Beaumont, and Fl. Rule a Wife, &c.
He that brings fulsome objects to my view,
With nauseous images my fancy fills,
And all goes down like oxymel of squills.

Roscommon.

Now half the youth of Europe are in arms,
How fulsome must it be to stay behind,
And die of rank diseases here at home?

Orphan.

2. Rank; gross to the smell.

White satyrion is of a dainty smell, if the plant puts forth white flowers only, and those not thin or dry, they are commonly of rank and fulsome smell. Bacon.

3. Lustful. The example, perhaps, more properly belongs to the preceding sense.
He stuck them up before the fulsome ewes.

Shakspeare.

4. Tending to obscenity.
A certain epigram, which is ascribed to the emperor, is more fulsome than any passage I have met with in our poet. Dryden.

FULSOMELY. adv. [from fulsome.]

1. Nauseously; rankly; obscenely.
Box is naturally dry, juicelesse, fulsomenly and loathsomely smelling.

Newton, Herbal to the Bible, (1587.)

Full gorges belk, if not much rather spew,
Most fulsomenly. Davies, Wit's Pilgrim. sign. T. i.

2. Fouly; not decently.

God was sore displeased with his people, because they builded, decked, and trimmed up their own houses, and suffered God's house to be in ruin and decay, to lie uncomely and fulsomenly.

Homilies, for rep. and keeping clean Churches.

FULSOMENESS. n. s. [from fulsome.]

1. Nauseousness.

Others have described them by some diseases, to manifest the fulsomeness and loathsomeness thereof; pride, by an inflammation; luxury, by a fever; envy, by a leprosy.

Price, Creation of the Prince, (1610.)
sign. B. i. b.

2. Foulness.

Taking away all such fulsomeness and filthiness, as through ignorance and blind devotion hath crept into the church these many hundred years.

Homilies, for Rep. Churches.

3. Rank smell.

4. Obscenity.

No decency is considered, no fulsomeness is omitted, no venom is wanting, as far as dulness can supply it. Dryden.

FULVID.  adj. [Latin, fulvidus.]* of a deep yellow colour. Scott.

The fulvid eagle. More, Song of the Soul, i. i. 3.

FUMA'DO. n. s. [fumus, Latin.] A smoked fish.

Fish that serve for the hotter countries, they used at first to fume, by hanging them up on long sticks one by one, drying them with the smoke of a soft and continual fire, from which they purchased the name of fumados. Carew.

FU'MAGE. n. s. [from fumus, Latin.] Hearthmoney. Dict.

FU'MATORY. n. s. [fumaria, Latin, fume-terre, Fr.] An herb.

1. To attempt any thing awkwardly or ungainly.

His wither'd fist still knocking at death's door,
Fumbling and drivelling as he draws his breath,
For brief, the shape and messenger of death.

Sackville, Induct. Mir. for Mag.
Our mechanic theists will have their atoms never once to have fumbled in these their motions, nor to have produced any inept system. Cudworth.

It is continuing to fumble on the lute, though the musick has been long over.

Warburton, Ded. to the Freethinkers.
2. To puzzle; to strain in perplexity.

Am not I a friend to help you out? You would have been fumbling half an hour for this excuse.
Dryden, Span. Friar.

3. To play childishly.

I saw him fumble with the sheets, and play with flowers, and smile upon his finger's end.

Shakespeare, Hen. V.

4. To stutter; to hesitate in the speech;
to fumble. See TO FAMBLE.

She fumbled out, "Thanks, good," and so she died. Marston, Antonio's Revenge.

He fumbleth in the mouth,
His speech doth fail. Trag. of K. John, 1611.

To FU'MBLE. v. a. To manage awkwardly.

As many fawrels as be stars in heav'n,
With distinct breath and constant kisses to them,
He fumbles up all in one loose adieu. Shakespeare.

His greasy bald-pate choir
Came fumbling o'er the beads, in such an agony
They told 'em false for fear. Dryden, Span. Friar.

FU'MBLER. n. s. [from fumble.] One who acts awkwardly.

FU'MBLINGLY.† adv. [from fumble.] In an awkward manner.

Many good scholars speak but fumblingly.
B. Jonson, Discoveries.

FUME. n. s. [fumée, French; fumus,
Latin.]

1. Smoke.

Thus fighting fires a while themselves consume;
But straight, like Turks, forc'd on to win or die,
They first lay tender bridges of their fume,
And o'er the breach in unctuous vapours fly.

Dryden.
2. Vapour; any volatile parts flying away.

Love is a smoke rais'd with the fume of sighs;
Beind purg'd, a fire sparkling in lovers eyes.

Shakespeare.
It were good to try the taking of fumes by pipes, as they do in tobacco, of other things, to dry and comfort. Bacon.

In winter, when the heat without is less, breath becomes so far condensed as to be visible, flowing out of the mouth in form of a fume, or crasser vapour; and may, by proper vessel, set in a strong freezing mixture, be collected in a considerable quantity. Woodward, Nat. Hist.

3. Exhalation from the stomach.

The fumes of drink dispose and stupefy the brains of a man overcharged with it. South.
Plung'd in sloth we lie, and snore supine,
As fill'd with fumes of undigested wine.

Dryden, Pers.
Pow'r, like new wine, does your weak brain
surprize,
And its mad fumes in hot discourses rise;
But time these yielding vapours will remove:
Mean while I'll taste the sober joys of love.

Dryden, Aurengzebe.

4. Rage; heat of mind; passion.

The fumes of his passion do really intoxicate and confound his judging and discerning faculty.
South.

5. Any thing unsubstantial.

When Duncan is asleep, his two chamberlains
Will I with wine and wassel so convince,
That memory, the warder of the brain,
Shall be a fume. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

6. Idle conceit; vain imagination.

Plato's great year would have some effect, not in renewing the state of like individuals; for that is the fume of those, that conceive the celestial bodies have more accurate influences upon these things below, than they have, but in gross. Bacon.
To lay aside all that may seem to have a show of fumes and fancies, and to speak solids, a war with Spain is a mighty work.

Bacon, War with Spain.

To FUME. v. n. [fumer, Fr. fumo, Latin.]

1. To smoke.

Their pray'rs pass'd
Dimensionless through heav'nly doors; then clad
With incense, where the golden altar fum'd
By their great intercessor; same in sight
Before the Father's throne. Milton, P. L.
From thence the fuming trail began to spread,
And lambent glories danc'd about her head.

Dryden, Æn.

Strait hover round the fair her airy band;
Some, as she sipp'd, the fuming liquor fann'd.

Pope.

2. To vapour; to yield exhalations, as by heat.

Tie up the libertine in a field of feasts,
Keep his brain fuming. Shaks. Ant. and Cleop.

Silenus lay,
Whose constant cups lay fuming to his brain,
And always boil in each extended vein. Roscommon.

3. To pass away in vapours.

We have
No anger in our eyes, no storm, no lightning:
Our hate is spent and fum'd away in vapour,
Before our hands be at work. B. Jonson, Caliline.

Their parts are kept from fuming away by their fixity, and also by the vast weight and density of the atmospheres incumbent upon them.

Cheyne, Phil. Princ.

The first fresh dawn then wak'd the gladden'd race

Of uncorrupted man, nor blush'd to see
The sluggish sleep beneath its sacred beam;
For their light slumbers gentle fum'd away.

Thomson, Spring.

4. To be in a rage; to be hot with anger.

When he knew his rival free'd and gone,
He swells with wrath; he makes outrageous moan:
He frets, he fumes, he stares, he stamps the ground,
The hollow tow'rs with clamours rings around.

Dryden.

To FUME. v. a.

1. To smoke; to dry in the smoke.

Those that serve for hot countries they used at first to fume by hanging them up on long sticks one by one, and drying them with the smoke of a soft fire. Carew.

2. To perfume with odours in the fire.

She fum'd the temples with an od'rous flame,
And oft before the sacred altars came,
To pray for him who was an empty name. Dryden.

3. Simply, to perfume.

Fume all the ground,
And sprinkle holy water.

Fletcher, Faithf. Shepherdess.
Now are the lawn sheets fum'd with violets.
Marston, Com. of What you Will.

4. To disperse in vapours.

The heat will fume away most of the scent.

Mortimer.

FU'MET.† n. s. The dung of the deer.

By his slot, his entries, and his port,
His fraying, fewmets, he doth promise sport.
B. Jonson, Sad Shepherd.

FUME'TTE. n. s. [French.] A word introduced by cooks, and the pupils of cooks, for the stink of meat.

A haunch of ven'son made her sweat,
Unless it had the right fumette. Swift.

FUMID. adj. [fumidus, Latin.] Smoky;
vaporous.

A crass and fumid exhalation is caused from the combat of the sulphur and iron with the acid and nitrous spirit of aqua fortis. Brown, Vulg. Err.

FUMIDITY. n. s. [from fumid.] Smokiness;
tendency to smoke. Dict.

To FU'MIGATE. v. n. [from fumus, Lat.
fumiger, French.]

1. To smoke; to perfume by smoke or vapour.

Would'st thou preserve thy famish'd family,
With fragrant thyme the city fumigate,
And break the waxen walls to save the state.

Dryden, Virg.

2. To medicate or heal by vapours.

FUMIGATION. n. s. [fumigatio, Latin;
fumigation, French; from fumigate.]

1. Scents raised by fire.

Fumigations, often repeated, are very beneficial.
Arbuthnot.

My fumigation is to Venus, just
The souls of roses, and red coral's dust:
And, last, to make my fumigation good,
'Tis mixt with sparrows brains and pigeons blood.

Dryden.

2. The application of medicines to the body in fumes.

FU'MING.* n. s. [from fume.]

1. The act of scenting by smoke.

The fuming of the holes with brimstone, garlick, or other unsavory things will drive moles out of the ground. Mortimer, Husbandry.

2. Fume; idle conceit.

O Fancie fond, thy fumings bath me fed!
The stinking stench of thine inclined head,
Hath poisoned all the virtues in my breast.

Mir. for Mag. p. 250.

FU'MINGLY. adv. [from fume.] Angrily;
in a rage.

That which we move for our better learning and instruction sake, turneth unto anger and choler in them: they grow altogether out of quietness with it; they answer fumingly, that they are ashamed to defile their pens with making answer to such idle questions. Hooker.

FU'MISH.* adj. [from fume.] Smoky; also hot, choleric. Cotgrave in V. Fumeux, and Sherwood.

One loves soft musick and sweet melody;
Another is perhaps melancholike;
Another fumish is, and cholericke.

Mir. for Mag. p. 158.

FU'MITER. n. s. A plant.

Why, he was met even now,
As mad as the vext sea; singing aloud,
Grav'd with rank fumiter and furrow-weeds.

Shakespeare.

FU'MITORY.* See FUMATORY.

FU'MOUS. } adj. [fumeux, French; from FU'MY. { fume.] Producing fumes.
 From dice and wine the youth retir'd to rest,
 And puff'd the fumy god from out his breast:
 Ev'n then he dreamt of drink and lively play;
 More lucky had it lasted 'till the day.

Dryden, Æn.

FUN.† n. s. [A low cant word, Dr. Johnson says. It is probably from the Sax. fæn, merry, glad.] Sport; high merriment; frolicsome delight.

Don't mind me, though, for all my fun and jokes,

You bards may find us bloods good-natur'd folks.

More.

FUNAMBULATORY.* adj. [Lat. funambulus.]

1. Narrow, like the walk of a rope dancer.
 Tread softly and circumspectly in this funambulatory track and narrow path of goodness.

Brown, Chr. Mor. i. l.

2. Performing like a rope-dancer.
 There were funambulatory elephants, as we are informed by Suetonius.

Chambers.

FUNAMBULIST.* n. s. [Lat. funambulus; whether coined by the writer, in the following passage, who has thought proper to ridicule the style of Johnson, I know not.] A rope dancer.

What man will withhold from the funambulist the praise of justice, who considers his inflexible uprightness!

The Looker-on, No. 80.

FUNAMBULO.* } n. s. [old French.
FUNAMBULUS. } funambule; Lat.
funambulus, from funis, a rope, and ambulo, to walk.] A rope-dancer.

We see the industry and practice of tumblers and funambulus.

Bacon, Disc. touching

Helps for the Intell. Powers.

I see him walking not like a funambulus upon a cord, but upon the edge of a razor.

Wotton, Rem. p. 365.

FUNCTION. n. s. [functio, Latin.]

1. Discharge; performance.

There is hardly a greater difference between two things than there is between a representing commoner in the function of his public calling, and the same person in common life.

Swift.

2. Employment; office.

The ministry is not now bound to any one tribe: now none is secluded from that function of any degree, state, or calling.

Whitgift.

You have paid the heav'n's your function, and the prisoner the very debt of your calling.

Shakespeare, Meas. for Meas.

Nor was it any policy, or ostinacy, or partiality of affection either to the men or their function, which fixed me.

King Charles.

This double function of the goddess gives a considerable light and beauty to the ode which Horace has addressed to her.

Addison, on Italy.

Let not these indignities discourage us from asserting the just privileges and pre-eminence of our holy function and character.

Atterbury.

3. Single act of any office.

Without difference those functions cannot, in orderly sort, be executed.

Hooker.

They have several offices and prayers against fire, tempests, and especially for the dead, in which functions they use sacerdotal garments.

Stillingfleet.

4. Trade; occupation.

Follow your function; go, and batten on cold bits.

Shakespeare.

5. Office of any particular part of the body.

The bodies of men and other animals are excellently well fitted for life and motion; and the several parts of them well adapted to their particular functions.

Bentley, Serm.

6. Power; faculty; either animal or intellectual.

Tears in his eyes, distraction in his aspect,
 A broken voice, and his whole function suiting
 With forms to his conceit. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

Nature seems

In all her functions weary of herself:

My race of glory run, and race of shame;

And I shall shortly be with them that rest.

Milton, S. A.

Whatever warms the heart, or fills the head,

As the mind opens, and its functions spread,

Imagination plies her dang'rous art,

And pours it all upon the peccant part.

Pope.

Though every human constitution is morbid, yet are their diseases consistent with the common functions of life.

Arbutnot.

FUNCTIONARY.* n. s. [from function.]

1. One who is charged with an office or employment.

2. That which performs any office.

FUND. n. s. [fond, French; funda, a bag, Latin.]

1. Stock; capital; that by which any expense is supported.

He touches the passions more delicately than Ovid, and performs all this out of his own fund, without diving into the arts and sciences for a supply.

Dryden.

Part must be left, a fund when foes invade,

And part employ'd to roll the watry tide.

Dryden.

In preaching, no men succeed better than those who trust entirely to the stock or fund of their own reason, advanced indeed, but not overlaid by commerce with books.

Swift.

2. Stock or bank of money.

As my estate has been hitherto either tost upon seas, or fluctuating in funds, it is now fixed in substantial acres.

Addison.

TO FUND.* v. a. [from the noun.] To place money in the funds either of a company, a corporation, or the publick.

FUNDAMENT.† n. s. [old French, fundement; Lat. fundamentum.]

1. Originally, foundation.

And yet, God wot, uneth the fundament Performed is.

Chaucer, Sompn. Tale.

2. The back part of the body.

The angry beast did straight resent

The wrong done to his fundament,

Began to kick, &c.

Hudibras, i. ii. 846.

FUNDAMENTAL. adj. [fundamentalis, Lat.]

Serving for the foundation; that upon which the rest is built; essential; important; not merely accidental.

Until this can be agreed upon, one main and fundamental cause of the most grievous war is not like to be taken from the earth.

Raleigh, Ess.

You that will be less fearful than discreet,

That love the fundamental part of state,

More than you doubt the charge of 't.

Shakspeare, Coriol.

Others, when they were brought to allow the throne vacant, thought the succession should go to the next heir, according to the fundamental laws of the kingdom, as if the last king were actually dead.

Swift, Examiner.

Gain some general and fundamental truths, both in philosophy, in religion, and in human life.

Watts.

Such we find they are, as can controul
 The servile actions of our wav'ring soul,
 Can fright, can alter, or can chain the will;
 Their ills all built on life, that fundamental ill.

Prior.

Yet some there were among the sounder few,
 Of those who less presum'd and better knew,
 Who durst assert the juster ancient cause,
 And here restor'd wit's fundamental laws.

Pope.

FUNDAMENTAL. n. s. Leading proposition; important and essential part which is the groundwork of the rest.

We propose the question, whether those who hold the fundamentals of faith may deny Christ damnably in respect of superstructures and consequences that arise from them.

South.

It is a very just reproach, that there should be so much violence and hatred in religious matters among men who agree in all fundamentals, and only differ in some ceremonies, or mere speculative points.

Swift.

FUNDAMENTALLY. adv. [from fundamental.] Essentially; originally.

As virtue is seated fundamentally in the intellect, so perspective in the fancy; so that virtue is the force of reason, in the conduct of our actions and passions to a good end.

Grew.

Religion is not only useful to civil society, but fundamentally necessary to its very birth and constitution.

Bentley.

The unlimited power placed fundamentally in the body of a people, the legislators endeavour to deposite in such hands as would preserve the people.

Swift.

FUNEBRIAL.* adj. [funebre, Fr. funeris, Lat.] Belonging to funerals.

Their garlands — were convivial, festival, sacrificial, nuptial, honorary, funerib.

Sir T. Brown, Miscell. p. 91.

Their funerib. garlands had little of beauty in them beside roses, while they made them of myrtle, rosemary, apium, &c. under symbolical intimations.

Ibid.

FUNE'BRIOUS.* adj. [funeris, Lat.] Used at the ceremony of burying the dead.

His body was afterwards interred with funerib. exequies and solemnities.

Mercurius Rusticus, in 1644.

FUN'ERAL.† n. s. [funerailes, French; funus, Latin; from funale, a torch or link made of a cord (funis) with wax or resin about it; funerals being anciently solemnized, among the Romans, in the night time with torches.

The word funeral, Mr. Malone says, was, agreeably to its French origin (funerailes), almost always used in the plural, previous to the Restoration. But this is not the case. The singular is found repeatedly in Barret's Alveary of 1580: "Friends come together to set forth the solemnization of his funeral." Again, in Sherwood's Dict. 1632. "A funeral," and "Of a funeral."] 1. The solemnization of a burial; the payment of the last honours to the dead; obsequies.

Here, under leave of Brutus, and the rest,
 Come I to speak in Cesar's funeral.

Shakspeare, Jul. Ces.

All things that we ordained festival,
 Turn from their office to black funeral.

Shakspeare.

He that had cast out many unburied, had none to mourn for him, nor any solemn funerals, nor sepulchre with his fathers.

2 Mac. v. 10.

No widow at his funeral shall weep.

Sandys.

2. The pomp or procession with which the dead are carried.

The long fun'als blacken all the way.

Pope.

You are sometimes desirous to see a funeral pass by in the street.

Swift, Direct. to the Chambermaid.

3. Burial; interment.

May he find his funeral
 I' th' sands, when he before his day shall fall.

Denham.

FUNERAL.† adj.

1. Used at the ceremony of interring the dead.

Our instruments to melancholy bells,
Our wedding cheer to a sad funeral feast.

Shakespeare.

Let such honours

And funeral rites, as to his birth and virtues

Are due, be first perform'd. Denham, Sophy.

Thy hand o'er towns the funeral torch displays,
And forms a thousand hills ten thousand ways.

Dryden.

2. Mourning.

To converse with his friends and standers by so as may do them comfort, and ease their funeral and civil complaints.

Bp. Taylor, Holy Dying, vi. § 3.

To FUNERATE.* v. a. [Latin, funeratus.] To bury. Cockeram.

FUNERATION.* n. s. [Lat. funeratio.] The solemnization of a funeral.

In the rites of funeratio they did use to anoint
the dead body with aromatick spices and ointments, before they buried them. And so was it the Jewish custom to perform their funerals.

Knatchbull, Annot. N. Test. p. 41.

FUNERAL.† adj. [Latin, funereus, Lat.] Suidj
a funeral; dark; dismal.

But if his soul hath wing'd the destin'd flight,

Inhabitant of deep disastrous night,

Homeward with pious send repossess the main,

To the pale shade funeral rites ordain.

Poey, Odyssey.

FUNEST.* adj. [Latin, funeste, Fr. funestus, Lat.]
Doleful; lamentable.

The violent ends or downfalls of great princes, the subversion of kingdoms and estates, or whatever else can be imagined of funest or tragical.

Phillips, Theat. Poet. Pref.

The bay is ominous of some funeral accident.

Evelyn, Sylt. p. 396.

FUNGE.* n. s. [Lat. fungus.] A block-head; a dolt; a fool.

A very idiot, a fungus, a golden ass.

Burton, Anat of Mel. To the Reader.

They are mad, empty vessels, funges, beside themselves, derided. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 122.

FUNGOSITY.† n. s. [old Fr. fungosité, from fungus, Lat.] Unsolid excrement.

Dict.

Eggs cast into the matrix of the earth, or certain little pustules and fungosities on its surface.

Biblioth. Bibl. (Ox. 1720.) i. 292.

FUNGOUS.† adj. [Latin, fungeus, Fr. from fungus, Lat.] Excrement; spongy; wanting firmness.

The second instrument of the voice is the tongue;
and this, by reason of its fungous substance and volubility, is so meet and so principal an agent therein, that speech itself, and all the variety thereof, doth among all sorts of men go by the name of the tongue.

Smith, Portr. of Old Age, p. 137.

It is often employed to keep down the fungous lips that spread upon the bone; but it is much more painful than the escharotick medicines.

Sharp, Surgery.

The meener productions of the French and English press; that fungous growth of novels and of pamphlets.

Harris, Hermes, B. 3.

FUNGUS. n. s. [Latin.] Strictly a mushroom: a word used to express such excrescences of flesh as grow out upon the lips of wounds, or any other excrement from trees or plants not naturally belonging to them; as the agrick from the larch-tree, and au-riculæ Judææ from elder. Quincy.

The surgeon ought to vary the diet as the fibres lengthen too much, are too fluid, and produce funguses, or as they harden and produce callosities.

Arbuthnot on Diet.

This eminence is composed of little points, or granula, called fungus, or proud flesh. Sharp.

FUNICLE. n. s. [Latin, funiculus, Lat.] A small cord; a small ligature; a fibre.

FUNICULAR.† adj. [Latin, funiculaire, Fr. from funicle.] Consisting of a small cord or fibre.

FUNK.† n. s. A stink. A low word.
Dr. Johnson. — Serenius deduces it from the Icel. funna, to putrify. Lye, from fonck, an old Flemish word, implying confusion, perplexity; and he adds, that "to be in a funk" is a common academical expression at Oxford.
See the verb neuter, which Mr. Mason and others have illustrated by an aca-demical epigram. Funk in the Pr.
Parv. is a "lytell fyre."

To FUNK.* v. a. [See the noun.] To poison with an offensive smell.

Tobacco strives to vex

A numerous squadron of the tender sex;

What with strong smoke, and with his stronger breath,

He funks Basketia and her son to death.

King, The Furmety, C. iii.

To FUNK.* v. n. [from the noun.] To stink through fear.

The best part of the veal, and the Greek for hunc,
is the name of a man that makes us funk.

Epigram on J. Burton, when Proctor at Oxford.

FUNNEL. n. s. [Latin, infundibulum, Lat. whence fundible, fundle, funnel.]

1. An inverted hollow cone with a pipe descending from it, through which liquors are poured into vessels with narrow mouths; a tundish.

If you pour a glat of water upon a bottle, it receives little of it; but with a funnel, and by degrees, you shall fill many of them.

B. Jonson, Discoveries.

Some the long funnel's curious mouth extend,
Through which ingested meats with ease descend.

Blackmore.

The outward ear or auricula is made hollow, and contracted by degrees, to draw the sound inward, to take in as much as may be of it, as we use a funnel to pour liquor into any vessel.

Ray on the Creation.

2. A pipe or passage of communication.

Towards the middle are two large funnels, bored through the roof of the grotto, to let in light or fresh air. Addison.

FUNNY.* adj. [from fun.] Comical; a northern word, and now common in colloquial language.

I have done his sermon more honour than is really its due, in wasting a whole day in writing some funny remarks upon it.

Rem. on a Sermon. at All Souls' Coll. in 1759, p. 22.

FUNNY.* n. s. A low term for a light boat; a kind of wherry.

FUR.† n. s. [Latin, furrure, French. Dr. Johnson.
— Fourrure is derived by Du Cange from the low Lat. furrura, a clothing of skins. In like manner our word may be deduced from the low Lat. furra, a hairy skin. But the word is perhaps of northern origin. Su. Goth. fodr, "subteg-men vestium," Serenius. The M. Goth.
fodr is the sheath of a sword, and the
Sax. fobbe, a quiver; "because," according to Mr. Callander, "the first quivers, and sheaths for swords, were made of skins, as foder signifies vellis, pellis, [a skin;] Fr. feutre, [felt;] English, fur."] Swift.

1. Skin with soft hair with which garments are lined for warmth, or covered for ornament.

fearful countenance; as also at his back a bundle of holly, holding in fur mittens the sign of Capricorn. Peachment on Drawing.

'Tis but dressing up a bird of prey in his cap and furs to make a judge of him. L'Estrange.

And lordly got wrapt up in fur.

And wheezing asthma, loth to stir. Swift.

2. Soft hair of beasts found in cold countries, where nature provides coats suitable to the weather; hair in general.

This night wherein the cubdrawn bear would couch,

The lion and the belly-pinched wolf
Keep their fur dry, unbonneted he runs,
And bids what will take all. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

Such animals as feed upon flesh qualify it, the one by swallowing the hair or fur of the beasts they prey upon, the other by devouring some part of the feathers of the birds they gorge themselves with. Ray on the Creation.

3. Any moisture exhaled to such a degree as that the remainder sticks on the part.

Methinks I am not right in ev'ry part;
I feel a kind of trembling at my heart:
My pulse unequal, and my breath is strong;
Besides a filthy fur upon my tongue. Dryd. Pers.

4. Fur is used in the north of England for furrow, and is supported by the etymology. See FURROW.

To FUR.† v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To line or cover with skins that have soft hair.

How mad a sight it was to see Dametas, like rich tissue furred with lambskins? Sidney.

Through tatter'd clothes small voices do appear;

Robes and furred gowns hide all. Shaksp. K. Lear.

You are for dreams and slumbers, brother priest;

You fur your gloves with slumbers.

Shakespeare, Troil. and Cress.

2. To cover with soft matter.

To make lamplack, take a torch and hold it under the bottom of a latten bason; and, as it growth to be furred and black within, strike it with a feather into some shell. Peachment.

The sisters, mourning for their brother's loss,
Their bodies hid in bark, and furred with moss.

Dryden.

Their frying blood compels to irrigate
Their dry furred tongues. Philips.

A dungeon wide and horrible; the walls

On all sides furred with mouldy damp, and hung

With clots of rosy gore. Addison.

FUR.† adv. [It is now commonly written fur.] At a distance.

The white lovely dove

Doth on her wings her utmost swiftness prove,

Finding the gripe of falcon fierce not fur. Sidney.

FUR-WROUGHT.† adj. [Latin, fur and wrought.]
Made of fur.

Silent along the mazy margin stray,

And with the fur-wrought fly delude the prey.

Gay, Pastorals.

FURA'CIOUS.† adj. [Latin, furax, Lat.] Thievish; inclined to steal. Dict.

To FURBISH. v. a. [fourbir, Fr.] To burnish; to polish; to rub to brightness.

It may enter Mowbray's waxen coat,
And furbish new the name of John o' Gaunt. Shakespeare, Rich. II.
Furbish the spears, and put on the brigandines. Jer. xlv. 4.

Some others who furbish up and reprint his old errors, hold, that the sufferings of the damned are not to be, in a strict sense, eternal; but that, after a certain period of time, there shall be a general gaol-delivery of the souls in prison, and that not for a farther execution, but a final release. South.

As after Numa's peaceful reign,
The martial Ancus did the sceptre wield,
Furbish'd the rusty sword again,
Resum'd the long-forgotten shield,
And led the Latins to the dusty field. Dryden.
Inferior ministers, for Mars repair
His broken axle-tree, and blunted war;
And send him forth again, with furbish'd arms. Dryden.

FURBISHABLE. * adj. [from furbish.] That may be polished. Sherwood.

Addison, Freeholder.

FURLOUGH. n. s. [verlof, Dutch, leave.] A temporary dismissal from military service; a licence given to a soldier to be absent.

Brutus and Cato might discharge their souls,
And give them furlough for another world;
But we, like sentries, are oblig'd to stand
In starless nights, and wait th' appointed hour. Dryden.

FURMENTY. † n. s. [More properly frumenty, or frumty, of frumentum, Latin. Dr. Johnson. — This method of writing the word was probably adopted from the ancient French furment, wheat; it is also sometimes written furmetty.] Food made by boiling wheat in milk.

Remember, wife, therefore, though I do it not,
The seed-cake, the pasties, and furmenty pot. Tusser.

He'll find you out a food,
That needs no teeth nor stomach; a strange furmetty
Will feed ye up as fat as hens i' the forehead.
Beaum. and Fl. Bonduca.

FURMETTY. * See FURMENTY and FRUMENTY.

FURNACE. n. s. [furnus, Latin.] An enclosed fireplace.

No man can transport his large retinue, his sumptuous fare, and his rich furniture into another world.

South.

There are many noble palaces in Venice: their furniture is not very rich, if we except the pictures.

Addison.

2. Appendages.

By a general conflagration mankind shall be destroyed, with the form and all the furniture of the earth.

Tillotson.

3. Equipage; embellishments; decorations.

Young Clarion, with vauntful lustyhead,
And after his guise did cast abroad to fare,
And thereto gan his furnishings prepare.

Spenser.

The duke is coming: see the barge be ready,
And fit it with such furniture as suits
The greatness of his person.

Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

The ground must be of a mixt brown, and large enough, or the horse's furniture must be of very sensible colours.

Dryden.

4. Materials for work of any kind.

He disclaims all assistance; he'll decide upon all points freely and supinely by himself; without furniture, without proper materials.

Bentley, Phil. Lips. § 1.

FURTHER.† adj. [from forth, not from far as is commonly imagined; forth, further, furthest, corrupted from forther, forthest, popðen, Saxon. Forther is used by Sir Thomas More. See FORTH and

FARTHER, of which the examples are to be referred to this word.

1. At a greater distance.

2. Beyond this.

What further need have we of witnesses.

St. Mat. xxvi. 65.

Satan had journey'd on pensive and slow;

But further way found none, so thick intwin'd,

As one continu'd brake, the undergrowth

Of shrubs and tangling bushes had perplex'd

All path of man or beast that pass'd that way.

Milton, P. L.

Their earnest eyes they fix'd, imagining

For one forbidden tree a multitude

Now ris'n, to work them further woe or shame.

Milton, P. L.

3. Further has in some sort the force of a substantive in the phrase no further for nothing further; and in what further for something further.

Let this appease

Thy doubt, since human reach no further knows.

Milton, P. L.

I may meet

Some wandering spirit of heaven by fountain side,

Or in thick shade retir'd, from him, to draw

What further would be learn'd.

Milton, P. L.

FURTHER. adv. [from forth.] To a greater distance.

And the angel of the Lord went further, and stood in a narrow place.

Numb. xxii. 2.

TO FURTHER. v. a. [from the adverb; popðman, Saxon.] To put onward; to forward; to promote; to countenance; to assist; to help.

Things thus set in order, in quiet and rest,
Shall further thy harvest, and pleasure the best.

Tusser.

Could their fond superstition have furthered so great attempts, without the mixture of a true persuasion concerning the irresistible force of divine power.

Hooker.

Grant not, O Lord, the desires of the wicked; further not his wicked device.

Ps. cxl. 8.

This binds me then to further my design,
As I am bound by vow to further thine.

Dryd.

FURTHERANCE. n. s. [from further.]

Promotion; advancement; help.

The Gauls learned them first, and used them only for the furtherance of their trade and private business.

Spenser.

Our diligence must search out all helps and furtherances of direction, which scriptures, councils, fathers, histories, the laws and practices of all churches afford.

Hooker.

For gain and work, and success in his affairs, he seeketh furtherance of him that hath no manner of power.

Hooker.

Cannot my body, nor blood sacrifice,
Intreat you to your wouted furtherance?

Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

If men were minded to live righteously, to believe a God would be no hindrance or prejudice to any such design, but very much for the advancement and furtherance of it.

Tillotson.

FURTHERER. n. s. [from further.] Promoter; advancer.

That earnest favourer and furtherer of God's true religion, that faithful servitor to his prince and country.

Ascham.

Dart furtive beams and glory not their own,

All servants to that source of light, the sun? Prior.

FURUNCLE. n. s. [furuncle, Fr. furunculus, Lat.] A bile; an angry pustule.

A furuncle is in its beginning round, hard, and inflamed; and as it increases, it riseth up with an acute head, and sometimes a pustule; and then it is more inflamed and painful, when it arrives at its state, which is about the eighth or ninth day.

Wismann, Surgery.

FURY.† n. s. [Fr. furie, madness, Cotgrave; furor, Lat.]

1. Madness.

It is a tale

Told by an idiot; full of sound and fury,

Signifying nothing.

Shakspeare, Macbeth.

2. Rage; passion of anger; tumult of mind approaching to madness.

I do oppose my patience to his fury; and am arm'd

To suffer with a quietness of spirit
The very tyranny and rage of his.

Shakespeare, Merch. of Ven.

He hath given me to know the natures of living creatures, and the furies of wild beasts.

Wisd. vii. 20.

3. Enthusiasm; exaltation of fancy.

Taking up the lute, her wit began to be with a divine fury inspired; and her voice would, in so belov'd an occasion, second her wit. Sidney.

A sybil that had number'd in the world
The sun to course two hundred compasses,
In her prophetic fury sew'd the work.

Shakespeare, Othello.

Greater than human kind she seem'd to look;
And with an accent more than mortal spoke;
Her staring eyes with sparkling fury roll,
When all the god came rushing on her soul.

Dryden, Æn.

4. [From furia, Latin.] One of the deities of vengeance, and thence a stormy, turbulent, violent, raging woman.

The sight of any of the house of York,
Is as a fury to torment my soul. Shak. Hen. VI.
It was the most proper place for a fury to make her exit; and I believe every reader's imagination is pleas'd when he sees the angry goddess thus sinking in a tempest, and plunging herself into hell, amidst such a scene of horror and confusion.

Addison on Italy.

FURYLIKE.* adj. [fury and like.] Raving, raging like one of the Furies.

Come and possess my happy breast,
Not furylike in flames and fire,
In rapture, rage, and nonsense dream.

Thomson's Song.

FURZE. n. s. [Fýr, Saxon; genista spinosa, Latin.] Gorse; goss.

The whole plant is very thorny: the flowers, which are of the pea-bloom kind, are disposed in short thick spikes, which are succeeded by short compressed pods, in each of which are contained three or four kidney-shaped seeds. Miller.

Carry out gravel to fill up a hole,
Both timber and furzing, the turf and the cole.

Tusser.

For fewel, therio groweth great store of furze,
of which the shrubby sort is called tame, and the better grown French. Carew, Survey of Cornwall.

TO FUSE. v. n. To be melted; to be capable of being liquified by heat.

FUSÉE. n. s. [fuseau, French.]

1. The cone round which is wound the cord or chain of a clock or watch.

The reason of the motion of the balance is by the motion of the next wheel, and that by the motion of the next, and that by the motion of the fusee, and that by the motion of the spring: the whole frame of the watch carries a reasonableness in it, the passive impression of the intellectual idea that was in the artist. Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

2. A firelock [from fusil, Fr.] A small neat musquet. This is more properly written fusil.

FUSEE of a bomb or granado shell, is that which makes the whole powder or composition in the shell take fire, to do the designed execution.
'Tis usually a wooden pipe or tap filled with wildfire, or some such matter; and is intended to burn no longer than is the time of the motion of the bomb from the mouth of the mortar to the place where it is to fall, which time Anderson makes twenty-seven seconds. Harris.

FUSÉE. Track of a buck. Ainsworth.

FUSIBLE.* adj. [Fr. fusible.] This is one of our oldest words: "Metal fusible." Chaucer, Chan. Yeom. Tale.] Capable of being melted; capable of being made liquid by heat.

Colours afforded by metalline bodies, either colliquate with or otherwise penetrate into other bodies, especially fusible ones. Boyle.

FUSIBILITY. n. s. [from fusible.] Capacity of being melted; quality of growing liquid by heat.

The ancients observing in that material a kind of metalline nature, or at least a fusibility, seem to have resolved it into a nobler use.

Wotton, Architecture.

The bodies of most use, that are sought for out of the depths of the earth, are the metals, which are distinguished from other bodies by their weight, fusibility, and malleableness. Locke.

FUSIL. adj. [fusile, French; fusilis, Latin.]

1. Capable of being melted; liquifiable by heat.

Some, less skilful, fancy these scapi that occur in most of the larger Gothick buildings of England are artificial: and will have it, that they are a kind of fusil marble. Woodward.

2. Running by the force of heat.

The liquid ore he drain'd
Into fit molds prepar'd; from which he form'd
First his own tools: then, what might else be wrought

Perpetual flames,
O'er sand and ashes, and the stubborn flint,
Prevailing, turn into a fusil sea. Philips.

FUSIL.† n. s.

1. A firelock; a small neat musquet. [Fr. fusil, formerly a fire-steel for a tinder-box. Cotgrave.]

2. [In heraldry; from fuseau or fusee, a spindle.] Something like a spindle.

Fusils must be made long, and small in the middle;
in the ancient coat of Montague, argent three fusils in fesse gules. Peacham on Blazoning.

FUSILER. n. s. [from fusil.] A soldier armed with a fusil; a musketeer.

FUSION. n. s. [fusio, Latin; fusion, French.]

1. The act of melting.

2. The state of being melted, or of running with heat.

Metals in fusion do not flame for want of a copious fume except spelter, which fumes copiously, and thereby flames. Newton, Opticks.

FUSOME.* adj. Handsome; neat; notable; tidy. A northern word, of which I know not the origin. But the word is given by Grose and Brockett, and in the Westmoreland Glossary.

FUSS.† n. s. [A low cant word, Dr. Johnson says. It is, however, a regularly descended northern word; Sax. fup, prompt, eager; Su. Goth. and Cimbr.
fus, the same; hence the Sax. fýan, to hasten, and the Su. Goth. fýsa, the same.] A tumult; a bustle.

End as it befits your station;

Come to use and application;

Nor with senates keep a fuss:

I submit, and answer thus. Swift.

TO FU'SSLE.* See FUZZLE.

FU'SSOCK.* n. s. [Of unknown derivation.]

A large gross woman. A northern word.
Grose, and the Craven dialect. But the Lancashire dialect calls "fussock a term of derision, generally, for fat and idle persons."

FUST.† n. s.

1. The trunk or body of a column. [fuste, Fr. literally, a cask.]

The bases of a number of columns remain in their original position, and their broken fusts lie scattered around.

Drummond's Travels, Lett. xi. (1748.)

2. A strong smell, as that of a mouldy barrel. [Fr. fusté, taking of the cask.]

TO FUSTR.* v. n. [from the noun. See also TO FOIST.] To grow mouldy; to smell ill.

Sure he, that made us with such large discourse
Looking before and after, gave us not
That capability of godlike reason

To feed in us unfin'd. Shakespeare, Hamlet.

FUSTED.* adj. [Fr. fusté.] Mouldy; stinking.

His blown ware

Of fusted hops, now lost for lack of sale.

Bp. Hall, Sat. iv. 5.

FUSTIAN.† n. s. [Fr. fustaine. From the low Lat. fustanum, according to Menage, formed from fustis, on account of the tree on which the cotton grows;

from fustat, Arabick, according to Boc-hart, which means the city of Memphis, where cotton is produced in abundance.]

1. A kind of cloth made of linen and cotton, and perhaps now of cotton only.

Is supper ready, the house trimm'd, the serving-men in their new fustian and their white stockings?

Shakespeare.

2. A high swelling kind of writing made up of heterogeneous parts, or of words and ideas ill associated; bombast.

Nor will you raise in me combustion,

By dint of high heroic fustian. Hudibras.

What fustian have I heard these gentlemen find out in Mr. Cowley's odes! In general, I will say, that nothing can appear more beautiful to me than the strength of those images which they condemn.

Dryden.

Fustian is thoughts and words ill sorted, and without the least relation to each other. Dryden.

Chance thoughts, when govern'd by the close,

Of rise to fustian, or descend to prose. Smith.

FUSTIAN. adj. [from the noun.]

1. Made of fustian.

2. Swelling; unnaturally pompous; ridiculously tumid. Used of stile.

When men argue, th' greatest part

O' th' contest falls on terms of art,

Until the fustian stuff be spent,

And then they fall to th' argument. Hudibras.

Virgil, if he could have seen the first verses of the Sylva, would have thought Statius mad in his fustian description of the statue on the brazen horse. Dryden, Du Fresnoy.

FUSTIANIST.* n. s. [from fustian.] One who writes bombast.

Preferring the gay rankness of Apuleius, Arnobius, or any modern fustianist, before the native Latinisms of Cicero. Milt. Apol. for Smeethymnus.

FUSTICK.† n. s. A sort of wood brought from the West-Indies, used in dying of cloth. Dict.

Next to galls old fustick increases the weight about $1\frac{1}{2}$ in 12. Sprat, Hist. R. S. p. 305.

TO FUSTIGATE. v. a. [fustigo, Lat.] To beat with a stick; to cane. Dict.

FUSTIGATION.* n. s. [from fustigate. Fr. fustigation, Cotgrave.] An ancient custom of punishing with a cudgel; the act of beating with a stick; also, a penance enjoined by the Roman inquisition.

They punished such as swore falsely by their prince with fustigation.

Abp. Sancauto, Mod. Pol. 1657, § 7. Fasting and fustigation may do something.

Tobin, Honey Moon. p. 41.

FUSTILARIAN. n. s. [from fusty.] A low fellow; a stinkard; a scoundrel. A word used by Shakspeare only.

Away, you scullion, you rampallian, you fustilarium; I'll tickle your catastrophe.

Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

FUSTILUG, or FUSTILUGS.* n. s. [from fusty.] This choice expression has some advantage over fustilarian in having been placed in our old dictionaries, as well as used by a very sensible writer! Sherswood and Cotgrave both give it; and the latter defines it, under the word coche, "a woman grown fat by ease and laziness." In the Exmouth dialect, fustilugs is "a big-boned person." A gross, fat, unwieldy person.

You may daily see such fustilugs walking in the streets, like so many tuns, each moving upon two pottle-pots. Junius, Sin Stigmatized, (1639, p. 39.

FUSTINESS.† n. s. [from fusty.] Mouldiness; stink. Sherwood.

FUSTY. adj. [from fust.] Ill-smelling; mouldy.

Hector shall have a great catch, if he knock out either of your brains: he were as good crack a fusty nut with no kernel. Shaks. Troil. and Cress. The fusty plebeians hate thin honours.

Shakspeare, Coriol.

The large Achilles, at this fusty stuff, From his deep chest laughs out a loud applause.

Shakspeare.

FUTILE.† adj. [futile, French; futiles, Latin.]

1. Talkative; loquacious.

One futile person, that maketh it his glory to tell, will do more hurt than many that know it their duty to conceal. Bacon.

2. Trifling; worthless; of no weight.

The word may have some allusion to the vessel called futile, used in the sacrifice of Vesta, of that narrow bottom that it could not stand, but was forced to be held up. Thus say, a man is futile; and, by alluding to a vessel, you call him a leaking, vain, dissolute fellow; a cracked vessel; he still runs out.

Wake, Rationale on Texts of Script. (1701, p. 234.

The sons of earth, the vulgar crew,
Anxious for futile gains, beneath me stray,
And seek with erring step contentment's obvious way. Shenstone, Ode after Sickness, (1749.)

FUTILITY. n. s. [futilité, French; from futile.]

1. Talkativeness; loquacity.

This fable does not strike so much at the futility of women, as at the incontinent levity of a prying humour. L'Estrange.

2. Triflingness; want of weight; want of solidity.

Trifling futility appears in their signs of the zodiac, and their mutual relations and aspects.

Bentley.

FUTILOUS.* adj. [Lat. futilis.] Worthless; trifling. Not now in use.

I received your answer to that futulous pamphlet. Howell, Lett. ii. 48.

God implants no instincts in his creatures that are futulous and vain. Granville, Sermon, p. 287.

FUTTOCKS. n. s. [corrupted from foot hooks. Skinner.] The lower timbers that hold the ship together.

FUTURE.† adj. [futurus, Latin; futur, French.] This word had formerly the Latin accent on the last syllable, of which Milton affords perhaps the latest example, P. L. x. 840.] That which will be hereafter; to come: as, the future state.

Glory they sung to the most High! good will To future men, and in their dwellings peace.

Milton, P. L.

He sows the teeth at Pallas's command.
And flings the future people from his hand.

Addison, Ovid.

Do and have make the present time; did, had, the past; shall, will, the future.

Louth, Introd. Eng. Grammar.

FUTURE. n. s. [from the adjective.] Time to come; somewhat to happen hereafter.

The letters have transported me beyond This ign'rant present time; and I feel now The future in the instant. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

The mind, once jaded by an attempt above its power, either is disabled for the future, or else checks at any vigorous undertaking ever after.

Locke.

FUTURELY.† adv. from future.] In time to come.

This prescience of God, as it is prescience, is not the cause of any thing futurely succeeding; neither doth God's foreknowledge impose any necessity, or bind.

Raleigh.

It more imports me Than all the actions that I have foregone,
Or futurely can hope.

Beaumont and Fl. Two Noble Kinsmen.

FUTURITION.† n. s. [old Fr. futurition.] The state of being to be; the condition of being to come to pass hereafter.

The time expressed denotes the futurition at the latter day. Pearson on the Creed, Art. ii.

It is imaginable, that the great means of the world's redemption should rest only in the number of possibilities, and hang so loose in respect of its futurition, as to leave the event in an equal poise, whether ever there should be such a thing or no?

South, Sermon, i. 285.

FUTURITY. n. s. [from future.] 1. Time to come.

Not my service past, nor present sorrows,
Nor purpos'd merit in futurity,
Can ransom me. Shakspeare, Othello.

I will contrive some way to make it known to futurity, that I had your lordship for my patron. Swift.

2. Event to come.

All futurities are naked before that All-seeing Eye, the sight of which is no more hindered by distance of time than the sight of an angel can be determined by distance of place. South.

This, great Amphiarus, lay hid from thee,
Though skill'd in fate and dark futurity.

Pope, Statius.

3. The state of being to be; futuration.

It may be well reckoned among the bare possibilities, which never commence into a futurity; it requiring such a free, sedate and intent mind, as it may be, is no where found but among the platonic ideas. Granville, Scepis.

TO FUZZ.† v. n. [without etymology, Dr. Johnson says; but it may be referred perhaps to the same original as fizz is. See To FIZZ.] To fly out in small particles.

TO FUZZ.* v. a. To make drunk. See To FUZZLE. A low word.

The University troop dined with the Earl of Abingdon, and came home well fuzzed.

A. Wood's Life, by himself, p. 543.

FUZZBALL. n. s. [fuzz and ball.] A kind of fungus, which, when pressed, bursts and scatters dust in the eyes.

TO FUZZLE.* v. a. [Gr. φουζα, to swell out.] To make drunk. Sherwood.

Having liberally taken his liquor, my fine scholar was so fuzzed, that he was no sooner laid in bed, but he fell fast asleep.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 604.

FUZZY.* adj. [Teut. voose turven, fuzzy or fozy turves, Dr. Jamieson.] Light and spongy. A northern word. Craven dialect, and Brockett. By the latter written also fozy.

FY.† interj. [This term of abhorrence is found in many languages, and is of great age in our own. Chaucer uses it; Wicliffe, the similar expression, fugh. Gr. φύ; Lat. phy; old Fr. fy; Ital. and modern Fr. fi; Span. fai; Welsh, ffei; Flem. foei. Our own word is often written fie. The expression may be traced to the verb signifying hate or disgust; Sax. fian; Germ. fien; M. Goth. fijan; old Goth. fia.] A word of blame and disapprobation.

And fy on fortune, mine avowed foe,
Whose wrathful wrecks themselves do now away.

Spenser.

Fy, my lord, fy! a soldier, and afraid? What need we fear who knows it, when none can call our power to account? Shakspeare, Macbeth.

A bawd, sir, fy upon him!

Shakspeare, Meas. for Meas.

But fy, my wand'ring muse, how thou do'st stray!

Expectance calls thee now another way.

Milton, Vac. Exerc.

Nay, fy, what mean you in this open place? Unhand me, or, I swear, I'll scratch your face: Let go, for shame; you make me mad for spite: My mouth's my own; and if you kiss, I'll bite.

Dryden.

Fy, madam, he cried, we must be past all these gaeties. Taiter.

G.

G A B

G† Has two sounds, one from the Gr. Γ, and the Latin, which is called that of the hard G, because it is formed by a pressure somewhat hard of the forepart of the tongue against the upper gum. This sound G retains before a, o, u, l, r; as, gate, go, gull; with the exception, however, of gaol and its derivatives, before the a in which the g is soft. The other sound, called that of the soft G, resembles that of J, and is commonly, though not always, found before e, i; as, gem, gibbet. Where g is doubled, the sound before e is usually hard, as dagger, ragged, &c. but not in suggest; and in many words the single g before e has the hard sound, as in geese, get, eager, finger, longer, target, tiger, &c. The same may be said of g before i, whether doubled or not, in numerous instances; as giddy, gift, gild, gird, dig, digger, rigging, &c. Before n, at the end of a word, g is commonly melted away; as in the French, from which these words are commonly derived: thus, for benign, malign, condign, we pronounce benine, maline, condine. It is often silent in the middle of words before h; as might. The Saxon G, ȝ, seems to have had generally the sound of y consonant; whence gate is by rustics still pronounced yate.

G.* In music, one of the clefs; that of the treble or alt.

To GAB.* v. n. [a very ancient word in our own language, and found in many others, with much the same meaning; gaber, old French, to laugh at, from gab, mockery; begabba, Goth. gabba, Icel. the same from gabb, a mock; gabban, Sax. to trifle, to joke, to talk a mere jargon; gabbare, Ital. to mock; gab, Pers. a foolish or bitter expression. The Europ. word is to be traced, perhaps, to the Celt. gob, a beak; Irish gob, a beak or mouth; whence gob for the mouth; and hence gabble.]

1. To talk idly; to prate.

I am no labbe, [blab,]

Ne though I say it, I n'am not lefe to gabbe.

Chaucer, Mill. Tale.

2. To lie; to impose upon. "Gabbing, i. e. lying." Bullokar, and Cockeram. I deny that thilke thing be good, that anyoeth hym, that hath it. Gabbe I of this? Thou wilt saie naie. Chaucer, Boeth. ii. 5. I gabbe not; so have I joye and bliss!

Chaucer, Nunns-Pr. Tale.

GAB* n. s. [from the verb.] Cant; loquacity; imposing language; as "he has the gift of the gab." A colloquial expression.

GA'BARDINE.† See GABERDINE.

To GA'BBLE.† v. n. [gabbare, Ital. gabberen, Dutch; gafla, Icel. to babble. See also To GAB.]

1. To make an inarticulate noise.

When thou could'st not, savage,
Shew thine own meaning, but would'st gabble like
A thing most brutish, I endow'd thy purposes
With words that made them known.

Shakspeare, Tempest.

Flocks of fowl, that when the tempests roar,
With their hoarse gabbling seek the silent shore;

Dryden, Æn.

2. To prate loudly without meaning.

Have you no wit, manners, nor honesty, but to gabble like tinkers at this time of night? Do ye make an alehouse of my lady's house?

Shakspeare, Tw. Night.

Which made some think, when he did gabble,
Th' had heard three labourers of Babel. Hudibras.

Such a rout, and such a rattle,
Run to hear Jack Pudding gabble.

Swift.

GA'BBLE. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Inarticulate noise like that of brute animals.

Not to know what we speak one to another, so we seem to know, is to know straight our purpose:
cough's language, gabble enough, and good enough.

Shakspeare, All's well.

2. Loud talk without meaning.

Forthwith a hideous gabble rises loud
Among the builders; each to other calls,
Not understood.

Milton, P. L.

GA'BBLER.† n. s. [from gabble.] A prater.

A chattering fellow.

Sherwood.

GA'BEL.† n. s. [gabelle, Fr. gabello. Ital.

gapel, Sax. a tribute, ȝpan, to give. Some etymologists deduce the word Heb. gab, a present; others from kabalah, Arab, cabala, or cavala, receipt.] An excise; a tax.

To lay upon them such gabels, taxes, and all manner of tributes, as should please the king to demand.

Sir R. Williams, Actions of the Low Countries, (1618,) p. 1.

This may be done, if he impose new gabels or imposts upon his subjects,

Bp. Taylor, Diss. from Popery, iii. § 3.

The gabels of Naples are very high on oil, wine, and tobacco.

Addison on Italy.

GA'BELLER.* n. s. [from gabel.] A collector of taxes.

To their tumultuous burning the gabeller's goods I think I may, not unaptly, compare our burning the pope.

Wright, View of the late Troubles, (1685,) Pref.

GA'BERDINE.† n. s. [Span. gabardina; old Fr. and Span. gaban, a cloak of felt, a loose coat worn over another; Ital. gavordina, a frock, a shepherd's garment; Fr. galleverdine, "a long coat or cassock of coarse, and for the most part motley or parti-coloured, stuff." Cotgrave. Our word is usually written gabardine.] A coarse frock; any mean dress. The coarse frock, which resembles a loose shirt, is still worn, instead of a coat, by our peasants in many places.

My best way is to creep under his gaberdine; there is no other shelter hereabout. Shakspeare, Temp.

You call me misbeliever, cut-throat dog,
And spit upon my Jewish gaberdine.

Shakspeare, Merch. of Ven.

The knight did straight submit,

And laid his weapons at her feet:

Next he disrob'd his gaberdine,

And with it did himself resign.

Hudibras.

GA'BION. n. s. [French.] A wicker basket which is filled with earth to make a fortification or intrenchment.

His battery was defended all along with gabions, and casks filled with sand.

Knolles.

GA'BLE.† n. s. [Icel. gabl, the end of a thing; Goth. gibal. Du Cange deduces the low Lat. gabulum, frons edificii, from what he calls the Engl. gablehead.] The fore-front or end of a house coming down right. Bullokar. The gable, or gable-end of a house, is the upright triangular end; from the cornice, or eaves, to the top of its roof. Chambers. Glaze the gable, and grave therein thy name.

Vision of P. Plowman.

I affect not these high gable-ends.

B. Jonson, Poetaster.

Take care that all your brick work be covered with the tiling, according to the new way of building, without gable-ends, which are very heavy, and very apt to let the water into the brick-work.

Mortimer, Husbandry.

GABY.* n. s. [perhaps from gaber, old Fr. to laugh at. See To GAB.] A silly or foolish person. A vulgar expression. In the Lancashire dialect, "a dunce or fool is called a gaby." See GAWBY.

GAD.† n. s. [gab, Saxon; gaddr, Icel. a club.]

1. A sceptre, or club. In the North, a long stick.

To fawning dogs sometimes I gave a bone,
And flung some scraps to such as nothing had;
But in my hands still kept the golden gad,
That serv'd my turne.

Mir. for Mag. p. 517.

2. A wedge or ingot of steel.

Flemish steel is brought down the Rhine to Dort, and other parts, some in bars, and some in gads; and therefore called Flemish steel, and sometimes gad steel.

Morson, Mech. Exercises.

3. It seems to be used by Shakspeare for a stile or graver. [from gab, Sax. a goad.]

I will go get a leaf of brass,

And with a gad of steel will write these words.

Tit. Andronicus.

To GAD.† v. n. [derived by Skinner from gadfly; by Junius from gadars, Welsh, to forsake; thought by others only the preterite of the old word agaan, to go. Mr. Warton thinks that there was once the verb gade, a frequentative from go, from the circumstances of the old adjective gaddling being formerly written gadeljing, and a going about from house to house being, in 1534, written gadyng. See GADDING and GADLING. See also Granger's Divine Logike, (1620), p. 171. "Gad, or gadding abroad, of gadad, Heb. to rush out, to run all abroad, as soldiers do, issuing out of the camp." To ramble about without any settled purpose; to rove loosely and idly.

The virgins will be over finely appareled and trymmed, and will nedes at overmuch libertie gooe raungeing and gaddinge abroad.

Martin, Marr. of Priests, (1554), sign. Dd. 4. b. How now, my headstrong, where have you been gadding? —

— Where I have learnt me to repent.

Shakspeare, Rom. and Jul.

Give the water no passage, neither a wicked women liberty to gad abroad. Ecclus. xxv. 25.

The lesser devils arose with ghastly rore,
And throng forth about the world to gad;
Each land they fill'd, river, stream, and shore.

Fairfax.

Envy is a gadding passion, and walketh the streets, and doth not keep home.

Bacon.

Gad not abroad at ev'ry quest and call

Of an untraiued hope or passion;

To court each place or fortune that doth fall,
Is wantonness in contemplation.

Herbert.

Thee, shepherd, thee the woods and desert caves,
With wild thyme and the gadding vine o'ergrown,
And all their echoes moan.

Milton, Lycidas.

A fierce loud buzzing breeze; thy stings draw blood,

And drive the cattle gadding through the wood.

Dryden.

She wrecks her anger on her rival's head;
With furies frights her from her native home,
And drives her gadding round the world to roam.

Dryden.

There's an ox lost, and this coxcomb runs a gadding after low fowl.

L'Estrange.

No wonder their thoughts should be perpetually shifting from what disgusts them, and seek better entertainment in more pleasing objects, after which they will unavoidably be gadding.

Locke.

GA'DABOUT.* n. s. One who runs much abroad without business: a colloquial term. See also GADDER.

GA'DDER.* n. s. [from gad.] A rambler; one that runs much abroad without business; a gadder about.

Huloet.

A drunken woman, and a gadderabroad, causeth great anger, and she will not cover her own shame.

Ecclus. xxvi. 8.

If she be a noted reveller, a godder, a singer, a pranker, or a dancer, then take heed of her.

Burton, Anat. of Melan. p. 567.

GA'DDING.* n. s. [from gad.] Mr. Warton cites, from the register of a chantry in 1534, "Recevyd at the gadyng, with Saynte Mary songe at Crismas," which he interprets "at the going about from house to house, &c." Note on Milton's Lycidas, ver. 40. "To gadde in procession is among the articles censured by Bale in his Declaration of Bonner's Articles, 1554." A going about: a pilgrimage.

The stations he speaketh of were no gaddings, but standings. Fulke's Retentive, (1580), p. 162.

GA'DDINGLY.† adv. [from gad.] In a rambling, roving manner.

Gaddingly, as they that went on pilgrimage.

Huloet.

GA'DFLY.† n. s. [gad and fly; but by Skinner, who makes it the original of gad; it is called goadfly. Supposed to be originally from goad, in Saxon gab, and fly. Dr. Johnson.—It is from the Goth. gadda, to prick; gadd, Swed. a sting.] A fly that when he stings the cattle makes them gad or run madly about; the breese.

The fly called the gad-fly breedeth of somewhat that swimmeth upon the top of the water, and is most about ponds.

Bacon.

Light fly his slumbers, if perchance a flight
Of angry gadflies fasten on the herd.

Thomson, Summer.

GA'DLING.* adj. [from gad. Gadeling, stragglng. Hearne, Gloss. Rob. of Gloucester.] Stragglng: in the vocabulary of Bullokar. Chaucer uses it as a substantive for an idle vagabond, a gadder about. Obsolete.

GA'ELICK.* } n. s. [from Gallia.] A dia-GA'ELICK. } lect of the Celtic tongue.

I believe, without vanity, I may say I understand the Galic as well as any man living; for I wrote a Grammar and Dictionary of it.

Shaw on the Authent. of Ossian's Poems, p. 24.

The young [in the Highlands] are indeed taught to read English, but often they read without understanding, and still prefer speaking Gaelic.

To GAG.† v. a. [from gaghel, Dutch, the palate, Minshew; the past participle of the Saxon gæggian, to close up. Mr. H. Tooke.] To stop the mouth with something that may allow to breathe, but hinder to speak.

He's out of his guard already: unless you laugh and minister occasion to him, he is gagg'd.

Shakspeare, Tw. Night.

Our Spanish licensing gags the English press.

Milton, Arcopagitica.

They might possibly by obstinacy harden, or by diversion gag, conscience; but they could not bribe and corrupt it. Decay of Christian Piety, p. 121. There foam'd rebellious logic, gagg'd and bound.

Pope.

GAG.† n. s. [from the verb.] Something put into the mouth to hinder speech or eating.

Your monkish prohibitions, and expurgatory indexes, your gags and snaffles.

Milton, Animadv. Rem. Defence.

Some when the kids their dams too deeply drain,
With gags and muzzles their soft mouths restrain.

Dryden.

Your woman would have run up stairs before me; but I have secured her below with a gag in her chaps.

Dryden.

GA'GGER.* n. s. [from gag.] One who uses a gag to stop the mouth.

I undertook to answer that very worthless author, "the gagger of all protestants' mouths for ever." Mounslng, App. to Cæs. (1625), Dedic.

Out of just indignation against this gagger and his fellows.

Ibid.

GAGE.† n. s. [gage, French. Dr. Johnson.—The past participle of the Sax. verb gæggian, to close up; gage being that by which a man is bound to certain fulfilments. Mr. H. Tooke.—See, however, wage, which is the same word as gage, and is formed of the Lat. vas, vadis, a surety; Su. vad, the same; low Lat. vadiare, gagiare; Germ. wägen, to hazard, to engage; Su. Goth. waga, the same.]

1. A pledge; a pawn; a caution; any thing given in security.

He, when the shamed shield of slain Sansfoy
He spy'd, with that same fairy champion's page,
He to him leapt; and that same envious gage,
Of victor's glory from him snatch away.

Spenser, F. Q.

There I throw my gage
Disclaiming here the kindred of a king,
And lay aside my high blood's royalty.

Shakspeare, Rich. II.

There is my gage, the manual seal of death,
That marks thee out for hell. Shakspeare, Rich. II.
They from their mothers' breasts poor orphans rend,

Nor without gages to the needy lend.

Sandys.

I am made the cautionary pledge,

The gage and hostage of your keeping it.

Southern, Oroonoko.

But since it was decreed, auspicious king,
In Britain's right that thou shouldst wed the main,
Heav'n, as a gage, would cast some previous thing,
And therefore doom'd that Lawson should be slain.

Dryden.

In any truth, that gets not possession of our minds by self evidence or demonstration, the arguments, that gain it assent, are the vouchers and gages of its probability.

Locke.

— Su. Goth. gagn, emolument ; Teut. gewin, gain, gewinnen, to make gain ; Sax. fepinnan, to acquire.]

1. Profit ; advantage ; contrary to loss.

But what things were gain to me, those I counted loss for Christ. Phil. iii. 7.

Besides the purpose it were now, to teach how victor should be used, or the gains thereof communicated to the general content. Raleigh, Essays.

Havock and spoil, and ruin are my gain.

It is in praise of men as in gettings and gatus ; for light gains make heavy purses ; for light gains come thick, whereas great come but now and then.

Bacon, Essays.

This must be made by some governor upon his own private account, who has a great stock, that he is content to turn that way and is invited by the gains. Temple.

Compute the gains of his ungovern'd zeal,
Ill suits his cloth the praise of railing well. Dryd.
Folly fights for kings or dives for gain. Pope.

2. Interest ; lucrative views.

That, sir, which serves for gain,
And follows but for form,
Will pack, when it begins to rain,
And leave thee in the storm. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

3. Unlawful advantage.

Did I make a gain of you by any of them whom I sent unto you ? 2 Cor. xii. 17.

If pride, if envy, if the lust of gain,
If mad ambition, in thy bosom reign,
Thou boast'st alas ! thy sober sense in vain. Fitzgerald.

4. Overplus in a comparative computation ; any thing opposed to loss.

TO GAIN. v. a. [gagner, French.]

1. To obtain as profit or advantage.

Egypt became a gained ground by the muddy and limous matter brought down by the Nilus, which settled by degrees into a firm land.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

What reinforcement we may gain from hope.

Milton, P. L.

2. To win ; not to lose.

A leper once he lost, and gain'd a king.

Milton, P. L.

3. To have the overplus in comparative computation.

If you have two vessels to fill, and you empty one to fill the other, you gain nothing by that.

Burnet, Theory of the Earth.

And make my tongue victorious as her eyes. Pope.

8. To draw into any interest or party.

Come, with presents, laden from the port,
To gratify the queen and gain the court.

Dryden, Virg.

If Pyrrhus must be wrought to pity,
No woman does it better than yourself :
If you gain him, I shall comply of course.

A. Phillips.

9. To obtain as a wooer.

He never shall find out fit mate, but such
As some misfortune brings him, or mistake,
Or whom he wishes most shall seldom gain
Through her perverseness, but shall see her gain'd
By a far worse. Milton, P. L.

10. To reach ; to attain.

The West still glimmers with some streaks of day :
Now spurs the lated traveller apace,
To gain the timely inn. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

Death was the post, which I almost did gain :
Shall I once more be tost into the main. Walter.

Sun ! sound his praise

In thy eternal course, both when thou climb'st,
And when high noon hast gain'd, and when thou fall'st.

Milton, P. L.

We came to the roots of the mountain, and had a very troublesome march to gain the top of it.

Addison on Italy.

Thus sav'd from death, they gain the Phœstian shores,
With shatter'd vessels and disabled oars.

Pope, Odyssey.

11. TO GAIN over. To draw to another party or interest.

The court of Hanover should have endeavour'd to gain over these who were represented as their enemies.

Swift.

TO GAIN. v. n.

1. To grow rich ; to have advantage ; to be advanced in interest or happiness.

Thou hast taken usury and increase, and thou hast greedily gained of thy neighbours by extortions.

Ezek. xxii. 12.

2. To encroach ; to come forward by degrees : with on.

When watchful herons leave their wat'ry stand,
And mounting upward with erected flight,
Gain on the skies, and soar above the sight.

Dryden, Virg.

So on the land while here the ocean gains,
In other parts it leaves wide sandy plains. Pope.

3. To get ground ; to prevail against : with on.

The English have not only gained upon the Venetians in the Levant, but have their cloth in Venice itself.

Addison.

4. To obtain influence with : with on.

My good behaviour had gained so far on the emperor, that I began to conceive hopes of liberty.

Swift.

GAIN. adj. [an old word, but not wholly out of use, as Dr. Johnson has described it.] Applied to things, convenient ; to persons, active, expert ; to a way, near, short : Ray, who says that in his time, the word was used in many parts of England. In Yorkshire it is now used for near. See the Craven Dialect, 1824, where the learned compiler refers to the Su. Goth. gen, utilis, gagn, Icel. Große defines it as a Norfolk word, convenient, cheap : " That field his gain for me : I bought that horse pretty gain." Mr. Brockett gives the word as a present Northumbrian expression, generally attached to other words to signify a degree of comparison ; as, gain quiet — pretty quiet ; gain near — conveniently near or at hand.

GA'INABLE.* [Fr. gaignable.] Capable of being gained.

Sherwood.

GA'INAGE.* n. s. old Fr. gaignage ; low Lat. gaginagium, wainagium.] In our old writers the profit that comes by the tillage of land, held by the baser kind of sokemen and villains.

Cowel.

The gainage of the ground in a great shire

N^o old apparel that place.

P. Plowman's Creed, (1550.)

GA'INER. n. s. [from gain.] One who receives profit or advantage.

The client, besides retaining a good conscience, is always a gainer, and by no means can be at any loss, as seeing, if the composition be overheard, he may relieve himself by recourse to his oath.

Bacon, Off. of Alienation.

If what I get in empire
I lose in fame, I think myself no gainer.

Denham, Sophy.

He that loses any thing, and gets wisdom by it, is a gainer by the loss.

L' Estrange.

By trade, we are as great gainers by the commodities of other countries as of our own nation.

Addison, Freeholder.

GA'INFUL.† adj. [gain and full.]

1. Advantageous; profitable.

He will dazzle his eyes, and bait him in with the luscious proposal of some gainful purchase, some rich match, or advantageous project.

2. Lucrative; productive of money.

The statute of 32 of Hen. 8. c. 38, intending to mar the Romish market of gainful dispensations, and injurious prohibitions, professeth to allow all marriages that are not prohibited by God's law.

Bp. Hall, Cases of Conscience, Add.

Nor knows he merchants' gainful care.

Dryden, Horace.

Maro's muse commodious precepts gives,
Instructive to the swains, nor wholly bent
On what is gainful: sometimes she diverts
From solid counsels.

Philips.

GA'INFULLY. adv. [from gainful.] Profitably; advantageously.

GA'INFULNESS. n. s. [from gainful.] Profit; advantage.

GA'INGIVING. n. s. [gainst and give.] The same as misgiving; a giving against: as gain saying, which is still in use, is saying against, or contradicting.

Hammer.

It is but foolery; but it is such a kind of gain-giving as would, perhaps, trouble a woman.

Shakspeare, Hamlet.

GA'INLESS.† adj. [from gain.] Unprofitable; producing no advantage.

So absolutely gainless to himself in his vilest capacity.

Hammond, Works, iv. 514.

It is a strange folly thus to pursue what is so utterly gainless.

Whole Duty of Man, ch. 6. § 14.

GA'INLESSNESS. n. s. [from gainless.] Unprofitableness; want of advantage.

The parallel holds too in the gainlessness as well as laboriousness of the work; miners buried in earth and darkness, were never the richer for all the ore they digged: no more is the insatiable miser.

Decay of Piety.

GA'INLY.† adv. [from gain.] Handily; readily; dexterously.

She laid her child, as gainly as she could, in some fresh leaves and grass.

More, Conf. Cab. p. 133.

TO GA'INSAY. v. a. [gainst and say.]

1. To contradict; to oppose; to controvert with; to dispute against.

Speeches which gain say one another, must of necessity be applied both unto one and the same subject.

Hooker.

To facile then; thou didst not much gain say;
Nay, didst permit, approve, and fair dismiss.

Milton, P. L.

2. To deny any thing.

I never heard yet

That any of those bolder vices wanted

Less impudence to gain say what they did,

Than to perform it first.

Shakspeare, Wint. Tale.

GA'INSAYER. n. s. [from gainsay.] Opponent; adversary.

Such as may satisfy gainsayers, when suddenly, and besides expectation, they require the same at our hands.

Hooker.

We are, for this cause, challenged as manifest gainsayers of Scripture, even in that which we read for Scripture unto the people.

Hooker.

It was full matter of conviction to all gainsayers.

Hammond.

Others sought themselves a name by being his gainsayers, but failed of their purpose.

Fell.

GA'INSAYING.* n. s. [from gainsay.] Opposition.

They have gone in the way of Cain, and ran greedily after the error of Balaam, and perished in the gainsaying of Core. St. Jude, ver. 11.

'GA'INST. prep. [for against.] See A-GA'INST.

Tremble, ye nations, who, secure before,
Laugh'd at those arms, that 'gainst ourselves we bore.

Dryden.

TO GA'INSTAND.† v. a. [gainst and stand.]

To withstand; to oppose; to resist.

A proper word, but not in use, Dr. Johnson says, citing only the example from Sidney. But, it may be added, this was evidently an established word, as it is found in the dictionaries of Huloet and Barret. Wicliffe also had long before employed it, in the form of aghenstonde, i. e. against and stand.

Love proved himself valiant, that durst with the sword of reverent duty gainstand the force of so many enraged desires.

Sidney.

In Sodome was none found that did gainstand that furious and beastly multitude, which did compass about and besiege the house of Lot.

Knight, Tr. of Truth, (1580.) fol. 80. b.

TO GA'INSTRIVE.* v. a. [gainst and strive.] To withstand; to oppose.

The Fates gainstrive us not.

Grimoald, in Songes & Son. pr. by Tottel, (1557.)

TO GA'INSTRIVE.* v. n. To make resistance.

On the spoile of women he doth live,
Whose bodies chaste, whenever in his powre,
He may them catch, unable to gainstrive,
He with his shameful lust doth first deflowre,
And afterwards themselves doth cruelly devoure.

Spenser, F. Q. iv. vii. 12.

GA'IRISH.† adj. So Dr. Johnson chooses to write the word garish, i. e. showy, splendid, &c. as well as its descendant garishness, garishness. But neither Ascham, nor Shakspeare, nor Taylor, nor Milton, nor South, whom he cites, prefer this method of writing it. Other authors also, whom I shall cite, read garish. See therefore, GARISH, GARISHLY, and GARISHNESS.

GATE.† n. s. [gat, Dutch. Dr. Johnson.—Icel. gata, a way, a road, from gaa, to go. In the north of England, gate, or gait, is common for a path, passage, or road. Gate is the old way of writing this word.

1. A way: as, gang your gait.

Good youth, address thy gait unto her;

Be not denied access, stand at her door.

Shaks.

With this field-dew consecrate,

Every fairie take his gait;

And each several chamber bless,

Through this palace with sweet peace.

Shakspeare, Mids. N. Dream.

2. March; walk; progress.

Nought regarding, they kept on their gait,

And all her vain allurements did forsake.

Spenser, F. Q.

Thou art so lean and meagre waxen late,

That scarce thy legs uphold thy feeble gait.

Spenser, Hubb. Tale.

This palpable gross play hath well beguild

The heavy gait of night.

Shaks. Mids. N. Dream.

3. The manner and air of walking.

Great Juno comes, I know her by her gait.

Shakspeare.

He had in his person, in his aspect, the appearance of a great man, which he preserved in his gait and motion.

Clarendon.

A third, who by his gait

And fierce demeanour, seems the prince of hell.

Milton, P. L.

Leviathans

Wallowing, unwieldy, enormous in their gait.

Milton, P. L.

I describ'd his way,

Bent all on speed, and mark'd his airy gait.

Milton, P. L.

GA'TED.* adj. [from gait.] Having a particular gait, or method of walking.

You must send the ass upon the horse, for he is slow-gaited.

Shakspeare, Love's L. Lost.

And heavy-gaited toads lie in their way.

Shakspeare, Rich. II.

TO GA'ITER.* v. a. [from gaiters.] To dress with gaiters.

The cavalry must be saddled, the artillery-horses harnessed, and the infantry gaitered.

Proceed. on the Trial of Ld. G. Sackville, 1760, p. 11.

GA'ITERS.* n. s. pl. [Fr. guêtres.] A kind of spatterdashes. Both the French and English word may be considered as modern.

GA'LA.* n. s. [Spanish, finery; Ital. mirth.] A word which has been introduced into our language in modern times: as, a gala-day; that is, any day of show and festivity.

GALA'GE.† n. s. [old Fr. galoge.] A shepherd's clog; a wooden shoe. Galash, galosh, or golosh, is now sometimes heard, instead of this old word. See GALOCHE.

My heartblood is well nigh frone, I feel;
And my galage grown fast to my heel.

Spenser, Shep. Cal.

GALA'NGAL. n. s. [galange, French.] A medicinal root. The lesser galangal is in pieces, about an inch or two long, of the thickness of a man's little finger; a brownish red colour, extremely hot and pungent. The larger galangal is in pieces, about two inches or more in length, and an inch in thickness: its colour is brown, with a faint cast of red in it: it has a disagreeable, but much less acrid and pungent taste.

Hill.

GA'LAXY.† n. s. [γαλαξία, Gr. galaxie.]

Fr. Chaucer uses this word.]

1. The milky way; a stream of light in the sky, consisting of many small stars,

A broad and ample road, whose dust is gold,
And pavement stars, as stars to thee appear,
Seen in the galaxy.

Milton, P. L.

A brown, for which heaven would disband

The galaxy, and stars be tam'd.

Cleaveland.

Several lights will not be seen,

If there be nothing else between;

Men doubt, because they stand so thick i' th' sky,

If those be stars that paint the galaxy.

Cowley.

We dare not undertake to shew what advantage is brought to us by those innumerable stars in the galaxy.

Bentley.

2. Any splendid assemblage of persons or things.

There are stars of several magnitudes; some goodly and great ones, that move in orbs of their own; others small and scarce visible in the galaxy of the church; but all are stars, and no star is without some light.

Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 45.

Often has my mind hung with fondness and admiration over the crowded, yet clear and luminous, galaxies of imagery, diffused through the works of Bishop Taylor.

Dr. Parr, Tracts by Warburton, &c. p. 151.

GALBANUM.† n. s. [Sax. zalbanum; Gr. χαλβάνη, from the Heb. chalbenah.] A resinous gum.

We meet with galbanum sometimes in loose granules, called drops or tears, which is the purest, and sometimes in large masses. It is soft, like wax, and ductile between the fingers; of a yellowish or reddish colour: its smell is strong and disagreeable. It is of a middle nature between a gum and a resin, being inflammable as a resin, and soluble in water as a gum, and will not dissolve in oil, as pure resins do. It is the produce of an umbelliferous plant.

Hill, Materia Medica.

I yielded indeed a pleasant odour, like the best myrrh; as galbanum. Ecclus. xxiv. 15.

GALE.† n. s. [gahling, hasty, sudden, Germ. Dr. Johnson.—Icel. gola, a cold air; haf-gola, a gale or blast from the sea. Serenius.—Erse, gal, a blast of wind. It may perhaps be allied to the Su. Goth. and Icel. gala, to sing, or rather to bawl; to emit a kind of howl. This application of noise to the wind we still use; as, the wind sings, or howls.] A wind not tempestuous, yet stronger than a breeze.

What happy gale

Blows you to Padua here from old Verona?

Shakespeare.

Winds

Of gentlest gale Arabian odours fann'd

From their soft wings, and Flora's earliest smells.

Milton, P. R.

Milton, P. L.

Fresh gales and gentle air.

Umbria's green retreats,

Where western gales eternally reside. Addison.

TO GALE.* v. n. [from the noun.]

1. In naval language, when two ships are near one another at sea, and there being but little wind blowing, one feels more of it than another, they say, the ship gales away from the other. Chambers.

2. To sing. [Sax. galan, literally to sing.] Obsolete, except as far as it concerns nightingale.

In Chaucer's Court of Love, the nightingale is said to crie and gale: hence its name, nightgale, or nightingale. Tyrrwhit on Chaucer.

GALE.* n. s. A plant, which grows upon bogs in many parts of England.

Gale from the bog shall yield Arabian balm,

And the grey willow wave a golden palm.

Crabbe, Birth of Flattery.

GA'LEATED. adj. [galeatus, Latin.]

1. Covered as with a helmet.

A galeated eschinus copped, and in shape somewhat more conick than any of the foregoing.

Woodward on Fossils.

2. [In botany.] Such plants as bear a flower resembling an helmet, as the monkshood.

GALE'NICAL.* adj. [from Galen, the GALE'NICK. } ancient physician. Fr.

Galenique.] Denoting the manner of considering and treating diseases according to the principles of Galen.

Galenick is more frequently used as contradistinguished from chymical. See

GALENISM.

He has been a packhorse in the practical and old Galenical way of physic.

Life of A. Wood, p. 379.

GALENISM.* n. s. [Fr. Galenisme.] The doctrine of Galen.

Paracelsus, and after him Van Helmont, altered the whole body of medicine; exploded Galenism, and the whole Peripatetic doctrine; and rendered medicine almost wholly chymical.

Chambers.

GA'LENIST.* n. s. A physician that, in his way of practice, follows the method of Galen.

Bullockar.

Let men dispute whether thou breathe or no;

Only 'in this be no Galenist: to make Courts' hot ambitions wholesome, do not take

A dram of country's dullness; do not add

Correctives, but, as chymiques, purge the bad.

Donne, Poems, p. 147.

GALERI'ULATE. adj. [from galerus, Lat.]

Covered as with a hat.

GA'LIOT. See GALLIOT.

GALL n. s. [zeala, Sax. galle, Dutch.]

1. The bile; an animal juice, remarkable for its supposed bitterness.

Come to my woman's breast,

And take my milk for gall, you murdering ministers!

Shakespeare.

A honey tongue, a heart of gall,

Is fancy's spring, but sorrow's fall. Shakespeare.

This position informs us of a vulgar error, terming the gall bitter, as their proverb implies, It's as bitter as gall; whereas there's nothing gustable sweeter; and what is most unctuous must needs partake of a sweet savour. Harvey.

Gall is the greatest resolvent of curdled milk: Boerhaave has given at a time one drop of the gall of an eel with success. Arbuthnot on Diet.

2. The part which contains the bile.

The married couple, as a testimony of future concord, did cast the gall of the sacrifice behind the altar. Brown.

3. Any thing extremely bitter.

Thither write, my queen,

And with mine eyes I'll drink the words you send,

Though ink be made of gall. Shakspeare. Cymb.

Poison be their drink!

Gall, worse than gall, the daintiest meat they taste!

Shakspeare.

She still insults, and you must still adore;

Grant that the honey's much, the gall is more.

Dryden, Juv.

4. Rancour; malignity.

They did great hurt upon his title, and have left a perpetual gall in the mind of the people.

Spenser on Ireland.

5. Anger; bitterness of mind.

Suppose your hero were a lover,

Though he before had gall and rage;

He grows dispirited and low,

He hates the fight and shuns the blow. Prior.

6. A slight hurt by fretting off the skin. [from the verb.]

This is the fatallest wound: as much superiour to the former, as a gangrene is to a gall or scratch.

Gov. of the Tongue.

7. [from galla.]

Galls or galnuts are preternatural and accidental tumours, produced on trees; but those of the oak only are used in medicine. We have Oriental and European galls: the Oriental are brought from Aleppo, of the bigness of a large nutmeg, with tubercles on their surface, of a very firm texture, and a disagreeable, acerb, and astringent taste. The European galls are of the same size, with perfectly smooth surfaces: they are light, often spongy, and cavernous within, and always of a lax texture. They have a less austere taste, and are of much less value than the first sort. The general history of galls is this: An insect of the fly kind wounds the branches of the trees, and in the hole deposits her egg: the lacerated vessels of the tree discharging their contents, form a tumour or woody case about the hole, where the egg is thus defended from all injuries. This tumour also serves for the food of the tender maggot, produced from the egg, which, as soon as it is in its winged state, gnaws its way out, as appears from the hole found in the gall; and where no hole is seen, the maggot, or its remains are sure to be found within. It has been observed, that the oak does not produce galls in cold countries; but this observation should be confined to the medicinal galls: for all those excrescences which we call oak-apples, oak-grapes, and oak-cones, are true galls, though less firm in their texture. Hill.

Besides the acorns, the oak beareth galls, oak-apples, and oak-nuts. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Malpighi, in his treatise of galls, under which name he comprehends all preternatural and morbose excrescences, demonstrates that all such excrescences, where any insects are found, are excited by some venenose liquor, which, together with their eggs, such insects shed.

Ray on the Creation.

The Aleppo galls, wherewith we make ink, are no other than cases of insects, which are bred in them. Derham.

TO GALL. v. a. [galler, French.]

1. To hurt by fretting the skin.

I'll touch my point

With this contagion, that, if I gall him slightly,

It may be death. Shakespeare, Hamlet.

His yoke is easy, when by us embraid'd;

But loads and galls, if on our necks 'tis cast.

Denham.

A carrier, when he would think of a remedy for his galled horse, begins with casting his eye upon all things. Locke.

On the monarch's speech Achilles broke, And furious thus, and interrupting spoke, Tyrant, I well deserv'd thy galling chain.

Pope, Iliad.

2. To impair; to wear away.

He doth object, I am too great of birth; And that my state being galled with my experience, I seek to heal it only by his wealth. Shakespeare. If it should fall down in a continual stream like a river, it would gall the ground, wash away plants by the roots, and overthrow houses.

Ray on the Creation.

3. To tease; to fret; to vex.

In honour of that action, and to gall their minds who did not so much commend it, he wrote his book. Hooker.

What they seemed contented with, even for that very cause we reject; and there is nothing but it pleaseth us the better, if we espy that it galleth them. Hooker.

When I shew justice,

I pity those I do not know;

Which a dismiss'd offence would after gall. Shaks.

All studies here I solemnly defy,

Save how to gall and pinch this Bolingbroke.

Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

No man commits any sin but his conscience smites him, and his guilty mind is frequently galled with the remembrance of it. Tillotson.

4. To harass; to mischief; to keep in a state of uneasiness.

The Helots had gotten new heart, and with divers sorts of shot from corners of streets and house-windows galled them. Sidney.

Light demilances from afar they throw,
Fasten'd with leathern thongs, to gall the foe. Dryden, Æn.

In our wars against the French of old, we used to gall them with our long bows, at a greater distance than they could shoot their arrows. Addis.

To GALL. v. n. To fret.

I have seen you gleeking and galling at this gentleman twice or thrice. Shakespeare.

In gallant thought to plume their painted wings. Thomson.

GALLANT.† n. s. [from the adjective.]

1. A gay, sprightly, airy, splendid man.

The new proclamation.

—What is't for?

—The reformation of our travell'd gallants,
That fill the court with quarrels, talk, and taylor. Shakespeare.

The gallants and lusty youths of Naples came and offered themselves unto Vastius.

Knolles, Hist. of the Turks.
The gallants, to protect the lady's right,
Their fauchions brandish'd at the grisly sight. Dryden.

Gallants, look to't, you say there are no sprights;
But I'll come dance about your beds at nights. Dryden.

2. A brave, high-spirited, magnanimous man. Dr. Johnson overpasses this meaning.

He shall recount his worthies, [in the margin, gallants.] Nahum, ii. 5.
The mighty [in the margin, gallants] are spoiled. Zech. xi. 2.

Those that entered France were resisted by Martel and thirty thousand French gallants. Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 269.

3. A whoremaster, who caresses women to debauch them.

One, worn to pieces with age, shews himself a young gallant. Shaksp. M. Wives of Windsor.

She had left the good man at home, and brought away her gallant. Addison, Spect.

4. A wooer; one who courts a woman for marriage. In the two latter senses it has commonly the accent on the last syllable.

To GALLANT. v. a. [from the adjective.]
To pay attention to the ladies; "to court a woman in the way of a gallant."

Kersey, Dict. 1702.

At their first coming to town, I was in a manner obliged to gallant them to the play. The World, No. 164.

GALLANTLY.† adv. [from gallant.]

1. Gayly; splendidly.

The market, being in center of the town, is gallantly and regularly built. Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 40.

That gallantry and greatness of soul, that constant garb of justice. More, Song of the Soul, Notes, p. 373.

The eminence of your condition, and the gallantry of your principles, will invite gentlemen to the useful and ennobling study of nature. Glensville, Scops. Preface.

Had we any spark of true gallantry and bravery of mind in us, we should despise all other kinds of life but this. Scott, Christian Life, i. 3.

3. A number of gallants.

Hector, Deiphobus, and all the gallantry of Troy, I would have arm'd to-day. Shakespeare.

4. Courtship; refined address to women.

The martial Moors, in gallantry refin'd,
Invent new arts to make their charmers kind. Granville.

That which we call gallantry to women, seems to be the heroic virtue of private persons; and there never breathed one man, who did not, in that part of his days wherein he was recommending himself to his mistress, do something beyond his ordinary course of life. Tatler, No. 94.

5. Vicious love; lewdness; debauchery.

It looks like a sort of compounding between virtue and vice, as if a woman were allowed to be vicious, provided she be not a profligate; as if there were a certain point where gallantry ends, and infamy begins. Swift.

GALLEASS. n. s. [galeace, French.]

A heavy low-built vessel, with both sails and oars. It carries three masts, but they cannot be lowered, as in a galley.

It has thirty-two seats for rowers, and six or seven slaves to each. They carry three tire of guns at the head, and at the stern there are two tire of guns. Dict.

My father hath no less Than three great argosies, besides two galleasses, And twelve tight galleys. Shaks. Tam. of the Sh.

The Venetians pretend they could set out, in case of great necessity, thirty men of war, a hundred dred galleys, and ten galleasses. Add. on Italy.

GALLEON. n. s. [gallion, French.] A large ship with four or sometimes five decks, now in use only among the Spaniards.

I assured them that I would stay for them at Trinidad, and that no force should drive me thence, except I were sunk or set on fire by the Spanish galleons. Raleigh Apology.

The number of vessels were one hundred and thirty, whereof galleasses and galleons seventy-two, goodly ships, like floating towers or castles. Bacon, War with Spain.

GALLERY.† n. s. [gallerie, French; derived by Du Cange from galeria, low Latin, a fine room. Dr. Johnson. Skinner deduces it from allerie, aller, i. e. to walk: Serenius, from the Su. Goth. gallar, cancelli, i. e. balusters, or rails to compass in.]

1. A kind of walk along the floor of a house, into which the doors of the apartments open; in general, any building of which the length much exceeds the breadth.

In most part there had been framed by art such pleasant arbors, that, one answering another, they become a gallery aloft from tree to tree, almost round about, which below gave a perfect shadow. Sidney.

High lifted up were many lofty towers,
And goodly galleries fair overlaid. Spenser.

Your gallery
Have we pass'd through, not without much content. Shakespeare.

The row of return on the banquet side, let it be all stately galleries, in which galleries let there be three cupolas. Bacon.

A private gallery 'twixt th' apartments led,
Not to the foe yet known. Denham.

Nor is the shape of our cathedrals proper for our preaching auditories, but rather the figure of an amphitheatre, with galleries gradually overlooking each other; for into this condition the parish churches of London are driving apace, as appears by the many galleries every day built in them. Granv.

There are covered galleries that lead from the palace to five different churches. Addison, on Italy.

2. The seats in the playhouse above the pit, in which the meaner people sit.

While all its throats the gallery extends,
And all the thunder of the pit ascends. Pope.

GALLETYLE. n. s. I suppose this word has the same import with galipot.

Make a compound body of glass and galletyle; that is to have the colour milky like a chalcedon, being a stuff between a porcelain and a glass. Bacon, Phys. Rem.

GALLEY.† n. s. [galea, Italian; galere, French; derived, as some think, from galea, a helmet, pictured anciently on the prow; as others from γαλέα, the sword-fish; and others from galleon, expressing in Syriack men exposed to the sea. From galley come galleass; galleon, galloit. Dr. Johnson.—The old French language has galoie or galée for this word. The barbarous Greek γαλαία or γαλέα, is also a galley, which Meursius derives from the Ital. galea. The Goth. galeide is the same. It is most probable that the Greek γαλέες, or γαλέη, a kind of fish, whence the γαλεότης, or sword-fish, already mentioned, occasioned, from some resemblance to it, the transfer of the name to this kind of vessel.]

1. A vessel driven with oars, much in use in the Mediterranean, but found unable to endure the agitation of the main ocean.

Great Neptune grieved underneath the load,
Of ships, hulks, galies, barks, and brigandines.

Fairfax.

In the ages following, navigation did every where greatly decay, by the use of galies, and such vessels as could hardly brook the ocean.

Bacon, New Atlantis.

Jason ranged the coasts of Asia the Less in an open boat, or kind of galley.

Raleigh, Hist.

On ozy ground his galies moor;
Their heads are turn'd to sea, their sterns to shore.

Dryden.

2. It is proverbially considered as a place of toilsome misery, because criminals are condemned to row in them.

The most voluptuous person, were he tied to follow his hawks and his hounds, his dice and his courtships every day, would find it the greatest torment that could befall him: he would fly to the mines and the galies for his recreation, and to the spade and the mattock for a diversion from the misery of a continual uninterrupted pleasure.

South.

GALLEYFOIST.* n. s. [from galley, and foist, a light vessel. See FOIST. Or it may be a corruption of the Span. gala, (joined to foist.) signifying finery, show, pomp; gala, Ital. mirth, cheer.] A barge of state; and by our old authors applied to the Lord mayor of London's barge.

He built, of cedar, barges or galleyfoists, their sterns being set with pearl and precious stone.

Hakewill on Providence, p. 409.

No plays, nor galleyfoists, no strange ambassadors to run and wonder at.

Beaum. and Fl. Wit without Money.

He has performed such a matter, wench, that if I live next year I'll have him captain of the galleyfoist, or I'll want my will.

Beaum. and Fl. Kn. of the Burn. Pestle.

Out of my doors, you sons of noise and tumult, begot on all May-day, or when the galleyfoist is aloft to Westminster!

B. Jonson, Epicæne.

GALLEY-SLAVE. n. s. [galley and slave.] A man condemned for some crime to row in the galleys.

As if one chain were not sufficient to load poor man, he must be clogged with innumerable chains: this is just such another freedom as the Turkish galley-slaves do enjoy.

Bp. Bramhall.

Hardened galley-slaves despise manumission.

Decay of Piety.

The surges gently dash against the shore,

Flocks quit the plains, and galley-slaves their oar.

Garth.

GALLIARD.* adj. [Fr. galliard; which under the substantive galliard, (for he notices not the adjective, which, however, is the more ancient word.) Dr. Johnson says, is imagined to be derived from the Gaulish ard, genius, and gay. The Spanish and Italian have the same adjective, viz. gagliardo, and gallardo, meaning brisk, frolick, &c. Whence, no doubt, the name of the dance, galliarda, and gallarda, the latter of which has been defined "especie de danza y tañido de la escuela española, así llamada por ser muy agrosa." Dicc. de la Leng. Castell. Acad. Espan. The Iceland, giæla, to allure, to entice, may perhaps be thought the original of galliard. Certain it is, that the Scotch use galliard for wanton, which Dr. Jamieson deduces from the Sax. gal, lascivious, not without referring also to the northern verb.] Brisk; gay; lively; nimble.

Galliard he was, as goldfinch in the shawe.

Chaucer, Coker's Tale.

What a thing to laugh at, to see a judge or serjeant at the law in a short coat garded and pounced after the gallarde fashion!

Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 91.

GALLIARD.† n. s. [from the adjective.]

1. Gay, brisk, lively man; a fine fellow.

Selden is a galliard by himself.

Cleveland.

2. An active, nimble, sprightly dance.

[Span. gallarda; Ital. gagliarda. It is said to have consisted of five particular steps; and Sir John Davies, who calls it "a swift and wandering dance," as well as "a gallant dance betraying a spirit and virtue masculine," bestows no less than fourteen lines in a description of this once favourite performance.

Orchest. 1599. The cinque passi in galliarda form no less than three distinctions in the Ballarino of F. C. da Sermoneta, Venet. 1581.] It is in both senses now obsolete.

I did think by the excellent constitution of thy leg, it was form'd under the star of a galliard.

Shakespeare, Tw. Night.

There's nought in France

That can be with a nimble galliard won:

You cannot revel into dukedoms there.

Shakespeare, Hen. V.

If there be any that would take up all the time, let him find means to take them off, and bring others on; as musicians use to do with those that dance too long galliards.

Bacon.

The tripla's and changing of times have an agreement with the changes of motion; as when galliard-time and measure-time are in the medley of one dance.

Bacon.

GALLIARDE. n. s. [French.] Merriment; exuberant gaiety. Not in use.

At my nativity my ascendant was the watery sign of Scorpius: I was born in the planetary hour of Saturn, and I think I have a piece of that leaden planet in me: I am no way facetious, nor disposed for the mirth and galliardise of company.

Brown, Rel. Med.

GALLIARDNESS.* n. s. [from galliard.] Gaiety; cheerfulness.

His rest failed him, his countenance changed, his sprightly pleasance and galliardness abated.

Gayton, on Don Quix. p. 206.

GALLICAN.* adj. [Lat. Gallicus; old French, Gallique.] French.

Seditious documents—they have always impugned, for the defence and preservation of the Gallican regalities and liberties.

Bp. Morton, Discharge, &c. p. 263.

There was a time when the Gallican church understood her own liberty, and boldly asserted it.

Bp. Bull, Corrupt. of the Ch. of Rome.

She came

Rob'd in the Gallick loom's extraneous twine.

Shenstone, El. xviii.

GALLICISM. n. s. [gallicisme, French; from Gallicus, Latin.] A mode of speech peculiar to the French language: such as, he figured in controversy; he held this conduct; he held the same language that another had held before: with many other expressions to be found in the pages of Bolingbroke.

In English I would have gallicisms avoided, that we may keep to our own language, and not follow the French mode in our speech.

Felton, on the Classics.

GALLIGASKINS.† n. s. pl. [caligæ Gallo-Vasconum.] Large open hose. Not used but in ludicrous language, Dr. Johnson says. The word, however, is in our old lexicography, without any ludicrous application. It is in Sherwood's Dict. 1632, and is explained by Cotgrave, under guerguisses, viz. "great Gascon or Spanish hose."

My galligaskins, that have long withstood

The winter's fury, and encroaching frosts,
By time subdu'd, what will not time subdue?
An horrid chasm disclose.

Philips.

I have sent my Coventry-blue waistcoat to the dyers, and bespoke me a bran-new pair of galligaskins to be made of beggar's velvet.

The Student, ii. 258.

GALLIMATIA.† n. s. [Fr. gallimatie, "gibberish, fustian language, pedlars' French." Cotgrave.] Nonsense; talk without meaning.

GALLIMAUFRY.† n. s. [galimafrée, Fr.] 1. A hotch-potch, or hash of several sorts of broken meat; a medley.

Hanmer.

Another dish hath in it a loin of lamb, or kid, with a hard egge; another containeth a galimaufrey of apples, nuts, figges, almonds, &c. dressed with wine.

Purchas, Pilgrim. (1617.) p. 222.

2. Any inconsistent or ridiculous medley. They have made our English tongue a galimaufrey, or hodge-podge of all other speeches.

Epist. Pref. to Spenser's Shep. Cal.

They have a dance, which the wenches say is a galimaufrey of gambols, because they are not in't.

Shakespeare, Wint. Tale.

The painter who, under pretence of diverting the eyes, would fill his picture with such varieties as alter the truth of history, would make a ridiculous piece of painting, and a mere galimaufrey of his work.

Dryden, Dufresnoy.

3. It is used by Shakespeare ludicrously of a woman.

Sir John affects thy wife.

—Why, sir, my wife is not young.

—He woos both high and low, both rich and poor;

He loves thy galimaufrey, friend.

Shakespeare.

GALLINACEOUS.* adj. [Lat. gallinaceus.] Denoting birds of the pheasant kind.

Spallanzani has remarked a circumstantial resemblance between the stomachs of gallinaceus fowls and the structure of corn mills.

Paley, Nat. Theol. ch. 15.

GALLIOT.† n. s. [galiotte, French. A little galley, or sort of brigantine, built very slight, and fit for chase. It carries but one mast, and two or three patereroes. It can both sail and row; and has sixteen or twenty seats for the rowers, with one man to each oar. Dict.

Barbarossa departing out of Hellespontus with eighty gallies, and certain galliots, shaped his course towards Italy. Knolles.

GALLIPOP. n. s. [gleye, Dutch, shining earth. Skinner. The true derivation is from gala, Spanish, finery. Gala, or gallipot, is a fine painted pot.] A pot painted and glazed, commonly used for medicines.

Plato said his master Socrates was like the apothecary's gallipots, that had on the outsides apes, owls, and satyrs: but within, precious drugs. Bacon, Apophthegms.

Here phials in nice discipline are set; There gallipots are rang'd in alphabet. Garth. Alexandrinus thought it unsafe to trust the real secret of his phial and gallipot to any man. Spectator.

Thou that do'st Æsculapius deride, And o'er his gallipots in triumph ride. Fenton. GALLIVAT. n. s. [from galley.] A sort of small vessel used on the Malabar coast; a row-boat in India. GALL-LESS. adj. [gall and less.] Without gall or bitterness.

Saltless and gall-less be thy curse! Cleveland, Poems, &c. p. 39.

Ah! mild and gall-less dove, Which dost the pure and candid dwellings love. Cowley, on the Restor. of King Ch. II.

A dove, a meek and gall-less creature. Whole Duty of Man, ch. 17. § 19. GALLON.† n. s. [galo, low Latin, Dr. Johnson. — Our word is the old French, gallon. V. Lacombe. And that perhaps may be, by transposition, from the Lat. lagenā. V. Du Cange in GALO. The Welsh galwyn is the same.] A liquid measure of four quarts. Beat them into powder, and boil them in a gallon of wine, in a vessel close stopped. Wise man, Surgery.

GALLOON.† n. s. [galon, French; perhaps from the Span. gala, finery.] A kind of close lace, made of gold or silver, or of silk alone.

Oh! for a whip, To make him galloon-laces; I'll have a coach-whip. Beaum. and Fl. Philaster. For some years last past the use of gold and silver galloon upon hats has been almost universal. Tatler, No. 270.

TO GALLOP.† v. n. [galoper, French. Derived [by all the etymologists, after Budæus, from καλπαζω; but perhaps it comes from gant, all, and loopen, to run, Dutch; that is, to go on full speed. Dr. Johnson. — From the Su. Goth. leopa, to run, and the M. Goth. prefix. ga. Serenius.]

1. To move forward by leaps, so that all the feet are off the ground at once.

I did hear The galloping of horse: who was't came by? Shakspeare, Macbeth.

His steeds will be restrain'd, But gallop lively down the western hill. Donne. In such a shape grim Saturn did restrain His heav'nly limbs, and flow'd with such a mane, When half surpriz'd, and fearing to be seen, The leacher gallop'd from his jealous queen. Dryden, Virg.

2. To ride at the pace which is performed by leaps.

Seeing such streams of blood as threatned a drowning life, we galloped toward them to part them. Sidney.

They can espy An armed knight towards them gallop fast, That seem'd from some feared foe to fly. Spenser, F. Q.

He who fair and softly goes steadily forward, in a course that points right, will sooner be at his journey's end than he that runs after every one he meets, though he gallop all day full speed. Locke.

3. To move very fast.

The golden sun Gallops the zodiack in his glist'ring coach. Tit. Andronicus.

Whom doth time gallop with? — With a thief to the gallows. Shakspeare, As you like it.

He that rides post through a country may, from the transient view, tell how in general the parts lie: such superficial ideas he may collect in galloping over it. Locke.

GALLUP. n. s. [from the verb.] The motion of a horse when he runs at full speed; in which, making a kind of a leap forwards, he lifts both his forelegs very near at the same time; and while these are in the air, and just upon the point of touching the ground, he lifts both his hindlegs almost at once. Farrier's Dict.

GALLOPER.† n. s. [from gallop.]

1. A horse that gallops.

Mules bred in cold countries are much better to ride than horses for their walk and trot; but they are commonly rough gallopers, though some of them are very fleet. Mortimer, Husbandry.

2. A man that rides fast, or makes great haste.

3. A light carriage for a small piece of ordnance.

GALLOPIN.* n. s. [old Fr. gallopin, "an under cook or scullion in monasteries." Cotgrave.] A servant for the kitchen. Obsolete.

Dyot for the kytchen and *gallopin*s.

Archæolog. xv. 7.

TO GALLOW.† v. a. [azalpan, to fright, Saxon.] To terrify; to fright. In the west of England it is pronounced gally. Grose and Jennings.

The wrathful skies Gallow the very wand'ers of the dark, And make them keep their caves. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

GALLOWAY.† n. s. A horse not more than fourteen hands high, much used in the north; probably as coming originally from Galloway, a shire in Scotland.

Spare yourself, lest you bejaded the good galloway. Milton, Anim. Rem. Defence.

If any member shall purchase a horse for his own riding above fourteen hands and an half in height, that horse shall forthwith be sold, a Scotch galloway bought in its stead for him, and the overplus of the money shall treat the club. Guardian, No. 91.

GALLOWGLASS.† n. s. An ancient Irish foot-soldier. Some think that it was a soldier also who served on horseback.

It is worn likewise of footmen under their shirts of mail, the which footmen they [the Irish] call gallowglasses: the which name doth discover them also to be ancient English; for gallowla signifies an English servitor or yeoman. And he being so armed in a long shirt of mail, down to the calf of his leg, with a long broad ax in his hand, was then pedes gravis armatura; and was instead of the footman that now weareth a corslet, before the corslet was used, or almost invented. Spenser on Ireland.

The gallowglasse useth a kind of poleax for his weapon. These men are grim of countenance, tall of stature, big of limbe, lusty of body, well and strongly timbered. Stanishart, Description of Ireland, ch. 8.

A puissant and mighty pow'r Of gallowglasses and stout kernes, Is marching hitherward in proud array. Shakspeare, Hen. VI. P. II.

GALLOW. } n. s. [It is used by some in GALLOW'S. } the singular; but by more only in the plural, or sometimes has another plural gallowses. Galga, Goth. galza, Saxon; galge, Dutch; which some derive from gabalus, furca, Latin; others from גלגל high; others from gallu, Welsh, power: but it is probably derived like gallow, to fright, from azalpan, the gallows, being the great object of legal terrour.]

1. A beam laid over two posts, on which malefactors are hanged.

This monster sat like a hangman upon a pair of gallows: in his right hand he was painted holding a crown of laurel, in his left hand a purse of money. Sidney.

I would we were all of one mind, and one mind good; O, there were desolation of gallows and gallowses. Shakspeare, Cymbeline.

I prophesied, if a gallows were on land, This fellow could not drown. Shakspeare, Tempest.

He took the mayor aside, and whispered him that execution must that day be done, and therefore required him that a pair of gallows should be erected. Hayward.

A poor fellow, going to the gallows, may be allowed to feel the smart of wasps while he is upon Tyburn road. Swift.

2. A wretch that deserves the gallows. Cupid hath been five thousand years a boy. — Ay, and a shrew'd unhappy gallows too. Shakspeare.

GALLOWSFREE. adj. [gallows and free.] Exempt by destiny from being hanged.

Let him be gallowsfree by my consent, And nothing suffer, since he nothing meant. Dryden.

GALLOWTREE. n. s. [gallows and tree.] The tree of terrour; the tree of execution.

He hung their conquer'd arms, for more de-fame, On gallowtrees, in honour of his dearest dame. Spenser, F. Q.

A Scot, when from the gallowtree got loose, Drops into Styx, and turns a Soland goose. Cleveland.

GALLY.* adj. [from gall.] Of gall; bitter as gall. Hulcot.

He abhorreth all gally and bitter drinks of sin. Abp. Crammer, Ans. to Bp. Gardiner, p. 246.

GALLY-WORM.* n. s. An insect, often found in our gardens, with a long body, composed of many rings, and furnished with a great number of feet; which, when touched, has the power of rolling itself up into a ball.

GALO'CHE.* n. s. [French.] A wooden shoe or patten, made all of a piece, without any latchet or tye of leather, and worn by the poor clown in winter. Cotgrave. The use of this shoe passed from the Gauls to the Romans, whence Gallicæ calones. Roquefort. The word is in our old lexicography for a kind of shoe, and is used by Chaucer. It afterwards became galloscho, or goloscho, and is now pronounced and sometimes written galosh. Galoshes are now understood to be shoes, without buckles or straps, made to wear over other shoes in wet weather.

Ne were worthy to unbocle his galoches.

Chaucer, Squ. Tale.

To all this must be added the vast skill that is required in tendering a visit, with approved and modish accuracy; that it be done punctually—that the galoshes be left in their true and proper place—that the footboy be expert in observing his tutored distance!

Echard, Observ. Cont.

Clergy, p. 158.

GALORE.* See GOLORE.

GAL'SOME.* adj. [from gall.] Angry; malignant.

Such accusations—any vulgar man understands the language, at the first sight, may cry out upon, and condemn both of gal'some bitterness and of wilful fraud and falsehood.

Bp. Morton, Discharge, &c. (1633), p. 210.

GALVANICK.* adj. Denoting the power of Galvanism. See GALVANISM.

All the Galvanick combinations, analogous to the new apparatus of Mr. Volta, which have been heretofore described by experimentalists, consist (as far as my knowledge extends) of series, containing at least two metallic substances, or one metal and charcoal, and a stratum of fluids; and it has been generally supposed, that their agencies are, in some measure, connected with the different powers of the metals to conduct electricity; but I have found, that an accumulation of Galvanic influence, exactly similar to the accumulation in the common pile, may be produced by the arrangement of single metallic plates or arcs, with different strata of fluids.

Davy, Phil. Transact. 1801, P. II. art. xx.

GALVANISM.* n. s. [so called from Gabvani, celebrated for the experiments which he made in this branch of philosophy.] Although galvanism and electricity may be considered as the same principles, still, according to the present state of our knowledge, they may be thus distinguished. Galvanism is the portion of electricity, which forms a component part of the conducting body, in the act of undergoing a change in its capacity, from a greater to a lesser state; while electricity is the result of a temporary change in non-conducting bodies, inasmuch that their capacities become, by attrition, momentarily increased.

Wilkinson, Elem. of Galvanism, (1804), p. 302.

TO GALVANIZE.* v. a. [from galvanism.] To affect by the power of galvanism.

I have tried galvanism in two cases of palsy, both hemiplegia, one a young lady, aged 20, the other a gentleman, aged 25; and, though neither of them were cured, they both received benefit, particularly the gentleman. After being galvanized for twenty minutes, they felt a glowing warmth the remainder of the day. The apparatus I used was a pile of twenty-four pair of plates, of five inches diameter.

Carpue on Electr. and Galvanism, (1803), p. 106.

GALVANO'METER.* n. s. A measure for ascertaining the power of Galvanick operations.

GAMA'SHES.* n. s. pl. Short spatterdashes worn by ploughmen. North. So Grose defines the word. In the Praise of Yorkshire Ale, 1697, gamashes "are coarse cloth stockings that button upon other stockings to keep one warm."

He wore a little brown capouch, girt very near to his body, with a white towel; also a pair of breeches and gamashes of the same coloured cloth, and on his head a clay-coloured cap; his gamashoes were lifted up half the leg.

Shelton, Tr. of D. Quixote, iv. 1.

GAMBA'DOES.† n. s. pl. [gamba, Ital. a leg.] Spatterdashes; boots worn upon the legs above the shoe.

It has been my custom any time these sixteen years, as all the parish can testify, to ride in gambadoes.

Reasons of Mr. Bays changing his Religion, (1688,) Pref.

The pettifogger ambles to her in his gambadoes once a week.

Dennis's Letters.

TO GAMBLE.* v. n. To play extravagantly for money. A word of contempt. See GAMBLER.

She held out against all the obligations of fashion, and allurements of example; she had an inbred abhorrence of gambling. Looker-on, No. 21.

GAMBLER. n. s. [A cant word, I suppose, for game or gamester.] A knave whose practice it is to invite the unwary to game and cheat them.

GAMBOGE. n. s.

Gamboge is a concreted vegetable juice, partly of a gummy, partly of a resinous nature, heavy, of a bright yellow colour, and scarce any smell. It is brought from America, and the East Indies, particularly from Cambaja, or Cambogia.

Hill.

TO GAMBOL.† v. n. [Fr. gambiller, Dr. Johnson from Skinner. — Cotgrave renders gambiller, merely, "to wag the legs in sitting, as children use to do;" but gambader, "to turn heels over head, to make many gambols." Our own word was formerly gambald. "To fetch gambaldes, Fr. gambader, Lat. crura in sublime jactare. Gambalding horses, being full of praunsings or skipplings." Huloet. Barret also gives gambald for gambol in his dictionary. One "that can gambould or dance feat." Barklay's Egloges, 1570. Egl. 2. The origin is evidently the Ital. gamba, the leg.]

1. To dance; to skip; to frisk; to jump for joy; to play merry frolics.

Bears, tigers, ounces, pards,

Gambol'd before them. Milton, P. I.

The king of elfs, and little fairy queen,

Gambol'd on heaths, and danc'd on ev'ry green.

Dryden.

The monsters of the flood
Gambol around him in the wat'ry way,
And heavy whales in aukward measures play.

Pope.

2. To leap; to start.

'Tis not madness

That I have utter'd; bring me to the test,
And I the matter will record, which madness
Would gambol from.

Shakspeare, Hamlet.

GAM'OL. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A skip; a hop; a leap for joy.

A gentleman had got a favourite spaniel, that would be still toying and leaping upon him, and playing a thousand pretty gambols. L'Estrange.

Bacchus through the conquer'd Indies rode,
And beasts in gambols frisk'd before their honest
god. Dryden.

2. A frolick; a wild prank.

For who did ever play his gambols,
With such unsufferable rambles?

Hudibras.

GAM'BREL.† n. s. [from gamba, gambarella, Italian.]

1. The leg of a horse.

What can be more admirable than for the principles of the fibres of a tendon to be so mixed as to make it a soft body, and yet to have the strength of iron? as appears by the weight which the tendon, lying on a horse's gambrel, doth then command, when he rears up with a man upon his back.

Grew.

2. A crooked piece of wood used by butchers to spread and by which to suspend the carcasses. Jennings, West Country Words. See also the citation from Beaumont and Fletcher, under TO GAM'BREL.

TO GAM'BREL.* v. a. [from gamba.] To tie by the leg.

Lay by your scorn and pride, they're scurvy qualities,

And meet me, or I'll box you while I have you,
And carry you gambrill'd thither like a mutton.

Beaumont and Fletcher, Nice Valour.

GAME.† n. s. [gaman, Iceland. a jest; gaman, Goth. delight, joy.]

1. Sport of any kind.

We have had pastimes here, and pleasing game.

Shakspeare.

Let my son Martin disport himself at any game truly antique.

Arbutnot and Pope,

Mart. Scriblerus.

2. Jest; opposed to earnest or seriousness.

Then on her head they set a garland green,
And crowned her 'twixt earnest and 'twixt game. Spenser.

3. Insolent merriment; sportive insult.

Do they not seek occasion of new quarrels,
On my refusal to distress me more;
Or make a game of my calamities. Milton, S. A.

4. A single match at play.

It is very wonderful to see persons of the best sense passing away a dozen hours together in shuffling and dividing a pack of cards, with no other conversation but what is made up of a few game phrases.

Addison, Spect. No. 93.

There is no man of sense and honesty, but must see and own, whether he understands the game or not, that it is an evident folly for any people, instead of prosecuting the old honest methods of industry and frugality, to sit down to a public gaming-table, and play off their money one to another.

Bp. Berkeley, Ess. towards pres. the Ruin of Gr. Brit.

5. Advantage in play.

Mutual vouchers for our fame we stand,
And play the game into each other's hand.

Dryden.

6. Scheme pursued; measures planned.

This seems to be the present game of that crown, and that they will begin no other till they see an end of this. Temple.

7. Field sports; as, the chase, falconry.

If about this hour he make his way,
Under the colour of his usual game,
He shall here find his friends with horse and men,
To set him free from his captivity.

Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

What arms to use, or nets to frame }

Wild beasts to combat, or to tame,

With all the myst'ries of that game. Waller.

Some sportsmen, that were abroad upon game,
spied a company of bustards and cranes.

L'Esrange.

8. Animals pursued in the field; animals appropriated to legal sportsmen.

Hunting, and men, not beasts, shall be his game,
With war, and hostile snare, such as refuse Subjection to his empire tyrannous. Milton, P.L.
There is such a variety of game springing up before me, that I know not which to follow.

Dryden, Fob. Pref.

A bloodhound will follow the person he pursues, and all bounds the particular game they have in chase. Arbuthnot.

Go, with thy Cynthia hurl the pointed spear
At the rough bear, or chase the flying deer;
I and my Chloe take a nobler aim,
At human hearts we fling, nor ever miss the game.

Prior.

Proud Nimrod first the bloody chase began,
A mighty hunter, and his prey was man:
Our haughty Norman boasts that barb'rous name,
And makes his trembling slaves the royal game.

Pope.

Shorten my labour, if its length you blame,
For, grow but wise, you rob me of my game.

Young.

9. Solemn contests, exhibited as spectacles to the people.

The games are done, and Cæsar is returning.

Shakespeare.

Milo, when entering the Olympick game,
With a huge ox upon his shoulders came. Denham.

TO GAME-† v. n. [game, Sax.]

1. To play at any sport.

2. To play wantonly and extravagantly for money.

Covetousness will tempt thee to cheat and cozen in gaming. Whole Duty of Man, ch. 9. § 7.

Gaming for which thing considerable is founded upon avarice: and is, if not a direct, yet, what is much worse, a deliberate violation of the tenth commandment. Delany, Sermon on Gaming.

GA'ME-COCK. n. s. [game and cock.] A cock bred to fight.

They manage the dispute as fiercely as two gamecocks in the pit. Locke.

GAME-EGG. n. s. [game and egg.] Eggs from which fighting cocks are bred.

Thus boys hatch game-eggs under birds of prey,
To make the fowl more furious for the fray. Garth.

GA'MEKEEPER. n. s. [game and keep.] A person who looks after game, and sees it is not destroyed.

GAME-LEG.* n. s. [a corruption, according to Mr. Malone, of the British game, or cam, crooked, and leg.] A lame leg.
Used in the north of England.

GA'MESOME. adj. [from game.] Frolick-some; gay; sportive; playful; sportful.

Geron, though old, yet gamesome, kept one end with Cosma. Sidney.

I am not gamesome; I do lack some part
Of that quick spirit that is in Antony.

Shakespeare, Jul. Cæs.

A The gamesome wind when her tresses plays,
And curleth up those growing riches short. Fairfax.

This gamesome humour of children should rather be encouraged, to keep up their spirits and improve their strength and health, than curbed or restrained.

Locke.

GA'MESOMENESS. n. s. [from gamesome.]
Sportiveness; merriment.

GA'MESOMELY. adv. [from gamesome.]
Merrily.

GA'MESTER. n. s. [from game.]

1. One who is vitiously addicted to play.

Keep a gamester from the dice, and a good student from his book, and it is wonderful,

Shakespeare, M. Wives of Windsor.

A gamester, the greater master he is in his art,
the worse man he is. Bacon.

Gamesters for whole patrimonies play;
The steward brings the deeds, which must convey
The whole estate. Dryden, Juv.

Could we look into the mind of a female gamester, we should see it full of nothing but trumps and mattedores: her slumbers are haunted with kings, queens, and knaves.

Addison, Guard. No. 120.

All the superfluous whims relate,
That fill a female gamester's pate;
What agony of soul she feels
To see a knave's inverted heels. Swift.

Her youngest daughter is run away with a gamester, a man of great beauty, who in dressing and dancing has no superior. Law.

2. One who is engaged at play.

When lenity and cruelty play for kingdoms,
The gentler gamester is the soonest winner.

Shakespeare, Hen. V.

A man may think, if he will, that two eyes see no more than one; or that a gamester seeth always more than a looker on: but, when all is done, the help of good counsel is that which setteth business straight. Bacon.

3. A merry frolicsome person.

You're a merry gamester,

My lord Sands. Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

4. A prostitute. Not in use.

She's impudent, my lord,

And was a common gamester to the camp. Shaks.

GA'MING.* n. s. [from game. Sax. gaming.]
The practice of gamesters.

I come, in the next place, to consider the ill consequences which gaming has on the bodies of our female adventurers. It is so ordered, that almost every thing which corrupts the soul, decays the body. Addison, Guard. No. 120.

Gaming leaves no satisfaction behind it: it no way profits either body or mind. Locke.

GA'MING-HOUSE.* n. s. A house where illegal sports are practised, and where gamesters carry on their employment.

The keeper of a gaming-house. Sherwood.

Gaming-houses are prohibited under severe penalties by several statutes. Chambers.

GA'MING-TABLE.* n. s. A table at which gamesters practise their art.

It is an evident folly for any people, instead of prosecuting the old honest methods of industry and frugality, to sit down to a public gaming-table, and play off their money one to another.

Bp. Berkeley, Essay, &c.

GA'MMER.† n. s. [of uncertain etymology;
perhaps from grandmere, and therefore used commonly to old women. Dr.

Johnson. — From good mother. Ray. —

From godmother, perhaps. [Sax. zemeðep.] like the contraction of gaffer from godfather; or from the Goth. gumba, a woman.] The compellation of a woman corresponding to gaffer: as, Gammer

Gurton's Needle; the name of an old play.

GA'MMERSTANG.* n. s. A great foolish wanton girl. Praise of Yorkshire Ale, 1697. A hoyden, an awkward girl.
Craven Dialect, 1824. The Cumberland
Glossary applies the term to an awkward clumsy fellow. Of unknown etymology.

GA'MMON.† n. s.

1. The buttock of an hog salted and dried;
the lower end of the flitch. [Ital. gam-bone, from gamba; and that perhaps from the Celt. gam, the ham or leg. Our own word was at first gambone. The Spanish word is jamon.

Then came halting Jone,
And brought a gambone
Of bacon that was reasty. Skellon, Poems, p. 152.

Ask for what price thy venal tongue was sold:
A rusty gammon of some sev'n years old.

Dryden, Juv.

Gammons, that give a relish to the taste,
And potted fowl, and fish, come in so fast,
That ere the first is out, the second stinks.

Dryden, Pers.

2. A kind of play with dice.

In thunder leaping from the box, awake
The sounding gammon. Thomson, Autumn.

GA'MUT.† n. s. [gama, Italian. Dr. Johnson. — It is the Greek letter Γ, gamma,
and ut, the name of a musical note.
Guido Aretine distinguished the first note of his scale by the Greek letter, with a view, according to some, of shew-ing that the Greeks were the inventors of music; but, as others think, of recording his own name by this, the initial letter of it.]

1. The first or gravest note in the modern or Guido's scale of music.

2. The scale of musical notes.

Madam, before you touch the instrument,
To learn the order of my fingering,
I must begin with rudiments of art,
To teach you gamut in a briefer sort. Shakespeare.

When by the gamut some musicians make
A perfect song, others will undertake,
By the same gamut chang'd, to equal it:
Things simply good can never be unfit.

Donne, Poems, p. 70.

Long has a race of heroes fill'd the stage,
That rant by note, and through the gamut rage;
In songs and airs express their martial fire,
Combat in trills, and in a fugue expire. Addison.

GAN.† pret. of gin. [Sax. gynnann. Dr.
Johnson gives gan as a contraction of begin, "as 'gin of begin;" but it is the regular pret. of the Saxon verb. Nor is gin a contraction. See TO GIN.

The noble knight gan feel
His vital force to faint. Spenser.

TO GANCH.† v. a. [ganciare, from gancio, a hook, Italian; ganche, French. See
TO GAUNCH.] To drop from a high place upon hooks by way of punishment:
a practice in Turkey, to which Smith
alludes in his Pocockius.

"Cohors catenis qua pia stridulis
"Gemunt onusti, vel sude trans sinum
"Luctantur actâ, pendulive
"Sanguineis trepidant in uncis."

Musæ Angl.

Take him away, ganch him, impale him.

Dryden, Don Sebast.

GA'NDER.† n. s. [gandpa, Saxon; gans, old Fr. and German. See GANZA.]
The male of the goose.

As deep drinketh the goose as the gander.

C Camden, Rem.

One gander will serve five geese.

Mortimer, Husbandry.

TO GANG.† v. n. [Goth. gaggan, pronounced gangan; gangen, Dutch; ganzan, Saxon; gang, Scottish.] To go; to walk: an old word not now used, except ludicrously, Dr. Johnson says. It is however, still the common language of the north of England.

But let them gang alone, —
As they have brewed, so let them bear blame.

Your flaunting beaus gang with their breasts open.
Spenser, Shep. Cal.
Arbutnot.

GANG.† n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A street or road. [Goth. gagg, Sax. ganz.] It is retained, provincially, in gangway. See GANGWAY.

2. A number herding together; a troop; a company; a tribe; a herd. It is seldom used but in contempt or abhorrence.

Oh, you panderly rascals! there's a knot, a gang, a pack, a conspiracy against me.

Shakespeare, M. Wives of Windsor.
As a gang of thieves were robbing a house, a mastiff fell a barking.
L'Estrange.

Admitted in among the gang.
He acts and talks as they befriended him. Prior.

GANG-DAYS.* n. s. pl. [Sax. ganz-bagar.]

Days of perambulation. See GANGWEEK.

G'ANGHON. [French.] A kind of flower.
Ainsworth.

G'ANGLION. n. s. [γαγγλιον.] A tumour in the tendinous and nervous parts.
Bonesetters usually represent every bone dislocated, though possibly it be but a ganglion, or other crude tumour or preternatural protuberance of some part of a joint.
Wiseman.

To G'ANGRENATE. v. a. [from gangrene.]

To produce a gangrene; to mortify.
Parts cauterized, gangrenated, siderated, and mortified, become black, the radical moisture or vital sulphur suffering an extinction.

Brown, Vulg. Err.
G'ANGRENE.† n. s. [gangrene, Fr. gange, Gr. from γανω, to consume, to eat.] A mortification; a stoppage of circulation followed by putrefaction.

This experiment may be transferred unto the cure of gangrenes, either coming of themselves, or induced by too much applying of opiates.
Bacon, Nat. Hist.

She saves the lover, as we gangrenes stay,
By cutting hope, like a lopt limb away. Waller.
A discolouring in the part was supposed an approach of a gangrene. Wiseman, Surgery.

If the substance of the soul is festered with these passions, the gangrene is gone too far to be ever cured: the inflammation will rage to all eternity.

Addison, Spect.
To G'ANGRENE. v. a. [gangrener, French; from the noun.] To corrupt to mortification.

In cold countries, when men's noses and ears are mortified, and, as it were, gangrened with cold, if they come to a fire they rot off presently; for that the few spirits that remain in those parts, are suddenly drawn forth, and so putrefaction is made complete.
Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.
Gangren'd members must be lopp'd away,
Before the nobler parts are tainted to decay. Dryden.

To G'ANGRE'NE. v. n. To become mortified.

Wounds immedicable
Rankle and fester, and gangrene
To black mortification. Milton, S. A.

As phlegmons are subject to mortification, so also in fat bodies they are apt to gangrene after opening, if that fat be not speedily digested out.

Wiseman, Surgeon.
G'ANGRENOUS. adj. [from gangrene.] Mortified: producing or betokening mortification.

The blood, turning acrimonious, corrodes the vessels, producing hemorrhages, pustules red, lead-coloured, black and gangrenous.
Arbutnot on Aliments.

G'ANGWAY.† n. s.

1. A thoroughfare, or passage. Used in Kent, according to Grose. This is also the Sax. ganzweg. See GANG.

2. In a ship, the several ways or passages from one part of it to the other. Dict.

G'ANGWEEK.† n. s. [Sax. ganz-wuca.] Rogation week, when processions are made to lustrate the bounds of parishes. This name is still retained in the north of England.

It [birch] serveth well to the decking up of houses and banquetting-rooms, for places of pleasure, and for beautifying of streets in the crosse or gang-week, and such like.

Gerarde's Herbal, ed. Johnson, p. 1478.

G'ANTELOPE.† [n. s. [gantlet is only G'ANTELET.] rrupted from gantelope, gant, all; and loopen, to run, Dutch.

Dr. Johnson. — Skinner deduces it from Ghent, and the Dutch verb, as if the punishment was first practised at that place. In later times, the word has been found in the shape of Ghent-loup, on this supposition, whether justly or not. — See the Brit. Crit. vol. ii. p. 390.

Dr. Johnson gives no instance of gantelope, but only of the corruption gantlet.] A military punishment, in which the criminal running between the ranks receives a lash from each man.

But would'st thou, friend, who hast two legs alone,
Would'st thou to run the gantlet these expose,
To a whole company of hob-naï'd shoes?

Dryden, Juven.
He is fain to run the gantelope through the torors and reproaches of his own conscience.

Scott's Works, (Sermon, in 1680,) ii. 29.
Young gentlemen are driven with a whip, to run the gantlet through the several classes. Locke.

G'ANZA.† n. s. [gansa, Spanish, a goose; old Fr. and Germ. gans; Celt. ganz; Lat. ganza. Celt. kan, white. V. Wachter, Gloss. Germ. in GANS.] A kind of wild goose, by a flock of which a virtuoso was fabled to be carried to the lunar world.

What modest indignation can forbear stamping at the presumption of those men, who, as if Domingo Gonsales his engine, they had been mounted by his gansas from the moon to the empyreal heaven!

Bp. Hall, Invis. World, § 7.
They are but idle dreams and fancies,
And savour strongly of the gansas. Hudibras, ii. 8.

GAOL.† n. s. [geol, Welsh; geole, Fr. Dr. Johnson. — The old Fr. is gaiole or gaole; low Lat. gajola, from cavea or caveola, a cage for birds; cavus, hollow, and thence any hole or place of confinement; geiol, a cavern, Su. Goth. The Picards call a bird-cage gayolle.] A prison; a place of confinement. It is always pronounced and often written jail, and sometimes goal.

Then am I the prisoner, and his bed my gaol,
Shakespeare, K. Lear.
Have I been ever free, and must my house
Be my retentive enemy, my gaol? Shaks. Timon.

If we mean to thrive and do good, break open the gaols, and let out the prisoners.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.
In the morning usually the thief is sent to the gaol.
Beaumont and Fl. Marital Maid.

To GAOL. v. a. [from the noun.] To imprison, to commit to gaol.

Gaoing vagabonds was chargeable, pesterous and of no open example. Bacon.

G'AUDELIVERY. n. s. [gaol and deliver.] The judicial process, which by condemnation or acquittal of persons confined evacuates the prison.

Then doth the aspiring soul the body leave,
Which we call death; but were it known to all,
What life our souls do by this death receive,
Men would it birth or gauldelivery call. Davies.

These make a general gauldelivery of souls, not for punishment. South.

G'AUOLER. n. s. [from gaol.] A keeper of a prison; he to whose care the prisoners are committed.

This is a gentle provost; seldom, when
The steeld gaoler is the friend of men. Shakespeare.

I know not how or why my surly gaoler,
Hard as his irons, and insolent has pow'r
When put in vulgar hands, Cleanthes,
Put off the brute. Dryden, Cleomenes.

From the polite part of mankind she had been banished and immured, till the death of her gaoler.
Tutler.

GAP.† n. s. [from gape.]

1. An opening in a broken fence.

Behold the despair,
By custom and covetous pates,
By gaps and opening of gates. Tusser, Husbandry.

Ye have not gone up into the gaps, neither made up the hedge for the house of Israel. Ezek. xiii. 5.
With terrours and with furies to the bounds
And crystal wall of heav'n; which, opening wide,
Roll'd inward, and a spacious gap disclos'd
Into the wasteful deep. Milton, P. L.

Bushes are most lasting of any for dead hedges, or to mend gaps.
Mortimer, Husbandry.

2. A breach.

The loss of that city concerned the Christian common-weal: manifold miseries afterwards ensued by the opening of that gap to all that side of Christendom. Knolles.

3. Any passage.

So stands the Thracian herdsman with his spear.
Full in the gap, and hopes the hunted bear,
And hears him rustling in the wood. Dryden.

4. An avenue; an open way.

The former kings of England passed into them a great part of their prerogatives; which though then it was well intended, and perhaps well deserved, yet now such a gap of mischief lies open thereby, that I could wish it were well stopp'd.

Spenser.

5. A hole; a deficiency.

If you violently proceed against him, mistaking his purpose, it would make a great gap in your honour.
Shakespeare, K. Lear.

Nor is it any botch or gap in the works of nature. Mor.

6. Any interstice; a vacuity.

Each one demand, and answer to his part
Perform'd in this wide gap of time, since first
We were dissever'd. Shakespeare, Wint. Tale.

That I might sleep out this great gap of time my Antony is away. Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleop.

To make 'twixt words and lines huge gaps,
Wide as meridians in maps. Hudibras.

One can revive a languishing conversation by a sudden surprising sentence; another is more dexterous in seconding; a third can fill the gap with laughing. Swift.

7. An opening of the mouth in speech during the pronunciation of two successive vowels.

The hiatus, or gap between two words, is caused by two vowels opening on each other. Pope.

8. To stop a GAP, is to escape by some mean shift: alluding to hedges mended with dead bushes, till the quicksets will grow. Dr. Johnson. It is rather, perhaps, to patch up matters for a time.

His policy consists in setting traps, In finding ways and means, and stopping gaps. Swift.

9. To stand in the GAP. To make defence; to expose himself for the protection of something in danger; a phrase borrowed from our version of the Scriptures: "He said he would have destroyed them, had not Moses his chosen stood before him in the gap." Ps. cvi. 23. Comm. Pr. Where gap, however, means breach; which is the reading of the elder version of the Psalms. See also Ezek. xxii. 30.

What would become of the church, if there were none more concerned for her rights than this? Who would stand in the gap? Lesley.

GAP-TOOTHED.† adj. [gap and tooth.] Having interstices between the teeth. So Dr. Johnson defines the word which Dryden supposed to be Chaucer's. But the true word is gap-toothed, with a very different meaning. See GAP-TOOTHED.

The reeve, miller, and cook, are distinguished from each other as much as the minding lady priores and the broad speaking gap-toothed wife of Bath. Dryden, Fab. Pref.

TO GAPE.† v. n. zeapan, yppan, zeyppan, to open, Sax. whence also our chap. See TO CHAP. Gape was at first written galp.

To open the mouth wide; to yawn.

See how he gapeth, lo, this drunken wight, As though he would us swallow anon right! Hold close thy mouth, man! Chaucer, Mancip. Prol. Gaping or yawning, and stretching, do pass from man to man; for that that causeth gaping and stretching is when the spirits are a little heavy by any vapour. Arbuthnot.

She stretches, gapes, unglues her eyes, And asks if it be time to rise. Swift.

2. To open the mouth for food, as a young bird.

As callow birds, Whose mother's kill'd in seeking of the prey, Cry in their nest, and think her long away; And at each leaf that stirs, each blast of wind, Gape for the food which they must never find. Dryden.

As in a drought the thirsty creatures cry, And gape upon the gather'd clouds for rain, Then first the marlet meets it in the sky, And with wet wings joys all the feather'd train. Dryden.

3. To desire earnestly; to crave: with for.

To her grim death appears in all her shapes; The hungry grave for her due tribute gapes. Denham.

To thy fortune be not thou a slave; For what hast thou to fear beyond the grave? And thou, who gap'st for my estate, draw near; For I would whisper somewhat in thy ear. Dryden, Pers.

4. With after.

As a servant earnestly desireth [in the margin, gapeth after] the shadow, and as an hireling looketh for the reward of his work. Job, vii. 2.

What shall we say of those who spend their days in gaping after court-favour and preferences? L'Estrange.

5. With at.

Many have gaped at the church revenues; but, before they could swallow them, have had their mouths stopped in the church-yard. South.

6. To open in fissures or holes.

If it assume my noble father's person, I'll speak to it, though hell itself should gape And bid me hold my peace. Shakespeare, Hamlet. May that ground gape, and swallow me alive, Where I shall kneel to him that slew my father. Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

The great horse-mussel, with the fine shell, doth gape and shut as the oysters do. Bacon, Nat. Hist. The reception of one is as different from the admission of the other, as when the earth falls open under the incisions of the plough, and when it gapes and greedily opens itself to drink in the dew of heaven, or the refreshments of a shower. South. The mouth of a little artery and nerve gapes into the cavity of these vesicles. Cheyne, Phil. Prin.

7. To open with a breach.

The planks, their pithy coverings wash'd away, Now yield, and now a yawning breach display: The roaring waters, with a hostile tide, Rush through the ruins of her gaping side. Dryd.

That all these actions can be performed by aliment, as well as medicines, is plain; by observing the effects of different substances upon the fluids and solids, when the vessels are open and gape by a wound. Arbuthnot.

8. To open; to have an hiatus.

There is not to the best of my remembrance, one vowel gaping on another, for want of a caesura in this poem. Dryden.

9. To make a noise with open throat.

And, if my muse can through past ages see, That noisy, nauseous, gaping fool is he. Roscommon.

10. To stare with hope or expectation.

Others will gape t' anticipate The cabinet designs of fate; Apply to wizards, to foresee What shall, and what shall never be. Hudibras.

11. To stare with wonder.

The king gaped and gazed upon her with open mouth. 1 Esdras, iv. 31. Parts of different species jumbled together, according to the mad imagination of the dawber; and the end of all this is to cause laughter; a very monster in a Bartholomew fair, for the mob to gape at. Dryden, Dufresnoy.

Where elevated o'er the gaping crowd, Clasp'd in the board the perjurd head is bow'd, Betimes retreat. Gay, Trivia.

12. To stare irreverently.

They have gaped upon me with their mouth. Job, xvi. 10.

GA'PER.† n. s. [from gape.]

2. One who stares foolishly.

Guard, put by those gapers, And gentlemen-usbers, see the gallery clear. Beaumont, and Fl. Bloody Brother.

3. One who longs or craves.

Goods and livings were not small; The gapers for them bare the world in hand For ten year's space. Mir. for Mag. p. 370. The golden shower of the dissolved abbey-lands rained well near into every gaper's mouth. Carew, Surv. of Cornwall.

GAR, in Saxon, signifies a weapon: so Eadgar is a happy weapon; Ethelgar, a noble weapon. Gibson's Camden.

TO GAR.† v. a. [Icel. giora, to make; Su. Goth. goera; Dan. gior.] To cause; to make; to force. Obsolete, Dr. Johnson says, admitting however that it was still in use in Scotland. It is also still used in Lancashire, and other parts of the north of England.

Tell me, good Hobbinol, what gars thee greet? What! hath some wolf thy tender lambs yorn? Or is thy bagpipe broke, that sounds so sweet? Or art thou of thy loved lass forlorn? Spenser, Shep. Cal.

GARB.† n. s. [garbe, French. Dr. Johnson. Rather perhaps from the Ital. garbo, fineness, neatness.]

1. Dress; clothes; habit. Thus Belial, with words cloth'd in reason's garb, Counsel'd ignoble ease and peaceful sloth. Milton, P. L.

He puts himself into the garb and habit of a professor of physics, and sets up. L'Estrange.

2. Fashion of dress.

In hose and doublet, The horse-boy's garb. Beaumont, and Fl. Love's Pilg. Horace's wit, and Virgil's state, He did not steal, but emulate; And when he would like them appear, Their garb, but not their clothes, did wear. Denham.

3. Extrior appearance.

This is some fellow Who, having been prais'd for bluntness, doth affect

A saucy roughness, and constrains the garb Quite from his nature. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

Some noblemen of that kingdom [Ireland] lived, in a higher garb, and made greater expenses than the noblemen in England were able to do. Ld. Clarendon, Life, iii. 707.

4. In heraldry, a sheaf of wheat, or any other grain. [Latin, garba.]

GARBAGE.† n. s. [garbear, Spanish.

This etymology is very doubtful. Dr. Johnson. Serenius deduces it from the Goth. gar, blood or gore, and bagge or balgs, a little sack or bag.] The bowels; the offal; that part of the inwards which is separated and thrown away.

The cloyed will, That satiate, yet unsatisfy'd desire, that tub Both fill'd and running, ravening first the lamb, Longs after for the garbage. Shakespeare, Cymb. Lust, though to a radiant angel link'd, Will state itself in a celestial bed, And prey on garbage. Shakespeare, Hamlet.

A flamm more senseless than the rog'ry Of old Aruspicy and aug'ry, That out of garbages of cattle Presag'd th' events of truce or battle. Hudibras. Who, without aversion, ever look'd On holy garbage, though by Homer cook'd? Roscommon.

When you receive condign punishment, you run to your confessor, that parcel of guts and garbage. Dryden.

GA'RBISH.† n. s. Corrupted from garbage; but occurring in the old dictionary of Barret, (where the verb garbish also is found,) under the word bowel.

In Newfoundland they improve their ground with the garbish of fish. Mortimer, Husbandry.

TO GA'RBISH.* v. a. [from the noun.] To exenterate; as, "to garbish fish."

Barret.

TO GA'RBLE.† v. a. [garbellare, Italian.] 1. To sift and cleanse spices. This is the primary sense, unnoticed by Dr. Johnson; but not overlooked in our old lexicography.

Upon the 7. of April 1620, he [Dr. Gwlnne] with seven others were appointed commissioners by his majesty for garbling tobacco.

Ward, Hist. of Gresham Coll. and Prof. p. 264.

2. To sift; to part; to separate the good from the bad.

But you who fathers and traditions take,
And garble some, and some you quite forsake.

Dryden.

Had our author set down this command, without garbling, as God gave it, and joined mother to father, it had made directly against him. Locke.

The understanding works to collate, combine, and garble the images and ideas, the imagination and memory present to it. Cheyne, Phil. Princ.

GA'RBLE.† n. s. [from garble.]

1. The garbler of spices is an officer of great antiquity in the city of London, who is empowered to enter any shop, warehouse, &c. to view and search drugs, &c. and to garble and cleanse them. Cowell.
2. He who separates one part from another.

A further secret in this clause may best be discovered by the projectors, or at least the garblers of it. Swift, Examiner.

GA'RBOL. n. s. [garboul, old Fr. garbuglio, Ital.] Disorder; tumult; uproar; and, in our old lexicography, hurlyburly. Bishop Hall has rendered Virgil's arma, i. e. battles, by this word garbol.

Look here, and at thy sovereign leisure read
What garbols she awak'd.

Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleop.

Give me the number'd verse that Virgil sung,
And Virgil's self shall speak the English tongue;
Manhood and garbols shall he chaunt.

Ep. Hall, Sat. i. 6.

Upon this bull ensued open rebellion in the north, and many garbols.

Proceedings against Garnet, &c. sign. P. 2. b.

GARD. n. s. [garde, French.] Wardship; care; custody.

To GARD.* v. a. To adorn with lace, or ornamental borders. See To GUARD.

GA'RDEN.† n. s. [garrd, Welsh; gardin, French; giardino, Ital. Dr. Johnson. — The etymology has been traced to a different source; Goth. gardr, a garden, from the Su. Goth. gaerda, to enclose, to hedge in. Serenius. The same derivation is observable in other northern languages. V. Ludwig, Jura, Feudorum, &c. p. 508. In like manner Mr. Horne Tooke deduces garden [Sax. gærþ] from the Sax. gærþan, to enclose.]

1. A piece of ground enclosed, and cultivated with extraordinary care, planted with herbs or fruits for food, or laid out for pleasure.

Thy promises are like Adonis' gardens,
Which one day bloom'd and fruitful were the next.

Shakespeare.

My lord of Ely, when I was last in Holborn,
I saw good strawberries in your garden there.

Shakespeare, Rich. III.

In the royal ordering of gardens, there ought to be gardens for all the months in the year.

Bacon, Essays.

In every garden should be provided flowers, fruit, shade, and water. Temple.

My garden takes up half my daily care,
And my field asks the minutes I can spare. Harte.

2. A place particularly fruitful or delightful.

I am arriv'd from fruitful Lombardy,
The pleasant garden of great Italy.

Shakespeare, Tam. of the Shrew.

GA'RDEN-MOULD. n. s. Mould fit for a garden.

They delight most in rich black garden-mould,
that is deep and light, and mixed rather with sand than clay.

Mortimer, Husbandry.

GA'RDEN-PLOT.* n. s. Plantation laid out in a garden.

Let a man but look upon their steeples, their towers, their cloisters, their oratories and dormitories, their garden-plots and orchards.

Harmar, Tr. of Beza's Serm. (1587), p. 351.

In border and field he sought, where any tuft
Of grove or garden-plot more pleasant lay,
Their tendance, or plantation for delight.

Milton, P. L.

GA'RDEN-TILLAGE. n. s. Tillage used in cultivating gardens.

Peas and beans are what belong to garden-tillage as well as that of the field. Mortimer, Husbandry.

GA'RDEN-WARE. n. s. The produce of gardens.

A clay bottom is a much more pernicious soil for trees and garden-ware than gravel.

Mortimer, Husbandry.

To GA'RDEN. v. n. [from the noun.] To cultivate a garden; to lay out gardens.

At first, in Rome's poor age,
When both her kings and consuls held the plough,
Or garden'd well. B. Jonson, Catiline.

When ages grow to civility and elegance, men come to build stately, sooner than to garden finely; as if gardening were the greater perfection.

Bacon.

To GA'RDEN.* v. a. To dress as a garden; to make a garden.

Colgrave, and Sherwood.

GA'RDENER. n. s. [from garden.] He that attends or cultivates gardens.

Our bodies are our gardens, to the which our wills are gardeners; so that, if we will plant nettles, or sow lettuce, the power lies in our will.

Shakespeare, Othello.

Gardeners tread down any loose ground, after they have sown onions or turnips.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

The gardener may lop religion as he pleases.

Howell.

The life and felicity of an excellent gardener is preferable to all other diversions.

Euelyn, Kalendar.

Then let the learned gard'ner mark with care
The kinds of stocks, and what those kinds will bear.

Dryden.

GA'RDENING. n. s. [from garden.] The act of cultivating or planning gardens.

My compositions in gardening are after the Pindarick manner, and run into the beautiful wildness of nature, without affecting the nicer elegancies of art.

Spectator.

GARE. n. s. Coarse wool growing on the legs of sheep.

Dict.

GA'RGARISM.† n. s. [γάργαρας, Gr. gargarisme, Fr.] A liquid form of medicine to wash the mouth with. Quincy.

Apoplegmatisms and gargarisms draw the rheum down by the palate.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Such [medicines] as are not swallowed, but only kept in the mouth, are gargarisms.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 387.

Let every man therefore be sure to begin at the right end of his work; to wash his own mouth clean, before he prescribe gargarisms to others.

Gov. of the Tongue, p. 219.

To GA'RGARIZE. v. a. [γάργαρας, Gr. gargariser, French.] To wash the mouth with medicated liquors.

Vinegar, put to the nostrils, or gargarized, doth ease the hiccough; for that it is astringent, and inhibiteth the motion of the spirit.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

This being relaxed, may make a shaking of the larynx; as when we gargarize.

Holder, Elem. of Speech.

GA'RGET. n. s. A distemper in cattle.

The garget appears in the head, maw, or in the hinder parts.

Mortimer, Husbandry.

To GA'RGLE. v. a. [gargouiller, Fr. gargogliare, Ital. gurgel, Germ. the throat.]

1. To wash the throat with some liquor not suffered immediately to descend.

Gargle twice or thrice with sharp oxycrate.

Harvey.

The excision made, the bleeding will soon be stopp'd by gargling with oxycrate.

Wiseman, Surgery.

- They comb, and then they order ev'ry hair;
Next gargle well their throats.

Dryden, Pers.

2. To warble; to play in the throat. An improper use.

Those which only warble long,
And gargle in their throats a song.

Waller.

So charm'd you were, you ceas'd a while to doat
On nonsense gargl'd in an eunuch's throat.

Fenton.

GA'RGLE. n. s. [from the verb.] A liquor with which the throat is washed.

His throat was washed with one of the gargles set down in the method of cure.

Mir. for Mag. p. 214.

Infectious stain
Corrupteth all the lowly fruitful plain;
Their modest stole to garish looser weed.

Bp. Hall, Sat. i. 2.

The garish and wanton fashion of the woman's disheveling her hair.

Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 244.

And now at last had laid all garish pompe aside.

Drayton, Polyolb. S. 15.

Hide me from day's garish eye.

Milton, Il Pens.

Through corporal and garish rudiments.

Milton, Doct. and Disc. of Divorce.

2. Extravagantly gay; flighty.

Those garish effects of fanatical fancy.

More, Conj. Cabbal. p. 243.

Fame and glory transports a man out of himself: — it makes the mind loose and garish, scatters the spirits, and leaves a kind of dissolution upon all the faculties.

South, Serm. ii. 382.

GA'RISHLY.* adv. [from garish.]

1. Splendidly; gaudily.

Trimmed up garishly, as a virgin that loves to go gay.

Dr. Westfield, Serm. (1646,) p. 65.

2. Wildly; in a flighty manner.

Hinde, Eliosto Libid. (1606.)

GA'RISHNESS.† n. s. [from garish.]

1. Finery; flaunting gaudiness.

The garishnesse, neatnesse, and riches of silken garments grow in contempt.

Florio, Tr. of Montaigne, (1613), p. 145.

2. Flighty or extravagant joy.

Let your hope be without vanity, or garishness of spirit; but sober, grave, and silent.

Bp. Taylor, Rule of Living Holy.

This [Fasting] is a singular corrective of that pride and garishness of temper, that renders it impatient of the sobrieties of virtue, but open to all the wild suggestions of fancy and the impressions of vice.

South, Serm. ix. 157.

GA'RLAND.† n. s. [garlande, guirland, French; garland, Goth. girlanda, Span. ghirlanda, Ital. a wreath, a chaplet; probably from the Lat. gyrus, a circle, Gr. γῦρος.]

1. A wreath of branches or flowers.

Strephon, with leavy twigs of laurel-tree,

A garland made, on temples for to wear;

For he then chosen was the dignity

Of village-lord that Whitsunide to bear. Sidney.

A reeling world will never stand upright,
Till Richard wear the garland of the realm.

—How! wear the garland! do'st thou mean the crown?

—Ay, my good lord. Shakespeare, Rich. III.
Then party-colour'd flow'rs of white and red
She wove, to make a garland for her head.

Dryden, Fab.

Vanquish again; though she be gone,

Whose garland crown'd the victor's hair,

And reign; though she has left the throne,

Who made thy glory worth thy care. Prior.

Her gods and godlike heroes rise to view,
And all her faded garlands bloom anew. Pope.

2. The top; the principal; the thing most prized.

With every minute you do change a mind,

And call him noble, that was now your hate,

Him vile, that was your garland. Shakespeare.

3. A collection of little printed pieces.

These [ballads] came forth in such abundance, that in the reign of James I. they began to be collected into little miscellanies, under the name of garlands, and at length to be purposely written for such collections.

Percy, Rel. of Anc. Poet. Ess. on the Anc. Minstrels.

To GA'RLAND.* v. a. [from the noun.] To deck with a garland.

He was garlanded with alga, or sea-grass; and in his hand a trident. B. Jonson, Masques.

Florida, or garlanded with flowers.

Fuller, Holy War, p. 271.

GA'RLICK.† n. s. [Sax. garpleac zaplec; from zap, Sax. a lance, and leac, a leek, the leek that shoots up in blades. Skinner. Minshew had proposed garden and leek; and others the Teut. gar, entirely, altogether, and leek, i. e. the strong leek; but Skinner is right. Thus we have spear-grass, i. e. long stiff grass.]

It has a bulbous root, consisting of many small tubercles included in its coats: the leaves are plain: the flowers consist of six leaves, formed into a corymb on the top of the stalk; and are succeeded by subrotund fruit, divided into three cells which contain rounded seeds. Miller.

Garlick is of an extremely strong smell, and of an acrid and pungent taste. It is extremely active, as may be proved by applying plaisters of garlick to the feet, which will give a strong smell to the breath. Hill.

Garlick has, of all our plants, the greatest strength, affords most nourishment, and supplies most spirits to those who eat little flesh. Temple.

She smelled brown bread and garlick.

Shakespeare, Meas. for Meas.

'Tis mortal sin an onion to devour;

Each clove of garlick is a sacred power;

Religious nations sure, and blest abodes,

Where ev'ry orchard is o'er-run with gods.

Tate, Jew.

GA'RLICK Pear-tree. n. s.

This tree is pretty common in Jamaica, and several other places of America, where it usually rises to the height of thirty or forty feet, and spreads into many branches. When the flowers fall off the pointal, it becomes a round fruit, which, when ripe, has a rough brownish rind, and a mealy sweet pulp, but a strong scent of garlick. Miller.

GA'RLICK Wild. n. s. A plant.

GA'RLICKEATER. n. s. [garlick and eat.]

A mean fellow.

You have made good work,
You and your apron men; you that stood so much Upon the voice of occupation, and
The breath of garlickeaters. Shakespeare, Coriol.

GA'RMENT. n. s. [guariment, old French.]

Any thing by which the body is covered; clothes; dress.

Hence, rotten thing, or I shall shake thy bones
Out of thy garments. Shakespeare, Coriol.

Our leaf, once fallen, springeth no more; neither doth the sun or summer adorn us again with the garments of new leaves and flowers. Raleigh, Hist.

Fairest thing that shines below,
Why in this robe dost thou appear?
Would'st thou a while more perfect show,
Thou must at all no garment wear. Cowley.

Three worthy persons from his side it tore,
And dy'd his garment with their scatter'd gore. Waller.

The peacock, in all his pride, does not display half the colours that appear in the garments of a British lady, when she is dressed. Addis. Spect.

Let him that sues for the coat, i. e. the shirt, or inner garment, take the cloak also, is a proverbial phrase too; for in the truth of the letter, a shirt is no likely matter of a lawsuit, and signifies an uncontesting sufferance of such small losses. Kettlewell.

GA'RNER.† n. s. [grenier, French; granarium, Lat.] A place in which thrashed grain is stored up.

The *garner*s are laid desolate, the barns are broken down: for the corn is withered. Jeel, i. 17.

Earth's increase, and foynon plenty,
Barns and *garner*s never empty. Shaksp. Temp.

For sundry foes the rural realm surround;
The fieldmouse builds her garner under ground:

For gather'd grain the blind laborious mole,
In winding mazes, works her hidden hole. Dryden, Virg.

To GA'RNER. v. a. [from the noun.] To store as in *garner*s.

There, where I have garner'd up my heart,
Where either I must live, or bear no life. Shakespeare, Othello.

GA'RNET. n. s. [garnato, Italian; granatus, low Latin; from its resemblance in colour to the grain of the pomegranate.]

The garnet is a gem of a middle degree of hardness, between the sapphire and the common crystal. It is found of various sizes. Its surfaces are not so smooth or polite as those of a ruby, and its colour is ever of a strong red, with a plain admixture of blueish; its degree of colour is very different, and it always wants much of the brightness of the ruby. Hill.

The garnet seems to be a species of the carbuncle of the ancients: the Bohemian is red, with a slight cast of a flame-colour; and the Syrian is red, with a slight cast of purple.

Woodward, Met. Fossils.

To GA'RNISH. v. a. [garnir, French.]

1. To decorate with ornamental appendages.

There were hills which garnished their proud heights with stately trees. Sidney.

All within with flowers was garnished,
That, when mild Zephyrus amongst them blew,
Did breathe out bounteous smells, and painted colours shew. Spenser.

With taper light

To seek the beauteous eye of heav'n to garnish,
Is wasteful and ridiculous excess. Shaks. K. John.

Paradise was a terrestrial garden, garnish'd with fruits, delighting both the eye and taste.

Raleigh.

All the streets were garnish'd with the citizens, standing in their liveries. Bacon, Hen. VII.

2. To embellish a dish with something laid round it.

With what expence and art, how richly drest!
Garnish'd with sparagus, himself a feast! Dryden, Jew.

No man lards salt pork with orange-peel,
Or garnishes his lamb with spitcheek'd eel. King, Cookery.

3. To fit with fetters. A cant term.

GA'RNISH.† n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Ornament; decoration; embellishment.

So are you, sweet,
Ev'n in the lovely garnish of a boy.

Shakespeare, Merch. of Ven.

Matter and figure they produce;
For garnish this, and that for use;
They seek to feed and please their guests. Prior.

2. Things strewed round a dish.

3. [In gaols.] Fetters. A cant term.

4. Pensinacula carceraria; an acknowledgement in money when first a prisoner goes into a gaol. Ainsworth.

Like a fresh tenant in Newgate, when he has refused the payment of garnish.

Swift, Tale of a Tub.

The Sheriffs of London have ordered, that no debtor, in going into any of the gaols of London and Middlesex, shall, for the future, pay any garnish; it having been for many years a great oppression to many. Gent. Mag. (1752), xxii. 239.

GA'RNISHER.* n. s. [from garnish.] One who decorates. Sherwood.

GA'RNISHMENT.† n. s. [old French garnissement.] Ornament; embellishment.

Satan's cleanliness is pollution, and his garnishment disorder and wickedness.

Bp. Hall, Devout Soul, § 9.

The church of Sancta Giustina in Padoua [is] a sound piece of good art, where the materials being but ordinary stone, without any garnishment of sculpture, do yet ravish the beholder.

Wotton on Architecture.

GA'RNITURE.† n. s. [garniture, French.]

Furniture; ornament.

They conclude, if they fall short in garniture of their knees, that they are inferior in furniture of their heads. Gov. of the Tongue.

Plain sense, which pleas'd your sires an age ago,
Is lost, without the garniture of show. Granville.

As nature has poured out her charms upon the female part of our species, so they are very assiduous in bestowing upon themselves the finest garnitures of art.

Addison, Spectator.

GA'ROUS. adj. [from garum.] Resembling pickle made of fish.

In a civet-cat an offensive odour proceeds, partly from its food, that being especially fish; whereof this humour may be a garous excretion, and olidous separation.

Brown.

GA'RRAN. See GARRON.

GA'RRÉT.† n. s. [garûte, the tower of a citadel, French. Dr. Johnson. — From the Germ. warle, quasi gwarret, a fortification; or warten, to observe. Wachter. And this from the Su. Goth. wara, which means both to observe and to defend.]

1. A room on the highest floor of the house.

The mob, commission'd by the government, Are seldom to an empty garret sent.

Dryd. Juv.

John Bull skipped from room to room; ran up stairs and down stairs, from the kitchen to the garret.

Arbuthnot, Hist. of J. Bull.

On earth the god of wealth was made

Sole patron of the building trade;

Leaving the arts the spacious air,

With license to build castles there:

And 'tis conceiv'd his old pretence,

To lodge in garrets, comes from thence.

Swift.

2. Rotten wood. Not in use.

The colour of the shining part of rotten wood, by day-light, is in some pieces white, and in some pieces inclining to red, which they call the white and red garret.

Bacon.

GA'RRÉTÉD.* adj. [from garret.] Protected by turrets. See the etymology of GARRÉT.

The high cliffs are by sea inaccessible round about, saving in one only place towards the East, where they proffer an uneasy landing place for boats; which, being fenced with a garretted wall, admitteth entrance through a gate, and is within presently commanded by an hardly climbed hill.

Carew, Surv. of Cornwall.

GARRETE'ER.† n. s. [from garret.] An inhabitant of a garret.

To pen with garreteers, obscure and shabby,

Inscriptive nonsense in a fancied abbeey.

Pursuits of Literature.

GARRISON.† n. s. [garnison, French. Dr. Johnson. — Our own word is written garnison by Chaucer. The old French, however, is garison, "vivres et munitions d'une place de guerre." Lacombe. In this form, from the Su. Goth. waera, to defend; in that of garrison, from warna, with a similar signification.]

1. Soldiers placed in a fortified town or castle to defend it.

How oft he said to me,

Thou art no soldier fit for Cupid's garrison.

Sidney.

2. Fortified place stored with soldiers.

Whom the old Roman wall so ill confin'd,

With a new chain of garrisons you bind.

Waller.

3. The state of being placed in a fortification for its defence.

Some of them that are laid in garrison will do no great hurt to the enemies.

Spenser on Ireland.

TO GA'RRISON.† v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To supply a place with an armed force to defend it; to place soldiers in garrison.

Ham. The Polack never will defend it.

Cap. Yes, 'tis already garrison'd. Shaksp. Ham.

The legions garrison'd in Gallia. Shak. Cymb.

Garrison'd round about him like a camp

Of faithful soldiery. Milton, S. A.

There was a single bridge that led into the island, and before it a castle garrisoned by twenty knights.

Taitler, No. 194.

2. To secure by fortresses.

Others those forces join,

Which garrison the conquests near the Rhine.

Dryden, Juv.

GA'RRON.† n. s. [Euse. It imports the same as gelding. The word is still retained in Scotland.] A small horse; a hobby; a Highland horse, which, when brought into the North of England, takes the name of galloway. Dr. Johnson. — The Irish garron, however, is a strong horse, a hackney. See Shaw's Gal. Dict.

When he comes forth he will make their cows and garrons to walk, if he doth no other harm to their persons.

Spenser on Ireland.

Every man would be forced to provide Winter-fodder for his team, whereas common garrons shift upon grass the year round; and this would force men to the enclosing of grounds, so that the race of garrons would decrease.

Temple.

GARRU'LITY.† n. s. [garrulité, French; garrulitas, Latin.]

1. Loquacity; incontinence of tongue; inability to keep a secret.

Let me here

Expiate, if possible, my crime,

Shameful garrulity.

Milton, S. A.

2. The quality of talking too much; talkativeness.

Some vices of speech must carefully be avoided: first of all loquacity or garrulity.

Ray on the Creation.

GARRU'LOUS.† adj. [garrulus, Latin.] Prattling; talkative. In use near a century before the time of Thomson, from whose poetry alone Dr. Johnson brought an example of the word.

Busy and garrulous men.

Bp. Reynolds's Works, p. 717.

Old age looks out,

And garrulous recounts the feats of youth.

Thomson.

GARTER.† n. s. [gardus, Welsh; gartier, French; from gar, Welsh, the binding of the knee. Dr. Johnson. — It is the Goth. gartur, a binding band; Icel. giorde, the same, from giorða, to gird.]

1. A string or ribband by which the stocking is held upon the leg.

Let their heads be sleekly comb'd, their blue coats brush'd, and their garters of an indifferent knit.

Shakespeare, Taming of the Shrew.

When we rest in our clothes we loosen our garters, and other ligatures, to give the spirits free passage.

Ray.

Handsome garters, at your knees.

Swift.

There lay three garters, half a pair of gloves,

And all the trophies of his former loves.

Pope.

2. The mark of the order of the garter, the highest order of English knighthood.

Now by my george, my garter.

— The george, profan'd, hath lost his holy honour;

The garter, blemish'd, pawn'd his knightly virtue.

Shakespeare, Rich. III.

You owe your Ormond nothing but a son,

To fill in future times his father's place,

And wear the garter of his mother's race.

Dryd.

3. The principal king at arms.

Two aldermen, lord mayor, garter, Cranmer, duke of Norfolk, &c.

Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

Sir Walter Bickerstaff married Maud the milkmaid, of whom the then Garter king at arms (a facetious person) said pleasantly enough, that she had spoiled our blood, but mended our constitutions.

Addison, Taitler, No. 75.

TO GA'RTER.* v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To bind with a garter.

He, being in love, could not see to garter his hose.

Shakespeare.

A person was wounded in the leg, below the gartering place.

Wiseeman, Surgery.

2. To invest with the order of the garter.

Say, conscious dome, if e'er thy marshall'd knights

So nobly deck'd their old majestic rites,

As when, high thrond amid thy trophied shrine,

George shone the leader of the garter'd line?

Watson on the Birth of the Prince of Wales, (1762.)

GARTH.† n. s. [as if girth, from gird.]

1. The bulk of the body, measured by the girdle.

2. An enclosure. [Saxon, geap; Welsh, garth.] In the north of England, a yard; a garden; a croft. Still in use.

3. In the north of England also, a hoop or band.

GA'RUM.* n. s. [Latin; Fr. garon.] A word in very common use among the old writers of medicine, who expressed by it a pickle, in which fish had been preserved. See GAROUS. Chambers.

GAS.† n. s. [A word invented by the chymists.] It is used by Van Helmont, and seems designed to signify, in general, a spirit not capable of being coagulated; but he uses it loosely in many senses.

Harris.

The word gas, which is the name now given to every kind of air which differs from the air of the atmosphere, was first introduced into chemistry by Van Helmont. He seems to have intended to denote by it every thing which is driven off from bodies in the state of vapour by heat. He divides gases into five classes.

Thomson, Système de Chimistry, (1802.)

GA'SCON.* n. s. A native of Gascony.

See GASCONADE.

A young coquette widow in France having been followed by a Gascon of quality, who had boasted among his companions of some favours which he had never received; to be revenged of him, sent for him, &c.

Taitler, No. 126.

GASCONA'DE.† n. s. [French; from the Gascons, a nation eminent for boasting. See GASCON.] A boast; a bravado.

Was it a gasconade to please me, that you said your fortune was increased to one hundred a year since I left you?

Swift.

I could never believe Mrs. Whiteway's gasconades in telling me of her acquaintance with you.

Swift, Lett. Berkeley's Lit. Relicks, p. 72.

TO GASCONA'DE. v. n. [from the noun.] To boast; to brag; to bluster.

TO GASH.† v. a. [from hacher, to cut, to hack, French. Skinner. Hacher, Dr. Johnson should have added, means also to cut into small pieces, to shred; and in this primary sense, which he has overpassed, the word gash is in our own language, which renders its derivation from hacher still more likely.]

1. To cut into small pieces, as applied to cloth; to shred.

To what end do we juggle and gash the garments that are sowed together to cover our bodies, but that thereby we may, as it were, by a most fond and ridiculous anatomy, open and lay forth to the eyes of all men what kind of people we are in our inward hearts; jaggled, (God wot,) and ragged, vain, light, and nothing sound?

Trans. of Bullinger's Sermon. (1576.) p. 239.

2. To cut deep so as to make a gaping wound; to cut with a blunt instrument so as to make the wound wide.

Where the Englishmen at arms had been defeated, many of their horses were found grievously gashed or gored to death.

Hayward.

Wit is a keen instrument, and every one can cut and gash with it; but to carve a beautiful image, and to polish it, requires great art and dexterity.

Tillotson, vol. i. § 2.

See me gash'd with knives,

Or sear'd with burning steel. Rome, Royal Convert.

Streaming with blood, all over gash'd with wounds,

He reel'd, he groan'd, and at the altar fell.

A. Philips.

GASH. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A deep and wide wound.

He glancing on his helmet, made a large And open gash therein; were not his targe, That broke the violence of his intent, The weary soul from thence it would discharge.

Spenser.

A perilous gash, a very limb lopt off.

Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

Hamilton drove Newton almost to the end of the lists; but Newton on a sudden gave him such a gash on the leg, that therewith he fell to the ground.

Hayward.

But th' ethereal substance clos'd,
Not long divisible; and from the gash
A stream of nectarous humour issuing flow'd.

Milton, P. L.

2. The mark of a wound. I know not if this be proper.

I was fond of back-sword and cudgel-play, and I now bear in my body many a black and blue gash and scar.

Arbutnot.

GA'SHFUL.* adj. [gash and full.] Full of gashes; looking terribly. One might at once pronounce this word to be intended for gashful, if two authors did not use it, at a distance of almost forty years; and if a contemporary had not cited the lines of the oldest, (which indeed are a fine and just satire on a certain kind of hypocrites,) where gashful is the word. See Sir Miles Sandys's Essays, p. 190. Yet Mr. Nares in his Glossary has no doubt that gashful, (from gash), i. e. horrid, frightful, is here the word intended.

'Tis not the holding of thy hands so high,
Nor yet the purer squinting of thine eye;
'Tis not thy mimic mouths, nor antic faces,
Nor scripture phrases, nor affected graces,
Nor prodigal upbidding of thine eyes,
Whose gashful balls do seem to pet the skies;
'Tis not the strict reforming of thy hair
So close, that all the neighbour skull is bare;
'Tis not the drooping of thy head so low,
Nor yet the louring of thy sullen brow;
No, no; 'tis none of this that God regards;
Such sort of fools their own applause rewards.

Quarles, Hist. of Jonah, (1620), sign. H. 2.

Come death, and welcome; which spoke, comes in a gashful, horrid, meagre, terrible, ugly shape.

Gayton on D. Quix. (1654), p. 69.

GA'SKETS.* n. s. pl. On ship-board, the small cords used to fasten the sails to the yards when furled up.

Chambers.

GA'SKINS.* n. s. pl. [from Gascoigne.

See GALLIGASKINS.] Wide hose; wide breeches. An old ludicrous word.

If one point break, the other will hold;
Or, if both break, your gaskins fall.

Shakespeare, Tw. Night.

Come, come George, let's be merry and wise; the child's a fatherless child, and say they should put him into a strait pair of gaskins, 'twere worse than knot-grass, he would never grow after it.

Beaumont and Fl. Kn. of the Burn. Pest.

GASOMETER.* n. s. [gas, and μέτρον, Gr. gazometre, Fr.] An instrument said to be invented by Lavoisier and Meunier to measure the quantity of gas employed in experiments.

TO GASP.† v. n. [from gape, Skinner; from gispe, Danish, to sob, Junius. Rather from the Su. Goth. gáspa, gespa, to yawn, to gape.]

1. To open the mouth wide; to catch breath with labour.

The sick for air before the portal gasp.

Dryden, Virg.

They rais'd a feeble cry with trembling notes;
But the weak voice deceiv'd their *gasp*ing throats.

Dryden.

The *gasp*ing head flies off; a purple flood

Flows from the trunk. Dryden, Æn.

The ladies gasp'd, and scarcely could respire;
The breath they drew no longer air, but fire.

Dryden.

A scantling of wit lay *gasp*ing for life, and groaning beneath a heap of rubbish.

Dryden, Span. Friar.

The rich countrymen in Austria were faint and *gasp*ing for breath.

Brown's Travels.

He *gasp*s for breath; and, as his life flows from him,

Demands to see his friends. Addison, Cato.

2. To emit breath by opening the mouth convulsively.

I lay me down to gasp my latest breath;

The wolves will get a breakfast by my death.

Dryden.

He staggers round, his eyeballs roll in death,
And with short sobs he *gasp*s away his breath.

Dryden, Æn.

3. To long for. This sense is, I think, not proper, as Nature never expresses desire by *gasp*ing.

The Castilian and his wife had the comfort to be under the same master, who, seeing how dearly they loved one another, and *gasp*ed after their liberty, demanded a most exorbitant price for their ransom.

Spectator.

GASP.† n. s. [from the verb.]

1. The act of opening the mouth to catch breath.

2. The short catch of breath in the last agonies.

When he was at the last gasp, he said, Thou, like a fury, takest us out of this present life; but the king of the world shall raise us up, who have died for his laws, unto everlasting life.

2 Macc. vii. 9.

His fortunes all lie speechless, and his name Is at last gasp. Shakespeare, Cymbeline.

Ah, Warwick, Montague hath breath'd his last;
And to the latest gasp cry'd out for Warwick.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

If in the dreadful hour of death,

If at the latest gasp of breath,

When the cold damp bedews your brow,

You hope for mercy, shew it now.

Addison, Rosamond.

TO GAST. v. a. [from gast, Saxon. See AGHAST.] To make gast; to fright; to shock; to terrify; to fear; to affray.

*

When he saw my best alarmed spirits,
Bold in the quarrel's right, rous'd to th' encounter,
Or whether *gast*ed by the noise I made,
Full suddenly he fled. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

TO GA'STER.* v. a. Saxon, gast, a ghost. This is the word of our old lexicography.] To scare; to terrify.

The sight of the lady has gaster'd him.

Beaumont and Fl. Wit at sev. Weapons.

GA'STEUL.* See GHA'STEUL.

GA'STLY.* See GHASTLY.

GA'STNESS.* n. s. [from gast. This is not the uniform reading of the editions of Shakespeare; but it seems to be the true one; gestures is the word which occurs in the quartos, gastness in the first folio.] Fright; amazement.

Look you pale, mistress? —

Do you perceive the gastness of her eye? —
Nay, if you stare, we shall hear more anon.

Shakespeare, Othello.

GA'STRICK.† adj. [gastrique, French, from γαστήρ, Greek.] Belonging to the belly or stomach.

GASTRI'LOQUIST.* n. s. [Fr. gastriloque, from γαστήρ, Greek, and loqui, Lat.] A person who speaks inwardly, and whose voice seems to come afar off; usually called a ventriloquist. See VENTRILOQUIST.

Gastroquists are persons, who have acquired the art of modifying their voice, so that it affects the ear of the hearers, as if it came from another person, or from the clouds, or from under the earth.

Reid.

GASTRO'GRAPHY. n. s. [γαστήρ and γράφω.]

In strictness of etymology signifies no more than sewing up any wound of the belly; yet in common acceptation it implies, that the wound of the belly is complicated with another of the intestine.

Sharp, Surgery.

GOSTRO'TOMY. n. s. [γαστήρ and τέτομα.]

The act of cutting open the belly.

GAT.† The preterite of get.

Moses gat him up into the mount. Ex. xxiv. 18.

Our daughter,

In honour of whose birth these triumphs are,

Sits here, like beauty's child, whom nature gat

For men to see, and seeing wonder at.

Shakespeare, Pericles.

GAT-TOOTHED.* adj. [Sax. gat, a goat, and toothed.] Having a goat's tooth; having a lickerish tooth. This word Dryden has converted into gap-toothed, which Dr. Johnson has admitted into his Dictionary; which however gives no meaning to the passage where it is used, and is not the true word. Gat-toothed Mr. Tyrwhitt places among words in Chaucer not understood. But considering the disposition of the Wife of Bath, the poet's meaning in gat-toothed seems clear enough. Gat or gate is, by our elder writers, often used for goat.

She coude moche of wandering by the way;

Gat-toothed was she, sothly for to say.

Chaucer, C. T. Prol. Wife of Bath.

GATE.† n. s. [Sax. gat, gate, geat; Goth. gatt; old Fr. gat; a gate.]

1. The door of a city, castle, palace, or large building.

Open the gate of mercy, gracious God!

My soul flies through these wounds to seek thee.

Shakespeare.

Gates of monarchs

Are arch'd so high, that giants may jet through,
And keep their impious turbans on, without
Good-morrow to the sun. Shakespeare, Cymbeline.

2. A frame of timber upon hinges to give a passage into enclosed grounds.
Know'st thou the way to Dover? —

3. An avenue; an opening.
Both stile and gate, horseway and footpath. Shaks.

Austria had done nothing but wisely and politically, in setting the Venetians together by the ears with the Turks, and opening a gate for a long war.
Knolles, Hist.

4. A way; a passage; a road. [Icel. gata, a street.] Thus the town-gate is the town-street, in the North of England. See also GAIT.

The gate of a country is not like the gate of an house; I mean, it is not the utmost limit of the land, as the other is of the building; but rather a difficult pass to be surmounted before we can penetrate into the most valuable part of the country.
Drummond, Trav. p. 246.

5. A goat. [Sax. geit, gat; Icel. geit.] Northerly spoken, says the contemporary commentator on Spenser. It is now used perhaps only in Scotland.
Thilke same kiddie —

Was too very foolish and unwise;
For on a time, in sommer season,
The gate her dame that had good reason,
Yode forth abroad, &c. Spenser, Shep. Cal. May.

- GA'TED.* adj. [from gate.] Having gates.
Vain Art, thou pigmy power!

How dost thou swell, and strut, with human pride,
To shew thy littleness! What childish toys —
Thy hundred-gated capitals, or those
Where three days' travel left us much to ride,
Young, Night Th. 9.

- GA'TEVEIN. n. s. The vena porta.
Being a king that loved wealth, he could not endure to have trade sick, nor any obstruction to continue in the gatevein which disperseth that blood.
Bacon, Hen. VII.

- GA'TEWAY.† n. s. [gate and way.]
1. A way through gates of enclosed grounds.

Gateways between enclosures are so miry, that they cannot cart between one field and another.
Mortimer, Husbandry.

2. A building to be passed at the entrance of the area to a large mansion.

To GATHER.† v. a. [gabepian, gaðepian, Sax. Our own word was at first gader: Chaucer so writes it.]

1. To collect; to bring into one place.
Gather stones — and they took stones and made an heap. Gen.

2. To get in harvest.
The seventh year we shall not sow, nor gather in our increase. Lev. xxv. 20.

3. To pick up; to glean.
His opinions
Have satisfied the king for his divorce,
Gather'd from all the famous colleges.
Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

Cast up the highway, gather out the stones.
Is. lxii. 10.

- I will spend this preface upon those from whom I have gathered my knowledge; for I am but a gatherer.
Wotton.

To pay the creditor, that lent him his rent, he must gather up money by degrees.
Locke.

4. To crop; to pluck.
What have I done?
To see my youth, my beauty, and my love
No sooner gain'd, but slighted and betray'd;
And like a rose just gather'd from the stalk,
But only smelt, and cheaply thrown aside,
To wither on the ground! Dryden, Span. Friar.

VOL. II.

5. To assemble.

They have gathered themselves together against me. Job.

All the way we went there were gathered some people on both sides, standing in a row.
Bacon, New Atlantis.

6. To heap up; to accumulate.
He that by usury and unjust gain increaseth his substance, shall gather it for him that will pity the poor. Proverbs.

7. To select and take.
Save us, O Lord, and gather us from among the heathen, to give thanks unto thy holy name.
Ps. cvi. 47.

8. To sweep together.
The kingdom of heaven is like unto a net that was cast into the sea, and gathered of every kind.
St. Matt. xiii. 47.

9. To collect charitable contributions.
Few Sundays come over our head, but decayed householders or shipwrack't merchants are gathered for.
Dr. King, Sermon. (1615) p. 57.

10. To bring into one body or interest.
I will gather others to him, besides those that are gathered unto him. Is. lvi. 8.

11. To draw together from a state of diffusion; to compress; to contract.
Immortal Tully shone,
The Roman rostra deck'd the consul's throne:
Gath'ring his flowing robe he seem'd to stand,
In act to speak, and graceful stretch'd his hand.
Pope.

12. To gain.
He gathers ground upon her in the chase;
Now breaks upon her hair with nearer pace.
Dryden.

13. To pucker needlework; to contract into small folds.

14. To collect logically; to know by inference.
That which, out of the law of reason or of God, men probably gathering to be expedient, they make it law. Hooker.

The reason that I gather he is mad,
Is a mad tale he told to-day at dinner,
Of his own door being shut against his entrance.
Shakespeare.

After he had seen the vision, we endeavoured to get into Macedonia, assuredly gathering that the Lord had called us. Acts.

From this doctrine of the increasing and lessening of sin in this respect, we may gather, that all sins are not alike and equal, as the stoicks of ancient times, and their followers, have falsely imagined. Perkins.

Return'd
By night, and listening where the hapless pair
Sat in their sad discourse, and various plaint, Thence gather'd his own doom. Milton, P. L.

Mademoiselle de Scudery, who is as old as Sibyl, is translating Chaucer into French: from which I gather that he has formerly been translated into the old Provençal. Dryden.

15. To contract; to get.
All faces shall gather blackness. Joel, ii. 6.

16. To GATHER Breath. [A proverbial expression.] To have respite from any calamity.

The luckless lucky maid
A long time with that savage people staid,
To gather breath, in many miseries. Spenser.

- To GA'THER.† v. n.

1. To be condensed; to thicken.
If ere night the gath'ring clouds we fear,
A song will help the beating storm to bear.
Dryden, Past.

When gath'ring clouds o'ershadow all the skies.
And shoot quick lightnings, weigh, my boys! he cries.
Dryden.

When the rival winds their quarrel try,
South, East, and West, on airy coursers born,
The whirlwind gathers, and the woods are torn.
Dryden.

Think on the storm that gathers o'er your head,
And threatens every hour to burst upon it.
Addison, Cato.

2. To grow larger by the accretion of similar matter.
Their snow-ball did not gather as it went; for the people came into them. Bacon, Hen. VII.

3. To assemble.
There gathered unto him from Jerusalem a very great multitude of men, and women, and children.
1 Esdr. viii. 91.

4. To generate pus or matter. See the 4th sense of GATHERING.

GA'THER. n. s. [from the verb.] Pucker; cloth drawn together in wrinkles.
Give laws for pantaloons,
The length of breeches, and the gathers,
Part canons, perriwigs, and feathers. Hudibras.

GA'THERABLE.* adj. [from gather.] Deducible from premised grounds.
The priesthood of the first-born is gatherable hence, because the Levites were appointed to the service of the altar, instead of the first-born, and as their ἀλφρον, or price of redemption. Num. iii. 41.
Godwin, Mos. and Aaron, i. 6.

GA'THERER. n. s. [from gather.]

1. One that gathers; one that collects; a collector.
I will spend this preface about those from whom I have gathered my knowledge; for I am but a gatherer and disposer of other men's stuff.
Wotton, Pref. to Elem. of Architecture.

2. One that gets in a crop of any kind.
I was a herdsman and a gatherer of sycamore fruit.
Amos.

Nor in that land
Do poisonous herbs deceive the gatherer's hand.
May, Virg.

GA'THERING.† n. s. [from gather.]

1. An assembly.
There be three things that mine heart feareth — the slander of a city, the gathering together of an unruly multitude, and a false accusation.
Ecclus. xxvi. 5.

2. An accumulation; a collection.
To receive the gatherings together of the waters which were to run from amongst the hills, and the mountains and hills raised upon the face of the antediluvian globe.
Shuckford on the Creation, p. 122.

3. A collection of charitable contributions.
Let every one lay by him in store, that there be no gatherings when I come. 1 Cor. xvi. 2.

4. Generation of pus or matter.
Ask one, who by repeated restraints hath subdued his natural rage, how he likes the change, and he will tell you 'tis no less happy than the ease of a broken impostume after the painful gathering and filling of it. Decay of Chr. Piety.

GA'TTEN-TREE. n. s. A species of Cornelian cherry.

GAUD.† n. s. [Skinner imagines this word may come from gaude, French, a yellow flower, yellow being the most gaudy colour. Junius, according to his custom, talks of ἀγαυός; and Mr. Lye finds gaude, in Gawan Douglas, to signify deceit or fraud, from gwardio, Welsh, to cheat. It seems to me most easily deducible from gaudium, Latin, joy; the cause of joy; a token of joy; thence aptly applied to any thing that gives or expresses pleasure. In Scotland, this word is still retained both as a showy bawble, and the person fooled. It also in Scotland denotes a yellow flower. Dr. Johnson. — Mr. Horne Tooke pretends, that gaud is the past participle of the Sax. gān, to give; gaved, gav'd, gavd, gaud. Div. of Purley, ii. 267. But the true etymon seems to be the Icel. gaeda, ornare. See Dr. Jamieson's Suppl. in V. To GAUD.] An ornament; a fine thing; a toy; a trinket; a bawble. It is not now much used.

A paire of bedes blacke as sable
She toke, and hyngye my necke about;
Upon the gaudes all without
Was wryte of gold, Tur reposer.

Gower, Conf. Am. b. 8.
Their faythe is a substance of thynges unseen,
and not of gaudes and fables apperyng to the eye.

Bale, Yet a Course, &c. (1543), fol. 33. b.
He hath put it into the minds of good Christian princes and magistrates to disburden her [the church] of those stincking and defiled gaudes.

Harnar, Transl. of Beza's Sermon. (1587), p. 82.
He stole the impression of her fantasy,
With bracelets of thy hair, rings, gauds, conceits,
Knacks, trifles, nosegays, sweatmeats. Shakspeare.
The sun is in the heaven, and the proud day,
Attended with the pleasures of the world,
Is all too wanton, and too full of gauds,
To give me audience. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

My love to Hermia
Is melted as the snow; seems to me now
As the remembrance of an idle gaud,
Which in my childhood I did doat upon. Shakspeare.
Some bound for Guiney, golden sand to find,
Bore all the gauds the simple natives wear;
Some for the pride of Turkish courts design'd,
For folded turbants finest holland bair.

Dryden, Ann. Mirab.
To GAUD.† v. n. [gaudeo, Lat.] To exult; to rejoice at any thing. Dr.
Johnson produces an example from Shakspeare, where the true reading is go, and gaud is merely a conjecture of Warburton, viz.

Go to a gossip's feast, and go with me.
Com. of Err.

GA'UDED.* adj. [from gaud.]

1. Decorated with beads or trinkets.
About her arm she bare
A pair of bedes, gauded all with green. Chaucer, C. T. Prol.
2. Coloured.

Our veil'd dames
Commit the war of white, and damask, in
Their nicely gauded cheeks. Shakspeare, Coriol.

GA'UDERY. n. s. [from gaud.] Finery;
ostentatious luxury of dress.

The triumph was not pageants and gaudery, but ever one of the wisest and noblest institutions that has been. Bacon, Ess.

Age, which is but one remove from death, and should have nothing about us but what looks like a decent preparation for it, scarce ever appears,
of late, but in the high mode, the flaunting garb, and utmost gaudery of youth, with clothes as ridiculously, and as much in the fashion, as the person that wears them is usually grown out of it.
South.

A plain suit, since we can make but one,
Is better than to be by tarnish'd gaud'ry known.
Dryden.

GA'UDILY.† adv. [from gaudy.] Showily.
Their persons are elegantly formed, gaudily decorated, and highly perfumed.

Cuthrie, India in general.

GA'UDINESS.† n. s. [from gaudy.] Showiness; tinsel appearance.

She shall have more thanks for the poor's wardrobe (of her procuring) than her own; and for their warmth than her own gaudiness.

Whitlock, Menn. of the Eng. p. 351.
Neither are the men much less guilty of this pernicious folly, who, in imitation of a gaudiness and foppery in dress introduced of late years into our kingdom, cannot find materials in their own country, worthy to adorn their bodies of clay, while their minds are naked of every valuable quality.
Swift, Sermon on the State of Ireland.

GA'UDY.† adj. [from gaud.] This adjective at first was gaudish, and is frequent in the writings of Bale.]

1. Showy; splendid; pompous; ostentatiously fine.

Costly thy habit as thy purse can buy,
But not express in fancy; rich, not gaudy;
For the apparel oft proclaims the man.

Shakspeare, Hamlet.
Fancies fond with gaudy shapes possess,
As thick and numberless

As the gay motes that people the sun beams.
Milton.
A goldfinch there I saw, with gaudy pride
Of painted plumes, that hopp'd from side to side.

The Bavarian duke his brigades leads,
Gallant in arms, and gaudy to behold. Philips.
A man who walks directly to his journey's end, will arrive thither much sooner than him who wanders aside to gaze at every thing, or to gather every gaudy flower. Watts.

It is much to be lamented, that persons so naturally qualified to be great examples of piety, should, by an erroneous education, be made poor and gaudy spectacles of the greatest vanity. Law.

2. Rejoicing; festal.

Come,
Let's have another gaudy night; call to me
All my sad captains, fill our bowls; once more
Let's mock the midnight bell.

Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.
'Tis joy clad like joy,
Which is more honest than a cunning grief
That's only fac'd with sables for a show,
But gaudy hearted. Massey, Old Law.

GA'UDY. n. s. [gaudium, Latin.] A feast;
a festival; a day of plenty. A word used in the university.

He may surely be contented with a fast to-day,
that is sure of a gaudy to-morrow. Cheyne.

GAVE. The preterite of give.

Thou canst not every day give me thy heart;
If thou canst give it, then thou never gav'st it:
Lovers riddles are, that though thy heart depart,
It stays at home, and thou with losing sav'st it.
Donne.

GA'VEL.† n. s.

1. A provincial word for ground.
Let it lie upon the ground or gavel eight or ten days. Mortimer.
2. A tribute; a toll; a yearly rent. [Sax.]
zapol.] More usually written gabel.
See GABEL.

GA'VELKIND.† n. s. Compounded by Lambert, in his Exposition of Saxon words, of gype, eal, cyn, omnibus cognatione proximitas data. Verstegan, in his Restitution of Decayed Intelligence, calls it gavel-kind, quasi, give all kind, that is, give to each child his part. But Taylor, in his History of Gavelkind, would derive it from the British gafael,
a hold or tenure, and cennae, or cennedh, generatio aut familia; and so gavel cen-

nedh might signify tenura generacionis.
But whatever is the true etymology; it signifies in law a custom whereby the lands of the father are equally divided at his death amongst all his sons, or the land of the brother equally divided among the brothers, if he have no issue of his own. This custom is of force in divers places of England, but especially in Kent. Covel.

Among other Welsh customs, he abolished that of gavelkind, whereby the heirs female were utterly excluded, and the bastards did inherit as well as the legitimate, which is the very Irish gavelkind.
Davies on Ireland.

Owen was no sooner dead, but the custom of gavel-kind, which some think has ruined most families in Wales, occasioned great division amongst his sons. Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 394.

GA'VELOCK.* n. s. [Su. Goth. gafflack,
Sax. gaveloc.] An iron crow or lever;
a strong iron bar. Common in the north of England, Westmoreland, and Craven Dialects, and Brockett's N.
Country Words. In some places it is called also gafflock.

To GAUGE. v. a. [gauge, jaugé, a measuring rod, French. It is pronounced, and often written, gagé.]

1. To measure with respect to the contents of a vessel.
2. To measure with regard to any proportion.

The vanes nicely gauged on each side, broad on one side, and narrow on the other, both which minister to the progressive motion of the bird.

Derham, Physico-Theology.
There is nothing more perfectly admirable in itself than that artful manner in Homer, of taking measure or gaging his heroes by each other, and thereby elevating the character of one person by the opposition of it to some other he is made to excel. Pope, Ess. on Homer's Battles.

GAUGE. n. s. [from the verb.] A measure;
a standard.

This plate must be a gauge to file your worm and groove to equal breadth by. Mason, Mech. Exerc.

If money were to be hired, as land is, or to be had from the owner himself, it might then be had at the market rate, which would be a constant gauge of your trade and wealth. Locke.

Timothy proposed to his mistress that she should entertain no servant that was above four foot seven inches high, and for that purpose had prepared a gauge, by which they were to be measured.

Arbuthnot, Hist. of John Bull.
GA'UGER. n. s. [from gauge.] One whose business is to measure vessels or quantities.

Those earls and dukes have been privileged with royal jurisdiction: and appointed their special officers, as sheriff, admiral, gauger, and escheator. Carew on Cornwall.

GAUL.* n. s. [Lat. Gallia.]

1. An ancient name of France. It is yet often used by our poets for modern France.

Here wak'd the flame that still superior braves
The proudest threats of Gaul's ambitious slaves.

Warren on the Marriage of the King, (1761.)
2. An old inhabitant of France; and in poetry a modern Frenchman.

Nor did the Gaul
Not find him once a baleful foe. Philips, Blenheim.
Wherever the Celtae or Gauls are mentioned by ancient writers, we seldom fail to hear of their druids and their bards.

Blair on the Poems of Ossian, p. 21.

GA'ULISH.* adj. Relating to the Gauls.
See GAUL.

The Romans having subdued the Gauls, introduced part of their language among them; and a mixture of half Latin; half Gaulish or Celtic, constituted the roman language; of which the modern French is only an improvement. Chambers.
Galliard is imagined to be derived from the Gaulish, ard, genius, and gay. Johnson.

TO GAUM.* v. a. [Icel. gaum, attention, gauma, to take a view of.] To understand; a northern word; as I do not gaum ye, i. e. I do not understand you, according to Grose. In Yorkshire, according to Ray, to mind or look at. We pronounce goam, says Ray, under that word gaum; and speak it of persons that unhandsonely gaze or look about them. Gaum is clearly the true word. It is still in use in Cheshire, and throughout the north of England.

GA'UMLESS.* adj. [from gaum.] Stupid; awkward; lubberly; senseless. Lancashire dialect, and other parts of the north.

TO GAUNCH.* v. a. See TO GANCH.

Among them are more frequent and horrid executions than

In the rest of Turkey, as empaling, gaunching, flaying alive. Blount, Voyage to the Levant. p. 94.

GAUNT. adj. [As if gewant, from gepaman, to lessen, Saxon.] Thin; slender; lean; meagre.

Oh, how that name befits my composition!

Old Gaunt, indeed, and gaunt in being old:

Within me grief hath kept a tedious fast;

And who abstains from meat that is not gaunt?

For sleeping England long time have I watch'd;

Watching breeds leanness, leanness is all gaunt:

The pleasure that some fathers feed upon,

Is my strict fast: I mean my children's looks:

And therein fasting thou hast made me gaunt;

Gaunt am I for the grave, gaunt as a grave,

Whose hollow womb inherits nought but bones.

Shakespeare, Rich. II.

Two mastiffs gaunt and grim her flight pursu'd,

And oft their fasten'd fangs in blood imbrued,

Dryden, Fab.

GA'UNTLY. adv. [from gaunt.] Leanly;

slenderly; meagerly.

GA'UNTLET. n. s. [gantelet, French.] An iron glove used for defence, and thrown down in challenges. It is sometimes in poetry used for the cestus, or boxing glove.

A scaly gauntlet now with joints of steel,

Must glove this hand. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

Feel but the difference soft and rough;

This a gauntlet, that a muff. Cleveland.

Some shall in swiftness for the goal contend,

And others try the twanging bow to bend;

The strong with iron gauntlets arm'd shall stand,

Oppos'd in combat, on the yellow sand.

Dryden, Virg.

Who naked wrestled best, besmear'd with oil;

Or who with gauntlets gave or took the foil,

Dryden, Fab.

The funeral of some valiant night

May give this thing its proper light:

View his two gauntlets; these declare

That both his hands were us'd to war.

Prior.

So to repel the Vandals of the stage,

Our vet'ran bard resumes his tragick rage;

He throws the gauntlet Otway us'd to wield,

And calls for Englishmen to judge the field.

Southern.

Yorkshire Ale, 1697. Still in use. Craven Dialect, 1824, viz. To stare vacantly.

GA'UVISON.* n. s. [from gause.] A weak foolish fellow; a silly staring fellow. North. Grose, and Craven Dialect.

GAVO'T. n. s. [gavotte, French; said to be derived from the Gavots, a people inhabiting a mountainous district in France, called Gap. Chambers.] A kind of dance, probably resembling our hornpipe. Cotgrave calls it a kind of brawl danced, commonly, by one alone.

The disposition in a fiddle to play tunes in preludes, sarabands, jigs, and gavots, are real qualities in the instrument.

Arbuthnot and Pope, Mari. Scriblerus.

GAUZE. n. s. [Fr. gaze, "the thin canvas that serves women for a ground unto their cushions, or pursework; also, the slight stuff, tiffany; also, a mantle, &c. also, wealth, substance, and a prince's treasury." Cotgrave. This refers us to the Lat. gaza.] A kind of thin transparent silk.

Silken clothes were used by the ladies; and it seems they were thin like gauze.

Arbuthnot on Coins.

Brocadeos, and damasks, and tabbies and gauzes, Are lately brought over. Swift.

GA'WBV.* n. s. [probably from the Fr. gabé, mocked, flouted. A dunce, fool, or blockhead; which Grose confines to our northern dialect; but it is not uncommon in the southern, with the pronunciation of gaby. A low expression.

GAWD.* See GAUD.

GAWK. n. s. [zeac, Saxon, a cuckoo; geck, Germ. a fool.]

1. A cuckoo.

2. A foolish fellow. In both senses it is retained in Scotland, Dr. Johnson says, and he might have said in the north of England also.

In the north of England, persons thus imposed upon, [made April fools,] are called April gawks.

A gawk or gawk is properly a cuckoo; and is used here metaphorically, in vulgar language, for a fool. The cuckoo is, indeed, every where a name of contempt. Gauch, in the Teutonic is rendered stultus, fool; whence also our northern word a goke or gawky. Brand, Popular Antiquities.

GA'WKY. n. s. A stupid, half-witted, or awkward person. See GAWK.

GA'WKY.* adj. Awkward; ungainly; still so used in the north of England.

A large half-length of Henry Darnley represents him tall, awkward, and gawky.

Pennant, Tour in Sco. d.

TO GAWM. See TO GAUM.

GAWN. n. s. [corrupted for gallon.] A small tub or lading vessel. A provincial word.

GA'WNTREE. n. s. [Scottish.] A wooden frame on which beer-casks are set when tunned.

GAY. adj. [gay, Fr. gae, Celt. gae, Icel. joy, mirth; γᾰῶ, Greek.

1. Airy; cheerful; merry; frolic.

Smooth flow the waves, the zephyrs gently play;

Belinda smil'd, and all the world was gay. Pope.

Ev'n rival wits did Voiture's fate deplore,

And the gay mourn'd, who never mourn'd before.

Pope.

2. Fine; showy.

A virgin that loves to go gay.

Bar. vi. 9.

Ye have respect to him that weareth the gay clothing. James, ii. 3.

3. Specious.

Neither your fyne disguisynge, nor your paynted colours, nor your gay rhetoricke, nor witty inventions, can so hide and cover the truth that it shall not appeare.

Abp. Cranner, Answ. to Bp. Gardiner. p. 354.

Enjoy your dear wit, and gay rhetoric,

That hath so well been taught her dazling fence.

Milton, Comus.

GAY. n. s. [from the adjective.] An ornament; an embellishment.

Morose and untractable spirits look upon precepts in emblem, as they do upon gays and pictures, the fooleries of so many old wives' tales.

L'Estrange.

GA'YETY. n. s. [gayeté, French; from gay.]

1. Cheerfulness; airiness; merriment.

2. Acts of juvenile pleasure.

And from those gayeties our youth requires.

To exercise their minds, our age retires. Denham.

3. Finery; show.

GA'YLY. adv. See GAILY.

1. Merrily; cheerfully; airily.

Seest thou how gayly my young master goes,

Vaunting himself upon his rising toes?

Bp. Hall, Sat. iii. 7.

2. Splendidly; pompously; with great show.

The ladies, gayly dress'd, the Mall adorn

With curious dies, and paint the sunny morn. Gay.

Like some fair flow'r, that early spring supplies.

That gayly blooms, but ev'n in blooming dies. Pope.

GA'YNESS. n. s. [from gay.] Gayety; finery. Not much in use, Dr. Johnson says; and he gives no example; but the first of the following he has applied to gayety, unjustifiably converting the poet's gayness to that word.

Our gayness and our guilt are all besmirch'd

With rainy marching in the painful field.

Shakespeare, K. Hen. V.

Delicacy of fare, softness of lodging, gayness of attire.

Bp. Hall, Epist. Dec. ii. Ep. 10.

The Creator — is willing mankind should serve themselves of all his creatures' various excellencies, in their strength, weight, light, sweetness, warmth, tinctures, beauties, and colours; not only to necessity and plainness, but also curiosity and gayness. Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsom. p. 99.

GA'YSOME.* adj. [from gay.] Full of gayety.

And, fier'd with heat of gaysome youth, did venter,

With warlike troops, the Norman coast to enter.

Mir. for Mag. p. 633.

TO GAZE. v. n. [ἀντᾶσθαι, or rather gepan, to see, Sax. Dr. Johnson. — Or perhaps the Heb. chazan, to see.] To look intently and earnestly; with eagerness.

What seest thou there? King Henry's diadem, Inchas'd with all the honours of the world:

If so, gaze on.

Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

From some she cast her modest eyes below;

At some her gazing glances roving flew. Fairfax.

Gaze not on a maid, that thou fall not by those things that are precious in her. Ecclesi. ix. 5.

A lover's eyes will gaze an eagle blind. Shaksp.

High stations tumults, but not bliss create;

None think the great unhappy, but the great.

Fools gaze and envy; Envy darts a sting,

Which makes a swain as wretched as a king. Young.

TO GAZE. v. a. To view stedfastly.

Strait toward heav'n my wond'ring eyes I turn'd,

And gaz'd a while the ample sky. Milton, P. L.

Appal'd I gaze'd

The godlike presence ; for athwart his brow
Displeasure, temper'd with a mild concern,
Look'd down reluctant on me.

Akenside, Pleas. of Imag. B. ii.

GAZE. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Intent regard; look of eagerness or wonder; fixed look.

Being lighten'd with her beauty's beam,
And thereby fill'd with happy influence,
And lifted up above the world's gaze,
To sing with angels her immortal praise. Spenser.
Do but note a wild and wanton herd,
If any air of music touch their ears,
You shall perceive them make a mutual stand,
Their savage eyes turn'd to a modest gaze,
By the sweet power of music. Shak. Mer. of Ven.

Not a month

'Fore your queen died, she was more worth such gazes

Than what you look on now. Shaksp. Wint. Tale.

With secret gaze,
Or open admiration, him behold,
On whom the great Creator hath bestow'd
Worlds. Milton, P. L.

Pindar is a dark writer, wants connection as to our understanding, soars out of sight, and leaves
his readers at a gaze. Dryden, Pref. to Ovid.

After having stood at gaze before this gate, he discovered an inscription. Addison, Freeholder.

2. The object gazed on.

I must die

Betray'd, captiv'd, and both my eyes put out ;
Made of my enemies the scorn and gaze ;
To grind in brazen fetters, under task,
With my heav'n-gifted strength. Milton, S. A.
GAZEFUL. adj. [gaze and full.] Looking intently.

The brightness of her beauty clear,
The ravisht hearts of gaze-ful men might rear
To admiration of that heavenly light.

Spenser, Hymn on Beauty.

GAZEHOUND. n. s. [gaze and hound; canis agazeus; Skinner.] A hound that pursues not by the scent, but by the eye.

Seest thou the gazehound! how with glance severe
From the close herd he marks the destin'd deer!

Tickell.

GAZE'LT. n. s. An Arabian deer.

Wild gazels are caught by sending into the herd one already taken and tamed with a noose so fastened to his horns, as to entangle the animal that first approaches to oppose him.

Goldsmith, Nat. Hist.

GA'ZEMENT.* n. s. [from gaze.] View.
Then forth he brought his snowy Florinele—
Cover'd from people's gaze-ment with a veile.

Spenser, F. Q. v. iii. 17.

GA'ZER. n. s. [from gaze.] He that gazes;
one that looks intently with eagerness or admiration.

In her cheeks the vermilion red shew,
Like roses in a bed of lilies shed;
The which ambrosial odours from them threw,
And gazers sense with double pleasure fed.

Spenser, F. Q.

I'll slay more gazers than the basilisk.

Shakspere, Hen. VI.

Bright as the sun, her eyes the gazers strike;
And, like the sun, they shine on all alike. Pope.
His learned ideas give him a transcendent delight; and yet, at the same time, discover the blemishes which the common gazer never observed.

Watts, Logic.

GAZET.* n. s. [Ital. gazetta.] A Venetian
halfpenny. See GAZETTE.

Since you have said the word, I am content,
But will not give a gaze less.

Massinger, Maid of Honour.

GAZE'TTE.† n. s. [gazetta is a Venetian
halfpenny, the price of a newspaper, of which the first was published at Venice.

Dr. Johnson. — It was a kind of literary newspaper, in single sheets, published at Venice in the sixteenth century, which was sold for a gazet. The foglio d'avviso, from the circumstance of its price, has given the name of gazette to newspapers in many countries. At first, we used, in the plural, gazetti. Our gazettes began to be regularly printed in 1665. A paper of news; a paper of public intelligence.
It is accented indifferently on the first or last syllable, Dr. Johnson says; but the most ancient and correct accentuation is on the last.

O, I shall be the fable of all feasts,
The freight of the gazetti, shipboys' tale,
And, which is worst, ev'n talk for oratories.

B. Jonson, Fox.

They carry in their pockets Tacitus,
And the gazette, or Gallo-Belgicus.

B. Jonson, Epigr. 92.

I am glad to hear from abroad in the High
Dutch gazette, that there is a treaty of exchange in hand between Prince Rupert and
Prince Casimir of Poland. Wolton, Rem. p. 579.
And sometimes when the loss is small,
And danger great, they challenge all;

Print new additions to their feats,
And emendations in gazettes. Hudibras.

An English gentleman, without geography,
cannot well understand a gazette. Locke.

One cannot hear a name mentioned in it that does not bring to mind a piece of the gazette.

Addison, Guardian.

All, all but truth, falls dead-born from the press;

Like the last gazette, or the last address. Pope.

TO GAZETTE.* v. a. [from the noun.] To insert in a gazette. A common word in conversation; as the dissolution of partnership is gazetted; his promotion is gazetted.

GAZETTE'ER.† n. s. [from gazette.]

1. A writer of news.

Mount now, to Gallo-Belgicus appear
As deep a statesman as a gazetteer.

Donne, Verses on Coryat the Traveller.

2. An officer appointed to publish news by authority, whom Steele calls the lowest minister of state.

Satire is no more: I feel it die;

No gazetteer more innocent than I. Pope.

He was without the trouble of attendance, or
the mortification of a request, made gazetteer.

Johnson, Life of King.

3. A newspaper.

Glasses and bottles, pipes, and gazetteers,
As if the table ev'n itself was drunk,

Lie a wet broken scene. Thomson, Autumn.

They have drawn through columns of gazetteers and advertisers for a century together.

Burke on the State of the Nation.

GAZINGSTOCK.† n. s. [gaze and stock.]

1. A person gazed at with scorn and abhorrence.

I will cast abominable filth upon thee, and make thee vile, and will set thee as a gazing-stock.

Nahum, iii. 6.

Ye were made a gazing-stock both by reproaches
and afflictions. Heb. x. 33.

These things are offences to us, by making us
gazingstocks to others, and objects of their scorn
and derision. Ray.

2. Any object gazed at.

Every eye that is transported, and every heart
that is fired with that immodest gazingstock, are so many spoils and trophies of their temptations.

Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 247.

GAZO'N. n. s. [French.] In fortification,
pieces of fresh earth covered with grass,
cut in form of a wedge, about a foot
long and half a foot thick, to line parapets and the traversies of galleries.

Harris.

GE.* [Saxon.] A particle often prefixed to Saxon verbs, participles, and verbal nouns.

This preposition [prefix] was of our ancestors
very much used, and is yet exceedingly used in the Low Dutch; where, according to their usual manner of pronouncing with aspiration, they use to put an h to it, and so make it ghe. We have since altered it from ge to y, which yet we seldom use in prose, but sometimes in poetry for the encreasing of syllables; as when we say, ywritten, yceleped, ylearned, ybroken, and the like.

Versetegan, Rest. of Dec. Intell. ch. 7.

TO GEAL.* v. n. [old Fr. geler, "to con-
geal with cold." Cotgrave.] To congeal. It is still a northern word, meaning to be benumbed with cold. See also GELABLE.

Receiving the dew of heaven into the gaping shell, it [the mother-pearl] forms little grains or seeds within it, which cleave to its sides, then grow hard, and geal, as it were.

I will remedy this gear ere long.
Or sell my title for a glorious grave.

Shakespeare, K. Hen. VI. P. II.

Why, hear you nurse? how comes this gear to pass?

B. Jonson, Magn. Lady.

When once her eye

Hath met the virtue of this magic dust,

I shall appear some harmless villager,

Whom thrift keeps up about his country gear.

Milton, Comus.

To *GEAR v. a. [from the noun.] To dress; as, "snugly geered, i. e. neatly dressed. North." Ray, and Grose.

GE'ASON† adj. [A word which I find only in Spenser, Dr. Johnson says; without offering any etymology, and with the definition only of wonderful, applied to his single example from Moth. Hubbard's Tale. It is in our old lexicography, as well as in Spenser, for rare. See Sherwood's Dict. And, according to Grose, it is an Essex word for scarce, hard to procure. It is apparently the Goth. geisn; usgeisnon, to be amazed, to wonder.] Rare; uncommon; wonderful.

GECK. n. s. [Sax. geac, a cuckoo; geck, German, a fool; gawk, Scottish.] A bubble easily imposed upon. Hanmer. Obsolete.

Why did you suffer Jachimo to taint his noble heart and brain with needless jealousy, and to become the geck and scorn o' th' other's villainy?

Shakespeare, Cymbeline.

Why have you suffer'd me to be imprison'd,
And made the most notorious geck and gull

That e'er invention play'd on?

Shakespeare, Tw. Night.

To GECK† v. a. [from the noun; or from the Teut. ghecken, to deceive.] To cheat; to trick.

GEET† A term used by waggoners to their horses when they would have them go faster. Dr. Johnson.—It is a sort of abbreviation of geho, which seems to be a word of great antiquity in the same sense.

A learned friend, whose communications I have frequently had occasion to acknowledge in the course of this work, says, the exclamation geho, geho, which carmen use to their horses, is probably of great antiquity. It is not peculiar to this country, as I have heard it used in France. In the story of the milkmaid who kicked down her pail, and with it all her hopes of getting rich, as related in a very ancient collection of apologies, entitled Dialogus, Creaturarum, printed at Gouda, in 1480, is the following passage: Et cum sic gloriaretur, et cogitaret cum quanta gloria duceretur ad illum virum, super equum dicendo gio, gio, cepit pede percutere terram, quasi pungeret equum calcaribus." Brand, Popular Antiquities.

To *GEE v. n. [from the old form of go in gie or gee.] To fit; to suit: as, they agree or go together. A northern expression. Wilbraham's Ches. Gloss. and Craven Dial.

*GEER See GEAR.

GESE. The plural of goose.

*GEHE'NNA n. s. [Gr. gēenna, from the Hebrew gehinnom, the valley of Hinnom, called also Tophet; old Fr. gehenn, torture, torment, and also hell.] Properly, a place in a valley where the Israelites erected abominable altars, there sacrificing their children in fire to the idol Moloch; notwithstanding it is usually taken for hell. Bullockar.

First, Moloch, horrid king, besmear'd with blood

Of human sacrifice, and parents' tears;

Though for the noise of drums and timbrels loud,
Their children's cries unheard, that pass'd through their fire

To his grim idol — His grove

The pleasant valley of Hinnom, Tophet thence

And black Gehenna call'd, the type of hell.

Milton, P. L.

*GE'HO See GEE.

GE'LABEL† adj. [old Fr. gelable, from gelu, Latin.] That may be congealed or concreted into a gelly.

GE'LATINE† } adj. [gelatus, Latin. Dr. GELA'TINOUS. } Johnson.—Adopted perhaps from the old Fr. gelatine, "an excellent white broth made of the fish mairge." Cotgrave.] Formed into a gelly; viscous; stiff and cohesive.

That pellucid gelatinous substance is an excrement cast off from the shoals of fish that inhabit the main. Woodward.

You shall always see their eggs laid carefully up in that spermatik gelatine matter, in which they are deposited. Derham.

To GELD† v. a. preter. gelded or gelt; part. pass. gelded or gelt. [gelten, German; geld-fac, castrated cattle, Iceland.]

1. To castrate; to deprive of the power of generation.

Geld bull-calf and ram-lamb as soon as they fall.

Tusser.

Lord Say hath gelded the commonwealth, and made it an unench. Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

2. To deprive of any essential part.

He bears his course, and runs me up

With like advantage on the other side,

Gelding the opposed continent as much

As on the other side it takes from you.

Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

3. To deprive of any thing immodest, or liable to objection.

For they, by his authentick copy know,

Both how to geld and to adulterate it.

Deaumont's Psyche, (1651,) ix. 196.

They were diligent enough to make sure work, and to geld it so clearly in some places that they took away the very manhood of it.

Dryden, Pref. to Cleomenes.

*GE'LD n. s. [Sax. gels, compensation.] In our old customs, tribute; and also a fine or compensation for delinquency.

GE'LDER. n. s. [from geld.] One that performs the act of castration.

Geld later with gelders, as many one do,

And look of a dozen to geld away two. Tusser.

No sow gelder did blow his horn

To geld a cat, but cry'd reform.

Hudibras.

GE'LDER-ROSE. n. s. [I suppose brought from Guelderland.] The leaves are like those of the maple-tree: the flowers consist of one leaf, in a circular rose form.

Miller.

The gelder-rose is increased by suckers and cuttings.

Mortimer.

GE'LDING. n. s. [from geld.] Any animal castrated, particularly an horse.

Though naturally there be more males of horses, bulls, or rams than females; yet artificially, that is, by making geldings, oxen and weathers, there are fewer. Gravatt.

The lord lieutenant may chuse out one of the best horses, and two of the best geldings; for which shall be paid one hundred pounds for the horse, and fifty pounds a-piece for the geldings.

Temple.

GE'LDID† adj. [gelidus, Lat.] Extremely cold.

If she find some life

Yet lurking close, she bites his geld lips.

Marston, Trag. of Sophonisba.

From the deep ooze and geld caverna rous'd,

They flounce.

Thomson, Spring.

GE'LDITY. n. s. [from gelid.] Extreme cold.

Dict.

GE'LDINESS. n. s. [from gelid.] Extreme cold.

Dict.

GE'LLY† n. s. [geleé, French; gelatus, Latin.] Any viscous body; viscosity; glue; gluey substance.

My best blood turn

To an infected gelly. Shakespeare, Wint. Tale.

The tapers of the gods,

The sun and moon, became like waxen globes,

The shooting stars end all in purple gellies,

And chaos is at hand.

Dryden and Lee, Edipus.

The white of an egg will coagulate by a moderate heat, and the hardest of animal solids are resolvable again into gellies.

Arbutnot, on Aliments.

GELT. n. s. [from geld.] A castrated animal; gelding. Not used.

The spayed gels they esteem the most profitable.

Mortimer.

GELT. n. s. [corrupted for the sake of rhyme from gilt.] Tinsel; gilt surface.

I won her with a girdle of gelt,

Emboss with a bugle about the belt.

Spenser, Shep. Cal.

GELT. The participle passive of geld.

Let the others be gelt for oxen. Mortimer, Hubb.

GEM† n. s. Sax. gým; Icel. gem; Fr. gemme; Lat. gemma.]

1. A jewel; a precious stone of whatever kind.

Love his fancy drew;

And so to take the gem Urania sought. Sidney.

I saw his bleeding rings,

Their precious gems new lost, became his guide,

Led him, begg'd for him, sav'd him from despair.

Shakespeare.

It will seem a hard matter to shadow a gem, or well pointed diamond, that hath many sides, and to give the lustre where it ought.

Peacham on Drawing.

Stones of small worth may lie unseen by day;

But night itself does the rich gem betray. Cowley.

The basis of all gems is, when pure, wholly diamondous, and either crystal or an adamantine mat-

Appal'd I gaz'd

The godlike presence; for athwart his brow
Displeasure, temper'd with a mild concern,
Look'd down reluctant on me.

Akenside, Pleas. of Imag. B. ii.

GAZE. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Intent regard; look of eagerness or wonder; fixed look.

Being lighten'd with her beauty's beam,
And thereby fill'd with happy influence,
And lifted up above the world's gaze,
To sing with angels her immortal praise. Spenser.
Do but note a wild and wanton herd,
If any air of musick touch their ears,
You shall perceive them make a mutual stand,
Their savage eyes turn'd to a modest gaze,
By the sweet power of musick. Shak. Mer. of Ven.

Not a month

'Fore your queen died, she was more worth such
gazes

Than what you look on now. Shaksp. Wint. Tale.

With secret gaze,

Or open admiration, him behold,
On whom the great Creator hath bestow'd
Worlds. Milton, P. L.

Pindar is a dark writer, wants connection as to
our understanding, soars out of sight, and leaves
his readers at a gaze. Dryden, Pref. to Ovid.

After having stood at gaze before this gate, he discovered an inscription. Addison, Freeholder.

2. The object gazed on.

I must die

Betray'd, captiv'd, and both my eyes put out;
Made of my enemies the scorn and gaze;
To grind in brazen fetters, under task,
With my heav'n-gifted strength. Milton, S. 4.
GA'ZEFUL. adj. [gaze and full.] Looking
intently.

The brightness of her beauty clear,
The ravish'd hearts of gaze'ful men might rear
To admiration of that heavenly light.

Spenser, Hymn on Beauty.

GA'ZEHOUND. n. s. [gaze and hound; canis agasæus; Skinner.] A hound that pursues not by the scent, but by the eye.

Seest thou the gazehound? how with glance severe
From the close herd he marks the destin'd deer!

Tickell.

GAZE'LT. n. s. An Arabian deer.

Wild gazels are caught by sending into the herd
one already taken and tamed with a noose so fastened to his horns, as to entangle the animal
that first approaches to oppose him.

Goldsmith, Nat. Hist.

GA'ZEMENT.* n. s. [from gaze.] View.

Then forth he brought his snowy Florimel—
Cover'd from people's gaze'ment with a veile.

Spenser, F. Q. v. iii. 17.

GA'ZER. n. s. [from gaze.] He that gazes;
one that looks intently with eagerness or
admiration.

In her cheeks the vermilion red did shew,
Like roses in a bed of lilies shed;
The which ambrosial odours from them threw,
And gazers sense with double pleasure fed.

Spenser, F. Q.

I'll slay more gazers than the basilisk.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

Bright as the sun, her eyes the gazers strike;
And, like the sun, they shine on all alike. Pope.
His learned ideas give him a transcendent delight; and yet, at the same time, discover the blemishes which the common gazer never observed.

Watts, Logic.

GA'ZET.* n. s. [Ital. gazetta.] A Venetian
halfpenny. See GAZETTE.

Since you have said the word, I am content,
But will not give a gazet less.

Massinger, Maid of Honour.

GAZE'TTE. n. s. [gazetta is a Venetian
halfpenny, the price of a newspaper, of which the first was published at Venice. Dr. Johnson. — It was a kind of literary newspaper, in single sheets, published at Venice in the sixteenth century, which was sold for a gazet. The foglio d'avvisi, from the circumstance of its price, has given the name of gazette to newspapers in many countries. At first, we used, in the plural, gazetti. Our gazettes began to be regularly printed in 1665. A paper of news; a paper of publick intelligence. It is accented indifferently on the first or last syllable, Dr. Johnson says; but the most ancient and correct accentuation is on the last.

O, I shall be the fable of all feasts,
The freight of the gazetti, shippoy's tale,
And, which is worst, ev'n'ta lack for ordinaries.

B. Jonson, Fox.

They carry in their pockets Tacitus,
And the gazette, or Gallo-Belgicus.

B. Jonson, Epigr. 92.

I am glad to hear from abroad in the High
Dutch gazette, that there is a treaty of exchange in hand between Prince Rupert and
Prince Casimir of Poland. Wotton, Rem. p. 579.

And sometimes when the loss is small,
And danger great, they challenge all;
Print new additions to their feats,
And emendations in gazettes. Hudibras.

An English gentleman, without geography,
cannot well understand a gazette. Locke.

One cannot hear a name mentioned in it that does not bring to mind a piece of the gazette.

Addison, Guardian.

All, all but truth, falls dead-born from the
press;

Like the last gazette, or the last address. Pope.

TO GAZETTE.* v. a. [from the noun.] To insert in a gazette. A common word in conversation; as the dissolution of partnership is gazetted; his promotion is gazetted.

GAZETTE'ER. n. s. [from gazette.]

1. A writer of news.

Mount now, to Gallo-Belgicus appear
As deep a statesman as a gazetteer.

Donne, Verses on Coryat the Traveller.

2. An officer appointed to publish news
by authority, whom Steele calls the lowest minister of state.

Satire is no more: I feel it die:

No gazetteer more innocent than I. Pope.

He was without the trouble of attendance, or
the mortification of a request, made gazetteer.

Johnson, Life of King.

3. A newspaper.

Glasses and bottles, pipes, and gazetteers,
As if the table ev'n itself was drunk,
Lie a wet broken scene. Thomson, Autumn.

They have drawled through columns of *gaze-
teers* and advertisers for a century together.

Burke on the State of the Nation.

GA'ZINGSTOCK. n. s. [gaze and stock.]

1. A person gazed at with scorn and abhorrence.

I will cast abominable filth upon thee, and make thee vile, and will set thee as a gazing-stock.

Nahum, iii. 6.

Ye were made a gazing-stock both by reproaches
and afflictions. Heb. x. 33.

These things are offences to us, by making us
gazingstocks to others, and objects of their scorn
and derision. Ray.

2. Any object gazed at.

Every eye that is transported, and every heart
that is fired with that immodest gazingstock, are so
many spoils and trophies of their temptations.

Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 247.

GAZO'N. n. s. [French.] In fortification,
pieces of fresh earth covered with grass,
cut in form of a wedge, about a foot
long and half a foot thick, to line parapets and the traverses of galleries.

Harris.

GE.* [Saxon.] A particle often prefixed to Saxon verbs, participles, and verbal nouns.

This preposition [prefix] was of our ancestors
very much used, and is yet exceedingly used in the Low Dutch; where, according to their usual manner of pronouncing with aspiration, they use
to put an h to it, and so make it ghe. We have since altered it from ge to y, which yet we seldom
use in prose, but sometimes in poetry for the encreasing of syllables; as when we say, yurüten, ycleped, yclearned, ybroken, and the like.

Versesgan, Rest. of Dec. Intell. ch. 7.

TO GEAL.* v. n. [old Fr. geler, “to con-
geal with cold.” Cotgrave.] To congeal. It is still a northern word, meaning to be benumbed with cold. See
also GELABLE.

Receiving the dew of heaven into the gaping
shell, it [the mother-pearl] forms little grains or seeds within it, which cleave to its sides, then grow hard, and geal, as it were.

Parthenia Sacra, (1633,) p. 190.

GEAR.† n. s. [Sax. geapian, to prepare,
to make ready; geapa, provision, apparatus. Often written geer.]

1. Furniture; accoutrements, dress; habit; ornaments.

Array thyself in her most gorgeous gear.

Spenser, F. Q.

When he found her bound, stript from her gear,
And vile tormentors ready saw in place,
He broke through. Fairfax.

I fancy every body observes me as I walk the street, and long to be in my old plain gear again.

Addison, Guardian.

4. [In Scotland.] Goods or riches; as,
he has gear enough.

5. The furniture of a draught-horse.

She rises before the sun to order the horses to their gears. Rambler, No. 138.

6. A general word for business, things, or matters.

That to Sir Calidore was easy geare.

Spenser, F. Q. vi. iii. 6.

I will remedy this gear ere long,
Or sell my title for a glorious grave.

Shakespeare, K. Hen. VI. P. II.

Why, hear you nurse? how comes this gear to pass?

B. Jonson, Magn. Lady.

When once her eye

Hath met the virtue of this magick dust,

I shall appear some harmless villager,

Whom thrift keeps up about his country gear.

Milton, Comus.

To *GEAR v. a. [from the noun.] To dress; as, "snugly geered, i. e. neatly dressed. North." Ray, and Grose.

GENERALISSIMO,† n. s. [generalissime, French, from general. Addison, having termed Agamemnon generalissimo of the Grecian expedition, (Tatler, 152.) is reproved by bishop Hurd with this reflection on the word: "Instead of this cant and ludicrous term, he should have used the more noble one of general, or commander in chief." Addison's Works, edit. Hurd, vol. ii. 337. The examples from Clarendon and Brown, given by Dr. Johnson, might have served to rescue the word from such a charge. The authorities of Sir Henry Wotton, Henry More, and South, which I add, further shew the serious manner in which the word is used.] The supreme commander.

Priuli had passed through all the principal charges of the state in the civil way; and had lastly in the military been generalissimo.

Wotton, Elect. of the Duke of Venice.

The officers of the generalissimo of the world, that are as the eyes and ears of the great king, in the seeing and hearing all things.

More, Conf. Cabb. p. 183.

Ingratitude — a sin of an universal comprehension; and, as I may so speak, the generalissimo of sins, having an influence upon all the particular sins and irregularities of our practice.

South, Sermon ix. 118.

Commission of generalissimo was likewise given to the prince. Clarendon.

Pompey had deserved the name of great; and Alexander, of the same cognomination, was generalissimo of Greece. Brown.

GENERALITY. n. s. [generalité, French; from general.]

1. The state of being general; the quality of including species or particulars.

Because the curiosity of man's wit doth with peril wade farther in the search of things than were convenient, the same is thereby restrained unto such generalities as, every where offering themselves, are apparent to men of the weakest conceit. Hooker.

These certificates do only in the generality mention the parties contumacious and disobedience.

Ayliffe, Paragon.

2. The main body; the bulk; the common mass.

Necessity, not extending to the generality, but resting upon private heads. Raleigh, Ess.

By his own principles he excludes from salvation the generality of his own church; that is, all that do believe upon his grounds. Tillotson.

The generality of the English have such a favourable opinion of treason, nothing can cure them. Addison.

They publish their ill-natured discoveries with a secret pride, and applaud themselves for the singularity of their judgement, which has found a flaw in what the generality of mankind admires. Addison.

The wisest were distracted with doubts, while the generality wandering without any ruler. Rogers.

GENERALIZATION.* n. s. [from generalis, Lat.] The act of reducing to a genus.

GENEVANISM.* n. s. [from Geneva.] Strict Calvinism.

The publick doctrine of the Church of England is not very likely to have been, or to be, upon the party of a faction, that hath so long had a schism on foot against it, to bring in Genevanism into church and state wholly, totally, were it possible.

Mountagu, App. to Cens. p. 72.

GENEVOIS.* n. s. pl. People of Geneva; now written Genevese.

The Genevois have been very much refined, or, as others will have it, corrupted by the conversation of the French Protestants.

Addison on Italy.

GENIAL.† adj. [genial, old Fr. genialis, Latin.]

1. That which contributes to propagation. Higher of the genial bed by far, And with mysterious reverence I deem.

Milton, P. L.

Creator Venus, genial pow'r of love, The bliss of men below and gods above!

Dryden, Fab.

2. That gives cheerfulness or supports life.

Nor will the light of life continue long, But yields to double darkness night at hand; So much I feel my genial spirits droop.

Milton, S. A.

3. Natural; native.

It chiefly proceedeth from natural incapacity, and genial indisposition. Brown, Vulg. Err.

4. Gay; merry.

The celebrated drinking ode of this genial arch-deacon [Walter de Mapes] has the regular returns of the monkish rhyme.

Warton, Hist. E. P. vol. i. Diss. ii.

Cockeram.

GENICULATED. adj. [geniculatus, Latin.] Knotted; jointed.

A piece of some geniculated plant seeming to be part of a sugar-cane.

Woodward on Fossils.

GENICULATION.† n. s. [geniculatio, Latin.]

1. Knottiness; the quality in plants of having knots or joints.

2. The act of kneeling.

There are five points in question: the solemn festivities; the private use of either sacrament; geniculation at the eucharist, &c.

Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 307.

GE'NIE.* n. s. [old Fr. genie.] Inclination; disposition; turn of mind.

Dr. J. Wallis, the keeper of the University registers, &c. did put into the hands of A. Wood the keys of the school-tower, and the key of the room where the said registers, &c. are reposed, to the end that he might advance his esurient genie in antiquities.

Life of A. Wood, p. 147.

GE'NIO. n. s. [genio, Ital. genius, Lat.] A man of a particular turn of mind.

Some genius are not capable of pure affection; and a man is born with talents for it as much as for poetry, or any other science.

Taitler.

GENITALS. n. s. Pl. [genitalis, Latin.] Parts belonging to generation.

Ham is conceived to be Jupiter, who was the youngest son, who is said to have cut off the genitals of his father.

Brown.

GENITING. n. s. [A corruption of Janeton, French, signifying Jane or Janet, having been so called in honour of some lady of that name; and the Scottish dialect calls them Janet apples, which is the same with Janeton: otherwise supposed to be corrupted from Juneting. Dr. Johnson. — May not the word be just as well supposed to be borrowed from the old French genetin, a kind of grape, from which a white wine was made; the apple perhaps resembling it in flavour? See Lacombe and Roq. in V. GENETIN.] An early apple gathered in June.

In July come early pears and plums in fruit, genitings, and codlins.

Bacon.

GENITIVE.† adj. [genitivus, Latin.] In grammar, the name of a case, which, among other relations, signifies one begotten, as, the father of a son; or one begetting, as, son of a father.

All relatives are said to reciprocate, or mutually infer each other; and therefore they are often expressed by this case, that is to say, the genitive.

Harris, Herm. B. 2. ch. 4.

The relation of possession, or belonging, is often expressed by a case, or different ending of the substantive. The case answers to the genitive case in the Latin, and may still be so called, though perhaps more properly the possessive case.

Louth, Gramm.

GE'NITOR.* n. s. [Latin, genitor; old Fr. geniteur.] A sire; a father.

Profane legends — termed by their genitors and forefathers golden legends.

Sheldon, Mir. of Antichrist, (1616.) p. 12.

Whosoever is generative, is from him which is the genitor.

Pearson on the Creed, Art. 1.

GE'NITURE.* n. s. [old Fr. geniture.] Generation; birth.

He had the signifiers in his geniture fortune.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 7.

This work, by merit fits of fame secure, Is likewise happy in its geniture; For, since 'tis born when Charles ascends the throne,

It shares at once his fortune and its own.

Dryden, Ep. to Sir R. Howard.

GE'NIUS.† n. s. [Lat. genius, French. Dr. Johnson has given no instance of the plural number of this word. It is both genii, and geniuses; the former of which belongs to the first definition only; the latter, to any of the rest.]

1. The protecting or ruling power of men, places, or things.

There is none but he

Whose being I do fear: and, under him,

My genius is rebuk'd; as it is said

Antony's was by Cæsar. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

The genius and the mortal instruments Are then in council; and the state of man, Like to a little kingdom, suffers then.

Shakespeare, Jul. Cæs.

And as I awake, sweet musick breathe,

Sent by some spirit to mortals good,

Or th' unseen genius of the wood. Milton, Il Pens.

And the tame demon that should guard my throne,

Shrinks at a genius greater than his own. Dryden.

To your glad genius sacrifice this day;

Let common meats respectfully give way. Dryden.

What indeed are the genii of the Arabs, the peris of the Persians, but the elfs and fairies of England? Hole on the Arabian Nights' Ent. p. 13.

2. A man endowed with superior faculties.

There is no little writer of Pindarick who is not mentioned as a prodigious genius.

Addison.

Among great geniuses, those few draw the admiration of all the world upon them, and stand up as the prodigies of mankind, who by mere strength of natural parts, and without any assistance of art or learning, have produced works that were the delight of their own times, and the wonder of posterity.

Addison, Spect. No. 160.

3. Mental power or faculties.

The state and order does proclaim

The genius of that royal dame.

Waller.

4. Disposition of nature by which any one is qualified for some peculiar employment.

A happy genius is the gift of nature.

Dryden, Dufresnoy.

Your majesty's sagacity, and happy genius for natural history, is a better preparation for enquiries of this kind than all the dead learning of the schools.

Burnet, Theory, Pref.

One science only will one genius fit;

So vast is art, so narrow human wit;

Pope on Criticism.

The Romans, though they had no great genius for trade, yet were not entirely neglectful of it.

Arbutnot on Coins.

5. Nature; disposition.

Studious to please the genius of the times,

With periods, points, and tropes he slurs his crimes.

Dryden.

Another genius and disposition improper for philosophical contemplations is not so much from the narrowness of their understanding, as because they will not take time to extend them.

Burnet, Theory, Pref.

He tames the genius of the stubborn plain. Pope.

GENOESE.* n. s. pl. The people of Genoa in Italy.

The Genoese are esteemed extremely cunning, industrious, and inured to hardship above the rest of the Italians.

Addison on Italy.

GENT.† adj. [gent, old French. Dr. Johnson. — This word, in the old romances, is a common epithet applied to ladies. Chaucer's Sir Thopas, however, is distinguished by the same term, "fair and gent." In this sense, it appears to have been a Provençal word: "Gente, gentle, nobile, grazioso; venuta dal Provenzale." Vocab. Della Crusca.] Elegant; pretty; soft; gentle; polite. A word now disused, Dr. Johnson says; but perhaps transformed, it may be added, into janty. See JANTY.

Vespasian, with great spoil and rage,

Forewasted all: till Genuissa gent

Persuaded him to cease.

Spenser, F. Q.

She that was noble, wise, as fair and gent,

Cast how she might their harmless lives preserve.

Fairfax.

GENTE'EL.† adj. [gentil, French. Our word was at first gentile. "Other guests, that were bidden, gentilely alleged reasonable impediments." Martin, Marr. of Priests, 1554. sign. I. i. 1. And this method of writing it continued till about the close of the seventeenth century. Stillingfleet and Fell both use gentile for genteel.]

1. Polite; elegant in behaviour; civil.

He had a genteler manner of binding the chains of this kingdom than most of his predecessors.

Swift to Gay.

Their poets have no notion of genteel comedy, and fall into the most filthy double meanings when they have a mind to make their audience merry.

Addison on Italy.

2. Graceful in mien.

So spruce that he can never be genteel. Taitler.

3. Elegantly dressed.

Several ladies that have twice her fortune, are not able to be always so genteel, and so constant at all places of pleasure and expence.

Law.

GENTE'ELLY.† adv. [from genteel. See the etymology of genteel.]

1. Elegantly; politely.

Those that would be *genteel*ly learned, need not purchase it at the dear rate of being atheists.

After a long fatigue of eating and drinking, and babbling, he concludes the great work of dining *genteel*ly.

South.

2. Gracefully; handsomely.

She is not handsome, being very sickly, but seems lively, and *genteel*ly shaped.

Swiwburne, Trav. through Spain, L. 39.

GENTE'ELNESS. n. s. [from genteel.]

1. Elegance; gracefulness; politeness.

He had a genius full of genteelness and spirit, having nothing that was ungraceful in his postures and dresses.

Dryden, Dufresnoy.

Parmegiano has dignified the genteelness of modern effeminacy, by uniting it with the simplicity of the ancients and the grandeur and severity of Michael Angelo.

Reynolds.

2. Qualities befitting a man of rank.

GEN'TIAN.† n. s. [gentiane, French; gentiana, Latin. The name is said to be taken from that of Gentius, king of Illyria, who is reported to have first discovered the properties of this plant.] Felwort or baldmony.

The root of gentian is large and long, of a tolerably firm texture, and remarkably tough: it has a faintish and disagreeable smell, and an extremely bitter taste.

Hill, Mat. Med.
If it be fistulous, and the orifice small, dilate it with gentian roots.

Wiseman, Surgery.
GENTIANELLA. n. s. A kind of blue colour.

GENTILE. n. s. [gentilis, Latin.]

1. One of an uncovenanted nation; one who knows not the true God.

Tribulation and anguish upon every soul that doeth evil, of the Jew first, and also of the gentile.

Rom. ii. 2.
Gentiles or infidels, in those actions, upon both the spiritual and temporal good, have been in one pursuit conjoined.

2. A person of rank. Obsolete.

Not filing the tongue of Scripture to a Gentilish idiom.

Milton, Tetracordon.
GENTILISM.† n. s. [gentilisme, French; from gentile.] Heathenism; paganism.

If invocation of saints had been produced in the apostolical times, it would have looked like the introducing of gentilism again.

Stillingfleet.
This was one of those fantasmas, which abused the minds of men in the darkness of gentilism.

Spenser on Prod. p. 174.
He that if he had been born of heathen parents, or put out to nurse to an Indian, would have sucked in as much of gentilism.

Hammond, Works, iv. 511.
The Greeks, in the time of sickness and mournings for the dead, retain not only ceremonies by us accounted superstitions, but also savouring somewhat of ancient gentilism.

Ricaut, Gr. Ch. p. 293.

GENTILITIOUS. adj. [gentilitius, Latin.]

1. Endemial; peculiar to a nation.

That an unsavory odour is gentilitious, or national unto the Jews, reason or sense will not induce.

Brown.

2. Hereditary; entailed on a family.

The common cause of this distemper is a particular and perhaps a gentilitious disposition of body.

Arbutnot.
GENTILITY.† n. s. [gentilité, French from gentil, French; gentilis, Latin.]

1. Good exterior; dignity of birth.

'Tis meet a gentle heart should ever shew
By courtesie the fruit of true gentility.

Sir J. Harrington.
I have read Shakspeare at Lincoln's Inn, and have published my Canons of Criticism; and for this I am to be degraded of my gentility!

Edwards's Can. of Crit. Pref.
2. Elegance of behaviour; gracefulness of mien; nicety of taste.

A dangerous law against gentility.

Shakspeare, Love's Lab. Lost.
Gentility here does not signify that rank of people called gentry, but what the French express by gentillesse, i. e. elegantia, urbanitas.

Theobald on Shakspeare.
All the men of quality [began] to speak the Gallic idiom in their houses, as a high strain of gentility.

Harris, Philolog. Inquiries.
3. Gentry; the class of persons well born.

Gavellkind must needs, in the end, make a poor gentility.

Davies on Ireland.

Each parent sprung.

Pope.
2. Befitting a gentleman; genteel; graceful. See GENTLENESS.

For all so soon as life did me admit
Into this world, and shewed heaven's light,
From mother's pap I taken was unfit,
And straight deliver'd to a fiery knight,
To be upbrought in gentle thews and martial might.

Spenser, F. Q. i. ix. 3.
3. Soft; bland; mild; tame; meek; peaceable.

I am one of those gentle ones that will use the devil himself with curtesy.

Shakspeare, Tw. Night.
Her voice was ever soft,
Gentle and low; an excellent thing in woman.

Shakspeare.
As gentle, and as jocund, as to jest,
Go I to fight.

Shakspeare, Rich. II.
A virtuous and a good man, reverend in conversation, and gentile in condition.

2 Mac. xv. 12.
The gentlest heart on earth is prov'd unkind.

Fairfax.
Your change was wise; for, had she been deny'd,
A swift revenge had follow'd from her pride:

You from my gentle nature had no fears;
All my revenge is only in my tears.

Dryden, Ind. Emp.
He had such a gentle method of reproving their faults, that they were not so much afraid as ashamed to repeat them.

Atterbury.

Swift.

GENTLEMAN.† n. s. [gentilhomme, Fr. gentilhuomo, Ital. that is, homo gentilis, a man of ancestry. All other derivations seem to be whimsical. Dr. Johnson. — Tyrwhitt and Morin are of the same opinion; the latter of whom refers to Cicero, viz. "Gentiles sunt, qui inter se eodem sunt nomine ab ingenuis oriundi." Topic. § 6. Dame Juliana Berners, in her treatise on coat-armour, (1486), quaintly says that "Cain became a churl from the curse of God, and Seth a gentleman through his father and mother's blessing!"]

1. A man of birth; a man of extraction, though not noble.

A civil war was within the bowels of that state, between the gentleman and the peasants.

Sidney.
I freely told you all the wealth I had Ran in my veins; I was a gentleman.

Shakspeare, Merch. of Ven.
He hither came a private gentleman,
But young and brave, and of a family
Ancient and noble.

Otway, Orphan.
You say a long descended race
Makes gentlemen, and that your high degree
Is much disparag'd to be match'd with me.

Dryden.
2. A man raised above the vulgar by his character or post.

Inquire me out some mean-born gentleman,
Whom I will marry strait to Clarence's daughter.

Shakspeare.
He is so far from desiring to be used as a gentleman, that he desires to be used as the servant of all.

Low.
3. A term of complaisance: sometimes ironical.

The same gentlemen who have fixed this piece of morality on the three naked sisters dancing hand in hand, would have found out as good a one had there been four of them sitting at a distance, and covered from head to foot.

Addison.
You see among men, who are honoured with the common appellation of gentlemen, so many contradictions to that character, that it is the utmost ill-fortune to bear it.

Tatler, No. 66.
4. The servant that waits about the person of a man of rank.

Sir Thomas More, the Sunday after he gave up his chancellorship, came to his wife's pew, and used the usual words of his gentleman usher, Madam, my lord is gone.

Sherwood.

GENTLEMANSHIP.* n. s. [from gentleman.] Carriage of a gentleman; quality of a gentleman.

His fine gentlemanship did him no good.

Ld. Halifax.

He treated me in a gentlemanlike manner: It should rather be gentlemanly; otherwise it is a reflection, as if his gentlemanship was affected, or mine was doubtful.

Pegge, Anecd. Eng. Language.

GENTLENESS.† n. s. [from gentle.]

1. Dignity of birth; goodness of extraction.

Gentleness and gentility are the same thing; and if they are not the same words, they come from one and the same original; from whence likewise is deduced the word gentleman.

Pegge, Anonym. i. 46.

2. Gentlemanly conduct; elegance of behaviour. Not noticed by Dr. Johnson.

I must confess,

I thought you lord of more true gentleness.

Shakespeare, Mids. N. Dr.

I love measure 't the feet, and number 't the voice; they are gentlenesses, that oftentimes draw no less than the face.

B. Jonson, Epicæne.

3. Softness of manners; sweetness of disposition; meekness; tenderness.

My lord Sebastian,

The truth, you speak, doth lack some gentleness.

Shakespeare.

Your brave and haughty scorn of all,

Was stately and monarchical;

All gentleness with that esteem'd.

A dull and slavish virtue seem'd.

Still she retains

Her maiden gentleness, and oft at eve

Visits the herds.

Milton, Comus.

The perpetual gentleness and inherent goodness of the Ormond family.

Dryden, Fab. Dedica.

Changes are brought about silently and insensibly, with all imaginable benignity and gentleness.

Locke.

2. Softly; without violence.

Fortune's blows,

When most struck home, being gently warded,

craves

A noble cunning.

Shakespeare, Coriol.

A sort of great bat, as men lie asleep with their legs naked, will suck their blood at a wound so gently made as not to awake them.

Grew, Museum.

GENTOO.* n. s. [The word Gentoo has been, and is still equally, mistaken to signify, in the proper sense of the term, the professors of the braminiel religion; whereas Gent, or Gentoo, means animal in general, and in its more confined sense, mankind; but is never, in the Shanscrit dialect, nor even in the modern jargon of Bengal, appropriated particularly to such as follow the dictates of Brihma. The four great tribes have each their own separate appellation; but they have no common or collective term that comprehends the whole nation under the idea affixed by Europeans to the word Gentoo. Possibly the Portuguese, on their first arrival in India, hearing the word frequently in the mouths of the natives as applied to mankind in general, might adopt it for the domestic appellation of the Indians themselves; perhaps also their bigotry might force from the word Gentoo a fanciful allusion to Gentile, a Pagan. Halhed, Code of Gentoo Laws, Pref. p. xxi.] An aboriginal inhabitant of Hindostan.

Since the age of Tamerlane, Mahometanism has been uniformly the religion of the government of India. The *Gentoo*s, however, are still said to exceed in number the Mahometans in the proportion of ten to one. — The religious creed of the *Gentoo*s is a system of the most barbarous idolatry.

Professor White, Sermon. x.

I allude to that most cruel custom, by which the wife of the Gentoo is induced to burn herself on the pile which consumes the ashes of her husband.

Professor White, Sermon. x.

GENTRY.† n. s. [gentlery, gentry, from gentle. Dr. Johnson. — It may be from the Lat. gens, gentis, a race, a family. Chaucer, however, uses genterie for gentility.]

1. Birth; condition; rank derived from inheritance.

You are certainly a gentleman, Clerk-like experience'd, which no less adorns Our gentry than our parents' noble name, In whose success we are gentle.

Shakespeare, Wint. Tale.

2. Class of people above the vulgar; those between the vulgar and the nobility.

They slaughtered many of the gentry, for whom no sex or age could be accepted for excuse.

Sidney.

Let states, that aim at greatness, take heed how their nobility and gentry multiply too fast.

Bacon, Ornam. Ration.

How cheerfully the hawkers cry

A satire, and the gentry buy.

Swift.

3. A term of civility real or ironical.

The many-colour'd gentry there above,

By turns are rul'd by tumult and by love.

Prior.

4. Civility; complaisance. Obsolete.

Shew us so much gentry and good will,

As to extend your time with us a-while.

Shakespeare, Hamlet.

GENUFLECTION.† n. s. [genuflexion, Fr.; genu and flecto, Lat.] The act of bending the knee; adoration expressed by bending the knee.

Boots and shoes are so long snouted, that one can hardly kneel in God's house, where all genuflection and postures of devotion and decency are quite out of use.

Hovell, Lett. (1646.) iii. 2.

Here use all the rights of adoration, genuflections, wax-candles, incense, oblations, prayers only excepted.

Sitting fleet.

GENUINE. adj. [genuinus, Latin.] Not spurious; not counterfeit; real; natural; true.

Experiments were at one time tried with genuine materials, and at another time with sophisticated ones.

Boyle.

The belief and remembrance, and love and fear of God, have so great influence to make men religious, that where any of these is, the rest, together with the true and genuine effects of them are supposed to be.

Tillotson.

A sudden darkness covers all;

True genuine night: night added to the groves.

Dryden.

GENUINELY. adv. [from genuine.] Without adulteration; without foreign admixtures; naturally.

There is another agent able to analyze compound bodies less violently, more genuinely, and more universally than the fire.

Boyle.

GENUINENESS.† n. s. [from genuine.] Freedom from any thing counterfeit; freedom from adulteration; purity; natural state.

To shew how day and night, winter and summer, arise from Copernicus his hypothesis, will not only explain these verses, but exceedingly set out the fitness and genuineness of the hypothesis itself.

More, Song of the Soul, (1647.) Notes, p. 414.

It is not essential to the genuineness of colours to be durable.

Boyle.

GENUS. n. s. [Latin.] In science, a class of being, comprehending under it many species: as, quadruped is a genus comprehending under it almost all terrestrial beasts.

A general idea is called by the schools genus, and it is one common nature agreeing to several other common natures; so animal is a genus, because it agrees to horse, lion, whale, and butterfly. Watts, Logick.

If minerals are not convertible into another species, though of the same genus, much less can they be surmised reducible into a species of another genus. Harvey on Consumptions.

GEOCENTRIC. adj. [γῆ and κέντρον; geocentrique, French.] Applied to a planet or orb having the earth for its centre, or the same centre with the earth. Harris.

GEODÆSIA. n. s. [γεωδαισία; geodesie, French.] That part of geometry which contains the doctrine or art of measuring surfaces, and finding the contents of all plain figures. Harris.

GEODÆTICAL. adj. [from geodæsia.] Relating to the art of measuring surfaces; comprehending or showing the art of measuring land.

GEODE.* n. s. [Greek, γῆδης, from γῆα, the earth.] Earth-stone.

GEOGRAPHER. n. s. [γῆ and γράφω; geographie, Fr.] One who describes the earth, according to the position of its different parts.

A greater part of the earth hath ever been peopled than hath been known or described by geographers. Brown.

The bay of Naples is called the Crater by the old geographers. Addison.

From sea to sea, from realm to realm I rove, And grow a meer geographer by love. Tickell.

GEOGRAPHICAL. adj. [geographique, Fr.; from geography.] Relating to geography; belonging to geography.

GEOGRAPHICALLY. adv. [from geographical.] In a geographical manner; according to the rules of geography.

Minerva lets Ulysses into the knowledge of his country; she geographically describes it to him. Broom on the Odyssey.

GEOGRAPHY. n. s. [γῆ and γράφω; geographie, Fr.] Geography, in a strict sense, signifies the knowledge of the circles of the earthly globe, and the situation of the various parts of the earth. When it is taken in a little larger sense, it includes the knowledge of the seas also; and in the largest sense of all, it extends to the various customs, habits, and governments of nations. Watts.

Olympus is extolled by the Greeks as attaining unto heaven; but geography makes slight account hereof, when they discourse of Andes or Teneriff. Brown, Vulg. Err.

* According to ancient Fables the Argonauts sailed up the Danube, and from thence passed into the Adriatick, carrying their ships upon their shoulders: a mark of great ignorance in geography. Arbutnot on Coins.

GEOLOGY. n. s. [γῆ and λόγος.] The doctrine of the earth; the knowledge of the state and nature of the earth.

GÉOMANCER. n. s. [γῆ and μάντις.] A fortune teller; a caster of figures; a cheat who pretends to foretell futurity by other means than the astrology.

Fortunetellers, jugglers, geomancers, and the incantatory impostors, though commonly men of inferior rank, daily delude the vulgar. Brown, Vulg. Err.

GÉOMANCY.* n. s. [γῆ and μαντεία; geomance, French.] This word is used by Chaucer. Sometimes it is written geomanty. "I have seen some notes of his — on Cattan's Geomantie." Aubrey's Lett. and Anec. ii. 473.] The act of casting figures; the act of foretelling by figures what shall happen.

According to some there are four kinds of divination; hydromancy, pyromancy, aeromancy, and geomancy. Ayliffe.

He therefore sent out all his senses, To bring him in intelligences; Which vulgars, out of ignorance, Mistake for falling in a trance; But those that trade in geomancy, Affirm to be the strength of fancy. Hudibras.

GEOMA'NTICK. adj. [from geomancy.] Pertaining to the act of casting figures.

Two geomantick figures were display'd Above his head, a warrior and a maid; One when direct, and one when retrograde. Dryden.

GEO'METER † n. s. [γεωμέτρης; geometre, French.] One skilled in geometry; a geometrician.

The plane of many-sided squares, That wou'd be drawn out by geometers. Bp. Hall, Sat. v. 2.

He discerns presently, by your judgement of algebra, what a geometer you are like to prove. Wallis, Correct. of Hobbes, § 1.

He became one of the chief geometers of his age. Watts.

GEO'METRAL. adj. [geometral, Fr. from geometry.] Pertaining to geometry. Dict. GEOME'TRICAL. adj. [γεωμετρικός; geome-GEOME'TRICK.] trique, Fr. from geometry.

1. Pertaining to geometry.

A geometrical scheme is let in by the eyes, but the demonstration is discerned by reason. More against Atheism.

This mathematical discipline, by the help of geometrical principles, doth teach to contrive several powers. Wilkins.

2. Prescribed or laid down by geometry.

Must men take the measure of God just by the same geometrical proportions that he did, that gather'd the height and bigness of Hercules by his foot? Stillingfleet.

Does not this wise philosopher assert, That the vast orb, which casts so far his beams, Is such, or not much bigger than he seems? That the dimensions of his glorious face Two geometrick feet does scarce surpass? Blackmore.

3. Disposed according to geometry.

Geometrick jasper seemeth to affinity with the lapis sanguinalis described by Boetius; but it is certainly one sort of lapis cruciformis. Grew, Museum.

GEOME'TRICALLY. adv. [from geometrical.] According to the laws of geometry.

'Tis possible geometrically to contrive such an artificial motion as shall be of greater swiftness than the revolutions of the heavens. Wilkins, Math. Magic.

All the bones, muscles, and vessels of the body are contrived most geometrically, according to the strictest rules of mechanics. Ray on the Creation.

GEOMETRICIAN. n. s. [γεωμέτρης.] One skilled in geometry; a geometer.

Although there be a certain truth, geometricians would not receive satisfaction without demonstration thereof. Brown.

How easily does an expert geometrician, with one glance of his eye, take in a complicated diagram, made up of many lines and circles! Watts on the Mind.

To GEO'METRIZE. v. n. [γεωμετρέω.] To act according to the laws of geometry.

We obtain good store of crystals, whose figures were differing enough, though prettily shaped, as if nature had at once affected variety in their figuration, and yet confined herself to geometrize. Boyle.

GEO'METRY. n. s. [γεωμετρία; geometrie, French.] Originally signifies the art of measuring the earth, or any distances or dimensions on or within it: but it is now used for the science of quantity, extension, or magnitude abstractedly considered, without any regard to matter.

Geometry is usually divided into speculative and practical; the former of which contemplates and treats of the properties of continued quantity abstractedly; and the latter applies these speculations and theorems to use and practice. Harris.

In the muscles alone there seems to be more geometry than in all the artificial engines in the world. Ray on the Creation.

Him also for my censor I disdain, Who thinks all science, as all virtue, vain; Who counts geometry and numbers toys, And with his foot the sacred dust destroys. Dryden, Pers.

GEOPO'NICAL. adj. [γῆ and πόνος; geoponique, Fr.] Relating to agriculture; relating to the cultivation of the ground.

Such expressions are frequent in authors geoponical, or such as have treated de re rustica. Brown, Vulg. Err.

GEOPO'NICKS.† n. s. plural. [γῆ and πόνος.] The science of cultivating the ground; the doctrine of agriculture.

The study of geoponicks has always been of esteem in the world; and the writings of Virgil, Callistander, Theophrastus, Varro, Columella, and Palladius, as classical learning as any we have amongst us. Letters (Plot to Charlett.) vol. i. p. 73.

Herbs and wholesome sallets, and other plain and useful parts of geoponicks. Evelyn, Acet. Ded.

GEORGE.† n. s. [Georgius, Lat.] 1. A figure of St. George on horseback worn by the knights of the garter.

Look on my george, I am a gentleman; Rate me at what thou wilt. Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

2. A brown loaf. Of this sense I know not the original. Dr. Johnson. — Cowel, under pamis militarius, writes, "hard basket, brown george camp bread, coarse and black." Mr. Bagshaw thinks that the figure of St. George might be stamped upon such bread.

Cubb'd in a cabin, on a mattress laid, On a brown george, with lousy swobbers, fed. Dryden, Pers.

3. GEORGE Noble. A gold coin, current at six shillings and eight pence, in the reign of king Henry VIII.

The gold coins of Henry the Eighth, were sovereigns, half sovereigns, rials, half and quarters, angels, angelets, and quarter angels, georg-nobles, fifty-penny pieces, crowns of the double rose, and half-crowns. Leake on Eng. Coins.

GEO'RGICAL.* adj. See GEORGICK. In the Hist. of the Royal Society, georgical is applied to a list of persons skilled in the doctrine of agriculture, Vol. i. p. 407.

GEO'ORGICK.† n. s. [γεωργικόν; georgiques, Fr.] Some part of the science of husbandry put into a pleasing dress, and set off with all the beauties and embellishments of poetry. Addison.

Georgicks are books speaking of husbandry and tillage.

Cockeram, and Bullokar.

Much less ought the low phrases and terms of art, that are adapted to husbandry, have any place in such a work as the Georgick, which is not to appear in the natural simplicity and nakedness of its subject, but in the pleasant dress that poetry can bestow upon it. Addison on Virgil's Georgicks.

The pleasures of imagination, the essay on the Georgick, and his [Addison's] last papers in the Spectator and Guardian, and models of language.

Dr. Warton, Ess. on Pope.

GEORICK. adj. Relating to the doctrine of agriculture.

GERMIN. n. s. [germen, Lat.] A shooting or sprouting seed. Out of use.

Though palaces and pyramids do slope
Their heads to their foundations; though the treasure

Of nature's germins tumble all together,
Even till destruction sicken; answer me
To what I ask you. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

Thou all-shaking thunder,
Strike flat the thick rotundity o' th' world;

Crack Nature's mould, all germins spill at once
That make ungrateful man. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

GERMINANT.* adj. [germinans, Lat.] Sprouting; branching.

Prophecies are not fulfilled punctually, at once, but have springing, and germinant accomplishment throughout many ages.

Bacon, Adv. of Learn. B. 2.

TO GERMINATE. v. n. [germino, Latin.] To sprout; to shoot; to bud; to put forth.

This action is furthered by the chalcites, which hath within a spirit that will put forth and germinate, as we see in chymical trials.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

The seeds of all kinds of vegetables being planted near the surface of the earth, in a convenient soil, amongst matter proper for the formation of vegetables, would germinate, grow up, and replenish the face of the earth. Woodward.

TO GERMINATE.* v. a. To cause to sprout.

The tree of goodness which is set by fear, strengthened by faith, watered by grace, germinated by godliness, will wax green by hope, will fructify by love, will build by learning.

Price, Creation of the Prince, (1610). sign. E. 2.

GERMINATION. n. s. germination, French, from germinate.] The act of sprouting or shooting; growth.

For acceleration of germination, we shall handle the subject of plants generally. Bacon.

The duke of Buckingham had another kind of germination; and surely, had he been a plant, he would have been reckoned amongst the sponte nascentes. Wotton.

There is but little similitude between a terreous humidity and plantal germinations.

Glanville, Scepis.

Suppose the earth should be carried to the great distance of Saturn; there the whole globe would be one frigid zone; there would be no life, no germination. Bentley, Serm.

TO GERN.* See TO GIRN.

GEROCOMY.* n. s. [gerocomie, Fr. from γέρων, an old man, and κομῆ, to take care of.] That part of medicine, which treats of the proper regimen to be observed in old age.

GEROCOMICAL.* adj. Pertaining to that part of medicine, which concerns old age.

He distinctly sets down the gests and progress thereof. Brown.

GESTA'TION.† n. s. [gestatio, Latin.] Our word is pronounced unusual and uncouth by Heylin, in 1656. Yet it appears in the vocabulary of Cockeram, many years before that date, with the general sense of "a bearing, a carrying." The act of bearing the young in the womb.

Aristotle affirmeth the birth of the infant, or time of its gestation, extendeth sometimes unto the eleventh month; but Hippocrates avers that it exceedeth not the tenth. Brown.

Why in viviparous animals, in the time of gestation, should the nourishment be carried to the embryo in the womb, which at other times goeth not that way? Ray on the Creation.

GE'STATORY.* adj. [Lat. gestatorius.] Capable of being worn or carried.

The crowns and garlands of the ancients were either gestatory, such as they wore about their heads and necks, &c.

Sir T. Brown, Miscell. p. 90.

GE'STICK.* adj. [from gest.] Legendary; historical.

Dames of ancient days

Have led their children through the mirthful maze;
And the gay grandire, skill'd in gestick lore,
Has frisk'd beneath the burden of threescore.

Goldsmith, Traveller.

To GESTICULATE.† v. n. [gesticulator, Latin; gesticuler, Fr.] To play antick tricks; to shew postures. Dict.

Their hands, eyes, gesticulating severally, and after each other; swimming round, and now and then conforming themselves to a Dorick stillness.

Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 306.

They [the Spaniards] talk louder, and argue with more vehemence than even the French or Italians, and gesticulate with equal if not superior eagerness.

Swinnburne, Tour through Spain, Let. 42.

To GESTICULATE.* v. a. To act; to imitate.

If I knew any man so vile
To act the crimes these whippers reprehend,
Or what their servile apes gesticulate,
I should not then much muse their shreds were lik'd. B. Jonson, Apol. Dialogue.

GESTICULATION.† n. s. [gesticulatio, Latin; gesticulation, Fr. from gesticulate.] Antick tricks; various postures.

The wanton gesticulations of a virgin, in a wild assembly of gallants warmed with wine, could be no other than riggish and unmanly.

By. Hall, Contemp. B. 4.

They leap forth below, a mistress leading them; and with antick gesticulation and action, after the manner of the old pantomimi, they dance over a distracted comedy of love, expressing their confused affections, in the scenical persons and habits of the four European nations. B. Jonson, Masques.

Mimical and fantastical gesticulations.

By. Reynolds on the Passions, ch. 29.

GESTICULATOR.* n. s. [Lat. gesticulator.] One that shews postures or tricks.

If king Alfred really went into the Danish camp as a spy, he took upon him the character of a mimick, a dancer, a gesticulator, a jack-pudding. Pegee.

GESTICULATORY.* adj. [from gesticulate.] Representing in an antick manner.

No bishop shall permit plays or sports, undoubtedly mimical and gesticulatory entertainments, to be exhibited in his presence.

GE'STOUR.* n. s. [from gest.] A narrator. Obsolete.

Gestours for to tellen tales.

Chaucer, Rime of Sir Thopas.

The proper business of a gestour was to recite tales or gests; which was only one of the branches of the minstrel's profession. Tyrrhitt on Chaucer.

GE'STURE. n. s. [gero, gestum, Latin; geste, Fr.]

1. Action or posture expressive of sentiment.

Ah, my sister, if you had heard his words or seen his gestures, when he made me know what and to whom his love was, you would have matched in yourself those two rarely matched together, pity and delight. Sidney.

When we make profession of our faith, we stand; when we acknowledge our sins, or seek unto God for favour, we fall down; because the gesture of constancy becometh us best in the one, in the other the behaviour of humility. Hooker.

To the dumbness of the gesture

One might interpret. Shakspeare, Timon of Athens.
Humble and reverend gestures in our approaches to God express the inward reverence of our souls.

Whole Duty of Man.

2. Movement of the body.

Grace was in all her steps, heav'n in her eye,
In ev'ry gesture dignity and love! Milton, P. L.
Every one will agree in this, that we ought either to lay aside all kinds of gesture, or at least to make use of such only as are graceful and expressive. Addison, Spect.

To GETURE. v. a. [from the noun.] To accompany with action or posture.

Our attire disgraceeth it; it is not orderly read, nor getured as becometh. Hooker.

He undertook so to gesture and muffle up himself in his hood, as the duke's manner was, that none should discern him. Wotton.

To GET.† v. a. pret. I got, anciently gat; part. pass. got, or gotten, and anciently get. [Sax. getan, geatan; Norm. Fr. get, hath begotten. Kelham.]

Lam. v. 9.

David gat him a name when he returned from smiting the Syrians. 2 Sam. viii. 13.

Most of these things might be more exactly tried by the Torricellian experiments, if we could get tubes so accurately blown that the cavity were perfectly cylindrical. Boyle.

Such a conscience, as has been wanting to itself, in endeavouring to get the utmost and clearest information about the will of God, that its power, advantages, and opportunities could afford it, is that great internal judge, whose absolution is a rational and sure ground of confidence. South.

He insensibly got a facility, without perceiving how; and that is attributed wholly to nature, which was much more the effect of use and practice. Locke.

The man who lives upon alms, gets him his set of admirers, and delights in superiority.

Addison, Spect.

Sphinx was a monster that would eat
Whatever stranger she could get,
Unless his ready wit disclos'd,
The subtle riddle she propos'd.

Addison, Whig Examiner.

This practice is to be used at first, in order to get a fixed habit of attention, and in some cases only. Watts.

The word get is variously used: we say to get money, to get in, to get off, to get ready, to get a stomach, and to get a cold. Watts, Logick.

2. To force; to seize.

Such losels and scatterlings cannot easily, by any constable, or other ordinary officer, be gotten, when they are challenged for any such fact.

Spenser on Ireland.

The king seeing this, started from where he sat, Out from his trembling hand his weapon gat.

Daniel.

All things, but one, you can restore;
The heart you get returns no more. Waller.

3. To win by contest.

Henry the sixth hath lost

All that which Henry the fifth had gotten.

Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

He gat his people great honour, and he made battles, protecting the host with his sword.

1 Mac. iii. 3.

To get the day of them of his own nation, would be a most unhappy day for him. 2 Mac. v. 6.

Auria held that course to have drawn the galleys within his great ships, who thundering amongst them with their great ordnance, might have opened a way unto his galleys to have gotten a victory.

Knolles, Hist. of the Turks.

4. To have possession of; to have. This sense is commonly in the compound preterite.

Then forcing thee, by fire he made thee bright;
Nay, thou hast got the face of man. Herbert.

These boys are boys of ice; they'll none of her: sure they are bastards to the English, the French never got them. Shakspeare.

Women with study'd arts they vex:

Ye gods destroy that impious sex;
And if there must be some t' invoke
Your pow'rs, and make your altars smoke,
Come down yourselves, and, in their place,
Get a more just and noble race. Waller.

Children they got on their female captives. Locke.
If you'll take 'em as their fathers got 'em, so and well; if not, you must stay till they get a better generation. Dryden.

Has no man, but who has kill'd

A father, right to get a child? Prior.

Let ev'ry married man, that's grave and wise,
Take a tartuff of known ability,
Who shall so settle lasting reformation;
First get a son, then give him education. Dorset.

The god of day, descending from above,

Mixt with the day, and got the queen of love.

Granville.

6. To gain as profit.

Though creditors will lose one-fifth of their principal and use, and landlords one fifth of their income, yet the debtors and tenants will not get it. Locke.

7. To gain a superiority or advantage.

If they get ground and vantage of the king,
Then join you with them like a rib of steel.

Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

8. To earn; to gain by labour.

Having no mines, nor any other way of getting or keeping of riches but by trade, so much of our trade as is lost, so much of our riches must necessarily go with it. Locke.

If it be so much pains to count the money I would spend, what labour did it cost my ancestors to get it? Locke.

9. To receive as a price or reward.

Any tax laid on foreign commodities in England raises their price, and makes the importer get more for them; but a tax laid on your home-made commodities lessens their price. Locke.

10. To learn.

This defect he frequently lamented, it being harder with him to get one sermon by heart than to pen twenty. Fell.

Get by heart the more common and useful words out of some judicious vocabulary. Watts.

With much communication will he tempt thee, and smiling upon thee get out thy secrets. Ecclus. xiii. 11.

By the marriage of his grandson Ferdinand he got into his family the kingdoms of Bohemia and Hungary. Addison.

After having got out of you every thing you can spare, I scorn to trespass. Guardian.

15. To betake; to remove; implying haste or danger.

Get you to-bed on th' instant; I will be return'd forthwith. Shakespeare, Othello.

Arise, get thee out from this land. Gen. xxxi. 13.

Lest they join also unto our enemies, and fight against us, and so get them up out of the land. Ex. i. 10.

He with all speed got himself with his followers to the strong town of Mega. Knolles, Hist.

16. To remove by force or art.

She was quickly got off the land again. Knolles.

The roving fumes of quicksilver, in evaporating, would oftentimes fasten upon the gold in such plenty, as would put him to much trouble to get them off from his rings. Boyle.

When mercury is got by the help of the fire out of a metal, or other mineral body, we may suppose this quicksilver to have been a perfect body of its own kind. Boyle.

They would be glad to get out those weeds which their own hands have planted, and which now have taken too deep root to be easily extirpated. Locke on Education.

17. To put.

Get on thy boots; we'll ride all night. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

18. To GET off. To sell or dispose of by some expedient.

Wood, to get his halfpence off, offered an hundred pounds in his coin for seventy in silver. Swift.

19. To GET over. To conquer; to suppress; to pass without being stopped in thinking or acting. Dr. Johnson makes this sense neuter.

'Tis very pleasant to hear the lady propose her doubts, and to see the pains he is at to get over them. Addison.

I cannot get over the prejudice of taking some little offence at the clergy for perpetually reading their sermons. Swift.

To remove this difficulty, Peterborough was dispatched to Vienna, and got over some of those disputes. Swift.

20. To GET up. To prepare; to make fit. A colloquial expression: as, the entertainment was got up at a great expence.

To GET. v. n.

1. To arrive at any state or posture by degrees with some kind of labour, effort, or difficulty: used either of persons or things.

Phalantus was entrapped, and saw round about him, but could not get out. Sidney.

You knew he walk'd o'er perils, on an edge More likely to fall in than to get o'er. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

The stranger shall get up above thee very high, and thou shalt come down very low. Deut. xxviii. 43.

The fox bragg'd what a number of shifts and devices he had to get from the hounds, and the cat said he had but one, which was to climb a tree. Bacon.

Those that are very cold, and especially in their feet, cannot get to sleep. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

I utterly condemn the practice of the later times, that some who are pricked for sheriffs, and were fit, should get out of the bill. Bacon, Advice to Villiers.

He got away unto the Christians, and hardly escaped. Knolles.

He would be at their backs before they could get out of Armenia. Knolles, Hist. of the Turks.

She plays with his rage, and gets above his anger. Denham.

The latent air is got away in bubbles. Boyle.

There are few bodies whose minute parts stick so close together, but that it is possible to meet with some other body whose small parts may get between, and so disjoint them. Boyle.

There was but an insensible diminution of the liquor upon the recess of whatever it was that got through the cork. Boyle.

Although the universe, and every part thereof, are objects full of excellency, yet the multiplicity thereof is so various, that the understanding falls under a kind of despondency of getting through so great a task. Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

If there should be any leak at the bottom of the vessel, yet very little water would get in, because no air could get out. Wilkins, Math. Magic.

O heav'n, in what a lab'rinth am I led! I could get out, but she detains the thread! Dryd.

So have I seen some fearful hare maintain A course, till tir'd before the dog she lay; Who, stretch'd behind her, pants upon the plain, Past pow'r to kill, as she to get away. Dryden, Ann. Mirab.

The more oily and light part of this mass would get above the other, and swim upon it. Burnet, Theory.

Having got through the foregoing passage, let us go on to his next argument. Locke.

The removing of the pains we feel is the getting out of misery, and consequently the first thing to be done, in order to happiness, absent good. Locke.

If, having got into the sense of the epistles, we will but compare what he says, in the places where he treats of the same subject, we can hardly be mistaken in his sense. Locke.

I got up as fast as possible, girt on my rapier, and snatched up my hat, when my landlady came up to me. Tatler.

Bucephalus would let nobody get upon him but Alexander the Great. Addison on Italy.

Imprison'd fires, in the close dungeons pent, Roar to get loose, and struggle for a vent; Eating their way, and undermining all, Till with a mighty burst whole mountains fall. Addison.

When Alma now, in diff'rent ages, Has finish'd her ascending stages, Into the head at length she gets, And there in publick grandeur sits, To judge of things. Prior.

I resolved to break through all measures to get away. Swift.

2. To fall; to come by accident.

Two or three men of the town are got among them. Tatler.

3. To find the way; to insinuate itself.

When an egg is made hard by boiling, since there is nothing that appears to get in at the shell, unless some little particles of the water, it is not easy to discover from whence else this change proceeds than from a change made in the texture of the parts. Boyle.

He raves; his words are loose As heaps of sand, and scattering wide from sense: So high he's mounted in his airy hopes, That now the wind is got into his head, And turns his brains to frenzy. Dryd. Span. Friar.

A child runs to overtake and get up to the top of his shadow, which still advances at the same rate that he does. Locke.

Should dressing, feasting, and balls once get among the Cantons, their military roughness would be quickly lost. Addison.

The fluids which surround bodies, upon the surface of the globe, get in between the surfaces of bodies when they are at any distance. Cheyne, Phil. Princ.

4. To move; to remove.

Get home with thy fewel made ready to set; The sooner, and easier carriage to get. Tusser.

5. To have recourse to.

The Turks made great haste through the midst of the town ditch, to get up into the bulwark to help their fellows. Knolles.

Lying is so cheap a cover for any miscarriage, and so much in fashion, that a child can scarce be kept from getting into it. Locke.

6. To go; to repair.

They ran to their weapons, and furiously assailed the Turks, now fearing no such matter, and were not as yet all got into the castle. Knolles, Hist. of the Turks.

A knot of ladies, got together by themselves, is a very school of impertinence. Swift.

7. To put one's self in any state.

They might get over the river Avon at Stratford, and get between the king and Worcester. Clarendon.

We can neither find source nor issue for such an excessive mass of waters, neither where to have them; nor, if we had them, how to get quit of them. Burnet, Theory of the Earth.

Without his assistance we can no more get quit of our affliction, than but by his permission we should have fallen into it. Wake, Prep. for Death.

There is a sort of men who pretend to divest themselves of partiality on both sides, and to get above that imperfect idea of their subject which little writers fall into. Pope on Homer.

As the obtaining the love of valuable men is the happiest end of this life, so the next felicity is to get rid of fools and scoundrels. Pope to Swift.

8. To become by any act what one was not before.

The laughing sot, like all unthinking men, Bathes and gets drunk; then bathes and drinks again. Dryden.

9. To be a gainer; to receive advantage.

Like jewels to advantage set,
Her beauty by the shade does get. Waller.

10. To GET off. To escape.

The galleys, by the benefit of the shores and shallows, got off. Dacon, War with Spain.
Whate'er thou dost, deliver not thy sword;
With that thou may'st get off, tho' odds oppose thee. Dryden.

11. To GET up. To rise from repose.

Sheep will get up betimes in the morning to feed against rain. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

12. To GET up. To rise from a seat.

13. To remove from a place.

Get you up from about the tabernacle of Koran, Dathan, and Abiram. Numb. xvi.

14. To get, in all its significations, both active and neutral, implies the acquisition of something, or the arrival at some state or place by some means; except in the use of the preterite compound, which often implies mere possession: as, he has got a good estate, does not always mean that he has acquired, but barely that he possesses it. So we say the lady has got black eyes, merely meaning that she has them.

GETTER.† n. s. [from get.]

1. One who procures or obtains.

Them that ought to have been the most comfortours of the poor, those have we seen to be the most greedy getters and pourloyners for their misbegotten heirs.

Martin, Marr. of Priests, (1554), sign. B. b. 4.

2. One who begets on a female.

Peace is a very lethargy, a getter of more hard-children than war's a destroyer of men.

Shakespeare, Coriol.

GETTING. n. s. [from get.]

1. Act of getting; acquisition.

Wisdom is the principal thing, therefore get wisdom; and with all thy getting get understanding.

Prov. iv. 7.

2. Gain; profit.

Who hath a state to repair may not despise small things; and it is less dishonourable to abridge a petty charge than to stoop to petty gettings.

Bacon.

The meaner families return a small share of their gettings, to be a portion for the child. Swift.

GE'WGAU.† n. s. [gezaf, Saxon; joyau, French. Dr. Johnson.—What we write gewgau is written, in the Anglosaxon, gezaf. It is the past-participle of the verb ge-ȝifan; and means any such trifling thing as is given away or presented to any one. Instead of gewgawes it is sometimes written gigawes and gewgaudes. Mr. Horne Tooke, Div. of Purley, ii. 266.—I have given the whole of Mr. Tooke's assertion, which he applies equally to gaud, that I might not be thought to misrepresent his meaning. But neither gaud, nor gewgau, seems to have any connection with the Saxon verb to give. See GAUD. Is it necessary that a trifle, a bauble, must be that which is given away? Surely the Saxon gezaf is not thus to be explained; though that word is certainly used for trifles. See Manning's edit. of Lye, where, under that word, gezaf-ȝræc is also cited in the sense of trifling, scurrilous, or low discourse; and under ȝaf, which is base, low, &c. ȝaf-ȝræc occurs with the same meaning, and with that also of derision. We may deduce gezaf therefore from ȝaf, and thus account for trifles being named gezaf. But as to the termination of gewgau being sometimes gewgaud, that only serves more strongly to shew that give has nothing to do with the word. Nor may the French gaude, or the northern word for a trifle, be here overpassed. The Icel. gaud, Serenius says, was the name of a pagan deity, which, after the introduction of Christianity, came to signify among them, things of no value; whence godit, puppets, the play-things of little girls. One is tempted almost to pronounce the word formed of gild and gaud. Cotgrave, under babiole, writes it guigaw; Skelton, ggaw; and Beaumont and Fletcher once, gewgaud. At other times gewgau; and once, with an accompaniment not unfavourable to gild and gaud. "Gegaws and gilded puppets." Four Plays in One.] A showy trifle; a toy; a bauble; a splendid plaything.

It is for children to cry for the falling of their house of cards, or the miscarriage of that painted gewgau, which the next shower would have defaced.

Bp. Hall, Of Contentation, § 5.

That metal they exchanged for the meanest trifles and gewgaws which the others could bring.

Abbot, Descr. of the World.

Prefer that which providence has pronounced to be the staff of life, before a glittering gewgau that has no other value than what vanity has set upon it.

L'Estrange.

As children, when they throw one toy away, Straight a more foolish gewgau comes in play.

Dryden.

A heavy gewgau, crown'd a crown, that spread About his temples, draw'd his narrow head, And would have crush'd it. Dryden, Jew.

Some loose the bands,

Of ancient friendship, cancel nature's laws

For pageantry and tawdry gewgaws. Philips.

The first images were fans, silks, ribbands, laces, and many other gewgaws, which lay so thick that the whole heart was nothing else but a toyshop.

Addison, Guardian.

GE'WGAU. adj. Splendidly trifling; showy without value.

Let him that would learn the happiness of religion, see the poor gewgau happiness of Felicia.

Law, Serious Call.

GHA'STFUL.† adj. [ȝaft and fulle, Sax.] 1. Dreary; dismal; melancholy; fit for walking spirits.

Here will I dwell apart,

In gasful grove therefore, till my last sleep

Do close mine eyes:

Help me, ye baneful birds, whose shrieking sound

Is sign of dreary death. Spenser, Shep. Cal.

2. Dreadful; frightful.

I tell no lie, so gasful grew my name,
That it alone discomited an host.

Mir. for Mag. p. 315.

GHA'STFULLY.* adj. [from ghastful.] Frightfully.

He often stares ghastfully, raves aloud, &c.

Pope, Narrative of Dr. R. Norris.

GHA'STLINESS. n. s. [from ghastly.] Horror of countenance; resemblance of a ghost; paleness.

GHA'STLY. adj. [ȝaft, or ghost, and like.]

1. Like a ghost; having horror in the countenance; pale; dreadful; dismal.

Why looks your grace so heavily to-day?

—O, I have past a miserable night;

So full of ugly sights, of ghostly dreams,

So full of dismal terror was the time.

Shakespeare, Rich. III.

Envy quickly discovered in court Solymann's changed countenance upon the great bassa, and began now to shew her ghastly face.

Knolles, Hist. of the Turks.

Death

Grinn'd horrible a ghastly smile, to hear

His famine should be fill'd. Milton, P. L.

Those departed friends, whom at our last separation we saw disfigured by all the ghastly horrors of death, we shall then see assisting about the majestic throne of Christ, with their once vile bodies transfigured into the likeness of his glorious body, mingling their glad acclamations with the hal-lujahs of thrones, principalities, and powers. Boyle.

He came, but with such alter'd looks,

So wild, so ghastly, as if some ghost had met him,

All pale and speechless. Dryden, Span. Friar.

I did not for these ghastly visions send;

Their sudden coming does some ill portend.

Dryden, Ind. Empy.

2. Horrible; shocking; dreadful.

To be less than gods

Disdain'd; but meaner thoughts learn'd in their flight,

Mangled with ghastly wounds through plate and mail.

Milton, P. L.

I who make the triumph of to-day,

May of to-morrow's pomp one part appear,

Ghastly with wounds, and lifeless on a bier!

Prior.

GHA'STNESS. n. s. [from ȝaft, Saxon.]

Ghastliness; horror of look. Not used.

Look you pale, mistress?

Do you perceive the ghastness of the eye?

Shakespeare, Othello.

GHE'RKIN. n. s. [from gurcke, German, a cucumber.] A small pickled cucumber.

Skinner.

To GHESS.† v. n. [See To GUESS. Ghess is by critics considered as the true orthography, but guess has universally prevailed. Dr. Johnson.—It has prevailed indeed; but ghess is the word in our old lexicography, and is also used by Spenser. See Sherwood's Dict. To GHESS.] To conjecture.

In such luxurious plentie of all pleasures,

It seem'd a second paradise I ghesse.

Spenser, F. Q. iv. x. 23.

GHOST.† n. s. [ȝaft, Saxon.]

1. The soul of man.

Vex not his ghost: O, let him pass! He hates him,

That would upon the rack of this rough world

Stretch him out longer. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

Often did I strive

To yield the ghost; but still the envious flood

Kept in my soul. Shakespeare, Rich. III.

Where the bodies of the dead have been out of the reach of their surviving enemies, they have thought it highly obnoxious to their ghosts, to take their representations preserved in their pictures and affix them to the cross.

Pearson on the Creed, Art. 4.

2. A spirit appearing after death.

The mighty ghosts of our great Harrys rose, And armed Edwards look'd with anxious eyes,

To see this fleet among unequal foes,

By which fate promis'd them their Charles should rise.

Dryden.

3. To give up the GHOST. To die; to yield up the spirit into the hands of God.

Man dieth, and wasteth away; yea, man ghost up the ghost. Job, xiv. 10.

Their shadows seem

A canopy most fatal, under which
Our army lies ready to give up the ghost.

Shakespeare, Jul. Cæs.

4. The third person in the adorable Trinity, called the Holy Ghost.

I believe in the Holy Ghost. Apostles' Creed.

The name of ghost or gost in the ancient Saxon language signifieth a spirit; and, in that appellation of the Spirit of God, his [the Holy Ghost's] nature principally is expressed.

Pearson on the Creed, Art. 8.

To GHOST. v. n. [from the noun.] To yield up the ghost; to die. Not in use.

Euryalus taking leave of Lucretia, precipitated her into such a love-fit, that within a few hours she ghosted. Sidney.

To GHOST.† v. a. To haunt with apparitions of departed men. Obsolete.

Julius Cæsar

Who at Philippi the good Brutus ghosted,
There saw you labouring for him.

Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleop.

Ask not with him in the poet "Larvæ hunc interperis insanique agitant senem," what mad ghosts this old man, but what mad ghosts us all. Burton, Anat. of Mel. To the Reader.

GHOSTLESS.* adj. [ghost and less.] Without spirit; without life.

Works are the breath of faith; the proofs by which we may judge, whether it live. If you feel them not, the faith is ghostless.

Dr. R. Clarke, Sermon. (1637.) p. 473.

GHOSTLIKE.* adj. [ghost and like.] Withered; having hollow, sad, or sunk-in eyes; wild-looking; ghastly; ghost-like. Sherwood, and Cotgrave in V. Havé.

GHOSTLINESS. n. s. [from ghostly.] Spiritual tendency; quality of having reference chiefly to the soul.

GHOSTLY.† adj. [from ghost.]

1. Spiritual; relating to the soul; not carnal; not secular.

Save and defend us from our ghostly enemies.

Common Prayer.

Our common necessities, and the lack which we all have as well of ghostly as of earthly favours, is in each kind so easily known, but the gifts of God, according to these degrees and times, which he in his secret wisdom seeth meet, are so diversely bestowed, that it seldom appeareth what all receive, what all stand in need of, it seldom lieth hid.

Hooker.

The graces of the spirit are much more precious than worldly benefits, and our ghostly evils of greater importance than any harm which the body feeleth.

Hooker.

To deny me the ghostly comfort of my chaplains, seems a greater barbarity than is ever used by Christians.

King Charles.

2. Having a character from religion; spiritual.

Hence will I to my ghostly friar's close cell,
His help to crave, and my dear hap to tell.

Shakespeare, Rom. and Jul.

The ghostly father now hath done his shrift.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

3. Relating to apparitions of departed men.

To muse at late, amid the ghostly gloom

Of graves and hoary vaults, and cloister'd cells;

To walk with spectres through the midnight shade.

Akenside, Pleas. of Imag. B. 1.

GIALALINA. n. s. [Italian.] Earth of a bright gold colour, found in the kingdom of Naples, very fine, and much valued by painters. Woodward, Met. Fos.

VOL. II.

GIA'MBEUX. n. s. [jambes, French.] Legs, or armour for legs; greaves.

The mortal steel dispiteously entail'd,

Deep in their flesh, quite through the iron walls,
That a large purple stream adown their giambeux falls.

Spenser, F. Q.

GIANT.† n. s. [geant, French; gigant, Saxon; gigant was also our own word in the sixteenth century; gigas, Latin. Anciently also our word was geant; as in the poetry of Gower.] A man of size above the ordinary rate of men; a man unnaturally large. It is observable, that the idea of a giant is always associated with pride, brutality, and wickedness. Several of the ancients translate the Hebrew word nephilim, Gen. vi. 4. (giants) by βίαιοι, violent men, who carried all before them by main force; who filled the world with rapines, and murders, and all manner of wickedness. Bp. Patrick.

Now does he feel his axle

Hang loose about him, like a giant's robe,
Upon a dwarfish thief. Shaks. Macbeth.

Gates of monarchs

Are arch'd so high that giants may jet through,
And keep their impious turbans on, without
Good-morrow to the sun. Shakspeare, Cymb.

Woman's gentle brain

Could not drop forth such giant-rude invention;
Such Ethiop words. Shakspeare, As you like it.

Pierce faces threat'ning wars,

Giants of mighty bone, and hold emprise!

Milton, P. L.

Those giants, those mighty men, and men of renown, far exceeded the proportion, nature, and strength of those giants remembered by Moses of his own time.

Raleigh, Hist.

The giant-brothers, in their camp, have found
I was not forc'd with ease to quit my ground.

Dryden, Æn.

By weary steps and slow

The groping giant with a trunk of pine

Explor'd his way. Addison.

Neptune, by pray'r repentant, rarely won,
Afflicts the chief t' avenge his giant-son,
Great Polypheme of more than mortal might.

Pope.

GI'ANTESS. n. s. [from giant.] A she-giant; a woman of unnatural bulk and height.

I had rather be a gianteess, and lie under mount Pelion.

Shakspeare.

Were this subject to the cedar, she would be able to make head against that huge gianteess.

Howell.

To GI'ANTIZE.* v. n. [old Fr. geantiser.] To play the giant.

Sherwood.

GI'ANTLIKE.† adj. [from giant and like.]

GI'ANTLY. } Gigantick; vast; bulky.

That proud Philistian—his giantly strength and stature.

Ep. Hall, Cases of Conscience.

'Tis giant-like ambition.

Beaumont and Fl. Cust. of the Country.

Single courage has often, without romance, overcome giantly difficulties.

Decay of Piety.

Notwithstanding all their talk of reason and philosophy, which they are deplorably strangers to, and those unanswerable doubts and difficulties, which, over their cups, they pretend to have against Christianity; persuade but the covetous man not to deify his money, the proud man not to adore himself, and I dare undertake that all their giantly objections against the Christian religion shall presently vanish and quit the field.

South.

GI'ANTRY.* n. s. [old Fr. geanterie.] The race of giants. Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

GI'ANTSHIP. n. s. [from giant.] Quality or character of a giant.

His giantship is gone somewhat cristen,

Stalking with less unconscionable strides,

And lower looks. Milton, S. A.

GIB.† n. s. Any old worn-out animal, Dr. Johnson says, from Sir Thomas Hamner, citing only the passage from Hamlet. It means a cat; and was a word of contempt in our old authors.

She is a tonnishe gyb,

The devil and she be sib. Shelton's Poems, p. 126.

For who that's but a queen, fair, sober, wise,

Would from a paddock, from a bat, a gyb,

Such dear concernings hide? Shakspeare, Hamlet.

And call me beldam, gyb, witch, night-mare, trot.

Drayton, Epist. of El. Cobham to D. Humphrey.

To GIB.* v. n. To act like a cat.

What caterwauling's here? what gibbing?

Beaumont and Fl. Wildgoose Chase.

GI'BBED.* adj. [from gib.] Having been caterwauling. See GIBCAT.

They have remained somewhat melancholy, like gib'd cats.

Bulwer, Artific. Changeling.

As melancholy as a gib'd cat. Ray's Proverbs.

To GI'BBER. v. n. [from jabber.] To speak inarticularly.

The sheeted dead

Did squeak and gibber in the Roman streets.

Shakspeare, Hamlet.

GI'BBERISH.† n. s. [Derived by Skinner from gaber, French, to cheat; by others conjectured to be formed by corruption from jabber. But, as it was anciently written gebrish, it is probably derived from the chymical cant, and originally implied the jargon of Geber and his tribe. Dr. Johnson.—The manner of writing this word geberish or gebrish, is found in Camden: "it would seem most strange and harsh Dutch, or GEBERISH, as women call it!" Rem. on Languages. ed. 1674. p. 30. This observation of Camden will hardly favour the chymical etymon. There is another variation, that of giberidge, or gibbridge, which is in the old dictionary of Sherwood, and in the Satires of Marston, 1599. This also is unfriendly to Geber and his tribe; and the oldest method of writing the word, which is gibberish, and not geberish, will hardly be thought to be on their side. See the first of the examples. It means originally, perhaps, the gabble of the schoolmen; "scholastick gibberish," as Goodman writes, Wint. Ev. Conf. P. iii. Moreover, see Lye, edit. Manning. Labban, to deride, to mock, whence perhaps our gabble and gibberish. Thus Dr. Jamieson considers our word to be from gabber or jabber, whence gibber, and so gibberish, if not rather from the Teut. gaberadacie, trifles. But see To GAB and To GABBER. Serenius also thinks our gibberish to be synonymous with gibe, a mock or joke. Bullokar presents us with another substantive formed from it, viz. gibberishness, which he calls "any kind of mad, broken, fustian language, gibble-gabble, canting, &c." edit. 1656. The word has been formed both into a verb, and an adjective, which has escaped the notice of all our lexic-graphers.] Cant; the private language of rogues and gypsies; words without meaning.

What! methynke ye be clerkyshe,
For ye speake good gibbryshe.

Interlude of Youth, 1557.

Some, if they happen to hear an old word, albeit very natural and significant, cry out straitway, that we speak no English, but gibberish.

Epistle prefixed to Spenser's Shep. Cal.

Speaking gibbrish, or pedlars' French, rather than Latin, or any other common language.

Favour, Antig. over Novelty, (1619), p. 407.
A senseless gibbrish, or a fustian language.

Bp. Bramhall against Hobbes, p. 20.

Some of both sexes writing down a number of letters, just as it came into their heads; upon reading this gibberish, that which the men had wrote sounded like High Dutch, and the other by the women like Italian.

Swift.

GIBBERISH.* adj. Canting; unintelligible; fustian.

A company of gibbrish phrases.

Florio, Tr. of Montaigne, (1613), p. 177.

Some contending for privileges, customs, forms, and that old entanglement of iniquity their gibberish laws, though the badge of their ancient slavery. Milton, Tenure of Kings and Magistrates.

TO GIBBERISH.* v. n. To prate idly or unintelligibly.

You understand not the state of "limbus patrum," nor the depth of the question, but scum [skin] upon the surface, and gibberish you cannot tell for what. Mountagu, App. to Cas. (1625), p. 248.

GIBBET. n. s. [gibet, French.]

1. A gallows; the post on which malefactors are hanged, or on which their carcasses are exposed.

When was there ever cursed atheist brought Unto the gibbet, but he did adore
That blessed pow'r which he had set at nought?

Davies.

You scandal to the stock of verse, a race
Able to bring the gibbet in disgrace. Cleveland.
Haman suffered death himself upon the very gibbet that he had provided for another.

L'Estrange.

Papers lay such principles to the Tories, as, if they were true, our next business should be to erect gibbets in every parish, and hang them out of the way.

Swift.

2. Any traverse beam.

TO GIBBET. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To hang or expose on a gibbet.

I'll gibbet up his name.

Oldham.

2. To hang on any thing going traverse: as the beam of a gibbet.

He shall come off and on swifter than he that gibbets on the brewer's bucket. Shaks. Hen. IV.

GIFBIER. n. s. [French.] Game; wild fowl.

These imposters are laid on all butcher's meat, while, at the same time, the fowl and gibbier are tax-free.

Addison on Italy.

GIBBLE-GA'BLE.* n. s. [from gabble.]

Any rude or noisy conversation; fustian language; barbarous speech.

Sherwood, and Cotgrave in V. Barragouin.

Mad, broken, fustian language; gibble-gabble; canting; or such private-made words as beggars, gypsies, and such confederate rogues use one amongst another.

Bullokar.

GIBBOUSITY.* n. s. [gibbosité, French, from gibbous.] Convexity; prominence; protuberance.

This way of description rendereth the face of the earth upon a plane in its own proper figure spherically, as upon the globe itself; the gibbosity only allowed for. Gregory, Posthum. (1650), p. 305.

When ships, sailing contrary ways, lose the sight one of another, what should take away the sight of ships from each other, but the gibbosity of the interjacent water?

Ray.

GIBBOUS.* adj. [gibbeux, French; gibbus, Latin, from the Hebrew gib, prominent, eminent.]

1. Convex; protuberant; swelling into inequalities.

The bones will rise, and make a gibbous member.

Wiseman.

A pointed flinty rock, all bare and black,
Grew gibbous from behind the mountain's back.

Dryden.

The sea, by this access and recess, shuffling the empty shells, wears them away, reducing those that are concave and gibbous to a flat.

Woodward, Nat. Hist.

2. Crookbacked.

I demand how the camels of Bactria came to have two bunches in their back, whereas the camels of Arabia have but one? How oxen, in some countries, began and continue gibbous, or hunch-backed?

Brown.

GIBBOUSNESS. n. s. [from gibbous.] Convexity; prominence.

To make this convexity of the earth discernible to the eye, suppose a man to be lifted up a great height in the air, that he may have a spacious horizon under one view; but then, again, because of the distance, the convexity and gibbousness would vanish away; he would only see below him a great circular flat.

Bentley, Serm. 8.

GIBCAT.* n. s. [gib and cat.] A he cat. See GIBBED.

I am as melancholy as a gibcat, or a lugg'd bear.

Shakspeare.

TO GIBE. v. n. [gaber, old French, to sneer, to ridicule.] To sneer; to join censoriousness with contempt.

They seem to imagine that we have erected of late a frame of some new religion, the furniture whereof we should not have borrowed from our enemies, lest they should afterwards laugh and gibe at our party.

Hooker.

When we saw her toy, and gibe, and geer,
And pass the bounds of modest merry-make,
Her dalliance he despis'd.

Spenser.

Why that's the way to choak a gibling spirit,
Whose influence is begot of that loose grace
Which shallow laughing hearers give to fools.

Shakspeare.

Thus with talents well endu'd

To be scurrilous and rude,

When you perty raise your snout,

Flee and gibe, and laugh and flout.

Swift.

TO GIBE. v. a. To reproach by contemptuous hints; to flout; to scoff; to ridicule; to treat with scorn; to sneer; to taunt.

When rioting in Alexandria, you
Did pocket up my letters, and with taunts
Did gibe my missive out of audience.

Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

Draw the beasts as I describe them,
From their features, while I gibe them.

Swift.

GIBE. n. s. [from the verb.] Sneer; hint of contempt by word or look; scoff; act or expression of scorn; taunt.

Mark the fleers, the gibes and notable scorns

That dwell in every region of his face.

Shakspeare, Othello.

The rich have still a gibe in store,
And will be monstrous witty on the poor.

Dryden, Juv.

If they would hate from the bottom of their hearts, their aversion would be too strong for little gibes every moment.

Spectator.

But the dean, if this secret should come to his ears,

Will never have done with his gibes and his jeers.

Swift.

GRIBER. n. s. [from gibe.] A sneerer; one who turns others to ridicule by contemptuous hints; a scoffer; a taunter.

You are well understood to be a more perfect giber of the table, than a necessary bencher of the capitol.

Shakspeare, Coriol.

He is a giber, and our present business
Is of more serious consequence.

B. Jonson, Catiline.

GIBELLINES.* n. s. pl. The name of a faction in Italy, opposed to that of the Guelphs, in the thirteenth century. The reason of these names has been variously attempted to be explained.

Not content with endless quarrels,
Against the wicked and their morals,
The Gibellines, for want of Guelphs,
Divert their rage upon themselves. Hudibras, iii. 2.

This would destroy all the records in the Tower, and Magna Charta, and the Act of Oblivion and Indemnity, and divide the whole kingdom into Guelphs and Gibellines.

Bp. Parker, Repr. of Rehears.

Transposed, p. 205.

GIBINGLY. adv. [from gibe.] Scornfully; contemptuously.

His present portance,
Gibingly and ungravelly he did fashion
After th' inveterate hate he bears to you.

Shakspeare, Coriol.

GIBLETS.* n. s. [According to Minshew, from gobbet, goblet: according to Junius, more probably from gibbier, game, Fr. Dr. Johnson.—The word is the old French, giblez, gibelet, giblet, &c. i. e. gibier; Latin, cibarium, Food. V. Roq. Gloss. Lang. Rom.] The parts of a goose which are cut off before it is roasted.

The liquorous palate of the glutton ranges through seas and lands for uncouth delicacies, kills thousands of creatures for but their tongues or giblets.

Bp. Hall, St. Paul's Combat.

I shall not like the table of a country justice,
besprinkled over with all manner of chesp sallads,
sliced beef, giblets, and peticoes, to fill up rooms.

Beaumont and Fl. Woman-Hater.

'Tis holiday; provide me better cheer:
'Tis holiday; and shall be round the year:
Shall I my household gods and genius cheat,
To make him rich who grudges me my meat?
That he may roll at ease: and pamper'd high,
When I am laid, may feed on giblet pie?

Dryden, Pers.

GRIBSTAFF. n. s.

1. A long staff to gage water, or to shove forth a vessel into the deep.

2. A weapon used formerly to fight beasts upon the stage.

Dict.

GRIDDLY. adv. [from giddy.]

1. With the head seeming to turn round.

2. Inconstantly; unsteadily.

To roam

Giddily, and be every where but at home,
Such freedom doth a banishment become. Donne.

3. Carelessly; heedlessly; negligently.

The parts that fortune hath bestow'd upon her,
Tell her, I hold as giddily as fortune.

Shakspeare, Tw. Night.

GRIDDINESS. n. s. [from giddy.]

1. The state of being giddy or vertiginous; the sensation which we have when every thing seems to turn round.

Megrim and giddiness are rather when we rise after long sitting, than while we sit.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

This blessed thistle, which is so sovereign a medicine against the giddiness of the brain; 'tis this will settle it.

Holyday.

Vain show and noise intoxicate the brain, Begin with giddiness, and end in pain.

Young.

2. Inconstancy; unsteadiness; mutability; changeableness.

There be that delight in giddiness, and count it a bondage to fix a belief.

Bacon.

3. Quick rotation; inability to keep its place.

The indignation of Heaven rolling and turning us, till at length such a giddiness seized upon government, that it fell into the very dregs of sectaries.

South.

4. Frolic; wantonness of life.

Thou, like a contrite penitent, Charitably warn'd of thy sins, dost repent, These vanities and giddinesses.

Donne.

GIDDY, adj. [גִּדְדִּי, Saxon. I know not whether this word may not come from gad, to wander, to be in motion, gad, gid, giddy.]

1. Vertiginous; having in the head a whirl, or sensation of circular motion, such as happens by disease or drunkenness.

Them rev'ling thus the Tentyrites invade, By giddy heads, and staggy ring legs betray'd.

Tate, Juv.

2. Rotatory; whirling; running round with celerity.

As Ixion fix'd, the wretch shall feel The giddy motion of the whirling mill.

Pope.

3. Inconstant; mutable; unsteady; changeful.

Our fancies are more giddy and unfirm, More longing, wavering, sooner lost and won, Than women's are.

Shakespeare, Tw. Night.

It may be gnats and flies have their imagination more mutable and giddy, as small birds likewise have.

Bacon.

Thanks to giddy chance, which never bears That mortal bliss should last for length of years, She cast us headlong from our high estate, And here in hope of thy return we wait.

Dryden, Fab.

The giddy vulgar, as their fancies guide, With noise say nothing, and in parts divide.

Dryden, Æn.

You are as giddy and volatile as ever, the reverse of Pope, who hath always loved a domestic life.

Swift to Gay.

4. That which causes giddiness.

The frequent errors of the pathless wood, The giddy precipice, and the dang'rous flood.

Prior

The sylphs through mystick mazes guide their way,

Through all the giddy circle they pursue.

Pope.

5. Heedless; thoughtless; uncautious; wild.

Too many giddy, foolish hours are gone, And in fantastic measures danc'd away.

Rowe, Jane Shore.

How inexcusable are those giddy creatures, who, in the same hour, leap from a parent's window to a husband's bed.

Richardson, Clarissa.

6. Tottering; unfixed.

As we have pac'd along Upon the giddy footing of the hatches, Methought that Glo'ster stumbled.

Shakespeare, Rich. III.

7. Intoxicated; elated to thoughtlessness; overcome by any overpowering intoxicement.

Art thou not giddy with the fashion too, that thou hast shifted out of thy tale into telling me of the fashion?

Shakespeare.

Like one of two contending in a prize, That thinks he hath done well in people's eyes; Hearing applause and universal shout, Giddy in spirit, gazing still in doubt, Whether those peals of praise be his or no.

Shaks.

- To GIDDY. v. n. [from the noun.] To turn quick. Obsolete.

A sodaine North-wind fetcht, With an extreme sea, quite about againe, Our whole endeavours; and our course constrain To giddie round.

Chapman.

- To GIDDY. v. a. To make giddy; to render unsteady.

He is a quiet and peaceable man, who is not moved when all things else are; not shaken with fear, not giddied with suspicion.

Farindon, Sermon. (1657.) p. 423.

- GIDDYBRAINED. adj. [giddy and brain.] Careless; thoughtless.

Turn him out again, you unnecessary, useless, giddybrain'd ass!

Otway, Ven. Pres.

- GIDDYHEAD. n. s. [giddy and head.] One without due thought or judgement.

A company of giddyheads will take upon them to define how many shall be saved, and who damned in a parish; where they shall sit in heaven; interpret apocalypses; and precisely set down when the world shall come to an end, what year, what month, what day.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 677.

- GIDDY-HEADED. adj. [giddy and head.] Without thought or caution; without steadiness or constancy.

And sooner may a gulling weather spy, By drawing forth heaven's scheme descrie What fashion'd hats or ruffs, or suits, next year, Our giddy-headed antic youth will wear.

Donne.

That men are so misaffected, melancholy, giddy-headed, hear the testimony of Solomon.

Burton on Melancholy.

- GIDDYPACED. adj. [giddy and pace.] Moving without regularity.

More than light airs and recollected terms, Of these most brisk and giddypaced times.

Shakespeare.

- To GIE. v. a. [the parent of our word guide; perhaps from the old Fr. guier, to conduct. See To GUIDE.] To direct; to guide. Obsolete.

And if that ye in clemence love me gie, He will you love as me, for your clemenesse, And shew to you his joye and his brightnesse.

Chaucer, Sec. Nonnes Tale.

- GI'ER-EAGLE. n. s. [Sometimes it is written jer-eagle.] An eagle of a particular kind.

These fowl shall not be eaten, the swan and the pelican, and the gie-eagle.

Lev. xi. 18.

- GIERFALCON. v. s. See GERFALCON.

- GI. conj. [Sax. gi, if; Goth. gau, q. d. gav, the same.] If. The word is used in the north of England. See IF.

Ballad of Sir Aldingar, Percy's Rel. ii. i. 9.

- GIFT. † n. s. [Sax. giſt.]

1. A thing given or bestowed; something conferred without price.

They presented unto him gifts, gold, and frankincense and myrrh.

St. Mat. ii. 11.

Recall your gift, for I your pow'r confess; But first take back my life, a gift that's less.

Dryden, Aurengzebe.

2. The act of giving.

God also bearing them witness both with signs and wonders, and with divers miracles and gifts [in the margin, distributions,] of the Holy Ghost.

Heb. ii. 4.

Creator bounteous and benign

Giver of all things good, but fairest this Of all thy gifts, nor envyest.

Milton, P. L.

These all things living gaze on, all things thine By gift.

Milton, P. L.

3. The right or power of bestowing.

They cannot give; For had the gift been theirs, it had not here Thus grown.

Milton, P. L.

No man has any antecedent right or claim to that which comes to him by free gift.

South.

4. Oblation; offering.

Many nations shall come with gifts in their hands, even gifts to the king of heaven.

Tob. xiii. 11.

5. A bribe.

Thou shalt not wrest judgment, thou shalt not respect persons, neither take a gift; for a gift doth blind the eyes of the wise.

Deut. xvi. 19.

6. Power; faculty.

And if the boy have not a woman's gift, To rain a shower of commanded tears, An onion will do well for such a shift.

Shaks.

She was lovely to attract Thy Love, not thy subjection, and her gifts Were such as made government well seem'd

Milton, P. L.

Unseemly to bear rule.

Milton, P. L.

He who has the gift of ridicule, finds fault with any thing that gives him an opportunity of exerting his talent.

Addison.

- To GIFT. v. a. To endow with any faculty or power.

Am I better gifted than another? Thou art an ill judge of either, who enviest the gifts of both.

By. Hall, Satan's Fiery Darts quench'd, § 9.

In those primitive times there were some women extraordinarily gifted by God's Spirit, who took upon them to preach and pray publicly.

By. Hall, Rem. p. 237.

If he be gifted with abilities of mind, that may raise him to such an undertaking.

Milton, Doct. and Disc. of Divorce.

There is no talent so pernicious as eloquence, to those who have it not under command: women, who are so liberally gifted by nature in this particular, ought to study the rules of female oratory.

Addison, Freeholder.

- GI'FTED. † adj. [In this form Dr. Johnson gives the word. But see To GIFT.]

1. Given; bestowed.

Made of my enemies the scorn and gaze, To grind in brazen fetters, under task, With my heaven-gifted strength.

Milton, S. A.

2. Endowed with extraordinary powers. It is commonly used ironically, Dr. Johnson says; which is not the fact. See To GIFT, and the examples under it.

Two of their gifted brotherhood, Hacket and Coppinger, got up into a pease-cart and harangued the people to dispose them to an insurrection.

Dryden.

- GI'FTEDNESS. n. s. [from gifted, in its ironical sense.] The state of being endowed with extraordinary powers.

May not a conformist, though of an ordinary invention, and not endued with the sublimest giftednesses of our separatists, say, Seek, seek, seek, or Good, good, good, &c.

Echard, Grounds of Cont. of the Cler. p. 120.

- GIG. † n. s. [etymology uncertain.]

1. Any thing that is whirled round in play.

Playthings, as tops, gigs, battledores, should be procured them.

Locke.

Hist. of Virginia, (1722,) p. 131.

4. A wanton girl. [old French, gigues.] See GIGLOT.

5. A ship's wherry.

6. A light vehicle, with two wheels, drawn by one horse.

To GIG.* v. a. [probably from the Lat. gigno, to beget.] To engender. A low word.

Our diamonds may have procreated these diamonds, and so we are all three double: if so, I hope my goblet has gigged another golden goblet; and then they may carry double up all four.

Dryden, Amphitruon.

GIGANTEAN.* adj. [Lat. giganteus.] Like a giant; irresistible. A good word.

When the strong Fates with gigantean force

Bear thee in iron arms, without remorse;

Bear, and be borne.

More, Philosoph. Poems, (1647,) p. 318.

GIGANTICAL.* adj. [Latin, gigantes.] Big; bulky.

In good earnest gigantical Cyclopes will transcend spheres.
Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 255.

GIGANTICK. adj. [gigantes, Latin.] Suitable to a giant; big; bulky; enormous; likewise wicked; atrocious.

Others from the wall defend

With dart and jav'lin, stones, and sulphurous fire;
On each hand slaughter and gigantick deeds?

Milton, P. L.

I dread him not, nor all his giant-broods,
Though fame divulg'd him father of five sons,
All of gigantick size, Goliath chief. Milton, S. A.

The son of Hercules he justly seems,

By his broad shoulders and gigantick limbs.

Dryden, Æn.

The Cyclopean race in arms arose;

A lawless nation of gigantick foes. Pope, Odyssey.

GIGANTINE.* adj. [old Fr. gigantin.] Giant-like. Bullock.

To GIGGLE.† v. n. [gichelen, Dutch. Dr. Johnson.—It may perhaps be referred to the Sax. gægl, wanton.] To laugh idly; to titter; to grin with merry levity.

They began to flier and giggle, and to look at men over the shoulder.

World of Wonders, 1608, p. 289.

We shew our present, joking, giggling race;
True joy consis in gravity and grace.

Garrick, Epilogue.

GI'GGLE.* n. s. [from the verb.] A kind of laugh.

A smile; a giggle, or a hum.

Barrow, Serm. i. 184.

GI'GGLER.† n. s. [from giggle.] A laugher; a titterer; one idly and foolishly merry.

A sad wise valour is the brave complexion,
That leads the van, and swallows up the cities:
The giggler is a milk-maid, whom infection,
Or the fir'd beacon, frighteth from his dainties.

Herbert.

This particularity a set of gigglers thought the most necessary thing to be taken notice of in his whole discourse, and made it an occasion of mirth during the whole time of his sermon.

Spectator, No. 158.

I become weary and impatient of the derision of the gigglers of our sex. Tatler, No. 210.

GI'GLOT.† n. s. [gægl, Sax; geyl, Dutch.] A wanton; a lascivious girl. In the north of England, a laughing girl. Sherwood calls giglot a giggle also.

The wife that gads not giglot wise

With every flirting girl,

But honestly doth keep at home,

Not set to gossip still.

Tr. of Bullinger's Serm. (1576,) p. 224.

Away with those giglots too, and with the other confederate companion. Shaksp. Meas. for Meas.

A peevish giglot. B. Jonson, Sejanus.

GI'GLOT.* adj. Inconstant; giddy; light; wanton.

Young Talbot was not born

To be the pillage of a giglot wench.

Shaksp., K. Hen. VI.

The fam'd Cassibelan, who was once at point

(O giglot fortune!) to master Cæsar's sword.

Shaksp., Cymbeline.

GIGLOT.† n. s. [French.] The hip joint. It seems to mean in Chapman a joint for the spit, Dr. Johnson says; which is true, gigot de mouton, being an old French phrase of the kitchen, and still used by us. Gigot was also used for a slice.

The inwards slit,

They broil'd on coales, and ate; the rest, in gigots cut, they split. Chapman.

Cut the slaves to gigets.

Beaum. and Fl. Double Marriage.

To GILD. v. a. pret. gilded, or gilt. [gilban, Saxon.]

1. To overlay with thin gold; to cover with foliated gold.

The room was large and wide,

As it some gilt or solemn temple were:

Many great golden pillars did uprear

The massy roof. Spenser.

To gild refined gold, to paint the lily,

To throw a perfume on the violet.

Shaksp., K. John.

And the gilded car of day

His glowing axle doth ally

In the steep Atlantic stream. Milton, Comus.

Purchasing riches with our time and care,

We lose our freedom in a gilded snare. Roscom.

When Britain, looking with a just disdain

Upon this gilded majesty of Spain,

And knowing well that empire must decline,

Whose chief support and sinews are of coin. Waller.

Her joy in gilded chariots, when alive;

And love of ombre after death survive. Pope.

2. To cover with any yellow matter.

Thou did'st drink

The stale of horses and the gilded puddle,

Which beasts would cough at. Shaksp., Ant. and Cleop.

3. To adorn with lustre.

No more the rising sun shall gild the morn,

Nor ev'ning Cynthia fill her silver horn. Pope, Messiah.

4. To brighten; to illuminate.

The lightsome passion of joy was not that trivial, vanishing, superficial thing, that only gilds the apprehension and plays upon the surface of the soul. South.

5. To recommend by adventitious ornaments.

For my part, if a lie may do thee grace,

I'll gild it with the happiest terms I have. Shaksp., Hen. IV.

Yet, oh! th' imperfect piece moves more

'Tis gilded o'er with youth, to catch the sight. Dryden, Aurengz.

GILD.* See GUILD.

GI'LDER. n. s. [from gild.]

1. One who lays gold on the surface of any other body.

Gilders use to have a piece of gold in their mouth to draw the spirits of the quicksilver.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

We have here a gilder with his anvil and hammer. Broome.

2. A coin, from one shilling and sixpence, to two shillings. Phil.

I am bound

To Persia, and want gilders for my voyage. Shaks.

GI'LDING. n. s. from gild.] Gold laid on any surface by way of ornament.

Silvering will sully and canker more than gilding, which, if it might be corrected with a little mixture of gold, there is profit.

Bacon, Phys. Rem.

The church of the Annunciation, all but one corner of it, is covered with statues, gilding, and paint. Addison on Italy.

Could laureate Dryden Pimp and Fry'r engage.

And I not strip the gilding off a kneave, Unplac'd, unpension'd, no man's heir or slave? Pope.

GILL.† n. s. [agulla, Spanish; gula, Latin. In sense four, and three following, it is spoken jill.]

1. The apertures at each side of a fish's head.

The leviathan,

Stretch'd like a promontory, sleeps or swims, And seems a moving land; and at his gills Draws in, and at his trunk spouts out a sea. Milton, P. L.

Fishes perform respiration under water by the gills. Ray.

He hath two gill-fins; not behind the gills, as in most fishes, but before them. Walton.

Till they, of farther passage quite bereft, Were in the mesh with gills entangl'd left. King's Fisherman.

2. The flaps that hang below the beak of a fowl.

The turkeycock hath great and swelling gills, and the hen hath less. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

3. The flesh under the chin.

In many there is no paleness at all; but, contrariwise, redness about the cheeks and gills, which is by the sending forth of spirits in an appetite to revenge. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Like the long bag of flesh hanging down from the gills of the people in Piedmont. Swift.

4. [Gilla, barbarous Latin; jail, old French.] A measure of liquids containing the fourth part of a pint; or, in some places, half a pint.

Every bottle must be rinc'd with wine: some, out of mistaken thrift, will rince a dozen with the same: change the wine at every second bottle: a gill may be enough. Swift.

5. A kind of measure among the tinnners.

They measure their block-tin by the gill, which containeth a pint. Carew.

6. [From Gillian, the old English way of writing Julian, or Juliana.] The appellation of a woman in ludicrous language, Dr. Johnson says; citing only Ben Jonson. It seems to have been rather a contemptuous name, denoting a wanton; and may be from the Sax. gægl, gæl, lascivious, wanton; and such a woman is called, in our old lexicography, a gill-flirt. See Sherwood in GILL. Mr. Steevens has strangely imagined this word to be from gilly-flower.

The wife that gads not giglot wise

With every flirting gill,

But honestly doth keep at home,

Not set to gossip still.

Tr. of Bullinger's Serm. (1576,) p. 224.

Scurvy knave! I am none of his flirt gills.

Shakspeare, Rom. and Jul.

You heard him take me up like a gill-filr.

Beaumont and Fl. Ktn. of the Burn. Pest.

I can, for I will,

Here at Burley o' th' Hill,

Give you all your fill,

Each Jack with his Gill. B. Jonson, Gypsies.

7. [Chelidonium.] The name of a plant; ground-ivy.

The lowly gill, that never dares to climb.

Shenstone, Schoolmistress.

8. Malt liquor medicated with ground-ivy.

9. A fissure in a hill. [Icel. gíl, a cleft, a rift of mountains; whence, any fissure.]

The canary birds, which they bring to us in England, breed in the "barancos," or gills, which the water hath fretted away in the mountains, being places very cold. Relation of Teneriffe, in Sprat's Hist. R. S. p. 208.

10. In the north of England, a place hemmed in with two steep brows or banks, a rivulet running between them. Ray.

You may continue along this gill, and passing by one end of the village and its church for half a mile, it leads to an opening between two hills covered with fir woods. Gray, Letters.

11. In some parts of the south of England, a rivulet or brook. Grose.

GILLHOUSE. n. s. [gill and house.] A house where gill is sold.

Thou shalt each alehouse, thee each gillhouse mourn,

And answering ginshops sourer sighs return.

Pope.

GILLIAN.* n. s. See the sixth meaning of GILL. A wanton.

Thou tookst me up at every word I spoke,

As I had been a mawkin, a flirt gillian.

Beaumont and Fl. The Chances.

GILLYFLOWER.† n. s. [Either corrupted from July flower, or from giroflée, Fr. Gawen Douglas writes the word jere-flour; and our old lexicographers, Huileto and Barret, gilover and glofer. I think I have somewhere seen it also girofer.]

Gilly flowers, or rather July flowers, so called from the month they blow in, may be reduced to these sorts; red and white, purple and white, scarlet and white. Mortimer, Husbandry.

In July come gillyflowers of all varieties. Bacon.

Fair is the gillyflow'r of gardens sweet,

Fair is the marygold, for pottage meet.

Gay, Pastorals.

GILSE.* n. s. [of uncertain etymology.] In the north of England, a young salmon.

GILT. n. s. [from gild.] Golden show; gold laid on the surface of any matter. Now obsolete.

Our gayness and our gilt are all besmirch'd,
With rainy marching in the painful field.

Shakspeare, Hen. V.

When thou wast in thy gilt, and thy perfume, they mockt thee for too much curiosity: in thy rags thou know'st none, but art despis'd for the contrary.

Shakspeare, Timon of Athens.

GILT. The participle of GILD, which see.

Where the gilt chariot never mark'd its way.

Pope.

GILTHEAD.† n. s. [gilt and head.] A sea fish.

The gilthead that doth clive [cleave] Sicilian sea, is brought upon the board alive.

Hakewill on Providence, p. 380.

He maketh him to die of a surfeit of giltheads,
(a fish, called aurata, or aurella.)

Fuller, Holy War, p. 151.

GILT-TAIL. n. s. [gilt and tail.] A worm so called from his yellow tail.

GIM.† adj. [An old word. Welsh, gwym, beautiful. Lye.] Neat; spruce; well dressed. Hence the modern expression jenny, i. e. gimmy. See also GIMP. Gawen Douglas uses gim.

GI'MBAL, or GI'MBOL.* See GEMEL and GIMMAL.

GI'MCRACK.† n. s. [Supposed by Skinner to be ludicrously formed from gin, derived from engine, Dr. Johnson. — It is more probably from gim and crack, a smart youth, a spruce fellow. See the 13th sense of CRACK. See also GIMP. Gimcrack appears to have been first applied to the person, which has escaped the notice of Skinner and Johnson; and to have been used in a contemptuous sense, as it now sometimes is. Afterwards the word came to signify any trifling contrivance.] A slight or trivial mechanism.

Lady, I pity you:

You are a handsome and a sweet young lady,
And ought to have a handsome man yok'd to you,
An understanding too: This is a gimcrack!

Beaumont and Fl. Elder Brother.

For though these gimcracks were away,

However, more reduc'd and plain,

The watch would still a watch remain;

But if the horal orbit ceases,

The whole stands still, or breaks to pieces. Prior.

What's the meaning of all these trigrams and gimcracks? Jumping over my master's hedges, and running your lines cross his grounds?

Arbutnot, Hist. of J. Bull.

GI'MLET. n. s. [gibelet, guimbelet, French.] A borer with a screw at its point.

The gimlet hath a worm at the end of its bit.

Moron.

GI'MMAL.† n. s. [Supposed by Skinner and Ainsworth to be derived from gemellus, Latin, and to be used only of something consisting of correspondent parts, or double. It seems rather to be gradually corrupted from geometry or geometrical. Any thing done by occult means is vulgarly said to be done by geometry.] Some little quaint device or piece of machinery. Hammer.

I think by some odd gimmals or device
Their arms are set like clocks, still to strike on,
Else they could not hold out so as they do.

Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

Some of their Italian friars have confessed withal, that their fashion is, when all their gimmals are in tune for a miracle, to enjoin some seely old woman in her confessions, to say her devotions before the altar, where the image prepared to play a miracle doth stand.

Sir E. Sandys, State of Religion.

GI'MMAL Ring.* See GEMEL.

GI'MMER.† n. s. [See GIMMAL.] Movement; machinery.

The holding together of the parts of matter has so confounded me, that I have been prone to conclude with myself, that the gimmers of the world hold together not so much by geometry as some natural magic.

More, Divine Dialogues.

Who knows not how the famous Kentish idol moved her eyes, and hands, by those secret gimmers, which now every puppet-play can imitate?

Bp. Hall to Sir D. Murray, Dec. 1. Epist. 6.

Here lay a wheel, there the balance; here one gimmer, there another.

Bp. Hall, Select Thoughts, § 9.

GI'MMER-LAMB.* n. s. An ewe-lamb. Gimmer is also a two-year old female sheep. A northern word. Grose, Craven Dialect, and Brockett. Of uncertain etymology.

GIMP.* adj. [Welsh, gwym, pretty; Lat. comptus, neat.] Nice; spruce; trim. In the north of England, it is applied to women, and denotes slimmness or elegance of shape. And in vulgar language, a gimcrack is a spruce girl. Gawen Douglas applies the word to flowers; "gimp gilliflowers," Virg. Æn. 12.

GIMP.† n. s. [probably from gimp, old Eng. neat, spruce, though indeed it is pronounced with g hard. See GIMP and GIMCRACK.] A kind of silk twist or lace.

He walk'd the place,

Through tape, toys, tinsel, gimp, perfume, and lace.
Parnell, Elegy to an Old Beauty.

GIN.† n. s.

1. A trap; a snare. [from engine, Dr. Johnson. — Lye considers it as descended from the *Icel. ginn*a, to deceive; but gin, for engine, is very old in our language. Robert of Gloucester uses it. And Barret, in his Alv. 1580, defines a snare "a ginne or engine."] As the day begins,

With twenty gins we will the small birds take,

And pastime make. Sidney.

For a gin, and for a snare, to the inhabitants of Jerusalem, Isaiah, viii. 14.

Which two, through treason and deceitful gin,
Had slain sir Mordant. Spenser, F. 2.

So strives the woodcock with the gin;
So doth the coney struggle in the net.

Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

Be it by gins, by snares, by subtilty.

Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

If those, who have but sense, can shun

The gins that have them annoy'd;

Little for me had reason done,

If I could not thy gins avoid. B. Jonson, Forest.

I know thy trains,

Though dearly to my cost, thy gins and toils;

No more on me have pow'r, thy force is null'd.
Milton, S. A.

He made a planetary gin,

Which rats would run their own heads in,

And come on purpose to be taken,

Without th' expence of cheese and bacon.

Hudibras.

Keep from flaying scourge thy skin,

And ankle free from iron gin. Hudibras.

2. Any thing moved with screws, as an engine of torture. [from engine.]

Typhreus' joints were stretched on a gin.

Spenser.

3. In mechanics, a machine for raising great weights.

4. A pump worked by rotatory sails. [from engine.]

The dells would be so flown with waters, it being impossible to make any adits or soughs to drain them, that no gins or machines would suffice to lay and keep them dry.

Ray.

A bituminous plate, alternately yellow and black, formed by water driveling on the outside of the gin pump of Mostyn coals.

Woodward on Fossils.

5. [Contracted from GENEVA, which see.]
The spirit drawn by distillation from juniper berries.

This calls the church to deprecate our sin,
And hurls the thunder of our laws on gin. Pope.
Gin shops sourer sighs return. Pope.

To GIN,* v. a. [from the noun.] To catch in a trap.

So, so, the woodcock's gin'd,

To GIN,* v. n. [Sax. ginnan.] To begin. This is the original of our begin; which Mr. Mason, with others, has inaccurately considered as a mere poetical abbreviation.

The majesty of hir schal gynne to be destroyed, whom al Asie and the world worshipeth.

When thine hornis new ginnen to spring,
Chaucer, Tr. and Cress. v. 657.

Our play
Leaps o'er the vault and firstlings of those broils, Ginning in the middle.

Shakespeare, Tr. and Cress. Prolog.

GIN,* conj. [gi, Sax. Ray. Gin is no other than the participle given, gi'en, gin. Mr. Horne Tooke. But see GIFT.] If. Used in our northern counties.

Grose.

GING,* n. s. [an old word for gang.] A company. See GANG.

To be auditors in the galleys, there to employ and exercise their turbulent, seditious, litigious, mutinous, harsh and quarrelous talent upon the ging, swabbers, and rowing slaves.

Tr. of Boccaccio, (1626), p. 60.

I would not willingly

See or be seen to any of this ging.

B. Jonson, New Inn, (1631.)

Proceeding further, I am met with a whole ging of words and phrases not mine.

Milton, Apol. for Smectym.

GINGER,† n. s. [Sax. gingerep; Lat. gingiber, gingiber; Ital. gingero; Gr. gingyberis, an Arabian plant; gingerfil, Pers. Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 316. Chaucer writes it gingiber, Rom. R. 1369. "Gilofre, and licorice, gingiber, &c."]

The flower consists of five leaves, shaped somewhat like those of the iris: these are produced in the head or club, each coming out of a separate leafy scale. The ovary becomes a triangular fruit, having three cells which contain seeds. Miller.

The root of ginger is of the tuberous kind, knotty, crooked, and irregular; of a hot, acrid, and pungent taste, though aromatick, and of a very agreeable smell. The Indians eat both the young shoots of the leaves and the roots themselves. Hill, Mat. Medica.

Or wafting ginger round the streets to go,
And visit alehouse where ye first did grow.

Pope, Dunciad.

GINGERBREAD, n. s. [ginger and bread.]

A kind of farinaceous sweetmeat made of dough, like that of bread or biscuit, sweetened with treacle, and flavoured with ginger and some other aromatick seeds. It is sometimes gilt.

An' I had but one penny in the world, thou should'st have it to buy gingerbread.

Shakespeare, Love's Lab. Lost.
Her currants there and gooseberries were spread,
With the enticing gold of gingerbread.

King, Cookery.

'Tis a loss you are not here, to partake of three weeks' frost, and eat gingerbread in a booth by a fire upon the Thames.

Swift.

GINGERLY,† adv. [I know not whence derived. Dr. Johnson.—Serenius derives it from the Icel. gangr, walking. Su. gaengra, to go step by step. It appears to have been very common; and among good writers, though Dr. Johnson has cited only Shakespeare; nor is it yet disused.] Cautiously; nicely.

Go she never so gingerly, her honestie is gone away. Skelton, Poems, p. 48.

What is't that you

Took up so gingerly? Shaks. Two Gent. of Ver.
Has it a corn? or does it walk on conscience,
It treads so gingerly? Beaumont and Fl. Mat. Maid.

We must make use of that rotten staff of nature, as far as its strength will bear, and that very gingerly too; never daring to lean or lay our whole weight upon it. Hammond, Works, iv. 660.

He came to him with a soft pace, treading gingerly, (as we speak,) after a nice and delicate manner. Patrick on 1 Sam. xv. 32.

He walks like a benighted traveller in a dangerous road, and is fain to feel out his steps, and to tread gingerly and cautiously. Scott, Works, ii. 28.
Pray observe how gingerly he translates "temperans," moderate in the enjoyment of pleasure! Whereas temperance, according to Tully, consists in the neglecting and despising of pleasure.

Bentley, Phil. Lips. § 44.

GINGERNESS, n. s. Niceness; tenderness.

Dict.

GINGIVAL, adj. [gingiva, Lat.] Belonging to the gums.

Whilst the Italians strive to cut a thread in their pronunciation between D and T, so to sweeten it, they make the occlude apulse, especially the gingival, softer than we do, giving a little of perverseness. Holder, Elem. of Speech.

To GINGLE,† v. n. [Dr. Johnson offers no etymology. It is probably the Teut. klincken, to ring; German, klingen. Casaubon would derive it from the κινδύλω, to move quickly, to shake.]

1. To utter a sharp clattering noise; to utter a sharp noise in quick succession.

Did this title here

Of knighthood ask no other ornaments
Than other countries glittering show, poor pride,
A gingling spur, a feather, a white hand,
A frizzled hair, powder'd perfumes, and lust,
Drinking sweet wines, surfeits and ignorance,
Rashly and easily would I venture on't.

Beaumont and Fl. Kn. of Malta.

The foot grows black that was with dirt embrown'd,
And in thy pocket gingling halfpence sound.

Gay, Trivia.

Once, we confess, beneath the patriot's cloak,
From the crack'd bag the dropping guinea spoke,
And gingling down the backstairs told the crew,
Old Cato is as great a rogue as you. Pope, Epist.

2. To make an affected sound in periods or cadence.

Those petty sectaries—who by their various kind of gingling fancies in serving God, &c.
Howell, Instruct. For Trav. (1642), p. 227.

To GINGLE, v. a. To shake so that a sharp shrill clattering noise should be made.

Her infant grandame's whistle next it grew;
The bells she gingled, and the whistle blew. Pope.

GINGLE,† n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A shrill resounding noise.

Many of their fancies, which amongst themselves they hold to be strong lines, and quintessential stuff, being turned to another tongue, become flat, and prove oftentimes but mere gingles.

Howell, Instruct. For Trav. p. 158.

2. Affectation in the sound of periods.

GINGLYMOID, adj. γινγλυμοειδής, a hinge, and είδος.] Resembling a ginglymus; approaching to a ginglymus.

The malleus lies along, fixed to the tympanum, and on the other end is joined to the incus by a double or ginglymoid joint. Holder, Elem. of Speech.

GINGLYMUS, n. s. A mutual indenting of two bones into each other's cavity, in the manner of a hinge; of which the elbow is an instance. Wiseman.

GINNET, n. s. [gínvoc.] A nag; a mule; a degenerated breed. Hence, according to some, but, I believe, erroneously, a Spanish gennet, improperly written for ginnet.

GINSENG, n. s. [I suppose Chinese.] A root brought lately into Europe, of a brownish colour on the outside, and somewhat yellowish within; and so pure and fine, that it seems almost transparent. It is of a very agreeable and aromatick smell, though not very strong. Its taste is acrid and aromatick, and has somewhat bitter in it. We have it from China and America. The Chinese value this root at three times its weight in silver. Hill.

To GIP, v. a. To take out the guts of herrings. Bailey.

GI'PON.* See JUPPON.

GI'PSY,† n. s. [Corrupted from Egyptian; for when they first appeared in Europe, they declared, and perhaps truly, that they were driven from Egypt by the Turks. They are now mingled with all nations. Dr. Johnson.—"The received opinion sets them down for Egyptians, and makes them out to be the descendants of those vagabond votaries of Isis, who appeared to have exercised in ancient Rome pretty much the same profession as that followed by the present gipsies, viz. fortune-telling, strolling up and down, and pilfering." Swinburne, Trav. through Spain, Lett. 29.—"The Gipsies, as it should seem by some striking proofs derived from their language, came originally from Hindustan, where they are supposed to have been of the lowest class of Indians, namely Pariahs, or, as they are called in Hindustan, Suders. They are thought to have migrated about A. D. 1408, or 1409, when Timur Beg ravaged India for the purpose of spreading the Mahometan religion.—They must certainly have been in Egypt before they reached us, otherwise it is incomprehensible how the report arose that they were Egyptians." Brand, Pop. Antiquities. See also the adjective GI'PSY.—Their first appearance in Europe was in the fifteenth century. Our old lexicography denominates them "counterfeit Egyptians."

1. A vagabond who pretends to foretell futurity, commonly by palmistry or physiognomy.

I perceive him to be more ignorant in his art of divining than any gipsy. Milton, Apol. for Smectym.
The butler, though he is sure to lose a knife, a fork, or a spoon every time his fortune is told him, shuts himself up in the pantry with an old gipsy for above half an hour.

A frankick gipsy now, the house he haunts,
And in wild phrases speaks dissembled wants.

Prior, Henry and Emma.
In this still labyrinth around her lie
Spells, philters, globes, and spheres of palmistry;
A sigil in his hand the gipsy bears,
In th' other a prophetic sieve and sheers.

Garth, Dispensatory.
I, near you stile, three sallow gypsies met;
Upon my hand they cast a poring look,
Bid me beware, and thrice their heads they shook.

2. A reproachful name for a dark complexion.

Laura, to his lady was but a kitchen-wench;
Dido a dowdy;
Cleopatra a gipsy; Helen and Hero hildings and harlots.

3. A name of slight reproach to a woman.

The widow play'd the gipsy, and so did her confidant too, in pretending to believe her. L'Estrange.

A slave I am to Clara's eyes;
The gipsy knows her pow'r, and flies.

Prior.

GIPSEY, * adj.

1. Denoting the language spoken by the Gypsies.

It seems to be well proved in this learned work [A Dissertation on the Gypsies, &c. written in German by H. M. G. Grellman, translated into English by M. Raper, Esq. 1787.] that these gypsies came originally from Hindostan. A very copious catalogue is given of Gipsy and Hindostan words collated, by which it appears that every third Gipsy word is likewise an Hindostan one, or still more, that out of every thirty Gipsy words, eleven or twelve are constantly of Hindostan. This agreement will appear uncommonly great, if we recollect that the above words have only been learned from the Gypsies within these very few years, consequently after a separation of four complete centuries from Hindostan, their supposed native country.

Brand, Popular Antiquities.

2. Denoting any jargon or cant.

The regicide directory on the day, which in their gipsy jargon they call the 5th of Pluviose, charges us with eluding our declarations.

Burke.

GIPSYISM, * n. s. [from gipsy.] The state of a gipsy.

The companion of his [the tinker's] travels is some foul, sun-burnt gipsy, that since the terrible statue recanted gypsime, [gipsyism;] and is turned pedlar.

Overbury, Chacrat. sign. I. 2.

GIRANDOLE, * n. s. [French; from the Ital. girandola; a kind of firework: "ruota composta di fuochi lavorati, che gira, appiccandovi il fuoco." Della Crusca. Vocab.] A large kind of branched candlestick; a chandelier. Modern.

GIRASOLE, n. s. [from girasole, Fr.]

1. The herb turnsol.

2. The opal stone.

To GIRD† v. a. pret. girded, or girt.

gýpan, Sax. gyrta, Icel. gurtin, Germ.]

1. To bind round.

They sprinkled earth upon their heads, and girded their loins with sackcloth.

2 Mac. x. 3.

2. To put on so as to surround or bind.

Cords of the bigness of packthread were fastened to bandages, which the workmen had girt round my neck.

3. To fasten by binding.

He girt his warlike harness about him.

1 Mac. iii. 25.

My bow and thunder, my almighty arms

Girt on, and sword upon thy puissant thigh.

Milton, P. L.

No, let us rise at once, gird on our swords,

And, at the head of our remaining troops,

Attack the foe.

Addison, Cato.

The combatant too late the field declines,

When now the sword is girded to his loins.

Prior.

4. To invest.

Stoop then, and set your knee against my foot;

And in regu'don of that duty done,

I gird thee with the valiant sword of York.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

The son appear'd,

Girt with omnipotence.

Milton, P. L.

5. To dress; to habit; to clothe.

I girded thee about with fine linen, and I covered thee with silk.

Ezek. xvi. 10.

Tysiphone there keeps the ward,

Girt in her sanguine gown, by night and day,

Observant of the souls that pass the downward way.

Dryden.

6. To cover round as a garment.

These, with what skill they had, together sow'd,

To gird their waist; vain covering, if it hide

Their guilt, and dreaded shame!

Milton, P. L.

7. To furnish; to equip.

So to the coast of Jordan he directs

His easy steps, girded with snaky wiles.

Milton, P. R.

8. To enclose; to encircle.

That Nyseian isle,

Girt with the river Triton, where old Cham

Did Amalthea, and her florid son

Young Bacchus, from his stepdame Rhea's eye.

Milton, P. L.

9. To reproach; to gibe.

Being mov'd, he will not spare to gird the gods.

Shakespeare.

To GIRD† v. n. [Of this word in this sense I know not the original: it may be formed by a very customary transposition from gride or cut. Dr. Johnson.

— It is most probably from the Saxon gýp, a staff, whence a hit or blow, first in the literal sense; then, in the figurative, for a stroke of wit or sarcasm.

The Teut. gorden is actively, to strike, smite, or beat. So Chaucer uses it.

Coles accordingly notices the verb gird,

"to strike." To break a scornful jest;

to gibe; to sneer.

Men of all sorts take a pride to gird at me:

the brain of this foolish compounded clay, man, is not able to invent any thing that tends to laughter more than I invent, or is invented on me: I am not only witty in myself, but the cause that wit is in other men.

Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

It could not but go deep into thy soul, to hear these bitter and girding reproaches from them Thou camest to save. By. Hall, Contempl. The Crucifixion.

We, that are brothers of the blade, know how to put up harder and more girding repartees than this with patience and philosophy.

Ep. Parker, Repr. of Rehears. Transp. p. 31.

GIRD† n. s. A twitch; a pang; it may come from the sensation caused by a bandage or girdle drawn hard suddenly. This word is now seldom used, unless the former etymology be admitted. Dr. Johnson. — Dr. Johnson means his etymology of the verb. But neither his definition nor his etymology of this word will be generally received. We may refer to the Sax. gýp, in the sense of a stroke or blow, and so define the word, a taunt, a reproach, a sneer.

Curculio may chatte till his heart ache, ere any be offended with his gyrdes.

Gosson, School of Abuse, (1579.)

Sweet king! the bishop hath a kindly gird:

For shame, my lord of Winchester, relent.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

All the sharp quips, and witty gyrdes, wherewith

Martial doth web and embellish the conclusions of his [epigrams.]

Florio, Trans. of Montaigne, (1613.) p. 228.

Conscience by this means is freed from many fearful gyrdes and twinges which the atheist feels.

Tillotson.

He has the glory of his conscience, when he doth well, to set against the checks and gyrdes of it when he doth amiss.

Goodman, Wint. Ev. Conference.

GIRDER,† n. s. [from gird.]

1. In architecture, the largest piece of timber in a floor. Its end is usually fastened into the summers, or breast summers, and the joists are framed in at one arm to the girders.

Harris.

The girders are also to be of the same scantling the summers and ground-plates are of, though the back girder need not be so strong as the front girder.

Mason, Mech. Esser.

These mighty girders which the fabrick bind,

These ribs robust and vast in order join'd.

Blackmore.

2. A satirist.

We great girders call it a short saying of sharp wit with a bitter sense in a sweet word.

Lilly, Alean, and Campaspe.

GIRDING, * n. s. [from gird.] A covering.

Instead of a stomacher, a girding of sackcloth.

Isaiah, iii. 24.

GIRDLE,† n. s. [gýpel, Saxon; girdur, Goth. Dr. Johnson has cited four lines from Marlow's Passionate Shepherd, which he ascribes to Shakespeare; in which, however, the word is not girdle, but kirtle.]

1. Any thing drawn round the waist, and tied or buckled.

Moses — girded them with girdles.

Levit. viii. 13.

The same John had his raiment of camel's hair, and a leathern girdle about his loins.

St. Matt. iii. 4.

Many conceive there is somewhat amiss, until they put on their girdle.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

On him his mantle, girdle, sword, and bow,

On him his heart and soul he did bestow.

Cowley.

2. Enclosure; circumference.

Suppose within the girdle of these walls

Are now confined two mighty monarchies.

Shakespeare, Hen. V.

3. The zodiac.

Great breezes in great circles, such as are under the girdle of the world, do refrigerate.

Bacon.

4. A round iron plate for baking. Northumberland.

Pegge.

To GIRDLE† v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To gird; to bind as with a girdle.

Lay the gentle babes, girdling one another

Within their innocent alabaster arms.

Shakespeare, Rich. III.

2. To enclose; to shut in; to environ.

Those sleeping stones,

That as a waist do girdle you about.

Shakespeare, J. Kohn.

Let me look back upon thee, O thou wall,

That girdlest in those wolves!

Shakespeare, Timon.

But call you those true spirits ill affected,
That whilst the wars were, serv'd like walls and ribs
To girdle in the kingdom?

Beaum. and Fl. The Captain.
GIR'DLEBELT. n. s. [girdle and belt.] The belt that encircles the waist.

Nor did his eyes less longingly behold
The girdlebelt, with nails of burnish'd gold.

Dryden, En.
GIR'DLER.† n. s. [from girdle.] A maker of girdles. Huloet.

Talk with the girdler or the mill'ner.
Beaum. and Fl. Hon. Man's Fortune.

GIRE. n. s. [gyrus, Latin.] A circle described by any thing in motion. See GYRE.

GIRL.† n. s. [About the etymology of this word there is much question: Meric Casaubon, as is his custom, derives it from γῆρ of the same signification;
Minshew from garrula, Latin, a prattler;
or girella, Italian, a weathercock; Junius thinks that it comes from herlodes, Welsh, from which, says he, harlot is very easily deduced. Skinner imagines that the Saxons, who used ceopl for a man, might likewise have ceopla for a woman, though no such word is now found. Dr. Hickes derives it most probably from the Icelandick karlinna, a woman. So far Dr. Johnson.—Girl was formerly an appellation common to both sexes. Serenius says, that from the Su. Goth. karl, a man, many etymologists deduce our word girl. "The yonge girdles of the diocese," in the Prologue to Chaucer's Canterbury Tales, may be the young men or the young women,
the appellation, as already noticed,
being common to both. See Mr. Tyrwhitt's Notes on Chaucer. See also Pilkington's Remarks upon several Passages of Scripture, 1759, p. 33. "In old English, the word girl is exactly expressive of the Hebrew גִּירָלָה, and means a young person of either sex."]

1. A young woman, or female child.
In those unfledg'd days was my wife a girl. Shaks.
I will love thee ne'er the less, my girl. Shakspeare.
The fool Amphilochus, to field brought gold to be his wracke,
Proude girl like, that doth ever bear her dowre upon her backe. Chapman.

A weather-beaten lover, but once known,
Is sport for every girl to practise on. Donne.
Tragedy should blush as much to stoop
To the low mimic follies of a farce,
As a grave matron would to dance with girls.

Roscommon.
A boy, like thee, would make a kindly line;
But oh! a girl, like her, must be divine! Dryden.

2. Among sportsmen, a roebuck of two years age. Bullockar, and Chambers.
GIRLHOOD.* n. s. [girl and hood.] The state of a girl. A proper word; but, I believe, of modern usage.

I regret that it is not in my power to collect more anecdotes of Dr. Johnson's infancy. My mother passed her days of girlhood with an uncle at Warwick, consequently was absent from home in the school-boy days of the great man.

Miss Seward to Mr. Boswell, (1785), Lett. i. 38.

GIRLISH. adj. [from girl.] Suiting a girl; youthful.

In her girlish age she kept sheep on the moor.

Carew.
GIRLISHLY. adv. [from girlish.] In a girlish manner.

To GIRN.† v. n. It seems to be a corruption of grin. It is still used in Scotland, and is applied to a crabbed, captious, or peevish person. Dr. Johnson.
— It is also used in the north of England for grin; and our old dictionaries refer grin to grin. See Barret and Sherwood. And see To GRIN.

They make anticke faces, grin, mow and mope
like an ape.

By. Harsenet, Declaration of Popish Impostures.
It has been always found an excellent way of grinning at the government in scripture-phrase.
South, Sermon. ii. 118.

GIRN.* n. s. A corruption of the substantive grin. See To GRIN.

This is at least a grin of fortune, if

GIRTH. n. s. [from girt.]

1. A band by which the saddle is fixed upon the horse.

Or the saddle turn'd round, or the girths brake;
For low on the ground, woe for his sake,
The law is found. B. Jonson, Underwoods.

Nor Pegasus could bear the load,
Along the high celestial road;
The steed oppress'd, would break his girth,
To raise the lumber from the earth. Swift.

Mordanto gallops on alone;
The roads are with his foll'wers strown;
This breaks a girth, and that a bone. Swift.

2. The compass measured by the girdle, or enclosing bandage.

He's a lusty jolly fellow that lives well, at least dently false and impossible into their poems, nor gives them licence to run out into wildness. Broome.

3. To put into one's possession; to consign; to impart; to communicate.

Give us of your oil, for our lamps are gone out.

St. Matt. xxv.

Nature gives us many children and friends, to take them away; but takes none away to give them us again. Temple.

Give me, says Archimedes, where to stand firm,
and I will remove the earth. Temple.

If the agreement of men first gave a sceptre into any one's hands, or put a crown on his head, that almost must direct its conveyance. Locke.

4. To pay as price or reward, or in exchange.

All that a man hath will he give for his life.

Job, ii. 4.

If you did know to whom I gave the ring,
If you did know for whom I gave the ring,
And would conceive for what I gave the ring,
And how unwillingly I left the ring,
You would abate the strength of your displeasure.

Shakspeare.

He would give his nuts for a piece of metal, and exchange his sheep for shells, or wool for a sparkling pebble. Locke.

5. To yield; not to withhold.

Philip, Alexander's father, gave sentence against a prisoner what time he was drowsy, and seemed to give small attention. The prisoner, after sentence was pronounced, said, I appeal: the king, somewhat stirred, said, to whom do you appeal? the prisoner answered, from Philip, when he gave no ear, to Philip, when he shall give ear.

Bacon, Apophthegms.
Constantia accused herself for having so tamely given an ear to the proposal.

Addison, Spect.
6. To quit; to yield as due.

Give place, thou stranger, to an honourable man.

Ecclus.

'Tis given me once again to behold my friend.

Rowe.

He has not given Luther fairer play.

Atterbury.

10. To yield; not to deny.

I gave his wise proposal way;

Nay, urg'd him to go on: the shallow fraud

Will ruin him.

Rowe, Amb. Sleepmother.

11. To afford; to supply.

This opinion abated the fear of death in them which were so resolved, and gave them courage to all adventures.

Hooker.

Give us also sacrifices and burnt offerings, that we may sacrifice unto the Lord.

Ex. x. 25.

12. To empower; to commission.

Prepare

The due libation and the solemn pray'r;

Then give thy friend to shed the sacred wine.

Pope, Odyss.

13. To enable.

God himself requireth the lifting up of pure hands in prayers, and hath given the world to understand, that the wicked, although they cry, shall not be heard.

Hooker.

Give me to know

How this foul rout began, who set it on.

Shakespeare, Othello.

So some weak shoot, which else would poorly

rise,

Jove's tree adopts, and lifts into the skies;

Through the new pupil fast ring juices flow,

Thrust forth the gems, and give the flow'r to blow.

Tickell.

14. To pay.

The applause and approbation I give to both your speeches.

Shakespeare, Troil. and Cress.

15. To utter; to vent; to pronounce.

So you must be the first that gives this sentence,

And he that suffers.

Shakespeare, Meas. for Meas.

The Rhodians seeing their enemies turn their backs, gave a great shout in derision of them.

Knolles, Hist.

Let the first honest discoverer give the word about, that Wood's halfpence have been offered, and caution the poor people not to receive them.

Swift.

16. To exhibit; to shew.

This instance gives the impossibility of an eternal existence in any thing essentially alterable or corruptible.

Hale.

17. To exhibit as the product of a calculation.

The number of men being divided by the number of ships, gives four hundred and twenty-four men a piece.

Arbutnot.

VOL. II.

As we desire to give no offence ourselves, so neither shall we take any at the difference of judgement in others.

Burnet.

19. To exhibit; to send forth as odours from any body.

In oranges the ripping of their rind giveth out their smell more.

Bacon.

20. To add; to apply.

The Helots, of the other side, shutting their gates, gave themselves to bury their dead, to cure their wounds, and rest their wearied bodies.

Sidney.

After man began to grow to number, the first thing we read they gave themselves into, was the tilling of the earth and the feeding of cattle.

Hooker.

Groves and hill-altars were dangerous, in regard of the secret access which people superstitiously given might have always thereunto with ease.

Hooker.

The duke is virtuous, mild, and too well given,

To dream on evil, or to work my downfall.

Shaks.

Fear him not, Caesar, he's not dangerous:

He is a noble Roman, and well given.

Shakspeare.

His name is Falstaff: if that man should be ludely given, he deceives me; for, Harry, I see virtue in his looks.

Shakspeare.

Huniades, the scourge of the Turks, was dead long before; so was also Mathias: after whom succeeded others, given all to pleasure and ease.

Knolles, Hist.

Though he was given to pleasure, yet he was likewise desirous of glory.

Bacon, Hen. VII.

He that giveth his mind to the law of the Most High, will seek out the wisdom of all the ancients.

Ecclus. xxxix. 1.

He is much given to contemplation, and the viewing of this theatre of the world.

More against Atheism.

They who gave themselves to warlike action and enterprises, went immediately to the palace of Odin.

Temple.

Men are given to this licentious humour of coffing at personal blemishes and defects.

L'Estrange.

Besides, he is too much given to horseplay in his rallery; and comes to battle, like a dictator

from the plough.

Dryden.

I have some business of importance with her;

but her husband is so horribly given to be jealous.

Dryden, Span. Friar.

What can I refuse to a man so charitably given?

Dryden.

21. To resign; to yield up.

Finding ourselves in the midst of the greatest wilderness of waters, without victual, we gave ourselves for lost men, and prepared for death.

Bacon, New Atlantis.

Who say, I care not, those I give for lost;

And to instruct them will not quit the cost.

Herbert.

Virtue giv'n for lost,

Deprest and overthrow'n, as seem'd;

Like that self begot'n bird

From out her ashy womb now teem'd.

Milton, S. A.

Since no deep within her gulph can hold

Immortal vigour, though oppress'd and fall'n,

I give not Heaven for lost.

Milton, P. I.

For a man to give his name to Christianity in those days, was to list a martyr.

South.

Ours gives himself for gone; you've watch'd your time,

He fights this day unarm'd, without his rhyme.

Dryden.

The parents, after a long search for the body,

gave him for drowned in one of the canals.

Addison, Spect.

As the hinder feet of the horse stuck to the mountain, while the body reared up in the air, the poet with great difficulty kept himself from sliding off his back, in so much that the people gave him for gone.

Addison, Guardian.

22. To conclude; to suppose.

If ere the sun be set
I see you not, give me for dead.

Beaumont and Fl. Span. Curate.

Whence came you here, O friend, and whither bound?

All gave you lost on far Cyclopean ground.

Garth, Ovid.

23. To GIVE away. To alienate from one's self; to make over to another; to transfer.

The more he got, the more he shewed that he gave away to his new mistress, when he betrayed his promises to the former.

Sidney.

If you shall marry,

You give away this hand, and that is mine;

You give away heav'n's vows, and those are mine;

You give away myself, which is known mine.

Shakspeare.

Honest company, I thank you all,

That have beheld me give away myself

To this most patient, sweet, and virtuous wife.

Shakspeare.

I know not how they sold themselves; but thou, like a kind fellow, gav'st thyself away gratis, and

I thank thee for thee.

Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

Love gives away all things, that so he may advance the interest of the beloved person.

Bp. Taylor, Rule of Living Holy.

But we who give our native rights away,

And our enslav'd posterity betray,

Are now reduc'd to beg an alms, and go

On holidays to see a puppet-show.

Dryden, Jew.

Alas, said I, man was made in vain! How is he given away to misery and mortality!

Addison.

Theodosius made a private vow never to inquire after Constantia, whom he looked upon as given away to his rival, upon the day on which their marriage was to have been solemnized.

Addison.

Whatsoever we employ in charitable uses, during our lives, is given away from ourselves: what we bequeath at our death, is given from others only,

as our nearest relations.

Atterbury.

24. To GIVE back. To return; to restore.

Their vices perhaps give back all those advantages which their victories procured.

Atterbury.

25. To GIVE forth. To publish; to tell.

Soon after it was given forth, and believed by many, that the king was dead.

Hayward.

26. To GIVE the hand. To yield pre-eminence, as being subordinate or inferior.

Lessons being free from some inconveniences, whereunto sermons are most subject, they may in this respect no less take than in others they must give the hand, which betokeneth pre-eminence.

Hooker.

27. To GIVE over. To leave; to quit; to cease.

Let novelty therefore in this give over endless contradictions, and let ancient customs prevail.

Hooker.

It may be done rather than that be given over.

Hooker.

Never give her o'er;

For scorn at first makes after love the more.

Shaks.

If Desdemona will return me my jewels, I will give over my suit, and repent my unlawful solicitation.

Shakspeare, Othello.

All the soldiers, from the highest to the lowest, had solemnly sworn to defend the city, and not to give it over unto the last man.

Knolles, Hist. of the Turks.

Those troops which were levied, have given over the prosecution of the war.

Clarendon.

But worst of all to give her over,

Till she's as desperate to recover.

Huitbras.

A woman had a hen that laid every day an egg:

she fancied that upon a larger allowance this hen might lay twice a day; but the hen grew fat, and gave quite over laying.

L'Estrange.

Many have given over their pursuits after fame, either from the disappointments they have met, or from their experience of the little pleasure which attends it.

28. To Give over. To addict; to attach to.

Zelmane, govern and direct me; for I am wholly given over unto thee.

When the Babylonians had given themselves over to all manner of vice, it was time for the Lord, who had set up that empire, to pull it down.

I used one thing ill, or gave myself so much over to it as to neglect what I owed either to God or the world.

29. To Give over. To conclude lost.

Since it is lawful to practise upon them that are forsaken and given over, I will adventure to prescribe to you.

'Tis not amiss, ere y' are gi'n o'er,
To try one des'p'rate medicine more;
And where your case can be no worse,
The des'p'ratest is the wisest course.

The abbess, finding that the physicians had given her over, told her that Theodosius was just gone before her, and had sent her his benediction.

Her condition was now quite desperate, all regular physicians, and her nearest relations, having given her over.

Yet this false comfort never gives him o'er,
That whilst he creeps, his vig'rous thoughts can soar.

Not one foretells I shall recover;
But all agree to give me over.

30. To Give over. To abandon.

That the Edomites should give over the villages of the Jews which then they held. 1 Esdr. iv. 50.
The duty of uniformity throughout all churches, in all manner of indifferent ceremonies, will be very hard, and therefore best to give it over.

Abdemelech, as one weary of the world, gave over all, and betook himself to a solitary life, and became monk.

Sleep hath forsook and gi'n me o'er
To death's benumbing opium, as my only cure.

The cause for which we fought and swore
So boldly, shall we now give o'er?

31. To Give out. To proclaim; to publish; to utter.

The fathers give it out for a rule, that whatsoever Christ is said in Scripture to have received, the same we ought to apply only to the manhood of Christ.

It is given out, that, sleeping in my orchard,
A serpent stung me. So the whole ear of Denmark

Is, by a forged process of my death,
Rankly abused.

One that gives out himself prince Florizel,
Son of Polixenes, with his princess.

It hath been given out, by an hypocritical thief, who was the first master of my ship, that I carried with me out of England twenty-two thousand pieces of twenty-two shillings per piece.

He gave out general summons for the assembly of his council for the wars.

The night was distinguished by the orders which he gave out to his army, that they should forbear all insulting of their enemies.

32. To Give out. To show in false appearance.

She that, so young, could give out such a seeming,

To seal her father's eyes up close as oak.

33. To Give a person his own. To rebuke; to chide a person according to his demerits.

Ariosto has made it the business of almost thirty stanzas — not only to praise that beautiful part of the creation, but also to make a sharp satire on their enemies; to give mankind their own, and to tell them plainly that from their envy it proceeds that the virtue and great actions of women are purposely concealed.

Dryden, Pref. to Walsh's Dial. concern. Women.

34. To Give up. To resign; to quit; to yield.

The people, weary of the miseries of war, would give him up, if they saw him shrink.

He has betray'd your business, and given up
For certain drops of salt your city Rome.

The sun, breaking out with his cheerful beams, revived many, before ready to give up the ghost for cold, and gave comfort to them all.

He found the lord Hopton in trouble for the loss of the regiment of foot at Alton, and with the unexpected assurance of the giving up of Arundel-castle.

Let us give ourselves wholly up to Christ in heart and desire.

Such an expectation will never come to pass; therefore I'll e'en give it up, and go and fret myself.

I can give up to the historians of your country the names of so many generals and heroes which crowd their annals.

He declares himself to be now satisfied to the contrary, in which he has given up the cause.

The leagues made between several states disowning all claim to the land in the other's possession, have, by common consent, given up their pretences to their natural right.

If they give them up to their reasons, then they with them give up all truth and farther enquiry, and think there is no such thing as certainty.

We should see him give up again to the wild common of nature, whatever was more than would supply the conveniences of life.

Juba's surrender, since his father's death,
Would give up Africk into Cæsar's hands,
And make him lord of half the burning zone.

Learn to be honest men, give up your leaders,
And pardon shall descend on all the rest.

A popish priest threatened to excommunicate a Northumberland squire, if he did not give up to him the church lands.

He saw the celestial deities acting in a confederacy against him, and immediately gave up a cause which was excluded from all possibility of success.

An old gentleman, who had been engaged in an argument with the emperor, upon his friend's telling him he wondered he would give up the question when he had the better, I am never ashamed, says he, to be confuted by one who is master of fifty legions.

He may be brought to give up the clearest evidence.

The constant health and longevity of men must be given up also, as a groundless conceit.

Have the physicians gi'n up all their hopes?

These people were obliged to demand peace, and give up to the Romans all their possessions in Sicily.

Every one who will not ask for the conduct of God in the study of religion, has just reason to fear he shall be left of God, and given up a prey to a thousand prejudices, that he shall be consigned over to the follies of his own heart.

Give yourselves up to some hours of leisure.

35. To Give up. To abandon.

If any be given up to believe lies, some must be first given up to tell them.

Our minds naturally give themselves up to every diversion which they are much accustomed to;

and we always find that play, when followed with assiduity, engrosses the whole woman.

A good poet no sooner communicates his works, but it is imagined he is a vain young creature given up to the ambition of fame.

I am obliged at this time to give up my whole application to Homer.

Persons who, through misfortunes, choose not to dress, should not, however, give up neatness.

36. To Give up. To deliver.

And Joab gave up the sum of the number of the people to the king.

His accounts were confused, and he could not then give them up.

37. To Give away. To yield; not to resist; to make room for.

Private respects, with him, gave way to the common good.

Perpetual pushing and assurance put a difficulty out of countenance, and make a seeming impossibility give way.

Scarce had he spoken when the cloud gave way; The mist flew upward, and dissolv'd in day.

His golden helm gives way with stony blows,
Batter'd and flat, and beaten to his brows.

38. The word give is used with great laxity; the general idea is that of transmitting from one to another.

To Give. v. n.

1. To rush; to fall on; to give the assault. A phrase merely French, and not worthy of adoption.

Your orders come too late, the fight's begun;
The enemy gives on with fury led.

Hannibal gave upon the Romans.

2. To relent; to grow moist; to melt or soften; to thaw.

Some things are harder when they come from the fire, and afterwards give again, and grow soft; as the crust of bread, biscuits, sweetmeats, and salt.

Only a sweet and virtuous soul,
Like season'd timber, never gives;
But though the whole world turn to coal,
Then chiefly lives.

Unless it is kept in a hot-house, it will so give again, that it will be little better than raw malt.

Before you carry your large cocks in, open them once, and spread them: hay is apt to give in the cock.

3. To move. A French phrase.

Up and down he traverses his ground,
Then nimbly shifts a thrust, then lends a wound;
Now back he gives, then rushes on again.

4. To Give back. To retire.

Thurio, give back, or else embrace thy death.

5. To Give in. To go back; to give way.

Not in use, Dr. Johnson says, citing an example from Hayward. It is surely still used for to yield to superior strength.

In the mean time, what doth St. Paul? Doth he give in?

The charge was gi'n with so well governed fury, that the left corner of the Scots battalion was enforced to give in.

6. To Give in to. [A French phrase.] To adopt; to embrace.

This is a geography particular to the medallists: the poets, however, have sometimes given in to it, and furnish us with very good lights for the explanation of it.

This consideration may induce a translator to give in to those general phrases, which have attained a veneration in our language from being used in the Old Testament. Pope.

The whole body of the people are either stupidly negligent, or else giving in with all their might to those very practices that are working their destruction. Swift.

7. To GIVE off. To cease; to forbear.

The punishment would be kept from being too much, if we gave off as soon as we perceived that it reached the mind. Locke.

8. To GIVE over. To cease; to act no more.

If they will speak to the purpose, they must give over, and stand upon such particulars only as they can shew we have either added or abrogated, otherwise than we ought, in the matter of church polity. Hooker.

Neither hath Christ, through union of both natures, incurred the damage of either; lest, by being born a man, we should think he hath given over to be God, or that because he continued God, therefore he cannot be man also. Hooker.

Give not o'er so; to him again; intreat him. Kneel down before him, hang upon his gown; You are too cold. Shakespeare, Meas. for Meas.

The state of human actions are so variable, that to try things oft, and never to give over, both wonders. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Demetrius, king of Macedon, had a petition offered him divers times by an old woman, and still answered he had no leisure; whereupon the woman said aloud, Why then give over to be king. Bacon, Apophthegms.

So Satan, whom repulse upon repulse Met ever, and to shameful silence brought, Yet, gives not o'er, though desperate of success. Milton, P. R.

Shall we kindle all this flame Only to put it out again?

And must we now give o'er, And only end where we begun?

In vain this mischief we have done, If we can do no more. Denham.

It would be well for all authors, if they knew when to give over, and to desist from any further pursuits after fame. Addison.

He coined again, and was forced to give over for the same reason. Swift.

9. To GIVE out. To publish; to proclaim.

Simon bewitched the people of Samaria, giving out that himself was some great one. Acts, viii.

Your ill-wishers will give out you are now going to quit your school. Swift.

10. To GIVE out. To cease; to yield.

We are the earth; and they, Like moles within us, heave and cast about:

And till they foot and clutch their prey; They never cool, much less give out. Herbert.

Madam, I always believ'd you so stout, That for twenty denials you would not give out. Swift.

GIVER. n. s. [from give.] One that gives; donor; bestower; distributor; granter.

Well we may afford Our givers their own gifts. Milton, P. L.

By thee how fairly is the giver now Repaid? But gratitude in thee is lost Long since. Milton, P. R.

I have not liv'd since first I heard the news; The gift the guilty giver doth accuse. Dryden, Aurengzebe.

Both gifts destructive to the givers prove; Alike both lovers fall by those they love. Pope.

GIVES.† n. s. pl. Fetters or shackles for the feet. See GIVE. For the word is used in the singular, though Dr. Johnson notices it only in the plural number.

GIVING.* n. s. [from To give.]

1. The act of bestowing any thing. Constant at church and change, his gains were sure;

His givings rare, save farthings to the poor. Pope.

2. The act of alleging what is not real. His givings out were of an infinite distance From his true meant design. Shakespeare, Meas. for Meas.

GIZZARD. n. s. [gesier, French; gigeria, Latin.] It is sometimes called gizzern.

1. The strong muscular stomach of a fowl.

Fowls have two ventricles, and pick up stones to convey them into their second ventricle, the gizzern. More.

In birds there is no mastication in the mouth; but in such as are not carnivorous, it is immediately swallowed into the crop, a kind of antestomach, where it is moistened by some proper juice from the glandules distilling in there, and thence transferred into the gizzard, or muscular stomach. Ray.

They nestle near the throne, By their high crops and corny gizzards known. Dryden.

2. It is proverbially used for apprehension or conception of mind; as, he frets his gizzard, he harasses his imagination.

But that which does them greatest harm, Their spiritual gizzards are too warm; Which puts the overheated sots In fevers still. Hudibras.

Satisfaction and restitution lie so cursed hard upon the gizzards of our publicans, that their blood is not half so dear to them as the treasure in their coffers. L'Estrange.

To GLA'BREATE.* v. a. [Lat. glabro.] To make plain or smooth. Not in use. Cockeram.

GLA'BRITY. n. s. [from glaber, Latin.] Smoothness; baldness. Dict.

GLA'BROUS.* adj. [Lat. glaber.] Smooth, like baldness.

GLA'CIAL. adj. [glacial, French; glacialis, Latin.] Icy; made of ice; frozen.

To GLA'CIATE. v. n. [glacies, Lat. glacier, Fr.] To turn into ice.

GLACIATION.† n. s. [from glaciare.] The act of turning into ice; ice formed.

Ice is plain upon the surface of water, but round in hail, which is also a glaciation, and figured in its guttulous descent from the air. Brown, Vul. Err.

A violent motion of water is a preservative against glaciation. Dr. Robinson, Calm Ventil. of Brown's Vulg. Err. p. 120.

GLA'CIOUS. adj. [glacio, Latin.] Icy; resembling ice.

Although exhaled and placed in cold conservatories, it will crystallize and shoot into glaucious bodies. Brown, Vulg. Err.

GLA'CIS. n. s. [French.] In fortification, a sloping bank. It is more especially taken for that which rangeth from the parapet of the covered way to the level on the side of the field. Harris.

GLAD.† adj. [glæb, glab, Saxon; glad, Danish; from the Icel. glæda, to exhilarate, glæd, glædde, I have made glad. The comparative gladder, and superlative gladdest, are not often used; nor has Dr. Johnson given any example of them. But they are now shewn to exist.]

1. Cheerful; gay; in a state of hilarity. They blessed the king, and went unto their tents joyful and glad of heart. 1 Kings, viii. 66.

'Twas the most duteous wench, the best companion,

When I was pleas'd, the happiest and the gladdest, The modestest sweet nature dwelt within her. Beaumont and Fl. Loyal Subject.

Glad we return'd up to the coasts of light. Milton, P. L.

2. Wearing a gay appearance; fertile; bright; showy.

The wilderness and the solitary place shall be glad for them, and the desert shall rejoice and blossom as the rose. Isaiah, xxxv.

Then first adorn'd With their bright luminaries, that set and rose, Glad ev'ning and glad morn crown'd the fourth day. Milton, P. L.

3. Pleased; elevated with joy. It has generally of, sometimes at or with before the cause of gladness; perhaps of is most proper, when the cause of joy is something gained or possessed; and at or with when it is some accident befallen himself or another.

I am glad to see your worship. Shaksp. Hen. IV.

He hath an uncle in Messina to be much glad of it. Shakespeare, Much Ado.

He that is glad at calamities shall not be unpunished. Proverbs.

Lan. I think he's her servant. — Fran. I'm glad on't. Lan. She's a good woman. Fran. I am gladder still. Beaumont and Fl. Wit without Money.

He glad Of her attention, gain'd with serpent tongue, His fraudulent temptation thus began. Mil. P. L.

If he be my enemy, let him triumph; if he be my friend, he will be glad of my repentance. Dryden, Fab. Pref.

The gaping wound gush'd out a crimson flood; The Trojan, glad with sight of hostile blood, His fauchion drew. Dryden, Æn.

Glad of a quarrel, straight I clap the door. Pope.

4. Pleading; exhilarating.

Some very red, and some a glad light grene. Chaucer, Flower and Leaf.

Her conversation More glad to me than to a miser money is. Sidney.

5. Expressing gladness.

Hark! a glad voice the lonely desert cheers: Prepare the way, a God, a God appears! Pope, Messiah.

6. It is used in a familiar sense, approaching to ludicrousness.

I would be glad to learn from those who pronounce that the human soul always thinks, how they know it. Locke.

To GLAD.† v. a. [Sax. glabian. This verb is one of our oldest.] To make glad; to cheer; to exhilarate.

Tell us swithe thising as may our hertes glade. Chaucer, Nonnes Priest's Pro.

Like to a flower that feels no heat of sunne, Which may her feeble leaves with comfort glade, Spenser, F. Q. vi. x. 44.

Your presence glads our days. Shakespeare, Pericles.

He saw rich nectar-thaws release the rigour Of th' icy north; from frost-bound Atlas hands His adamantine fetters fall: green vigour Gladding the Scythian rocks, and Libyan sands. Crashaw.

Heaven smil'd, and gladdened was the heart of man.
Dryden, Fab.

It glads me
To see so many virtues thus united,
To restore justice, and dethrone oppression. Oliv.
Each drinks the juice that glads the heart of man.
Pope.

If justice Phillips' costive head
Some frigid rhymes disbursts,
They shall like Persian tales be read,
And glad both babes and nurses. Swift.

To GLAD.* v. n. To be glad; to rejoice.
Wicliffe uses this neuter verb; but it is now wholly obsolete.

Gladd'st thou in such scorn?
I call my wish back. Massinger, Virgin Martyr.

To GLA'DDEN. v. a. [from glad.] To cheer; to delight; to make glad; to exhilarate.

Oh, he was all made up of love and charms!
Delight of every eye! When he appear'd,
A secret pleasure gladden'd all that saw him.

A kind of vital heat in the soul cheers and gladdens her, when she does not attend to it.
Addison, Cato.
Addison, Spect.

GLA'DDER† n. s. [from glad.] This substantive is from Chaucer; as Dryden has literally copied the whole line, in which it occurs, from him.] One that makes glad; one that gladdens; one that exhilarates.

Thou gladder of the mount of Cytheron,—
Have pity, goddess. Dryden, Fab.

GLADE† n. s. [Dr. Johnson strangely imagines it to be from the Sax. glōpan, to be hot or to shine; Mr. H. Tooke from ge-hlban, to cover, part. ge-hlab, whence the English glade, applied to a spot covered or hidden with trees or boughs.—It seems, however, to be still connected with the Icel. hlad, a way, a passage. Barret thus describes what a glade is, Alv. 1580. "To make a glade in the midst of a wood; to loppe or cut away boughs where they let the light." A lawn or opening in a wood. It is taken for an avenue through a wood, whether open or shaded, and has therefore epithets of opposite meaning.

So flam'd his eyes with rage and rancorous ire;
But far within, as in a hollow glade,
Those glaring lamps were set, that made a dreadful shade. Spenser, F. Q.

Lo where they spy'd, how in a gloomy glade
The lion sleeping lay in secret shade.

Spenser, Hubb. Tale.
I laid me down
And listened to the words she sung; for then,
Through a small glade cut by the fishermen,
I saw it was your daughter.

Beaumont and Fl. Two Nob. Kinsmen.
O might I here
In solitude live savage, in some glade,
Obscur'd, where highest woods, impenetrable
To star or sun-light, spread their umbrage broad,
And brown as evening. Milton, P. L.

When any, favour'd of high Jove,
Chances to pass through this adventurous glade,
Swift as a sparkle of a glancing star,
I shoot from heav'n to give him safe convoy.

Milton, Comus.
For noonday's heat are closer abourts made,
And for fresh evening air the op'n glade.

Dryden, State of Innocence.
There, interspers'd in lawns and opening glades,
Thin trees arise that shun each other's shades.

Pope.

By the heroes' armed shades,
Glitt'ring through the gloomy glades;
By the youths that dy'd for love,
Wand'ring in the myrtle grove,
Restore, restore Eurydice to life!
Oh, take the husband, or restore the wife!

Pope, St. Cecilia's Day.
She smil'd, array'd
With all the charms of sun-shine, stream and glade,
New dress and blooming as a bridal maid. Harte.

GLA'DEN. } n. s. [from gladius, Latin, a sword.] Swordgrass: a general name of plants that rise with a broad blade like sedge. Junius.

GLA'DFUL.* adj. [glad and full.] Full of joy and gladness. Not in use.

There leave we them in pleasure and repast,
Spending their joyous days and gladsfull nights.
Spenser, F. Q. v. iii. 40.

GLA'DFULNESS. n. s. [glad and fullness.] Joy; gladness. Obsolete.

And there him rests in riotous suffiance
Of all his gladsfulness, and kingly joviance.
Spenser, F. Q.

GLA'DFULNESS. n. s. [glad and fullness.] Joy; gladness. Obsolete.

And there him rests in riotous suffiance
Of all his gladsfulness, and kingly joviance.
Spenser, F. Q.

GLADIATOR† n. s. [Latin; gladiator, Fr.] A swordplayer; a prize-fighter.

They had several delightful shews to exhilarate the people; gladiators; combats of men with themselves; with wild beasts, &c.

Then whilst his foe each gladiator foils,
The atheist, looking on, enjoys the spoils. Denn.

Besides, in gratitude for such high matters,
Know I have vow'd two hundred gladiators.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 269.
Writers—have given too great pomp and magnificence to the exploits of the ancient bear-garden; and made their gladiators, by fabulous tradition, greater than Gorman and others of Great Britain!

Tutler, No. 31.
GLADIATORY.* adj. [Lat. gladiatorius; old French, gladiatoire.] Belonging to prizefighters or swordplayers.

The Romans did use themselves into their gladiatory fights and bloody spectacles, that acquaintance with wounds and blood might make them the less fear it in the wars.

Bp. Reynolds on the Passions, ch. 27.
At Rome there were usually those gladiatory sports; bloody, sword-killing sports; they killed men in sport. Dr. Westfield, Sermon. (1646), p. 77.

GLADIATORY.* adj. [Lat. gladiatorius.] Relating to prizefighters.

Consider only the shocking carnage made in the human species by the exposure of infants, the gladiatory shows, and the exceedingly cruel usage of slaves, allowed and practised by the ancient Pagans. Bp. Porteus, Sermon. i. xiii.

GLADIATURE.* n. s. [Lat. gladiatura.] Fencing; swordplay.

In their amphitheatrical gladiatures, the lives of captives lay at the mercy of the vulgar.

Gayton on D. Quix. p. 271.
GLA'DLY† adv. [Sax. glæblice.] Joyfully; with gayety; with merriment; with triumph; with exultation.

For his particular, I'll receive him gladly;
But not one follower. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

You are going to set us right; and 'tis an advantage every body will gladly see you engross the glory of. Blount to Pope.

GLA'DNESS† n. s. [Sax. glæbner.] Cheerfulness; joy; exultation.

The Jews had light, and gladness, and joy, and honour. Ether, viii. 16.

And thou shalt have joy and gladness; and many shall rejoice at his birth. St. Luke, i. 14.

By such degrees the spreading gladness grew
In every heart, which fear had froze before:
The standing streets with so much joy they view,
That with less grief the perish'd they deplore.
Dryden.

GLA'DSHIP.* n. s. [from glad.] State of gladness. Obsolete.

And such a sorrow hath to him take,
That gladship he hath all forsake.
Gower, Conf. Am. b. 1.

GLA'DSOME† adj. [from glad.]

1. Pleased; gay; delighted.
The highest angels to and fro descend,
From highest heaven in gladsome company.

Spenser, F. Q.
The gladsome ghosts in circling troops attend,
And with unwearied eyes behold their friend.

Dryden.
2. Causing joy; having an appearance of gayety. In this sense it is used by Chaucer.

Swiche thing is gladsom, as it thinketh me,
And of swiche thing were goodly for to telle.
Chaucer, Nonnes Priest's Prolog.

Figurative expressions of some white and gladsom days shortly to succeed.

Spencer on Prod. p. 153.
Each morn they wak'd me with a sprightly lay;
Of opening heav'n they sung and gladsome day.

Prior.
GLA'DSOMELY† adv. [from gladsome.]

With gayety and delight.
I remembered myself by and by,
And behelde the sunne shyne so gladsomely.

Pleasant Pathwaye, &c. s. d. sign. A. 1. b.
GLA'DSOMENESS. n. s. [from gladsome.]

Gayety; showiness; delight.

GLAIR† n. s. [xlǽp, Sax on, amber; glar, Danish, glass; gler, Icel. glaira, French; glarea, Latin.]

1. The white of an egg.
Unslekked lime, chalk, and gleire of an ey.
Chaucer, Chan. Yeom. Tale.

Take the glaire of eggs, and strain it as short as water. Peachment on Drawing.

2. Any viscous transparent matter, like the white of an egg.

Her lewde lypes twayne,
They slaver, men sayne,
Lyke a ropye rayne,
A gummy glaire. Skelton, Poems, p. 124.

Blood, poison, slimy glaire,
That in his body so abundant were.

Mir. for Mag. p. 109.
I found the tongue black and dry, with a black glare on the teeth. Fordyce on the Mus. Acad. p. 11.

To GLAIR. v. a. [glairer, French; from the noun.] To smear with the white of an egg. This word is still used by the bookbinders.

GLAIVE.* See GLAVE.

GLANCE† n. s. [glantz, German, glitter; glans, Icel. and Goth. splendour; from glā, light; glōa, to shine.]

1. A sudden shoot of light or splendour.
His off'ring soon propitious fire from heav'n
Consum'd with nimble glance, and grateful steam:
The other's not; for his was not sincere.

Milton, P. L.
2. A stroke or dart of the beam of sight.

The aspects which procure love are not gazings, but sudden glances and darings of the eye.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.
There are of those sort of beauties which last but for a moment; some particularity of a violent passion, some graceful action, a smile, a glance of an eye, a disdainful look, and a look of gravity.

Dryden, Dufresnoy.

Boldly she look'd, like one of high degree;
Yet never seem'd to cast a glance on me;
At which I only joy'd, for, truth to say,
I felt an unknown awe, and some dismay. Harte.
3. A snatch of sight; a quick view.
The ample mind takes a survey of several objects with one glance. Watts on the Mind.

TO GLANCE. v. n. [from the noun.]
To shoot a sudden ray of splendour.
He double blazes about him fiercely laid,
That glancing fire out of the iron play'd,
As sparkles from the anvil use,
When heavy hammers on the wedge are sway'd.
Spenser.

When through the gloom the glancing lightnings fly,
Heavy the rattling thunders roll on high. Rowe.

2. To fly off in an oblique direction.
He has a little gall'd me, I confess;
But as the jest did glance away from me,
'Tis ten to one it maim'd you two outright.
Shakspeare.

3. To strike in an oblique direction.
Through Paris' shield the forceful weapon went,
His corset pierces, and his garment rends,
And glancing downwards near his flank descends.
Pope.

4. To view with a quick cast of the eye;
to play the eye.

O' th' sudden up they rise and dance,
Then sit again, and sigh and glance;
Then dance again, and kiss. Suckling.

Mighty dulness crown'd,
Shall take through Grub-street her triumphant round;
And her Parnassus glancing o'er at once,
Behold a hundred sons, and each a dunce.
Pope, Duacid.

5. To censure by oblique hints.
How canst thou thus, for shame, Titania,
Glance at my credit with Hippolita,
Knowing I know thy love to Theseus? Shakspeare.
Some men glance and dart at others, by justifying themselves by negatives; as to say, this I do not. Bacon.

I have never glanced upon the late designed procession of his holiness and his attendants, notwithstanding it might have afforded matter to many ludicrous speculations. Addison.

He had written verses, wherein he glanced at a certain reverend doctor, famous for dulness. Swift.

TO GLANCE. v. a. To move nimbly; to shoot obliquely.

Glancing an eye of pity on his losses,
Enough to press a royal merchant down.
Shakspeare, Merch. of Ven.

GLA'NCING.* n. s. [from glance.] Censure by oblique hints.

By this upbraiding to me the bordelloes, as by other suspicious glancings in his book, he would seem privily to point me out to his readers as one, whose custom of life were not honest but licentious. Milton, Apok. for Spectymimus.

GLA'NCINGLY. adv. [from glance.] In an oblique broken manner; transiently.

Sir Richard Hawkins hath done something in this kind, but brokenly and glancingly, intending chiefly a discourse of his own voyage.
Hakewill on Providence.

GLAND.† n. s. [glans, Latin; gland, French; βάλανος, Gr. γλάνος, Dor. whence, by contraction, the Lat. glans, glandis.]

All the glands of a human body are reduced to two sorts, viz. conglobate and conglomerate. A conglobate gland is a little smooth body, wrapt up in a fine skin, by which it is separated from all the other parts, only admitting an artery and nerve to pass in, and giving way to a vein and excretory canal to come out: of this sort are the glands in the brain, the labial glands, and testes. A conglomerate gland is composed of many little conglobate glands, all tied together, and wrapt up in the common tunicle or membrane. Quincy.

The abscess begun deep in the body of the glands. Wiseman.

The glands, which o'er the body spread,
Fine complicated clues of nervous thread,
Involv'd and twisted with th' arterial duct,
The rapid motion of the blood obstruct. Blackm.
GLA'NDERED.* adj. [from glanders.] Having the distemper called the glanders.

Being drank in plenty, it [tar-water] hath recovered even a glandered horse, that was thought incurable.

Bp. Berkeley, Farther Thoughts on Tar-Water.

GLA'NDERS. n. s. [from gland.] In a horse is the running of corrupt matter from the nose, which differs in colour according to the degree of the malignity, being white, yellow, green, or black. Farrier's Dict.

His horse is posset with the glanders, and like to mose in the chine. Shakspeare, Tem. of the Shrew.

GLANDI'FEROUS. adj. [glans and fero, Latin.] Bearing mast; bearing acorns, or fruit like acorns.

The beech is of two sorts, and numbered amongst the glandiferous trees. Mortimer, Husband.

GLA'NDULAR.* adj. [Fr. glandulaire.] Pertaining to the glands. The modern word for glandulous.

GLANDULE. n. s. [glandula, Latin; glandule, Fr.] A small gland serving to the secretion of humours.

Nature hath provided several glandules to separate this juice from the blood, and no less than four pair of channels to convey it into the mouth, which are called ductus salivales. Ray.

GLANDULO'SITY. n. s. [from glandulous.] A collection of glands.

In the upper parts of worms are found certain white and oval glandulosities. Brown, Vulg. Err.

GLA'NDULOUS. adj. [glandulosus, Latin; glanduleux, Fr. from glandule.] Pertaining to the glands; subsisting in the glands; having the nature of glands.

The beaver's bags are no testicles, or parts official unto generation, but glandulous substances, that hold the nature of emunctories. Brown, Vulg. Err.

Such constitutions must be subject to glandulous tumours and ruptures of the lymphatics. Arbutnot on Aliments.

TO GLARE. v. n. [glaren, Dutch.]

1. To shine so as to dazzle the eyes.

After great light, if you come suddenly into the dark, or, contrariwise, out of the dark into a glaring light, the eye is dazzled for a time, and the sight confused. Bacon.

His glaring eyes with anger's venom swell,
And like the brand of foul Aleco flame. Fairfax.

He is every where above conceits of epigrammatic wit, and gross hyperboles: he maintains majesty in the midst of plainness; he shines, but glares not; and is stately without ambition. Dryden.

The court of Cacus stands reveal'd to sight;
The cavern glares with new admitted light.
Dryden, Æn.

Alas, thy dazzled eye
Beholds this man in a false glaring light,
Which conquest and success have thrown upon him. Addison.

2. To look with fierce piercing eyes.
Thou hast no speculation in those eyes,
Which thou dost glare with. Shakspeare, Macb.
Look, how pale he glares! Shakspeare, Hamlet.
Now friends no more, nor walking hand in hand;
But when they met, they made a surly stand,
And glar'd like angry lions as they pass'd,
And wish'd that ev'ry look might be their last. Dryden, Fab.

3. To shine ostentatiously; or with too much laboured lustre.

The most glaring and notorious passages are none of the finest or most correct.

Felton on the Classicists.

TO GLARE. v. a. To shoot such splendour as the eye cannot bear.

One spirit in them rul'd, and every eye
Glar'd lightning, and shot forth pernicious fire
Among th' accurst, that wither'd all their strength.
Milton, P. L.

GLARE. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Overpowering lustre; splendour, such as dazzles the eye.

The frame of burnish'd steel that cast a glare,
From far, and seem'd to thaw the freezing air.
Dryden, Fab.

I have grieved to see a person of quality gliding by me in her chair at two o'clock in the morning, and looking like a spectre amidst a glare of flambeaux. Addison, Guardian.

Here in a grotto, sheltered close from air,
And screen'd in shades from day's detested glare,
She sighs for ever. Pope, Rape of the Lock.

2. A fierce piercing look.

About them round,
A lion now he stalks with fiery glare. Milton, P. L.

GLARE.* n. s. Any viscous, transparent matter. See GLAIR.

GLA'REOUS.† adj. [glarieux, Fr. glareosus, Lat. from glair.] Consisting of viscous transparent matter, like the white of an egg.

There is a glareous liquor contained in the bowels of infants, and many other animals, when they are born, which it is necessary to carry off.

Gregory's Comparative View, (1767,) p. 23.

GLA'RING. adj. Applied to any thing notorious: as, a glaring crime.

GLA'RINGLY.* adv. [from glaring.] Evidently; notoriously.

I know not whether the brick-dust men in their martial liveries, and the tallow-chandlers in their sky-coloured frocks, are not too glaringly offensive for a royal eye to bear! The Student, ii. 259.

The passions, necessarily suscitating a violent agitation in the soul, declare themselves glaringly in the aspect.

Philosoph. Lett. upon Physiog. (1751), p. 161.

GLASS.† n. s. [glæs, flay, Saxon; glas, Dutch, as Pezron imagines from glás, British, green. In Erse it is called klánn, and this primarily signifies clean or clear, being so denominated from its transparency. To this may be added the Icel. glas, and glia, to shine; Goth. gla, light, gloa, to shine. The Cornish glase is both green and sky-coloured.]

1. An artificial substance made by infusing fixed salts and flint or sand together, with a vehement fire.

The word glass cometh from the Belgick and High Dutch: glass, from the verb glansen, which signifies amongst them to shine; or perhaps from glacies in the Latin, which is ice, whose colour it resembles. Peachment on Drawing.

Glass is thought so compact and firm a body that it is indestructible by art or nature, and is also of so close a texture that the subtlest chymical spirits cannot pervade it. Boyle.

Showers of granadoes rain, by sudden burst
Displaying mud'rou bowels, fragments of steel
And stones, and glass, and nitrous grain adust. Philips.

2. A glass vessel of any kind.

I'll see no more,
And yet the eighth appears, who bears a glass,
Which shews me many more. Shaks. Macbeth.

3. A looking glass; y. a mirror.

The glasses, and the fine linen, and the hoods,
and the veils. Isaiah, iii. 23.

He was the mark and glass, copy and book,
That fashion'd others. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

He spreads his subtle nets from sight,
With twinkling glasses to betray
The larks that in the meshes light. Dryden, Horace.

4. An Hour GLASS. A glass used in measuring time by the flux of sand.

Were my wife's liver
Infected as her life, she would not live
The running of one glass. Shakspeare, Wint. Tale.

5. The destined time of man's life.

No more his royl self did live, no more his noble sonne,
The golden Meleager now, their glasses all were run, Chapman.

6. A cup of glass used to drink in. [old Fr. glas, "verre à boire. Ce mot est Celtique, Almand, et Anglais." Lacombe.]

To this last costly treaty,
That swallow'd so much treasure, and like a glass
Did break it 'r' rinsing. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

When thy heart
Dilates with fervent joys, and eager soul
Prompts to pursue the sparkling glass, besure
'Tis time to shun it. Philips.

7. The quantity of wine usually contained in a glass; y. a draught.

While a man thinks one glass more will not make him drunk, that one glass hath disabled him from well discerning his present condition.

Bp. Taylor, Rule of Living Holy.
The first glass may pass for health, the second for good humour, the third for our friends; but the fourth is for our enemies. Temple.

8. A perspective glass.

The moon whose orb
Though optick glass the Tuscan artist views.

Like those who survey the moon by glasses, I tell of a shining world above, but not relate the glories of the place. Dryden.

9. A glass that shews the weight of the air.

A state weather-glass, that, by the rising and falling of a certain magical liquor, presages all changes and revolutions in government, as the common glass does those of the weather.

Tatler, No. 214.

GLASS. adj. Vitreous; made of glass.

Get thee glass eyes;
And, like a scurvy politician, seem
To see the things thou dost not. Shaks. K. Lear.

Glass bottles are more fit for this second fining than those of wood. Mortimer, Husbandry.

TO GLASS. v. a.

1. To see as in a glass; to represent, as in a glass or mirror. Not in use.
Methinks I am partaker of thy passion,
And in thy case do glass mine own debility.

Sidney, Arc. b. ii.

2. To case in glass.

Methought all his senses were lockt in his eye,
As jewels in crystal for some prince to buy;
Who tend'ring their own worth, from whence
they were glass,

Did point out to buy them, along as you pass. Shakspeare.

3. To cover with glass; to glaze.

I have observed little grains of silver to lie hid in the small cavities, perhaps glassed over by a vitriifying heat, in crucibles wherein silver has been long kept in fusion. Boyle.

GLA'SSBLOWER.* n. s. [glass and blow.]

One whose business is to blow or fashion glass.

GLA'SSFUL.* n. s. [glass and full.] As much as is usually taken at once in a glass.

His majesty drank a small glassful of claret wine. Sir T. Herbert, Mem. of K. Ch. I. p. 193.

GLA'SSFURNACE. n. s. [glass and furnace.]

A furnace in which glass is made by liquefaction.

If our dreamer pleases to try whether the glowing heat of a glassfurnace be barely a wandering imagination in a drowsy man's fancy, by putting his hand into it, he may perhaps be awakened into a certainty that it is something more than bare imagination. Locke.

GLA'SSGAZING. adj. [glass and gazing.]

Finical; often contemplating himself in a mirror.

A whorson, glassgazing, finical rogue. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

GLA'SSGRINDER. n. s. [glass and grinder.]

One whose trade is to polish and grind
glass.

The glassgrinders complain of the trouble they meet with. Boyle.

GLA'SSHOUSE. n. s. [glass and house.]

A house where glass is manufactured.

I remember to have met with an old Roman mosaic, composed of little pieces of clay half vitriified, and prepared at the glasshouses.

Addison on Italy.

GLA'SSINESS.* n. s. [from glassy.]

1. The making of glass.

Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

2. Smoothness, like glass.

Gum may give the silk a glassiness.

Sir W. Petty, in Sprat's Hist. R. S. p. 294.

GLA'SSLIKE.* adj. [glass and like.]

Clear; resembling glass.
By example most we sinn'd before,
And glasslike clearness mix'd with frailty bore.

Dryden, Astraea Redux.

GLA'SSMAN. n. s. [glass and man.]

One who sells glass.

The profit of glasses consists only in a small present made by the glassman.

Swift, Direct. to Servants.

GLA'SSMETAL. n. s. [glass and metal.]

Glass in fusion.

Let proof be made of the incorporating of copper or brass with glassmetal. Bacon, Phys. Rem.

GLA'SSWORK. n. s. [glass and work.]

Manufacture of glass.

The crystalline Venice glass is a mixture,
in equal portions, of stones brought from Pavia, and the ashes of a weed called kali, gathered in a desert between Alexandria and Rosetta; by the Egyptians used first for fuel, and then they crush the ashes into lumps like a stone, and so sell them to the Venetians for their glassworks.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

GLA'SSWORT. n. s. [salicornia, or saltwort.]

It hath an apetalous flower, wanting the empalement; for the stamina, or chives, and the embryos grow on the extreme part of the leaves: these em-bryoes afterward become pods or bladders, which for the most part contain one seed. The inhabitants near the sea-coast cut the plants up toward the latter end of summer; and, having dried them in the sun, they burn them for their ashes, which are used in making of glass and soap. These herbs are by the country people called kelp.

From the ashes of these plants is extracted the salt called sal kali, or alkali,
by the chemists. Miller.

For the fine glass we use the purest of the finest sand, and the ashes of chali, or glasswort;
and for the coarser or green sort, the ashes of brake or other plants. Brown, Vulg. Err.

GLA'SSY. adj. [from glass.]

1. Made of glass; vitreous.

In the valley near mount Carmel in Judea there is a sand, which, of all others, hath most affinity with glass; inasmuch as other minerals laid in it turn to a glassy substance. Bacon.

2. Resembling glass, as in smoothness, or lustre, or brittleness.

Man! proud man!

Drest in a little brief authority,
Most ignorant of what he's most assur'd:
His glassy essence, like an angry ape,
Plays such fantastic tricks before high heaven,
As make the angels weep. Shaks. Meas. for Meas.

There is a willow grows aslant a brook,
That shews his hoary leaves in the glassy stream.

Shakspeare.

The magnet attracteth the shining or glassy powder brought from the Indies, usually employed in writing-dust. Brown.

Whose womb produc'd the glassy ice? Who bred

The hoary frosts that fall on Winter's head?

Sandys.

The glassy deep. Dryden, Æn.

GLA'STONBURY Thorn. n. s. A species of MEDLAR.

This species of thorn produces some bunches of flowers in winter, and flowers again in the spring. Miller.

GLAUOMA.* n. s. [γλαύωμα, Gr. glau-come, Fr.] A fault in the eye, which changes the crystalline humour into a greyish colour, without detriment of sight, and therein differs from what is commonly understood by suffusion.

Quincy.

The glaucoma is no other disease than the cataract. Sharp.

The difference has been eagerly contended for between a glaucoma and a cataract, though indeed latterly the contest has been less violent.

The Student, (1750), i. 341.

GLA'UCOUS.* adj. [glaucaus, Lat. γλαυκός,

Gr.] Grey, or blue.

The leaves are small, of a glaucous colour.

Ray, Rem. p. 182.

The Esk glides over a bottom covered with mosses or coloured stones, that reflect through the pure water tints glaucous green, or sappharine.

Pennant, Voyage to the Hebrides.

GLAVE.* n. s. [glave, French; glaf, y.

hook, Welsh; probably from the Latin gladius, a sword. Chaucer writes it gleve, and uses it in the sense of a lance.
And Cotgrave defines glave "a lance,
or horseman's staffe." A broad sword;
a falchion; y. a lance.

He, — laying his hands upon his glave,
With dreadful strokes let drive at him so sore.

Spenser, F. Q. iv. vii. 22.

Achilles pressing through the Phrygian glaves.

Spenser, Hymn on Love.

Two hundred Greeks came next in love well try'd,

Not surely arm'd in steel or iron strong,
But each a glave had pendant by his side. Fairfax.
Behold from yonder hill the foe appears,
Bows, bills, glaves, arrows, shields, and spears,
Like a dark wood he comes.

Beaumont and Fl. Mad Lover.

When zeal, with aged clubs and glaves,
Gave chase to rockets and white staves, Hudibras.
To GLAVER.† v. n. [glaf, Welsh, flattery; glapepe, a flatterer, a buffoon, from glupan or glipan, to play the buff-foon. Glaver is used in Cheshire for flatter. But it is not a low word, as Dr. Johnson asserts it is; as it can boast much higher authority than that of the solitary example, given by him, from L'Estrange; and may be adopted from the Lat. glaber, smooth.] To flatter; to wheedle.

The writer of that glavering gloss upon Pope
Bonifacius' bull.

Fulke against Allen, (1586,) p. 512.

Some slavish, glavering, flattering parasite, or hanger-on.

South, Sermon, vi. 110.

Kindoms have their distempers, intermissions, and paroxysms, as well as natural bodies; and a glavering council is as dangerous as a wheedling priest, or a flattering physician. L'Estrange.

GLAVERER.* n. s. [from glaver.] A flatterer.

These glavurers gone, my selfe to rest I laid,
And doubting nothing soundly fell asleepe.

Mir. for Mag. p. 407.

GLAYMORE.* n. s. [Gael. claidhamh, a sword, and more, great. It is generally pronounced claymore. Dr. Jamieson.—
It may perhaps be referred to the Lat.
gladius.] A large two-handed sword, formerly much used by the highlanders of Scotland.

Their arms were anciently the glaymore, or great two-handed sword, and afterwards the two-edged sword and target.

Johnson, Journey to the West. Isl.

To GLAZE.† v. a. [To glass, only accidentally varied. Dr. Johnson.—Chaucer uses glase, for "to put glass into windows." Our old lexicography gives "to glass or glase a window." See Sherwood's
Dict.]

1. To furnish with windows of glass.

Let there be two delicate cabinets daintily paved, richly hanged, and glazed with crystalline glass. Bacon, Essays.

2. To cover with glass, as potters do their earthen ware; [from the French glaise, argilla.]

3. To overlay with something shining and pellucid.

Sorrow's eye, glaz'd with blinding tears,
Divides one thing entire to many objects.

Shakespeare, Rich. II.

The reason of one man operates on that of another in all true oratory; wherein though with other ornaments he may glaze and brandish the weapons, yet is it sound reason that carries the stroke home. Grew, Cosm. Sac.

White, with other strong colours, with which we paint that which we intend to glaze, are the life, the spirit, and the lustre of it. Dryd. Dryfes.

GLAZEN.* adj. [from glaze; Sax. glæren, glassy.] Resembling glass.

A glasun sea meynd with fier.
Wicliffe, Revel. xv. 2.

Old glazen-eyes,

He hath not reach'd his despair yet.

B. Jonson, For.

GLA'ZIER. n. s. [corrupted from glasier, or glassier, of glass.] One whose trade is to make glass windows. Other manufacturers of glass are otherwise named.

Into rabbits, the several panes of glasswork are set, and fastened by the glazier.

Moxon, Mech. Exer.

The dextrous glazier, strong returns the bound,
And ginging sashes on the penthouse sound.

Gay, Trivia.

And then, without the aid of neighbour's art,
Perform'd the carpenter's and glazier's part.

Harte.

GLEAD.* See GLEDE.

GLEAM.† n. s. [Sax. glæm, gleam; "the past participle of ge-leoman, to shine."
Mr. H. Tooke. But see also To GLIMPSE.] Sudden shoot of light;
lustrous; brightness.

Then was the fair Dodonian tree far seen
Upon seven hills to spread his gladsome gleam;
And conquerors bedecked with his green,
Along the banks of the Ausonian stream. Spenser.

At last a gleam

Of dawning light turn'd thitherward in haste
His travel'd steps. Milton, P. L.

As I bent down to look just opposite,
A shape within the wat'ry gleam appear'd,
Bending to look on me. Milton, P. L.

Mine is a gleam of bliss, too hot to last;
Wat'ry it shines, and will be soon o'ercast.

Dryden, Aurengzebe.

We ken them from afar; the setting sun
Plays on their shining arms and burnish'd helmets,
And covers all the field with gleams of fire.

Addison, Cato.

In the clear azure gleam the flocks are seen,
And floating forests paint the waves with green.

Pope.

Nought was seen, and nought was heard,
But dreadful gleams,
Fires that glow. Pope, St. Cecilia's Day.

To GLEAM.† v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To shine with sudden coruscation.

The field of iron cast a gleaming brown.

Milton, P. R.

Observant of approaching day,
The meek-ey'd morn appears, mother of dews,
At first faint gleaming in the dappled east.

Thomson, Summer.

2. To shine.

On each hand the gushing waters play,
And down the rough cascade white dashing fall,
Or gleam in lengthen'd vistas through the trees.

Thomson.

GLE'AMING.* n. s. [from gleam.] A sudden shoot of light.

Farewell, ye gleamings of departed peace!
Shine out your last! Thomson, Spring.

GLE'AMY. adj. [from gleam.] Flashing;
darting sudden coruscations of light.

In brazen arms, that cast a gleamy ray,
Swift through the town the warrior bends his way. Pope.

To GLEAN.† v. a. [glaner, French, as Skinner thinks, from granum; or, as others think, from glans, an acorn;
"primitus enim glandes pro frugibus
erant." Nicot, and Junius. "Glainer,
i. e. glaner, vient de glans, dont on a fait glannée, glander, et glaner, ramasser du gland; signification qu'on a dans la suite adaptée à l'action de ramasser le grain resté dans un champ moissonné le mot est très ancien dans notre langue."

Roq. Gloss. Lang. Rom.]

1. To gather what the gatherers of the harvest leave behind.

She came and gleaned in the field after the reapers. Ruth, ii.

Cheap conquest for his following friends re-main'd;

He reap'd the field, and they but only glean'd.

Dryden.

The precept of not gathering their land clean, but that something should be left to the poor to glean, was a secondary offering to God himself.

Nelson.

She went, by hard necessity compell'd,
To glean Palæmon's fields. Thomson, Autumn.

2. To gather any thing thinly scattered.

Gather

So much as from occasions you may glean,
If aught, to us unknown, afflicts him thus.

Shakespeare, Hamlet.

That goodness
Of gleaning all the land's wealth into one,
Into your own hands, card'nal, by extortion.

Shakespeare, Hen. VIII.

They gleaned of them in the highways five thousand men. Judges, xx. 45.

But Argive chiefs, and Agamemnon's train,
When his refulgent arms flash'd through the shady plain,

Fled from his well-known face with wonted
fear;

As when his thund'ring sword and pointed spear Drove headlong to their ships, and glean'd the routed rear.

Dryden, Æn.

In the knowledge of bodies we must be content to glean what we can from particular experiments;
since we cannot, from a discovery of their real essences, grasp at a time whole sheaves, and in bundles comprehend the nature and properties of whole species together. Locke.

GLEAN. n. s. [from the verb.] Collection made laboriously by slow degrees.

Plains, meads, and orchards all the day he plies;
The gleams of yellow thyme distend his thighs;
He spoils the saffron. Dryden, Virg.

GLE'ANER. n. s. [from glean.]

1. One who gathers after the reapers.

For still the world prevail'd, and its dread laugh,
Which scarce the firm philosopher can scorn,
Should his heart own a gleaner in the field.

Thomson.

2. One who gathers any thing slowly and laboriously.

An ordinary coffee-house gleaner in the city is an arrant scoundrel. Locke.

GLE'ANING. n. s. [from glean.] The act of gleaning or thing gleaned.

There shall be as the shaking of an olive-tree, and as the gleaning of grapes when the vintage is done. Bible.

The orphan and widow are members of the same common family, and have a right to be supported out of the incomes of it, as the poor Jews had to gather the gleanings of the rich man's harvest. Atterbury.

GLEBE.† n. s. [glèbe, old French; gleba,
Latin.]

1. Turf; soil; ground.

This, like the moory plots, delights in sedge
bowers;

The grassy garlands loves, and oft attir'd with flowers

Of rank and mellow glebe. Drayton.

Fertile of corn the glebe, of oil and wine,
With herds the pastures throng'd, with flocks the hills. Milton, P. L.

Mark well the flow'ring almonds in the wood;
If od'rous blooms the bearing branches load,

The glebe will answer to the sylvan reign,
Great heats will follow, and large crops of grain.
Dryden.

Sleeping vegetables lie,
Till the glad summons of a genial ray
Unbinds the glebe, and calls them out to day.
Garth.

2. The land possessed as part of the revenue of an ecclesiastical benefice.

The ordinary living or revenue of a parsonage is of three sorts: the one in land, commonly called the glebe; another in tithes, which is a set part of our goods rendered to God; the third, in other offerings bestowed upon God and his church by the people.
Spelman.

A trespass done on a parson's glebe land, which is a freehold, cannot be tried in a spiritual court.
Ayliffe, Paverson.

Many parishes have not an inch of glebe.
Swift.

GLE'BOUS. adj. [from glebe.] Turfy. Dict.

GLE'BY. adj. [from glebe.] Turfy; perhaps in the following passage fat or fruitful, if it has indeed any meaning.

Pernicious flattery! thy malignant seeds
In an ill hour, and by a fatal hand,
Sadly diffus'd o'er virtue's glebe land,
With rising pride amidst the corn appear,
And choke the hopes and harvest of the year. Prior.

GLEDE.† n. s. [Sax. gliba; Su. Goth. glada.] Serenious. And so our word was sometimes also written glade. But some think it derived from glide, because the kite glides easily through the air with very little motion of his wings. "Glade, or glead, is a kite in the north of England." Grose. A kind of hawk.

Ye shall not eat the glade, the kite, and the vulture.
Deut.

Not a glend, not a vulture, not a falcon, not an eagle, not any bird of prey or rapine.

Bp. Hall, Beauty of the Church.

GLEE.† n. s. [Sax. gleg, music; whence gle, gle, mirth, joy. Thus in our oldest lexicography, glee is minstrelsy, Lat. musica. Pr. Parv. Chaucer uses glee for music. We have thus revived the word in modern times, though Dr. Johnson has taken no notice of it, to signify a piece of light vocal music for more than one voice, a kind of catch.]

1. Joy; merriment; gayety. It anciently signified music played at feasts. It is not now used, except in ludicrous writing, or with some mixture of irony and contempt.

She marcheth home, and by her takes the knight,
Whom all the people follow with great glee.
Spenser, F. Q.

Many wayfarers make themselves glee, by vexing the inhabitants; who again foreswore not to baigne them with perfume. Caveau, Surv. of Cornwall.

Is Blouzelinda dead? Farewell my glee!
No happiness is now reserv'd for me.

Gay, Pastorals.
The poor man then was rich, and liv'd with glee;
Each barley-head untaxt, and day-light free.
Hartie.

2. A song, sung in parts; a species of catch.

Airs of the most modern cast, fritted into divisions or even loaded with parts as much in sequence as in a catch or a glee.

Mason on Church Music, p. 220.

Who has not seen the advertisements proposing a reward to him, who should produce the best catch, canon, or glee?

Bp. Percy, Ess. on the Eng. Minstrels.

To GLEE, or GLY.† v. n. [Teut. gluyeren, to look askew. But Dr. Jamieson prefers the Icel. Goth. gloed.] To squint. This word is in our old dictionaries, and is still used in the north of England.

GLEED.† n. s. [gleb, Sax. from glopan, to glow; Su. Goth. gloed.] A hot glowing coal. A provincial and obsolete word. Such is Dr. Johnson's statement, and without any example. The word is one of our oldest.

Piping hot out of the glede. Chaucer, Mill. Tale.
His armour glytteryde as did a glede.
Anc. Ballad of Chevy Chase.

In heart he brent as any glede.
Lyfgate, Hist. of Troy.

There is scene
Fair Ilion fall in burning red gledes down,
And from the soil great Troy, Neptunus' town.
Sackville, Induct. Mir. for Mag.

When I stir up these embers to the bottom,
there are found some living gledes, which do both contain fire, and are apt to propagate it.
Bp. Hall, Occas. Modit.

GLE'FUL.† adj. [glee and full.] Gay; merry; cheerful. Not used.

My lovely Aaron, wherefore look'st thou sad,
When every thing doth make a gleeful boast?

Shakespeare, Tit. Andronicus.

Nor lacks he gleeful tales, whilst round the nutbrown bowl doth trot. Warner, Albion's Eng.

GLEEK.† n. s.

1. Musick. [Sax. gleg.] Dr. Johnson notices no other meaning of this word, and gives the following example of the present, which however carries an allusion to the next sense.
Musician. What will you give us?

Peter. No money on my faith; but the gleek; I will give you the minstrel.

Shakespeare, Rom. and Jul.

2. A scoff; a joke. [Sax. gleg, mirth, jocularly.]

Now where's the Bastard's braves, and Charles his gleeks?

What, all a mort? Shakespeare, K. Hen. VI. P. I.
Here Juno, here; but stay, I do espy
A pretty gleek coming from Pallas' eye.

Beaumont and Fl. Maid in the Mill.

3. A game at cards. [old French, glic, "nom d'un jeu de cartes." Lacombe, and Roquefort.]

Let her bear up to-day,
Laugh, and keep company, at gleek or crimp.

B. Jonson, Magn. Lady.

A lady once requesting a gentleman to play at glee, was refused, but civilly, and upon three reasons; the first whereof, madam, said the gentleman, is, I have no money. Her ladyship knew that was so material and sufficient, that she desired him to keep the two other reasons to himself.

Gayton, on D. Quix. p. 14.

To GLEEK.† v. n. [from the Sax. gleg, sport. In the north of England, to gleek is still to deceive.]

1. To sneer; to gibe; to droll upon; to practise deceptions.

I can gleek upon occasion.

Shakespeare, Mids. N. Dream.

I have seen you gleeking and galling at this gentleman twice or thrice. Shakespeare, Hen. V.

2. In Scotland it signifies to fool or spend time idly, with something of mimicry or drollery.

GLE'EMAN.* n. s. [Sax. glegman, glegman, gleekman, gleekman.] A musician; a minstrel.

Blagebride — a conyenge musicyan, called of the Britons god of gleemen.

Fabyan, Chron. (1533), fol. xxiii.

The Anglo-Saxon harpers and gleemen were the immediate successors and imitators of the Scandinavian scalds.

Bp. Percy on the Eng. Minstrels.

Their national love of verse and music still so strongly predominated, that in the place of their old scalders a new rank of poets arose, called gleemen or harpers.

Warton, Hist. E. P. vol. i. Diss. I.

To GLEEN.† v. n. To shine with heat or polish. I know not the original notion of this word: it may be of the same race with glow or with gleam. I have not remarked it in any other place. Dr. Johnson. — It seems to be the Icel. glia, Frisklion, to shine; Gr. γλῆνος, a star, light.

Those who labour

The sweaty forge, who edge the crooked scythe,
Bend stubborn steel, and harden gleaming armour, Acknowledge Vulcan's aid. Prior.

GLE'ESOME.* adj. [from glee.] Full of merriment; joyous.

Gleesome hunters, pleased with their sport,
With sacrifices due have thank'd me for't.
W. Browne.

GLEET.† n. s. [It is written by Skinner glitt, and derived from gliban, Saxon, to run softly. Dr. Johnson. — It is rather from the Icel. glat, glueta, moisture, humour, liquor, from glætr, glaett, glassy.] A sanious ooze; a thin ichor running from a sore.

A hard dry eschar, without either matter or gleet.

Wise man, Surgery.

To GLEET. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To drip or ooze with a thin sanious liquor.

His thumb being inflamed and swelled, I made an incision into it to the bone: this not only bled, but gleeted a few drops.

Wise man, Surgery.

2. To run slowly.

Vapours raised by the sun make clouds, which are carried up and down the atmosphere, till they hit against the mountainous places of the globe, and by this concussion are condensed, and so gleet down the caverns of these mountains, whose inner parts, being hollow, afford them a basin.

Cheyne, Phil. Princ.

GLE'ETV. adj. [from gleet.] Ichory; thinly sanious.

If the flesh lose its ruddiness, and the matter change to be thin and gleety, you may suspect it corrupting.

Wise man.

GLE'N.† n. s. [Gael. gleann; Welsh glyn; Sax. glen, glene.] A valley; a dale; a depression between two hills.

From me his madding mind is start,
And woos the widow's daughter of the glen.

Spenser, Shep. Cal.

Can silent glens have charms for thee?
The lonely cot, and russet gown?

Bp. Percy, Song.

Rough glens, and sudden waterfalls.

T. Warton, Ode VII.

GLENE.* n. s. [Fr. glene; Gr. γλῆν.] In anatomy, the cavity or socket of the eye; and also any shallow cavity of bones, into which some other bone is received.

To GLENT.* v. n. [Icel. glenta, divaricare.] To start aside; to look aside. A northern word. Praise of Yorksh. Ale, 1697. and Craven Dial.

GLEW.† n. s. [glu, Fr. gluten, Latin.] A viscous cement made by dissolving the skins of animals in boiling water, and drying the gelly. See GLUE.

To GLEW.* v. a. [from the noun.] To join; to unite. See To GLUE.

The nobleness of your heart will hew the hearts of your people to you. Aph. Laud, Serm. p. 225.

GLEWER.* n. s. [from glew.] One who gleweth papers, parchments, or other thing. See GLUER.

GLEWINESS.* n. s. [from glewy.] Adhesive quality; viscosness. Sherwood.

GLEWISH.* adj. [from glew.] Partaking of the nature of glew; viscous; adhesive; as, "glewish matter." Huloet.

GLEWY.* adj. [from glew.] Adhesive; viscous; glutinous.

They being no natural stones hewn out of the rock, but artificially made of pure sand by some glewy and unctuous matter knit and incorporated together. Hakewill on Providence, p. 207.

A kind of pitch, which is described by authors as a very glewy thing. Patrick on Gen. xi. 3.

GLIB.† adj. [from lāgis, Gr. Skinner.] By others, from the Lat. lāvis, smooth, slippery. But is it not more probably from the Latin glaber, smooth?] Huloet.

1. Smooth; slippery; so formed as to be easily moved.

Liquid bodies have nothing to sustain their parts, nor any thing to cement them: the parts being glib and continually in motion, fall off from one another, which way soever gravity inclines them. Burnet, Theory.

Habbakkuk brought him a smooth strong rope, compactly twisted together, with a noose that slipt as glib as a birdcatcher's gin. Arbuthnot.

2. Smooth; valuable.

I want that glib and oily art To speak and purpose not, since what I well intend, I'll do't before I speak. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

There was never so much glib nonsense put together in his sounding English. Locke.

Now Cur his shop from rubbish drains; Three genuine tomes of Swift's remains:

And then, to make them pass the gibber, Revis'd by Tibbald, More, and Cibber. Swift.

Be sure he's a fine spoken man; Do but hear on the clergy how glib his tongue ran. Swift.

GLIB.† n. s. ["In Terconnell the haire of their [the Irish] head grows so long and curled, that they goe bare-headed, and are called glibs; the women, glibbins." Gainsford's Glory of England, 1618, p. 151.] The Irish have from the Scythians mantles and long glibs; which is a thick curled bush of hair hanging down over their eyes, and monstrously disguising them. Spenser on Ireland.

Whom when she saw in wretched weeds disguised,

With hairy glib deform'd, and meager face, — She knew him not. Spenser, F. Q. iv. viii. 12.

To GLIB.† v. a. [from the adjective.]

1. To castrate. This is the only sense of the word which Dr. Johnson notices.

I'll geld them all: fourteen they shall not see, To bring false generations: they are coheirs, And I had rather glib myself than they Should not produce fair issue. Shakspeare, Wint. Tale.

2. To make smooth or glib.

There is a drunken liberty of the tongue, which, being once glibbed with intoxicating liquor, runs wild through heaven and earth.

Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 20.

I undertook that office, and the tongues Of all his flattering prophets glib'd with lies To his destruction. Milton, P. R.

GLIB.† adv. [from glib.] Smoothly; volubly.

Wine so choice, or so delicious, that it went down glibly. Patrick on Eccles. vii. 9.

Many who would startle at an oath, whose stomachs as well as consciences recoil at an obscenity, do yet slide glibly into a detraction.

Gov. of the Tongue.

GLIBNESS. n. s. [from glib.] Smoothness; slipperiness.

A polish'd ice-like glibness doth enfold

The rock. Chapman, Odyssey.

The tongue is the most ready for motion of any member, needs not so much as the flexure of a joint, and by access of humours acquires a glibness too, the more to facilitate its moving.

Gov. of the Tongue.

To GLIDE. v. n. [glidan, Saxon; glijden, Dutch.]

1. To flow gently and silently.

By East, among the dusty vallies, glide

The silver streams of Jordan's crystal flood. Fairfax.

Broke by the jutting land on either side,

In double streams the briny waters glide. Dryden, Æn.

Just before the confines of the wood,

The gliding Lethe leads her silent flood. Dryden, Æn.

Where stray the Muses, in what lawn or grove?

In those fair fields where sacred Isis glides,

Or else where Cam his winding vales divides. Pope.

2. To pass on without change of step.

Ye gliding ghosts, permit me to relate

The mystick wonders of your silent state. Dryden, Æn.

3. To move swiftly and smoothly along.

If one of mean affairs

May plod it in a week, why may not I

Glide thither in a day? Shakespeare, Cymb.

Shoals of fish, with fins and shining scales,

Glide under the green wave. Milton, P. L.

He trembled every limb, and felt a smart

As if cold steel had glided through his heart. Dryden, Fab.

All things are beheld as in a hasty motion,

where the objects only glide before the eye and disappear. Dryden.

GLIDE. n. s. [from the verb.] Lapse; act or manner of passing smoothly.

About his neck

A green and gilded snake had wreath'd itself,

Who, with her head nimble in threats, approach'd

The opening of his mouth; but suddenly

Seeing Orlando, it unlink'd itself,

And with indented glides did slip away

Into a bush. Shakespeare, As you like it.

GLIDER.† n. s. [from glide.]

1. That which glides.

The glance into my heart did glide;

Hey, ho, the glider;

Therewith my soul was sharply gride,

Such wounds soon waxen wider. Spenser, Shep. Cal.

2. In the north of England, a snare.

GLIFF.* n. s. [perhaps from the Icel. glia, to shine. See GLANCE.] A transient view; a glimpse: still used in the north of England.

GLIKE. n. s. [gliz, Saxon. See GLEEK.]

A sneer; a scoff; a flout. Not now in use.

To GLIME.* v. n. "Glimps and glimes, signifies to look cunningly." Praise of Yorksh. Ale. To look out at the corner of the eye; to glance slyly. Brockett's N. C. Words.

To GLIMMER.† v. n. [glimmer, Danish, to shine; glimra, Goth. to shine; glimbra, Icel. the same, from glimbr, splendour; glimmen, Teut. to glow, to flame: from the Goth. gla, light. See GLEAM.]

1. To shine faintly.

The West yet glimmers with some streaks of day. Shakespeare.

The truth appears so naked on my side, That any purblind eye may find it out.

—And on my side it is so well apparel'd,

So clear, so shining, and so evident,

That it will glimmer through a blind man's eye. Shakespeare.

For there no twilight of the sun's dull ray

Glimmers upon the pure and native day. Cowley.

Of in glimmering bowers and glades

He met her. Milton, II Pens.

See'st thou yon dreary plain, forlorn and wild,

The seat of desolation, void of light,

Save what the glimmering of these livid flames

Cast pale and dreadful? Milton, P. L.

The sacred influence

Of light appears, and from the walls of heav'n

Shoots far into the bosom of dim night

A glimmering dawn. Milton, P. L.

Through these sad shades this chaos in my soul,

Some seeds of light at length began to roll;

The rising motion of an infant ray

Shot glimm'ring through the cloud, and promis'd day. Prior.

Off by the winds, extinct the signal lies;

Or smother'd in the glimm'ring socket dies. Gay, Trivia.

When rosy morning glimm'rd o'er the dales,

He rove to pasture all the lusty males. Pope, Odyssey.

2. To be perceived imperfectly; to appear faintly.

GLIMMER.† n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Faint splendour; weak light.

Yet hath my night of life some memory,

My wasting lamps some fading glimmer left. Shakespeare, Com. of Err.

2. A kind of fossil.

The lesser masses that are lodged in sparry and stony bodies, dispersedly, from their shining and glimmering, were an inducement to the writers of fossils to give those bodies the name of mica and glimmer. Woodward on Fossils.

Stones which are composed of plates, that are generally plain and parallel, and that are flexible and elastic: talc, catsilver, or glimmer, of which there are three sorts, the yellow or golden, the white or silvery, and the black. Woodward.

GLIMMERING.* n. s. [from glimmer.] Faint or imperfect view.

On the way the baggage post-boy, who had been at court, got a glimmering who they were. Watson.

The Pagan priesthood was always in the druids;

and there was a perceivable glimmering of the Jewish rites in it, though much corrupted. Swift.

I cannot see a glimmering of distinction.

Burke on the Popery Laws.

To GLIMPSE.* v. n. [from glimmer; if it be not an older word than that. Chaucer uses it substantively. "Ye have some glimpsings, and no parfit sight."

March. Tale. However, it is to be referred, like glimmer and gleam, to the Goth. gla, light; while it also resembles the Gr. λάμπα, λάμψω, to shine, and Icel.

liome, light, from the same root.] To appear by glimpses.

Deformed shadows glimpsing in his sight.

Drayton, Barons' Wars, ii. 46.

E E

GLIMPSE.† n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A weak faint light.

Such vast room in nature,
Only to shine, yet scarce to contribute
Each orb a glimpse of light, convey'd so far
Down to this habitable, which returns
Light back to them. Milton, P. L.

Thousands of things, which now either wholly escape our apprehensions, or which our short-sighted reason having got some faint glimpse of,
we, in the dark, grope after. Locke.

2. A quick flashing light.

Light as the lightning glimpse they ran.

My thoughtless youth was wing'd with vain desires;

My manhood, long misled by wand'ring fires,
Follow'd false lights; and when their glimpse was gone,

My pride struck out new spangles of her own. Dryden.

3. Transitory lustre.

There no dear glimpse of the sun's lovely face
Strikes through the solid darkness of the place. Cowley.

Man he seems
In all his lineaments, though in his face
The glimpses of his Father's glory shine.

If I, celestial sire, in ought
Have serv'd thy will, or gratified thy thought,
One glimpse of glory to my issue give;
Grac'd for the little time he has to live. Dryden, Fab.

4. Short fleeting enjoyment.

If, while this weary'd flesh draws fleeting breath,
Not satisfy'd with life, afraid of death,
If hap'ly be thy will that I should know
Glimpse of delight, or pause from anxious woe;
From now, from instant now, great sire, dispel
The clouds that press my soul. Prior.

5. A short transitory view.

O friends! I hear the tread of nimble feet
Hasting this way, and now by glimpse discern Ithuriel, and Zephon, through the shade.

Some God punisheth exemplarily in this world, that we might have a taste or glimpse of his present justice. Hakewill.

A man used to such sort of reflections, sees as much to one glimpse as would require a long discourse to lay before another, and make out in one entire and gradual deduction. Locke.

What should I do! while here I was enchain'd,
No glimpse of godlike liberty remain'd. Dryden, Virg.

6. The exhibition of a faint resemblance.

No man hath a virtue that he has not a glimpse of. Shakespeare.

To GLI'STEN.† v. n. [not from glitten,
German, which Dr. Johnson adduces, but perhaps from gleissen in that language; though the Sax. glimman is to shine; and our own word was formerly glissen. I find it in use nearly a century before the time of Thomson, from whom
Dr. Johnson's earliest example is cited.]
To shine, to sparkle with light.

How unpolished soever this diamond be, yet if it do but glissen, 'tis too pretious to be cast away.

Hammond, Works, iv. 660.

The bleating kind
Eye the bleak heaven, and next the glistering earth,
With looks of dumb despair. Thomson, Winter.
The ladies' eyes glistered with pleasure.

Richardson, Pamela.

To GLI'STER.† v. n. [Teut. glinsteren, glis-teren; Sw. glistra.] To shine; to be bright.

The wars flame most in summer, and the helmets glister brightest in the fairest sunshine.

Spenser on Ireland.

'Tis better to be lowly born,
And range with humble livers in content,
Than to be perk'd up in a glistering grief,
And wear a golden sorrow. Shaksp. Hen. VIII.

The golden sun
Gallops the zodiac in his glit' ring coach. Shaksp.
All that glisters is not gold.

Shakespeare, Merch. of Ven.

You were more the eye and talk

Of the court to-day, than all

Else that glister'd in Whitehall.

B. Jonson, Underwoods.

When the sun shone upon the shields of gold and brass, the mountains glistered therewith, and shined like lamps of fire. I Mac. vi. 39.

It consisted not of rubies, yet the small pieces of it were of a pleasant reddish colour, and glistered prettily. Boyle.

GLI'STER.* n. s. [from the verb.] Lustre; glitter. Dr. Jamieson notices this word as a Scottish substantive, but says that he had never observed it as an English
one. It, however, exists.

As fair Aurora in her morning gray,
Deck'd with the ruddy glister of her love,
Is fair Samela.

Greene, Descript. of Samela, Arcad. (1610.)

GLI'STER. n. s. [Properly written clyster, from κλύω.] See CLYSTER. It is written wrong, even by Brown.

Now enters Bush, with new state airs,
His lordship's premier minister;
And who, in all profound affairs,
Is held as needful as his glister. Swift.

Choler is the natural glister, or one excretion whereby nature excludeth another; which descending daily unto the bowels, extimulates those parts, and excites them unto expulsion.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

GLI'STERINGLY.* adv. [from To glister.]
Brightly; splendidly. Sherwood.

GLIT.* See GLEET.

To GLI'TTER.† v. n. [Goth. glitmunjan;
Icel. glitta; Sw. glitra.]

1. To shine; to exhibit lustre; to gleam.

Before the battle joins, from afar,

The field yet glitters with the pomp of war.

Scarce hadst thou time t' unsheath thy con-
qu'ring blade;

It did but glitter, and the rebels fled. Granville.

2. To be specious; to be striking.

On the one hand set the most glittering temptations to discord, and on the other the dismal effects of it. Decay of Piety.

In glit' ring scenes, o'er her own heart, severe;
In crowds collected; and in courts sincere. Young.

GLI'TTER. n. s. [from the verb.] Lustre;
bright show; splendour.

Clad

With what permissive glory since his fall
Was left him, or false glitter. Milton, P. L.

Flourish not too much upon the glitter of fortune,
for fear there should be too much alloy in it.

Collier on Pride.

Take away this measure from our dress and habits, and all is turned into such paint and glitter, and ridiculous ornaments, as are a real shame to the wearer. Lave.

GLI'TTERAND.† Shining; sparkling. A participle used by Chaucer and the old English poets. This participial termination is still retained in Scotland.

Belts of glitterand gold. Spenser, Shep. Cal.

GLI'TTERING.* n. s. [from glitter.] Lustre;
gleam.

Steel glosses are more resplendent than the like plates of brass, and so is the glittering of a blade.

Bacon, Phys. Rem.

GLI'TTERINGLY.† adv. [from glitter.] Ra-diantly; with shining lustre. Sherwood.

To GLOAM.* v. n. [perhaps from the Germ. ghum, turbid.] To be sullen; to be melancholy. See To GLOOM.

Woman, pluck up your heart, and leave off all this gloaming. Gammer Gurton's Needle, (1551.)

To GLOAR.† v. a. [gloeren, Dutch; glora, Cimbr.]

1. To squint; to look askew. Skinner.

2. In Scotland, to stare: as, "what a gloarand quean." Dr. Johnson.—It is also used, in the north of England, in the same sense; and it occurs in our old lexicography. "To gaze and glore."
Barret in V. GAZE. See also the Lancashire and Westmoreland Dialects, and other northern vocabularies.

To GLOAT.† v. n. [This word I conceive to be ignorantly written for gloar. Dr.
Johnson.—It is not so; but may be from the Swedish glutta, "leviter vel furtim inspicere," Serenius; having indeed the same origin as gloar, viz. gloa, Goth. to look attentively. To gloat, or glote, is in our old lexicography. See Sherwood's and Cole's Dict.] To cast side glances, as a timorous lover, Dr.
Johnson says; but it is rather to stare with admiration, eagerness, or desire.

Teach every grace to smile in your behalf,
And her deluding eyes to gloat for you.

Rome, Jane Shore.

Some praise his sleeves; and others gloat
Upon his rich embroider'd coat. Gay, Fables.

GLO'EARD. n. s. [from glow.] A glow-worm.

GLO'ATED. adj. [from globe.] Formed in shape of a globe; spherical; spherical.

GLOBE. n. s. [globe, French; globus,
Latin.]

1. A sphere; a ball; a round body: a body of which every part of the surface is at the same distance from the centre.

2. The terraqueous ball.

The youth, whose fortune the vast globe obey'd,
Finding his royal enemy betray'd,
Wept at his fall. Stemey.

Where God declares his intention to give dominion, he meant that he would make a species of creatures that should have dominion over the other species of this terrestrial globe. Locke.

3. A sphere in which the various regions of the earth are geographically depicted, or in which the constellations are laid down according to their places in the sky.

The astrologer who spells the stars
Mistakes his globe, and in her brighter eye
Interprets heaven's physiognomy. Cleveland.

These are the stars,
But raise thy thought from sense, nor think to find

Such figures there as in globes design'd. Creech.

4. A body of soldiers drawn into a circle.

Him round

A globe of fiery seraphim enclos'd,
With bright imblazonry, and horrent arms.

Milton, P. L.

GLOBE Amaranth, or everlasting flower. n. s.

[amaranthoides.] A flower. Miller.

GLOBE Daisy. n. s. A kind of flower.
GLOBE Fish. n. s. A kind of orbicular fish.

GLOBE Ranunculus. n. s. [helleboro-ranunculus.] A plant. Miller.

GLOBE Thistle. n. s. [carduus orbiculatus.] A plant. Miller.

To GLOBE.* v. a. [Lat. globo.] To gather round together.

Although I have given it the name of a liquid thing, yet it is not incontinent to bound itself, as humid things are, but hath in it a most restraining and powerful abstinence to start back, and globe itself upward from the mixture of any ungenerous and unbecoming motion, or any soil wherewith it may peril to stain itself.

Milton, Reas. of Ch. Gov. ii. 3.
GLOBOSE. adj. [globosus, Latin.] Spherical; round.

Regions, to which
 All thy dominion, Adam, is no more
 Than that this garden is to all the earth,
 And all the sea, from one entire globose
 Stretch'd into longitude. Milton, P. L.

Then form'd the moon
Globose, and ev'ry magnitude of stars. Milt. P. L.
GLOBOSITY. n. s. [from globose.] Sphericity; sphericness.

Why the same eclipse of the sun, which is seen to them that live more easterly, when the sun is elevated six degrees above the horizon, should be seen to them that live one degree more westerly, where the sun is but five degrees above the horizon, and so lower and lower proportionally, till at last it appear not at all: no account can be given, but the globosity of the earth. Ray on the Creation.

GLOBOSUS. adj. [globosus, Lat.; globeaux, French.] When the accent is intended to be on the last syllable, the word should be written globose, when on the first globous: I have transferred hither a passage of Milton, in which this rule has been neglected. Dr. Johnson.—The word in the following passage of Milton is not globose, as Dr. Johnson pretends, and as he has cited it; but is, in the poet's own edition of his immortal poem, globous.] Spherical; round.

Having reduced [it] into a globous form.

Gregory, Posthum. (1650), p. 282.
 Wide over all the plain, and wider far
 Than all this globous earth in plain outspread,
 Such are the courts of God! Milton, P. L.

The brazen instruments of death discharge
 Horrible flames, and turbid streaming clouds;
 Large globeous irons fly, of dreadful hiss,
 Singeing the air. Philips.

GLOBULAR. adj. [globulus, Latin.] Having the form of a small sphere; round; spherical.

The figure of the atoms of all visible fluids seemeth to be globular, there being no other figure so well fitted to the making of fluidity.

Grew, Cosm. Sacra.
GLOBULARIA. n. s. [Latin; globulaire, French.] A flosculus flower.

Miller.
GLOBULE. n. s. [globule, French; globulus, Latin.] Such a small particle of matter as is of a globular or spherical figure; as the red particles of the blood, which swim in a transparent serum, and are easily discovered by the microscope. These will attract one another when they come within a due distance, and unite like the spheres of quicksilver.

Quincy.

The hailstones have opaque globules of snow in their centre, to intercept the light within the halo.

Newton, Opticks.

Blood consists of red globules, swimming in a thin liquor called serum: the red globules are elastic, and will break; the vessels which admit the smaller globule, cannot admit the greater without a disease. Arbutnot on Aliments.

GLOBULOUS. adj. [from globule.] In form of a small sphere; round.

The whiteness of such globulous particles proceeds from the air included in the froth. Boyle.

GLOB'BY.* adj. [from globe.] Orbicular; round. Sherwood.

Your hair, whose globy rings
 He flying curls, and crispeth with his wings.

B. Jonson, Elegy.

One of the highest arcs, that human contemplation circling upwards can make from the globy sea whereon she stands.

Milton, Doct. and Disc. of Divorce.

GLOBE.* The old preterite of To glide.

Forth upon his way he glode,
 As sparkle out of bronzed.

Chaucer, Rime of Sir Thopas.

She glode forth as an adder doth.

Gower, Conf. Am. B. 5.

Like sparke of fire that from the anville glode.

Spenser, F. Q. iv. iv. 23.

To GLOMERATE. † v. a. [glomero, Latin.] To gather into a ball or sphere. A filamentous substance gathered into a ball is said to be glomerated, but discontinuous particles are conglobated.

A river which, from Caucasus, after many glomerating dances, increases Indus.

Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 68.

GLOMERATION. n. s. [glomeratio, Latin.]

1. The act of forming into a ball or sphere.

2. A body formed into a ball.

The rainbow consisteth of a glomeration of small drops, which cannot fall but from the air that is very low. Bacon.

GLOMEROUS. adj. [glomerosus, Latin.] Gathered into a ball or sphere, as a ball of thread.

GLOOM. † n. s. [glomung, Saxon, twilight. Dr. Johnson.—Rather perhaps from the German glum, turbid. Yet Mr. H. Tooke deduces gloom from the Sax. gleoman, to shine, the very reverse of its meaning. See his Div. of Purley, ii. 373.]

1. Imperfect darkness; dismalness; obscurity; defect of light.

Glowing embers through the room,

Teach light to counterfeit a gloom. Milt. H Pens.

Is this the seat,

That we must change for heaven? This mournful gloom.

For that celestial light? Milton, P. L.

The still night; not now, as ere man fell,

Wholesome, and cool, and mild; but with black air

Accompanied: with damps, and dreadful gloom.

Milton, P. L.

Now warm in love, now with'ring in thy bloom,

Lost in a convent's solitary gloom. Pope.

2. Cloudiness of aspect; heaviness of mind; sullenness.

To GLOOM. † v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To shine obscurely, as the twilight.

This sense is not now in use.

His glistening armour made

A little glooming light much like a shade.

Spenser, F. Q.

Scarcely had Phæbus in the glooming East

Yet harnessed his fiery-footed team. Spens. F. Q.

2. To be cloudy; to be dark.

Through dreadful shades of ever glooming night.

Span. Tragedy, (1603.)

3. To be melancholy; to be sullen. See To GLOAM. "To gloom, is to frown and be sullen." Praise of Yorksh. Ale, 1697.

4. To look darkly or dismally.

Here while the proud their long-drawn pomps display,

There the black gibbet glooms beside the way.

Goldsmith, Deserted Village.

To GLOOM.* v. a. To fill with gloom, with darkness, or dismalness.

A night that glooms us in the noontide ray,

And wraps our thoughts at banquets in the shroud.

Young, Night Thoughts, 2.

Good heaven! what sorrows gloom'd that parting day,

That call'd them from their native walks away.

Goldsmith, Deserted Village.

GLOOM'ILY. adv. [from gloomy.]

1. Obscurely; dimly; without perfect light; dismally.

2. Sullenly; with cloudy aspect; with dark intentions; not cheerfully.

See, he comes: how gloomily he looks! Dryd.

Gloomily retir'd

The villain spider lives. Thomson, Summer.

GLOOMINESS. † n. s. [from gloomy.]

1. Want of light; obscurity; imperfect light; dismalness.

A day of darkness and gloominess, a day of clouds and thick darkness. Zeph. i. 15.

2. Want of cheerfulness; cloudiness of look; heaviness of mind; melancholy.

Neglect spreads gloominess upon their humour, and makes them grow sullen and unconvertible.

Collier of the Spleen.

The gloominess in which sometimes the minds of the best men are involved, very often stands in need of such little incitements to mirth and laughter as are apt to disperse melancholy.

Addison.

GLOOMY. † adj. [from gloom.]

1. Obscure; imperfectly illuminated; almost dark; dismal for want of light.

These were from without

The growing miseries, which Adam saw

Already in part, though hid in gloomiest shade,

To sorrow abandon'd. Milton, P. L.

Deep in a cavern dwells the drowsy god,

Whose gloomy mansion nor the rising sun,

Nor setting visits, nor the lightsome noon.

Dryden, Fob.

The surface of the earth is clearer or gloomier, just as the sun is bright or more overcast.

Pope, Letters.

2. Dark of complexion.

That fair field

Of Enna, where Proserpine gathering flow'rs,

Herself a fairer flow'r, by gloomy Dis

Was gather'd. Milton, P. L.

3. Sullen; melancholy; cloudy of look; heavy of heart.

And you, ye hopeless gloomy-minded tribe,

You who, unconscious of those nobler flights

That reach impatient at immortal life,

Against the prime endearing privilege

Of being dare contend. Thomson on Sir Isaac Newton.

To GLO'PPEN.* v. a. To surprise; to astonish. Common throughout the north. Westm. Chesh. and Craven Dialects. Supposed to be from the Icel.

glopur, stultus.

GLORE.* adj. [Icel. hlyre, a very fat fish; whence hlyre-jeitr, extremely fat. Serenus. But see also GOLORE.] Fat; as, "glore fat, very fat." Yorksh. Gloss. to the Praise of Yorkshire Ale. "Glore, fat." North. Glur, soft fat. Lancashire. Pegge.

GLORIA'TION* n. s. [old French, gloriation, Latin, gloriativ, from glorior, to glory; to boast.] Boast: triumph.

Mutual praises, gloriations, and congratulations. Bp. Richardson on the O. Test. p. 338.

Suspicion, peremptoriness, despondency, triumph or gloriation. More, Conj. Cabb. p. 211.

How were the Jews puffed up with that vain gloriation, that they were the sons of Abraham.

Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 141.

GLO'RIED. adj. [from glory.] Illustrious; honourable; decorated with glory; dignified with honours. Not now in use.

Old respect,

As I suppose, towards your once gloried friend,
My son, now captive, hither hath inform'd
Your younger feet, while mine cast back with age
Came lagging after. Milton, S. A.

GLORIFICA'TION. n. s. [glorification, Fr.; from glorify.] The act of giving glory.

At opening your eyes, enter upon the day with thanksgiving for the preservation of you the last night, with the glorification of God for the works of the creation. Bp. Taylor.

To GLO'RIFY. v. a. [glorifier, French; glorifico, Latin.]

1. To procure honour or praise to one.

Two such silver currents, when they join,

Do glorify the banks that bound them in.

Shakespeare, K. John.

Justice is their virtue: that alone

Makes them sit sure, and glorifies the throne.

Daniel.

2. To pay honour or praise in worship.

God is glorified when such his excellency, above all things, is with due admiration acknowledged.

Hooker.

This form and manner of glorifying God was not at that time first begun; but received long before, and alleged at that time as an argument for the truth. Hooker.

Good fellow, tell us here the circumstance,
That we for thee may glorify the Lord.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

All nations shall glorify thy name. Ps. lxxxvi. 9.
Our bodies with which the apostle commands us to glorify God, as well as with our souls.

Duty of Man.

This is the perfection of every thing, to attain its true and proper end; and the end of all these gifts and endowments, which God hath given us, is to glorify the giver.

Tillotson.

3. To praise; to honour; to extol.

Whomsoever they find to be most licentious of life, desperate in all parts of disobedience and rebellious disposition, him they set up and glorify.

Spenser on Ireland.

No chymist yet the elixir got,

But glorifies his pregnant pot,

If by the way to him befall,

Some odoriferous thing, or medicinal. Donne.

4. To exalt to glory in heaven; to raise to celestial beatitude.

If God be glorified in him, God shall also glorify him in himself, and shall straightway glorify him. St. John, xiii. 32.

Whom he justified them he also glorified.

Rom. viii. 30.

The members of the church remaining, being perfectly sanctified, shall be eternally glorified; then shall the whole church be truly and perfectly holy.

Pearson.

The soul, being immortal, will, at some time or other, resume its body again in a glorified manner.

Ayliffe's Parergon.

GLO'RIOUS† adj. [gloriosus, Latin; glorieux, French.]

1. Noble; illustrious; excellent. It is frequently used by theological writers, to express the brightness of triumphant sanctity rewarded in heaven.

Let them know that thou art Lord, the only God, and glorious over the whole world.

Dan. iii. 22.

He is glorious in respect of the brightness and splendour of his celestial body, still made more glorious and majestic by the authority which his Father hath committed to him of universal judge.

Nelson.

Impartial justice holds her equal scales,

Till stronger virtue does the weight incline;

If over thee thy glorious foe prevails,

He now defends the cause that once was thine.

Prior.

Let us remember we are Cato's friends,

And act like men who claim that glorious title.

Addison, Cato.

She must stand amongst the first servants of God, and be glorious amongst those that have fought the good fight.

Law.

If there be nothing so glorious as doing good, if there is nothing that makes us so like to God, then nothing can be so glorious in the use of our money, as to use it all in works of love and goodness.

Law.

2. Boastful; proud; haughty; ostentatious.

Glorious followers, who make themselves as trumpets of the commendation of those they follow, taint business for want of secrecy. Bacon.

They that are glorious must needs be factious; for all bravery stands upon comparisons. Bacon.

We have not

Receiv'd into our bosom and our grace

A glorious lazy drone, grown fat with feeding

On others' toil, but an industrious bee.

Massinger, Gr. Duke of Florence.

GLO'RIOUSLY† adv. [from glorious.]

1. Nobly; splendidly; illustriously.

He hath triumphed gloriously. Erod. xv. 1.

They inspire with those celestial flames, which shine so gloriously in their works.

Dryden, Duffnesnoy.

Great wits sometimes may gloriously offend,
And rise to faults true critics dare not mend.

Pope.

2. Ostentatiously; boastingly.

I protest to you, signior, I speak it not gloriously, nor out of affection.

B. Jonson, Every Man out of his Humour.

GLO'RIOUSNESS* n. s. [from glorious.]

The state or quality of being glorious.

GLO'RY† n. s. [old French, glorie, and glore; afterwards, gloire; from gloria, Latin. Among the old poets, both English and Scottish, it was used sometimes as one syllable, glore.]

1. Praise paid in adoration.

Glory to God in the highest. St. Luke, ii. 14.

2. The felicity of heaven prepared for those that please God.

Thou shalt guide me with thy counsel, and afterwards receive me into thy glory. Psalm lxxiii. 24.

Then enter into glory, and resume

His seat at God's right hand, exalted high

Above all names in heav'n. Milton, P. L.

It is hardly possible for you to beseech and in-treat God to make any one happy in the highest enjoyments of his glory to all eternity, and yet be troubled to see him enjoy the much smaller gifts of God, in this short and low state of human life.

Law.

3. Honour; praise; fame; renown; celebrity.

Think it no glory to swell in tyranny. Sidney.

Glory is like a circle in the water,
Which never ceaseth to enlarge itself,
Till by broad spreading it disperse to nought.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

And with that word and warning soon was dight,
Each soldier longing for near coming glory.

Fairfax.

Israel's bright sceptre far less glory brings,
There have been fewer friends on earth than kings.

Cowley.

Can we imagine that neither the ambition of princes, or interest, or gain in private persons, or curiosity and the desire of knowledge, or the glory of discoveries, could ever move them in that endless time to try their fortunes upon the sea?

Burnet.

Your sex's glory 'tis to shine unknown,
Of all applause, be fondest of your own. Young.

4. Splendour; magnificence.

Solomon, in all his glory, was not array'd like one of these. St. Matt. vi. 29.

Treated so ill, chas'd from your throne,
Returning, you adorn the town;

And with a brave revenge do show

Their glory went and came with you. Waller.

Aristotle says, that should a man under ground converse with works of art, and be afterwards brought up into the open day, and see the several glories of the heaven and earth, he would pronounce them the works of God. Addison, Spect.

5. Lustre; brightness.

Now sleeping flocks on their soft fleeces lie;

The moon, serene in glory, mounts the sky.

Pope, Winter.

From opening skies may streaming glories shine,
And saints embrace thee with a love like mine.

Pope.

6. A circle of rays which surrounds the heads of saints in pictures.

It is not a converting but a crowning grace, such an one as irradiates, and puts a circle of glory about the head of him upon whom it descends.

South, Serm.

A smile plays with a surprising agreeableness in the eye, breaks out with the brightest distinction, and sits like a glory upon the countenance.

Collier of the Aspect.

7. Pride; boastfulness; arrogance.

By the vain glory of men they entered into the world, and therefore shall they come shortly to an end.

Wisd. xiv. 14.

On death-beds some in conscious glory lie,
Since of the doctor in the mode they die. Young.

8. Generous pride.

The success of those wars was too notable to be unknown to your ears, to which all worthy fame hath glory to come unto.

Sidney.

To GLO'RY. v. n. [glorior, Latin.] To boast in; to be proud of.

With like judgement glorifying when he had happened to do a thing well, as when he had performed some notable mischief. Sidney.

They were wont, in the pride of their own proceedings, to glory, that whereas Luther did but blow away the roof, and Zuingleus batter but the walls of popish superstition, the last and hardest work of all remained, which was to raze up the very ground and foundation of popery. Hooker.

Let them look they glory not in mischief,
Nor build their evils on the graves of great men;
For then my guiltless blood must cry against them.

Shakespeare.

Your glorifying is not good.

1 Cor. v. 6.

Thou hast seen mount Atlas,
While storms and tempests thunder on its brow,
And oceans break their billows at its feet,
It stands unmov'd, and glories in its height.

Addison, Cato.

This title of Freeholder is what I most glory in, and what most effectually calls to my mind the happiness of that government under which I live.

Addison, Freeholder.

If others may glory in their birth, why may not we, whose parents were called by God to attend on him at his altar? Atterbury.

No one is out of the reach of misfortune; no one therefore should glory in his prosperity.

Richardson, Clarissa.

To GLOSE.† v. n. [Sax. glejan, to flatter.] To flatter; to colloque. See To GLOZE.

GLO'SER.* n. s. [from glose.]

1. A commentator.

Sophisters, and doctors, and legends, and glossers.

Bp. of Chichester, Sermon, (1576,) sign. C. v.

2. A flatterer; a deceiver. See GLOZER.
GLOS.† n. s.

1. A scholiast; a comment. [Gr. γλῶσσα; Icel. glosa; Fr. glose.]

They never hear sentence which mentioneth the word or scripture, but forthwith their glosses upon it are the word preached, the scripture explained, or delivered unto us in sermons. Hooker.

If then all souls, both good and bad, do teach, With general voice, that souls can never die;

'Tis not man's flatt'ring gloss, but nature's speech,

Which, like God's oracles, can never lie. Davies.
Some mutter at certain passages therein, by putting ill glosses upon the text, and taking with the left hand what I offer with the right. Howell.

All this, without a gloss or comment, He could unriddle in a moment. Hudibras.

In many places, he has perverted my meanings by his glosses, and interpreted my words into blasphemy and bawdry, of which they were not guilty. Dryden, Fab. Pref.

They give the scandal, and the wise discern; Their glosses teach an age too apt to learn. Dryden.
Explaining the text in short glosses, was Accursius's method. Baker on Learning.

Indentures, covenants, articles, they draw, Large as the fields themselves, and larger far Than civil codes with all their glosses are. Pope.

2. Superficial lustre. In this sense, it seems to have another derivation; it has perhaps some affinity to glow. Dr. Johnson. — It is from the Goth. gloa, to shine; whence glassa, and thence our glaze, and gloss.

His iron coat all over grown with rust, Was underneath enveloped with gold, Whose glistering gloss darken'd with filthy dust. Spenser, F. Q.

You are a sectary, That's the plain truth: your painted gloss discovers,

To men that understand you, words and weakness. Shakspeare.

Golden opinions from all sorts of people, Which would be worn now in their newest gloss. Shakspeare.

Steel doubt will be whether it will polish so well; for steel glosses are more resplendent than plates of brass. Bacon.

Weeds that the wind did toss The virgins wore: the youths, woven coats, that cast a faint dim gloss, Like that of oil. Chapman, Iliad.

It was the colour of devotion, giving a lustre to reverence, and a gloss to humility. South.
Groves, fields, and meadows, are at any season pleasant to look upon; but never so much as in the opening of the spring, when they are all new and fresh, with their first gloss upon them. Addison, Spect.

3. An interpretation artfully specious; a specious representation. This sense seems to partake of both the former.

Poor painters oft with silly poets join, To fill the world with strange but vain conceit: One brings the stuff, the other stamps the coin, Which breeds nought else but glosses of deceit. Sidney.

It is no part of my secret meaning to draw you hereby into hatred, or to set upon the face of this cause any fairer gloss than the naked truth doth afford. Hooker, Pref.

He seems with forged quaint conceit To set a gloss upon his bad intent.

Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

The common gloss Of theologians. Milton, P. L.

To GLOSS.† v. n. [gloser, French, from the noun. Dr. Johnson. — Gloser, in the sense of comment, is of no great age in the French language. V. Lacombe. "Glosée, notée, 1450." The Sax. glejan, is both to comment and to flatter.]

1. To comment.

Of a beautiful countenance; or, had beautiful eyes; — as Conradus Pellicanus her glosses.

Patrick on 1 Sam. xvi. 12.

Thou detain'st Briseis in thy hands, By priestly glossing on the gods' commands. Dryden, Fab.

2. To make sly remarks.

Her equals first observ'd her growing zeal, And laughing gloss'd, that Abra serv'd so well. Prior.

To GLOSS. v. a.

1. To explain by comment.

In parchment then, large as his fields, he draws Assurances, big as gloss'd civil laws. Donne, Poems, p. 124.

2. To palliate by specious exposition or representation.

Is this the paradise, in description whereof so much glossing and deceiving eloquence hath been spent. Hooker, Sermon.

Do I not reason wholly on your conduct? You have the heart to gloss the foulest cause. Phillips, Briton.

3. To embellish with superficial lustre.

But thou, who lately of the common strain, Wert one of us, if still thou dost retain The same ill habits, the same follies too, Gloss'd over only with a saintlike show, Then I resume the freedom thou I gave, Still thou art bound to vice, and still a slave. Dryden, Pers.

GLOSSA'RIAL.* adj. [from glossary.] Relating to a glossary; as, a glossarial index, i. e. an index referring to words explained in a work, as in the late editions of Shakspeare.

GLOSSARIST.* n. s. [from glossary.]

1. One who writes a gloss or commentary. This seems not to be proper.

The glossarist I take to be Philip de Bergamo, a prior at Padua, who wrote a most elaborate moralisation on Cato. Warton, Hist. E. P. ii. 169.

2. One who writes a dictionary of obscure or antiquated words.

Mr. J. Kersey — with laudable industry has collected almost all the old words, I believe, which are to be found either in Speght or Skinner, and has generally with much fidelity copied the interpretations assigned to them by those two glossarists. Tyrwhit, Vindic. Rowley Controv. p. 162.

GLOSSARY. n. s. [glossarium, Latin; glossaire, French.] A dictionary of obscure or antiquated words.

According to Varro, when delubrum was applied to a place, it signified such a one, in quo dei simulacrum dedicatum est, and also in the old glossaries. Stillingfleet.

I could add another word to the glossary.

Baker.

GLOSSA'TOR.† n. s. [glossateur, French; from gloss.] A writer of glosses; a commentator.

The Jewish doctors understood the text better than Gratian, or John Semeca his glossator.

By. Barlow, Rem. p. 298.

The reason why the assertion of a single judge does not prove the existence of judicial acts, is because his office is to pronounce judgement, and not to become an evidence; but why may not the same be said of two judges? Therefore, in this respect the glossator's opinion must be false. Ayliffe.

All this is related by Aldred, the Saxon glossator, at the end of St. John's Gospel.

Warton, Hist. E. P. i. Diss. i.

GLO'SSER.* n. s. [glossarius, Latin.]

1. A scholiast; a commentator. Neither the glossers upon the Alcoran, nor the most authentic legend of his life, take any notice thereof. L. Addison, Life of Mahomet, (1679,) p. 62.

2. A polisher.

GLO'SSINESS. n. s. [from glossy.] Smooth polish; superficial lustre.

Their surfaces had a smoothness and glossiness much surpassing whatever I had observed in marine or common salt. Boyle.

GLO'SSIST.* n. s. [from gloss.] A writer of glosses.

It was raised by inconsiderate glossists from the mistake of this text. Milton, Tetrachordon.

GLOSSO'GRAPHER.† n. s. [γλῶσσα and γράφω.] A scholiast; a commentator.

The like whereto is found also in the canon law, and noted by the glossographer.

Hayward, Ansv. to Doleman, ch. 1.

Some [words] I believe may pose the ablest glossographer now living. Blount, Anc. Ten. Pref.

GLOSSO'GRAPHY. n. s. [γλῶσσα and γράφω.] The writing of commentaries.

GLO'SSY.† adj. [from gloss.]

1. Shining; smoothly polished.

There came towards us a person of place: he had on him a gown with wide sleeves, of a kind of water camblet, of an excellent azure colour, far more glossy than ours. Bacon.

The rest entire

Shone with a glossy scurf. Milton, P. L.
His surcoat was a bearskin on his back;
His hair hung long behind, a glossy raven black. Dryden.

Myself will search our planted grounds at home,
For downy peaches and the glossy plum. Dryden, Virg.

2. Specious.

That Lord Chesterfield must have been mortified by the lofty contempt, and polite yet keen satire, with which Johnson exhibited him to himself in this letter, it is impossible to doubt. He, however, with that glossy duplicity which was his constant study, affected to be quite unconcerned. Boswell, Life of Johnson.

GLO'TTIS.* n. s. [Gr. γλῶττις.] In anatomy, a cleft or chink in the larynx, serving for the formation of the voice: it is in the form of a little tongue.

The glottis, — reckoned among the cartilages before mentioned — is the principal instrument of modulation. Smith, on Old Age, p. 142.

Letting it pass promptly from the upper part of the glottis, along the roof of the mouth.

Pownell, on the Elem. of Speech, Antig. p. 154.

GLOVE.† n. s. [glofe, Saxon, from kloffie, Danish, to divide; klyftva, Su. Goth. the same. This brings it near to our own word cleave. Junius says that the glove, in Danish, is called haand-kloffer, because it splits and divides the hand. Others think it to be from the Gr. καλύπτω, to hide or cover; or κέλω, the rind or shell of any thing. The word is old in our language: "I wote thee gyfte both goodle and gloves," Romance of The Sowdon of Babyloine, written, according to Mr. Steevens, before the year 1375.] Cover of the hands.

They flew about like chaff i' the wind;
For haste some left their masks behind,
Some could not stay their gloves to find.

Dryden.

White gloves were on his hands, and on his head
A wreath of laurel.
To GLOVE. v. a. [from the noun.] To cover as with a glove.

Dryden.

My limbs,
Weaken'd with grief, being now enrag'd with grief,
Are thrice themselves: hence therefore, thou nice crutch;
A scaly gauntlet now, with joints of steel,
Must glove this hand.

Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

The next he preys on is her palm,
That altn'er of transpiring blood;
So soft, 'tis air but once remov'd,
Tender as 'twere a jelly glov'd.
GLOVER. n. s. [from glove.] One whose trade is to make or sell gloves.

Cleaveland.

Does he not wear a great round beard like a glover's paring knife? Shaks. Mer. W. of Windsor.

To GLOUR.* See to GLOAR: which is in some places pronounced glour or glover.
To GLOUT.† v. n. [A low word, of which I find no etymology. Dr. Johnson.—It is by no means a low word. Better writers than Chapman and Garth, whom Dr. Johnson cites, use it, both as a neuter and active verb. And it is, like glour, and gloar, descended from the Goth. gloa, to behold.] To pout; to look sullen. It is still used in Scotland.

She lurks in the sketch of all her den, and streaks
From out a ghastly whirlpool all her necks,
Where, glouting round her rock, to fish she falls.

Chapman.

That feast of love and heavenly-admitted friendship, the seat of filial grace, became the subject of horror and glouting admiration, pageanted about like a dreadful idol. Milton, Of Reform. B. 1.
Glouting with sullen spite, the fury shook
Her clotted locks, and blasted with each look.

Garth.

To GLOUT.* v. a. To gaze; to view attentively.

His majesty—knew full well—that whosoever attempteth any thing for the publick, (especially if it pertain to religion, and to the opening and clearing of the Word of God,) the same setteth himself upon a stage to be glouted upon by every evil eye.

Translators of the Bible to the Reader, 1611.

To GLOW.† v. n. [Glopan, Sax. gloeyen, Dutch; gloa, Icel. to shine; Gael. and Welsh, glo, a live coal.]

1. To be heated so as to shine without flame.

But sithence silence lesseneth not my fire,
But told it flames, and hidden it does glow,
I will reveal what ye so much desire. Spenser, F. Q.

His goodly eyes,

That o'er the files and musters of the war
Have glow'd like plated Mars, now bend, now turn
Their office upon a tawny front.

Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleop.

Kunigund, wife to the emperor Henry II. to shew her innocency, did take seven glowing irons, one after another, in her bare hands, and had thereby no harm. Hakevill on Providence.

Not all parts like, but all alike inform'd
With radiant light, as glowing iron with fire.

Milton, P. L.

2. To burn with vehement heat.

Nor would you find it easy to compose
The mettled steeds, when from their nostrils flows
The scorching fire that in their entrails glows.

Addison, Ovid.

How op'ning heav'n's happy regions shew,
And yawning gulphs with flaming vengeance glow.

Smith.

Fires that glow,
Shrieks of woe.

Pope.

3. To feel heat of body.

Did not his temples glow
In the same sultry winds and scorching heats?
The cord glides swiftly through his glowing hands.

Addison, Cato.

Gay.

4. To exhibit a strong bright colour.

With a smile that glow'd
Celestial rosy red, love's proper hue.

Milton, P. L.

Dryden.

A malicious joy,
Whose red and fiery beams cast through your visage
A glowing pleasure. Dryden and Lee, Edipus.

From the mingled strength of shade and light,
A new creation rises to my sight;
Such heav'nly figures from his pencil flow,
So warm with life his blended colours glow,
Amidst the soft variety I'm lost.

Addison.

Like th' ethereal glow'd the green expanse.

Savage.

Fair ideas flow,
Strike in the sketch, or in the picture glow. Pope.
Not the fair fruit that on yon branches glows,
With that ripe red th' autumnal sun bestows,
Can move the god.

Pope.

Each pleasing glow shall endless smiles bestow,
And fair Belinda's blush for ever glow. Pope.
Here clearer stars glow round the frozen pole.

Pope.

5. To feel passion of mind, or activity of fancy.

You strive in vain,
To hide your thoughts from him, who knew too well
The inward glowings of a heart in love.

Addison, Cato.

Forc'd compliments and formal bows
Will shew thee just above neglect;
The fire with which thy lover glows,
Will settle into cold respect.

Prior.

Did Shadrach's zeal my glowing breast inspire
To weary tortures, and rejoice in fire.

Prior.

Let the gay conscience of a life well spent
Calm ev'ry thought, inspirit ev'ry grace,
Glow in thy heart, and smile upon thy face.

Pope.

With furies surrounded,
Despairing, confounded,
He trembles, he glows,
Amidst Rhodope's snows,

Pope.

So perish all whose breasts ne'er learn'd to glow
For other's good, or melt at other's woe.

Pope.

To praise is always hard,
When real virtue fires the glowing bard.

Lewis.

6. To rage or burn as a passion.

A fire which every windy passion blows;
With pride it mounts, and with revenge it glows.

Dryden.

When crept into aged veins,
Love slowly burns, and long remains;
It glows, and with a sullen heat,
Like fire in logs, it warms us long.

Shadwell.

To Glow. v. a. To make hot so as to shine. Not in use.

On each side her

Stood pretty dimpled boys, like smiling Cupids,
With divers colour'd fans, whose wind did seem
To glow the delicate cheeks which they did cool.

Shakespeare.

GLOW. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Shining heat.
2. Vehemence of passion.
3. Brightness or vividness of colour.

The pale complexion of true love,
And the red glow of scorn and proud disdain.

Shakespeare.

A waving glow his bloomy beds display,
Blushing in bright diversities of day.

Pope.

Such as suppose that the great stile might happily be blended with the ornamental, that the simple, grave, and majestic dignity of Raffaele could unite with the glow and bustle of a Paulo, or Tintoret, are totally mistaken.

Reynolds.

To GLOW.* See To GLOAR.

GLOWINGLY.* adv. [from the part. glowing.]

1. In a shining manner; brightly.
A little stoop there may be to allay him; he would grow too rauh else: a small eclipse to shadow him; but out he must break glowingly
again, and with a greater lustre.

Beaumont and Fl. Wit without Money.

2. With passion; with admiration, love, or desire.

GLOWWORM. n. s. [glow and worm.] A small creeping grub with a luminous tail.

The honey bags steal from the humble bees,
And for night-tapers crop their waxen thighs,
And light them at the fiery glowworm's eyes.

Shakespeare.

The glowworm shews the matins to be near,
And 'gins to pale his ineffectual fire. Shaks. Hamlet.

A great light droweth a smaller that it cannot be seen; as the sun that of the glowworm.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

The man, who first upon the ground
A glowworm spy'd, supposing he had found
A moving diamond, a breathing stone;
For life it had, and like those jewels shone:
He held it dear, till by the springing day
Inform'd, he threw the worthless worm away.

Walker.

To GLOZE.† v. n. [glezan, Saxon. One of our oldest words. Wicliffe and Chaucer use it in the sense of flatter;
by whom it is written glose.]

1. To flatter; to wheedle; to insinuate; to fawn.

For he could well his glozing speeches frame,
Spenser, F. Q. iii. viii. 14.

Man will hearken to his glozing lies,
And easily transgress. Milton, P. L.
So glaz'd the tempter, and his proem tun'd:
Into the heart of Eve his words made way.

Milton, P. L.

A false glozing parasite would call his foolhardiness valour, and then he may go on boldly, because blindly, and by mistaking himself for a lion, come to perish like an ass.

South.

Now for a glozing speech,
Fair protestations, specious marks of friendship.

Plautus.

2. To comment. This should be gloss.
Which Salique land the French unjustly gloze
To be the realm of France. Shakespeare, Hen. V.

To GLOZE over.* v. a. To palliate by specious exposition. See To GLOSS.
But it is often pronounced and written,
in this sense, gloze.

GLOZE. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Flattery; insinuation.

Now to plain dealing; lay these glozes by.

Shakespeare.

2. Specious show; gloss. Not used.

Precious couches full oft are shaken with a fever;
If then a bodily evil in a bodily gloze be not hidden,
Shall such morning dew be an ease to the heat of a love's fire?

Sidney.

GLO'ZER.† n. s. [from gloze.] A flatterer; "a liar." Huloet.

Yet must I talk so sage and smooth, as though
I were a gloser. Gamm. Gurton's Needle, (1551.)
I may not use the gloser's trade;
I cannot say the crow is white,
But needs must call a spade a spade.

Gifford, Poëie of Gilloflowers, (1580.)

GLO'ZING.* n. s. [from gloze.] Specious representation.

Your goodly glozings and time-serving colludings with the state are but like watermen on the Thames, looking one way, rowing another way.

Mountagu, App. to Cæs. p. 43.

GLUE. n. s. [glu, Fr. gluten, Lat. glud, Welsh.] A viscous body commonly made by boiling the skins of animals to a gelly; any viscous or tenacious matter by which bodies are held one to another; a cement.

Water, and all liquors, do hastily receive dry and more terrestrial bodies proportionable; and dry bodies, on the other side, drink in waters and liquors: so that, as it was well said by one of the ancients of earthly and watery substances, one is a glue to another.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

The driest and most transparent glue is the best.

Moxon.

To build the earth did chance materials chuse,
And through the parts cementing glue diffuse.

Blackmore.

The flowers of grains, mixed with water, will make a sort of glue. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

TO GLUE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To join with a viscous cement.

I fear thy overthrow

More than my body's parting with my soul:
My love and fear glu'd many friends to thee.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.

Whoso teacheth a fool is as one that glueth a potsherd together.

Eccles. xxii. 7.

The custom of crowning the Holy Virgin is so much in vogue among the Italians, that one often sees in their churches a little tinsel crown, or a circle of stars, glued to the canvass over the head of the figure.

Addison on Italy.

Most wounds, if kept clean, and from the air,
the flesh will glue together with its own native balm.

Derham.

2. To hold together.

The parts of all homogeneous hard bodies which fully touch one another, stick together very strongly; and for explaining how this may be, some have invented hooked atoms, which is begging the question; and others tell us their bodies are glued together by rest; that is by an occult quality, or rather by nothing.

Newton, Opticks.

3. To join; to unite; to inviscate.

Those wasps in a honeypot are sensual men plunged in their lusts and pleasures; and when they are once glued to them, 'tis a very hard matter to work themselves out.

L'Estrange.

Intemperance, sensuality, and fleshly lusts do debase men's minds and clog their spirits; sink us down into sense, and glue us to those low and inferior things.

Tillotson.

She curb'd a groan, that else had come;
And pausing, view'd the present in the tomb:
Then to the heart ador'd devoutly glu'd
Her lips, and raising it, her speech renew'd.

Dryden.

I hear thee, view thee, gaze o'er all thy charms,
And round thy phantom glue my clasping arms.

Pope.

GLU'BOILÈR. n. s. [glue and boil.] One whose trade is to make glue.

GLU'ER.† n. s. [from glue.] One who cements with glue. See also GLEWER.

GLU'EY.* adj. See GLEWY and GLEUY.

GLU'EYNESS.* See GLEWINESS.

GLU'ISH.* adj. Partaking of the nature of glue. See also GLEWISH.

To GLUM.* v. n. [from gloom; formerly written glomb. Dr. Johnson notices only the adjective glum, which he calls a low cant word, and for the usage of which he cites the comparatively modern authority of the Guardian. For glum is both a verb, and a substantive, in our ancient writers.] To look sourly; to be sour of countenance.

Huloet.

It is of Love, as of Fortune,—
Which whilom will on folke smile,
And glombe on hem anothir while.

Chaucer, Rom. R. 4356.

GLUM.* n. s. Sullenness of aspect; a frown.

She looked hautely, and gave on me a glum;
There was among them no word then but mum.

Shelton, Poems, p. 44.

GLUM.† adj. Sullen; stubbornly grave. It is used, in some places, for melancholy, dull; and, like the old adjective glummy, is adopted from gloom. See GLOOM.

Some when they hear a story, look glum, and cry,
Well, what then?

Guardian.

GLUMMY.* adj. [from glum, i. e. gloom.] Dark; dismal for want of light.

Such casual blasts may happen, as are most to be feared, when the weather waxeth darke and glummy. Knight, Trial of Truth, (1580.) fol. 27.

TO GLUT. v. a. [engloutir, French; glutio, Lat. to swallow; γλῦσι, Gr.]

1. To swallow; to devour.

Till cramm'd and gorg'd, nigh burst

With suck'd and glutted offal.

Milton, P. L.

2. To cloy; to fill beyond sufficiency; to sate; to disgust.

The ambassador, making his oration, did so magnify the king and queen, as was enough to glut the hearers.

Bacon.

Love breaks friendship, whose delights

Feed, but not glut our appetites.

Denham.

What way remove

His settled hate, and reconcile his love,
That he may look propitious on our toils,
And hungry graves no more be glutted with our spoils.

Dryden.

No more, my friend;

Here let our glutted execution end.

Dryden, Æn.

The fickle ear soon glutted with the sound,
Condemn'd eternal changes to pursue,
Tir'd with the last, and eager of the new.

Prior.

3. To feast or delight even to satiety.

With death's carcass glut the grave.

Milton, P. L.

His faithful heart, a bloody sacrifice,
Torn from his breast, to glut the tyrant's eyes.

Dryden.

A sylvan scene, which, rising by degrees,
Leads up the eye below, nor gluts the sight
With one full prospect; but invites by many,
To view at last the whole.

Dryden.

4. To overfill; to load.

He attributes the ill success of either party to their glutting the market, and retailing too much of a bad commodity at once.

Arbuthnot, Art of Polite Lying.

5. To saturate.

The menstruum, being already glutted, could not act powerfully enough to dissolve it.

Boyle.

GLUT. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. That which is gorged or swallowed.

Disgorging foul

Their devilish glut, chain'd thunderbolts, and hail

Of iron globes.

Milton, P. L.

2. Plenty even to loathing and satiety.

So death

Shall be deceiv'd his glut; and with us two

Be forc'd to satisfy his rav'nous maw.

Milton, P. L.

Let him but set the one in balance against the other, and he shall find himself miserable, even in the very glut of his delights.

L'Estrange.

A glut of study and retirement in the first part of my life, cast me into this; and this will throw me again into study and retirement. Pope to Swift.

3. More than enough; overmuch.

If you pour a glut of water upon a bottle, it receives little of it.

B. Jonson, Discoveries.

4. Any thing that fills up a passage.

The water some suppose to pass from the bottom of the sea to the heads of springs, through certain subterranean conduits or channels, until they were by some glut, stop, or other means arrested in their passage.

Woodward.

TO GLUTINATE.* v. a. [Lat. glutino.]

To join with glue; to cement.

Bailey.

GLUTINA'TION.* n. s. [from glutinate.]

The act of joining with glue.

Bailey.

GLU'TINATIVE.* adj. [from glutinate.]

Tenacious. See AGGLUTINATIVE and CONGLUTINATIVE.

GLUTINO'SITY.* n. s. [Fr. glutinosité.]

Glutinousness; clamminess.

Cotgrave.

GLUTINOUS. adj. [glutineux, French;

from gluten, Latin.] Gluy; viscous;

tenacious.

The cause of all vivification is a gentle and proportionable heat, working upon a glutinous and yielding substance; for the heat doth bring forth spirit in that substance, and the substance being glutinous, produceth two effects: the one, that the spirit is detained, and cannot break forth; the other, that the matter, being gentle and yielding, is driven forwards by the motion of the spirits, after some swelling, into shape and members.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Next this marble venom'd seat,
Smear'd with gums of glutinous heat.

Milton, Comus.

Nourishment too viscid and glutinous to be subdued by the vital force.

Arbuthnot on Aliments.

GLU'TINOUSNESS. [n. s. from glutinous.]

Viscosity; tenacity.

There is a resistance in fluids, which may arise from their elasticity, glutinousness, and the friction of their parts.

Cheyne.

GLUTTON.† n. s. [glouton, French;

gluto, Lat. from glutio, to swallow.]

1. One who indulges himself too much in eating.

The Chinese eat horseflesh at this day, and some gluttons have used to have catfishes baked.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Through Macer's gullet she runs down,
While the vile glutton dines alone;
And, void of modesty and thought,
She follows Bibo's endless drought.

Prior.

If a glutton was to say in excuse of his gluttony, that he only eats such things as it is lawful to eat, he would make as good an excuse for himself as the greedy, covetous, ambitious tradesman, that should say, he only deals in lawful business.

Law.

2. One eager of any thing to excess.

The rest bring home in state the happy pair
To that last scene of bliss, and leave them there;

All those free joys insatiably to prove,
With which rich beauty feasts the glutton love.
Cowley.

Gluttons in murder, wanton to destroy,
Their fatal arts so impiously employ. Granville.
3. A species of bear.
To GLUTTON v. a.* [from the noun.] To load; to glut; to overfill.

Then after all your fooling, fat, and wine,
Glutton'd at last, return at home to pine.
Loveace, Luc. Posth. p. 81.
To GLUTTON' SE.† v. n. [from glutton.]
To play the glutton; to be luxurious.
Sherwood.

And again, οἱ περὶ τὴν ἑλὴν δαίμονες — the material demons do strangely gluttonize upon the nourish and blood of sacrifices.

Hallywell, Melamprom. (1681), p. 102.
GLUTTONOUS. adj. [from glutton.] Given to excessive feeding; delighted over-much with food.

When they would smile and fawn upon his debts,
And take down th' interest in their glut'nous
maws. Shakespeare.

The exceeding luxuriousness of this gluttonous
age, wherein we press nature with overweighty burdens, and finding her strength defective, we take the work out of her hands, and commit it to the artificial help of strong waters. Raleigh.

Well observe
The rule of not too much, by temperance taught
In what thou eat'st and drink'st; seeking from thence
Due nourishment, no gluttonous delight.
Milton, P. L.

GLUTTONOUSLY.† adv. [from gluttonous.]
With the voracity of a glutton.

Sherwood.
GLUTTONY. n. s. [glouttonie, French;
from glutton.] Excess of eating; luxury of the table.

Gluttony, a vice in a great fortune, a curse in a small. Holiday.
Their sumptuous gluttonies and gorgeous feasts,
On citron tables or Atlantick stone. Milton, P. R.
Well may they fear some miserable end,
Whom gluttony and want at once attend.

Dryden, Juv.
The inhabitants of cold moist countries are generally more fat than those of warm and dry;
but the most common cause is too great a quantity of food, and too small a quantity of motion; in plain English, gluttony and laziness. Arbutnot.
GLU'Y. adj. [from glue.] Viscous; tenacious; glutinous.

It is called balsamick mixture, because it is a gluy spumous matter. Harvey on Consumptions.
With gluy was some new foundations lay
Of virgin combs. Dryden, Ann. Mirab.

Whatever is the composition of the vapour, let it have but one quality of being very gluy or vis-cous, and it will mechanically solve all the phenomena of the grotto. Addison.

GLYCO'NIAN } adj.* [Fr. glyconien, gly- GLYCO'NICK. } conique; from the Lat. gly- glyconium.] Denoting a kind of verse in Greek and Latin poetry.

He [Watts] was a maker of verses from fifteen to fifty, and in his youth appears to have paid attention to Latin poetry. His verses to his brother, in the glyconick measure, written when he was seventeen, are remarkably easy and elegant. Johnson, Life of Watts.

GLYN.† n. s. [Irish; glyn, Norm. Fr. a valley; glyn, Cornish, a woody valley;
gleann, glyn, pl. Erse; glen, Scottish.
See GLEN.] A hollow between two mountains.

Though he could not beat out the Irish, yet he did shut them up within those narrow corners and glums under the mountain's foot.

Spenser, State of Ireland.
GLYPH. n. s.* [Fr. glyphe; Gr. γλυφή, from γλύφω, to engrave.] In sculpture or architecture, any kind of ornamental cavity.

Chambers..
GLYPHICK. n. s.* [from γλύφω.] A picture or figure, by which a word was implied;
usually hieroglyphick. See HIEROGLY-
PHICK. But glyphicks is in the Hist. of Peru, p. 43.

GLYP'TICK. n. s.* [Fr. glyptique; Gr.
γλυπτίς, from γλύφω, to engrave.] The art of engraving figures on precious stones.

GLYPTOGRA'PHICK. adj.* [γλυπτίς, and γράφω, Gr.] Describing the methods of engraving figures on precious stones.

A particularly valuable part of this introduction is the glyptographick lithology.

Brit. Crit. vol. 10. 1797. Oct.
GLYPTO'GRAPHY. n. s.* [γλυπτίς, and γράφω; Fr. glyptographie.] A description of the art of engraving upon gems.

The general prolegomena are followed by the author's introduction to glyptography, (l'étude des pierres gravées), in which he shows himself to be a person who has not derived his information merely from the descriptions given by others, and from books of prints, but from the actual contemplation of the originals themselves.

Brit. Crit. vol. 10. 1797. Oct.
To GNAR.† } v. n. χνῆρpan, Sax.; knor-
To GNARL.† } ren, Dutch; knorra, Goth. to murmur; knurra, Icel. the same.]
To growl; to murmur; to snarl.

He gave to rear his bristles strong,
And felly gnar, until day's enemy
Did him appease. Spenser, F. Q.
Thus is the shepherd beaten from thy side,
And wolves are gnaring who shall gnaw thee first.
Shakespeare.

Gnarling sorrow hath less power to bite
The man that mocks at it, and sets it light.

Shakespeare, Rich. II.
The gnarring porter durst not whine for doubt;
Still were the furies while their sovereign spoke.
Fairfax.

GNAR. n. s.* A knot. See GNARLED.

GNAR'LED.† adj. [gnar, nar, or nurr, is in Staffordshire a hard knot of wood which boys drive with sticks. Dr. Johnson.—Gnar, as a hard knot of wood, is one of our oldest words. Chaucer uses
it. It is also in our old lexicography.
See Bullockar and Cockeram. It is from the Teut. knorra. See likewise KNARE.]
Knotty.

Merciful heav'n!
Thou rather with thy sharp and sulph'rous bolt
Split'st the unweedgeable and gnarled oak,
Than so the myrtle. Shakespeare, Meas. for Meas.
To GNASH.† v. a. [knaschen, Dutch;
gnista, Icelandick; and our own word
at first was gnast. Wicliffe uses gnastide for gnashed; and nearly two centuries
after him, bishop Fisher, in his Psalms:
"They gnaste with their teeth."] To strike together; to clash.

Laugh not with him, lest thou have sorrow with him, and lest thou gnash thy teeth in the end.

Eccles. xxx. 10.
The seer, who could not yet his wrath assuage,
Roll'd his green eyes, that spark'd with his rage,
And gnash'd his teeth. Dryden, Virg.

To GNASH. v. n.

1. To grind or collide the teeth.
He shall gnash with his teeth, and melt away.
Psal. cxii. 10.
2. To rage even to collision of the teeth;
to fume; to growl.
His great iron teeth he still did grind,
And grimly gnash, threatening revenge in vain.
Spenser, F. Q.
They gnashed upon me with their teeth.
Psal. xxxv. 16.

They him laid
gnashing for anguish, and despite and shame,
To find himself not matchless. Milton, P. L.
With boiling rage Atrides burn'd,
And foam betwix his gnashing grinders churn'd.
Dryden.

GNASHING. n. s.* [from gnash.] Collision of the teeth in rage or pain.

Let her taste of most terrible punishments, sorrowful plagues, waylings, and gnashings of teeth. Bale on the Revel. (1550), F. iii.
There shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth.
St. Matt. viii. 12.

GNAT. n. s. [χνατ, Saxon.]
1. A small winged stinging insect.
Her whip of cricket's bone, the lash of film;
Her waggoner, a small grey-coated gnat. Shaks.
2. Any thing proverbially small.

Ye blind guides, which strain at a gnat and swallow a camel. St. Matt. xxiii. 24.

GNAT'FLOWER. n. s. [gnat and flower.]
A flower, otherwise called the bee-flower.

GNATHO'NICAL. adj.* [Lat. gnathoni- cus.] Deceitful in words; flattering;
like a smelleast or parasite.

Bullockar, and Cockeram.
GNATHO'NICALLY. adv.* [from gnathoni- cal.] Flatteringly; deceitfully.

Cockeram.
GNAT'SNAPPER. n. s. [gnat and snap.]
A bird so called, because he lives by catching gnats.

They deny that any bird is to be eaten whole,
but only the gnatsnapper. Hakewill on Providence.

GNAT'WORM. n. s.* [gnat and worm.]
A small water insect produced of a gnat.

To GNAW.† v. a. [gnazan, Saxon; kna- ghen, Dutch; gnaga, Su. Goth. nagen,
German; naga, Icel. खाँव, Gr.]

1. To eat by degrees; to devour by slow corrosion.

A knowing fellow that would gnaw a man
Like to a vermine, with his hellish braine,
And many an honest soule, even quick had slain.
Chapman.

To you such scabb'd harsh fruit is giv'n, as raw
Young soldiers at their exercisings gnaw.
Dryden, Juv.

2. To bite in agony or rage.
Alas, why gnaw you so your nether lip?
Some bloody passion shakes your very frame.
Shakespeare, Othello.
They gnawed their tongues for pain.

Rev. xvi. 10.
He comely fell, and dying gnaw'd the ground.
Dryden.

3. To wear away by biting.
Gnawing with my teeth my bonds assunder,
I gain'd my freedom. Shakespeare, Com. of Err.
Like rotten fruit I fall, worn like a cloth,
Gnawn into rags by the devouring moth. Sandys.
A lion, hampered in a net, called to a mouse to help him out of the snare: the mouse gnawed
the threads to pieces, and set the lion at liberty.
L'Estrange.

4. To fret; to waste; to corrode.

5. To pick with the teeth.

His bones clean pick'd; his very bones they gnaw. Dryden.

To GNAW. v. n. To exercise the teeth. It is now used actively.

I might well, like the spaniel, gnaw upon the chain that ties me; but I should sooner mar my teeth than procure liberty. Sidney.

See the hell of having a false woman: my bed shall be abused, my coffers ransacked, my reputation gnaw'd at. Shakespeare.

I thought I saw a thousand fearful wrecks,
A thousand men that fishes gnaw'd upon. Shakespeare, Rich. III.

GNA'WER.† n. s. [from gnaw.] One that gnaws.

Plautus calls him [the backbiter] "mus nomenis," a mouse (that is the gnawer, or eater up,) of one's good name.

Bp. Andrews on the Dec. (ed. 1650), p. 507.

To GNI'BBLE.* See To NIBBLE. Gni-ble, however, is the old orthography.

GNOFF.* n. s. [perhaps of the same origin with chuff. See CHUFF. Bullokar and Cockeram define a gnoff to be a churl.] A miser.

A rich gnofe, i. e. a rich grab, or miserable catiff, as I render it; which interpretation, to be proper and significant, I gather by the sense of that ancient metre,

The catiff gnof sed to his crue,
My money is many, my incomes but few.

Comm. upon Chaucer's Mill. Tale, &c. (1665), p. 8.

GNOME.* n. s. [Gr. γνῶμη.]

1. A brief reflection, worthy to be remembered.

Gnome [is] a saying pertaining to the manners and common practices of men, which declareth, by an apte brevity, what in this our lyfe ought to be done or not done.

Peacham, Gard. of Eloq. (1577), sign. V. iii.

2. One of those invisible people, who are fabled to inhabit the inner parts of the earth, and to fill it to the centre. [Fr. gnome. Vigenere calls them also gnomons; and some derive the word from the Gr. γνῶμων, one that takes cognizance of a thing.]

The graver prude sinks downward to a gnome,
In search of mischief still on earth to roam.

Pope, Rape of the Lock.

The laughers gave out, that the gnomes and sylphs, disguised like ruffians, had shot him, as a punishment for revealing the secrets of the cabala; a crime not to be pardoned by these jealous spirits!

Dr. Warton, Ess. on Pope.

GNO'MICAL.* adj. [Fr. gnomique, from γνῶμη, a sentence.] Sententious; containing maxims or reflections.

Adding this excellent, gnomical, and canonical conclusion.

Conference at Hampton Court, (1603), p. 44.

GNOMOLO'GICAL.* adj. [from gnomology.] Pertaining to gnomology.

GNOMO'LOGY.* n. s. [γνῶμη and λόγος.] A collection of maxims and reflections.

Which art of powerful reclaiming wisest men have also taught in their ethical precepts and gnomologies.

Milton, Tetrachordon.

GNO'MON. n. s. [γνῶμων.] The hand or pin of a dial.

The gnomon of every dial is supposed to represent the axis of the world, and therefore the two ends or extremities thereof must directly answer to the north and south pole.

There were from great antiquity sun-dials, by the shadow of a style or gnomon, denoting the hours of the day. Brown.

GNOMO'NICK.* adj. [from gnomon.] Pertaining to the art of dialling.

The gnomonick projection is also called the horologigraphic projection, because it is the foundation of dialling. Chambers.

GNOMO'NICKS. n. s. pl. [γνῶμωνίχῃ.] A science which makes a part of the mathematics: it teaches to find the just proportion of shadows for the construction of all kinds of sun and moon dials, and for knowing what o'clock it is by means thereof; as also of a gnomon or stile, that throws off the shadow for this purpose. Trevoux.

GNO'STICISM.* n. s. [from Gnostick.] The heresy of the Gnosticks.

Though it be indeed but a spice of the old abhorred Gnosticism.

More, Antid. against Idolatry, Pref.

GNO'STICK.* n. s. [old French, gnostique, Greek γνῶσις, from γινῶσκα, to know.] One of the earliest hereticks.

I think that no man that reads it [the first Epistle of St. John] with attention, can doubt but that it is particularly designed against the impious sect of the Gnosticks; who, as the fathers tell us, sprang from Simon Magus, and pretended to extraordinary knowledge and illumination; from whence they had the name of Gnosticks; but notwithstanding this glittering pretence, they did allow themselves in all manner of impious and vicious practices; "turning the grace of God into lasciviousness," as St. Jude speaks of them.

Tillotson, Ser. vol. i. S. 15.

GNO'STICK.* adj. Relating to the heresy of the Gnosticks.

The Nicolaitans, of whom mention is made in the Apocalypse of St. John, seem to have been of the Gnostick sect. Percy, Key to the N. Test.

To GO.† v. n. pret. I went; I have gone. [zan, Sax. This was probably changed to gone, or gang, then contracted to go. Went is the preterite of the old verb wend. Dr. Johnson.—Go, goen, and gon are the ancient past participles of this verb. The Icelandick, Su. Gothick, and Dan. gaa, to go, must be likewise observed in the etymology. Some refer to the Greek verb also, ἵκω, to go.]

1. To walk; to move step by step.

You know that love
Will creep in service where it cannot go. Shaks.

After some months those muscles become callous; and, having yielded to the extension, the patient makes shift to go upon it, though lamely. Wiseman, Surgery.

2. To move; not stand still.

Rise, let us be going. St. Matt. xxvi. 46.

3. To walk solemnly.

If there be cause for the church to go forth in solemn procession, his whole family have such business come upon them that no one can be spared. Hooker.

4. To walk leisurely, not run.

And must I go to him?
—Thou must run to him; for thou hast staid so long, that going will scarce serve the turn. Shaks.

5. To march or walk a-foot.

I will only go through on my feet. Num. xx. 19.

6. To travel; to journey.

From them I go
This uncouth errand sole. Milton, P. L.

7. To proceed; to make a progress.
Thus others with defamations wound,
While they stab us; and so the jest goes round. Dryden.

8. To remove from place to place.

I am in blood
Stept in so far, that, should I wade no more,
Returning were as tedious as go o'er. Shaks. Macb.

9. To depart from a place; to move from a place; the opposite of to come.

I hope it be not gone, to tell my lord
That I kiss ought but him. Shakespeare, Cymb.

At once, good-night:
Stand not upon the order of your going,
But go at once. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

And when she had so said, she went her way. St. John, xi. 28.

I will let you go, that ye may sacrifice, only you shall not go very far away. Ex. viii. 28.

Colchester oysters are put into pits, where the sea goeth and cometh. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

A young tall squire
Did from the camp at first before him go. Cowley.

Then I concur to let him go for Greece,
And wish our Egypt fairly rid of him. Dryden.

Go first the master of thy herds to find,
True to his charge, a loyal swain and kind. Pope, Odyssey.

10. To move or pass in any manner, or to any end.

Though the vicar be bad, or the parson be evil,
Go not for thy tything thyself to the devil. Tusser.

She may go to bed when she list; all is as she will. Shakespeare.

You did wish that I would make her turn;
Sir, she can turn and turn, and yet go on. Shakespeare, Othello.

I am glad to see your lordship abroad: I heard say your lordship was sick: I hope your lordship goes abroad by advice. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

The mourners go about the streets. Ecc. xii. 5.

The sun shall go down over the prophets, and the day shall be dark over them. Mac. iii. 6.

Put every man his sword by his side, and go in and out from gate to gate throughout the camp. Ex. xxxii. 27.

The sun, which once did shine alone,
Hung down his head, and wish'd for night,
When he beheld twelve suns for one

Going about the world, and giving light. Herbert.

This seen, the rest at awful distance stood,
As if they had been there as servants set,
To stay, or to go on, as he thought good,
And not pursue, but wait on his retreat. Dryden, Ann. Mir.

Turn not children going, 'till you have given them all the satisfaction they are capable of. Locke.

History only acquaints us that his fleet went up the Elbe, he having carried his arms as far as that river. Arbuthnot.

The last advice I give you relates to your behaviour when you are going to be hanged, which, either for robbing your master, for housebreaking, or going upon the highway, may very probably be your lot. Swift, Direct. to the Footman.

Those who come for gold will go off with pewter and brass, rather than return empty. Swift.

11. To pass in company with others.

Thou shalt again be adorned with thy tabrets, and shalt go forth in the dances of them that make merry. Jer. xxxi. 4.

Away, and with thee go, the worst of woes,
That seek'st my friendship, and the gods thy foes. Chapman.

He goeth in company with the workers of iniquity, and walketh with wicked men. Job, xxiv. 8.

Whatever remains in story of Atlas, or his kingdom of old, is so obscured with age or fables, that it may go along with those of the Atlantic islands. Temple.

12. To proceed in any course of life good or bad.

And the Levites that are gone away far from me, when Israel went astray, which went astray away from me after their idols, they shall even bear their iniquity. Ezek. xlv. 10.

13. To proceed in mental operations.

If I had unwarily too far engaged myself for the present publishing it, truly I should have kept it by me till I had once again gone over it.

Digby on the Soul, Dedie.

Thus I have gone through the speculative consideration of the Divine Providence.

Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

I hope, by going over all these particulars, you may receive some tolerable satisfaction about this great subject. South.

If we go over the laws of Christianity, we shall find that, excepting a few particulars, they enjoin the same things, only they have made our duty more clear and certain. Tillotson.

In their primary qualities we can go but a very little way. Locke.

I go over some parts of this argument again, and enlarge a little more upon them. Locke.

They are not able all their life-time to reckon, or regularly go over any moderate series of numbers. Locke.

14. To take any road.

I will go along by the highway; I will neither turn to the right hand nor to the left. Deut. ii. 27.
Who shall bemoan thee? Or who shall go aside to ask how thou doest? Jer. xv. 5.

His horses go about Almost a mile, Shakespeare, Macbeth.

I have endeavoured to escape into the ease and freedom of a private scene, where a man may go his own way and his own pace. Temple.

15. To march in a hostile or warlike manner.

You were advis'd his flesh was capable Of wounds and scars, and that his forward spirit Would lift where most trade of danger rang'd; Yet did you say go forth. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

We be not able to go up against the people, for they are stronger than we. Numb. xiii. 31.

Let us go down after the Philistines by night, and spoil them until the morning light. 1 Sam. xiv. 36.

Thou art not able to go against this Philistine to fight with him. 1 Sam. xvii. 33.

Duration in itself is to be considered as going on in one constant, equal, uniform course. Locke.

51. To Go about. To attempt; to endeavour; to set one's self to any business.

O dear father,

It is thy business that I go about. Shaks. K. Lear.

I lost him; but so found, as well I saw He could not lose himself, but went about His father's business. Milton, P. R.

Which answer exceedingly united the vulgar minds to them, who concurred only with them as they saw them like to prevail in what they went about. Clarendon.

Some men, from a false persuasion that they cannot reform their lives, and root out their old vicious habits, never so much as attempt, endeavour, or go about it. South.

Either my book is plainly enough written to be rightly understood by those who peruse it with attention and indifference, or else I have writ mine so obscurely that it is in vain to go about to mend it. Locke.

They never go about, as in former times, to hide or palliate their vices; but expose them freely to view. Swift.

52. To Go aside. To err; to deviate from the right.

If any man's wife go aside, and commit a trespass against him. Numb. v. 12.

53. To Go between. To interpose; to moderate between two.

I did go between them, as I said; but more than that, he loved her; for, indeed, he was mad for her. Shakespeare.

54. To Go by. To pass away unnoticed.

Do not you come my tardiness to chide, That laps'd in time and passion, lets go by Th' important acting of your dread command? Shakespeare, Hamlet.

So much the more our carver's excellent, Which lets go by some sixteen years, and makes her

As she liv'd now. Shakespeare, Wint. Tale.

What's that to us? The time goes by; away. Shakespeare.

55. To Go by. To find or get in the conclusion.

In argument with men a woman ever Goes by the worse, whatever be her cause.

Milton, S. A.

He's sure to go by the worse that contends with an adversary that is too mighty for him. L'Est.

56. To Go by. To observe as a rule.

'Tis not to be supposed, that by searching one can positively judge of the size and form of a stone; and indeed the frequency of the fits, and violence of the symptoms, are a better rule to go by. Sharp, Surgery.

57. To Go down. To be swallowed; to be received, not rejected.

Nothing so ridiculous, nothing so impossible, but it goes down whole with him for truth and earnest. L'Esrange.

Folly will not easily go down in its own natural form with discerning judges. Dryden.

If he be hungry, bread will go down. Locke.

Ministers are so wise to leave their proceedings to be accounted for by reasoners at a distance, who often mould them into the systems that do not only go down very well in the coffeehouse, but are supplies for pamphlets in the present age. Swift.

58. To Go in and out. To do the business of life.

The Lord shall preserve thy going out and thy coming in. Ps.

59. To Go in and out. To be at liberty.

He shall go in and out, and find pasture. St. John, x. 9.

60. To Go off. To die; to go out of life; to de cease.

I would the friends we miss were safe arriv'd: Some must go off; and yet, by these I see,

So great a day as this is cheaply bought. Shaks. Mac.

In this manner he went off, not like a man that departed out of life, but one that returned to his abode. Taitler.

61. To Go off. To depart from a post. The leaders having charge from you to stand, Will not go off until they hear you speak. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

62. To Go off. To fire.

As a goose

In death contracts her talons close, So did the knight, and with one clasp

The trickier of his pistol draw: The gun went off. Hudibras, i. iii.

63. To Go on. To make attack.

Bold Cethegus,

Whose valour I have turn'd into his poison, And prais'd so to daring, as he would Go on upon the gods. B. Jonson, Catiline.

64. To Go on. To proceed.

He found it a great war to keep that peace, but was fain to go on in his story. Sidney.

He that desires only that the work of God and religion shall go on, is pleased with it, whoever is the instrument. Bp. Taylor.

I have escaped many threats of ill fits by these motions; if they go on, the only poltice I have dealt with is wool from the belly of a fat sheep.

Temple.

To look upon the soul as going on from strength to strength, to consider that she is to shine for ever with new accessions of glory, and brighten to all eternity, is agreeable. Addison.

Go on cheerfully in the glorious course you have undertaken. Addison.

Copious bleeding is the most effectual remedy in the beginning of the disease; but when the expectation goes on successfully, not so proper, because it sometimes suppresseth it.

Arbutnot on Diet.

I have already handled some abuses during the late management, and in convenient time shall go on with the rest. Swift.

When we had found that design impracticable, we should not have gone on in so expensive a management of it. Swift.

Many clergymen write in so diminutive a manner, with such frequent blots and interlineations, that they are hardly able to go on without perpetual hesitations, or extraordinary expletives. Swift.

I wish you health to go on with that noble work. Bp. Berkeley.

65. To Go over. To revolt; to betake himself to another party.

In the change of religion, men of ordinary understandings don't so much consider the principles as the practice of those to whom they go over. Addison on Italy.

Power, which, according to the old maxim, was used to follow, is now gone over to money. Swift.

66. To Go out. To go upon any expedition.

You need not have picked me: there are other men fitter to go out than I. Shakespeare, Hen. IV.

67. To Go out. To be extinguished.

Think'st thou the fiery fever will go out, With titles blown from adulation? Shaks. Hen. V.

Spirit of wine burned till it go out of itself, will burn no more. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

The care of a state, or an army, ought to be as constant as the chymist's fire, to make any great production; and if it goes out for an hour, perhaps the whole operation fails. Temple.

The morning, as mistaken, turns about; And all her early fires again go out. Dryden, Aurengzebe.

Let the acquaintance be decently buried, and the flame rather go out than be smothered.

Collier of Friendship.

My blood runs cold, my heart forgets to heave, And life itself goes out at thy displeasure. Addison, Cato.

And at her felt approach and secret might,
Art after art goes out, and all is night.

Pope, Dunciad.

68. To Go out. To proceed formally; still an academical phrase; as, to go out grand compounder.

Now heaven be praised, Silvio;
Thy all-destroying arrows and thy bow
Thou hast plied so well about these woods, that now

Thou art gone out thy arts-master.

Fanshawe, Past. Fido, p. 146.

69. To Go through. To perform thoroughly; to execute.

Finding Pyrocles every way able to go through with that kind of life, he was as desirous for his sake as for his own to enter into it. Sidney.

If you can as well go through with the statute laws of that land, I will think you have not lost all your time there. Spenser.

Kings ought not to suffer their council to go through with the resolution and direction, as if it depended on them, but take the matter back into their own hands. Bacon.

He much feared the earl of Antrim had not steadiness of mind enough to go through with such an undertaking. Clarendon.

The amazing difficulty and greatness of his account will rather terrify than inform him, and keep him from setting heartily about such a task, as he despairs ever to go through with it.

South, Serm.

The powers in Germany are borrowing money,
in order to go through their part of the expense.

Addison on the War.

70. To Go through. To suffer; to undergo. I tell thee that it is absolutely necessary for the common good that thou shouldst go through this operation. Arbutnot.

71. To Go upon. To take as a principle. This supposition I have gone upon through those papers. Addison.

72. The senses of this word are very indistinct: its general notion is motion or progression. It commonly expresses passage from a place, in opposition to come. This is often observable even in figurative expressions. We say, the words that go before and that come after: to-day goes away, and to-morrow comes.

- Go to, to* interj. Come, come, take the right course. A scornful exhortation, Dr. Johnson says; citing only the three poetical examples. It is sometimes also a phrase of exhortation or encouragement, as in the example from Genesis; and of preparation required, as in that from the book of Kings.

They said to one another, Go to, let us make brick, &c. And they said, Go to, let us build us a city and tower, whose top may reach unto heaven. Gen. xi. 3, 4.

One went in, and told his lord, saying, Thus and thus said the maid that is of the land of Israel. And the king of Syria said, Go to, go, and I will send a letter unto the king of Israel.

2 Kings, v. 4, 5.

Go to now, ye that say, To-day or to-morrow we will go into such a city, and continue there a year, and buy and sell, and get gain; whereas ye know not what shall be on the morrow.

St. James, iv. 13, 14.

Go to then, O thou far renowned son
Of great Apollo; shew thy famous might In medicine. Spenser.

Go to, go to, thou art a foolish fellow;
Let me be clear of thee. Shakespeare, Tw. Night.

My favour is not bought with words like these:
Go to; you'll teach your tongue another tale.

Rowe.

- Go-by, n. s.* Delusion; artifice; circumvention; over-reach.

Except an apprentice is instructed how to adulterate and varnish, and give you the go-by upon occasion, his master may be charged with neglect. Collier on Pride.

- Go-CART, n. s.* [go and cart.] A machine in which children are inclosed to teach them to walk, and which they push forward without danger of falling.

Young children, who are tried in
Go-carts, to keep their steps from sliding,
When members knit, and legs grow stronger,
Make use of such machine no longer. Prior.

- GOAD, † n. s.* [Sax. gōbe, gābe, gāb; Icel. gadda, to prick.] A pointed instrument with which oxen are driven forward.

How can he get wisdom that holdeth the plough,
and that glorieth in the goad, that driven oxen, and is occupied in their labours, and whose talk is of bullocks? Eccles. xxxviii. 25.

Off in his harden'd hand a goad he bears. Pope.

- To GOAD, † v. a.* [Icel. gadda.]

1. To prick or drive with the goad.
2. To incite; to stimulate; to instigate; to drive forward.

Most dangerous

Is that temptation, that doth goad us on
To sin in loving virtue. Shaks. Meas. for Meas.

Goaded with most sharp occasions,
Which lay nice manners by, I put you to
The use of your own virtues. Shaks. All's well.

Of all that breathes the various progeny,
Stung with delight, is goaded on by thee. Dryden.

- GOAL, n. s.* [gaule, Fr. a long pole set up to mark the bounds of the race.]

1. The landmark set up to bound a race; the point marked out to which racers run.

As at the Olympian games, or Pythian fields,
Part curb their fiery steeds, or shun the goal
With rapid wheels. Milton, P. L.

And the slope sun his upward beam
Shoots against the dusky pole,
Pacing toward the other goal. Milton, Comus.

2. The starting post. Hast thou beheld, when from the goal they start,
The youthful charioteers with heaving heart
Rush to the race? Dryden, Virg.

3. The final purpose; the end to which a design tends.

Our poet has always the goal in his eye, which directs him in his race: some beautiful design, which he first establishes, and then contrives the means, which will naturally conduct him to his end. Dryden.

Each individual seeks a several goal;
But heav'n's great view is one, and that the whole. Pope.

So man, who here seems principal alone,
Perhaps acts second to some sphere unknown;
Touches some wheel, or verges to some goal;
'Tis but a part we see, and not a whole. Pope.

4. It is sometimes improperly written for goal, or jail.

*To GOAM, See To GAUM.

- GOAR, † n. s.* [goror, Welsh. Dr. Johnson. — Geir, Icel. a shred. "Goor of a cloth, lacinia." Prompt. Parv.] Any edging sewed upon cloth to strengthen it, according to Skinner; but rather a slip of cloth or linen, inserted in order to widen a garment in any particular place.

A goar-coat was, in the time of queen Elizabeth, a gown or petticoat so cut, as to be very broad at the bottom, and narrow at the upper end; as may be observed in the pictures of that period. See Suppl. to Grose's Gloss.

A scent she wored, barred all of silk,
A barne-cloth cke as white as morwe milk
Upon her lendes, full of many a gore.

Chaucer, Mill. Tale.

- Go'ARISH,* adj.* [from goar.] Patched; mean; doggrel.

May they know no language but that gibberish they prattle to their parcels, unless it be the goarish Latin they write in their bonds; and may they write that false, and lose their debts.

Beaumont and Fl. Philaster.

- GOAT, † n. s.* [gac, Goth. and Scotch: geit, Icel. gaitin, Sax. See the 5th sense of GATE.] A ruminant animal that seems a middle species between deer and sheep.

Gall of goats, and slips of yew. Shaks. Macbeth.
We Cyclops care not for your goat-fed Jove,
Nor other blest ones; we are better farre.

Chapman.

You may draw naked boys riding and playing with their paper mills upon goats, eagles, or dolphins. Peacham.

The little bear that rock'd the mighty Jove,
The swan whose borrow'd shape conceal'd his love,
Are grac'd with light; the nursing goat's repaid
With heaven, and duty rais'd the pious maid.

Creech.

- GOAT'BREARD, n. s.* [goat and beard; barba capri.] A plant.

- GOAT'CHAFER, n. s.* An insect; a kind of beetle. Bailey.

- Go'ATFISH,* n. s.* [goat and fish.] The name of a fish, caught in the Mediterranean; called also by some caper.

- GOAT'HERD, n. s.* [gac and hýp, Saxon, a feeder or tender.] One whose employment is to tend goats.

Is not thilk same goatherd proud,
That sits on yonder bank,
Whose straying herd themselves doth shrowd
Among the bushes rank? Spenser, Shep. Cal.

They first gave the goatherd good contentment, and the marquis and his servant chased the kid about the stack. Wotton.

- GOAT'TISH, adj.* [from goat.] Resembling a goat in any quality; as, rankness; lust.

An admirable evasion of a whoremaster, man, to lay his goatish disposition on the change of a star. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

The last is notorious for its goatish smell, and tufts not unlike the beard of that lecherous animal. More against Atheism.

- GOAT'MARJORAM, n. s.* The same with GOATSBEAR.

- GOAT'SMILK, n. s.* [goat and milk.] This is more properly two words.

After the fever and such like accidents are diminished, asses and goatsmilk may be necessary. Wiseman, Surgery.

- GOAT'SMILKER, n. s.* [goat and milker.] A kind of owl so called from sucking goats.

- GOAT'S Rue, n. s.* [galega.] A plant.

Goat's Rue has the reputation of being a great alexipharmick and sudorific: the Italians eat it raw and boiled; with us it is of no esteem. Hill.

- GOAT'SKIN, n. s.* [goat and skin.] Then fill'd two goatskins, with her hands divine;
With water one, and one with sable wine.

Pope, Odyssey.

GOA'TSUCKER.* n. s. [goat and sucker.] A name by which the bird caprimulgus is called in some parts of England.

GOA'TS-THORN. n. s. [goat and thorn.] An herb.

GOB.† n. s. [gob, old Fr.]

1. A quantity; a lump: a low word, but still in use in the North. Craven Dialect.
Dost think I have so little wit as to part with such a gob of money? L'Estrange.

2. A mouthful, in some parts of England; whence a gob-string also for a bridele, and gob-stick for a spoon. [Irish, gob. See GAB.]

GOBLET.† n. s. [from gob, the mouth. See GAB. Old Fr. gob, a gulph; gober, to swallow.] A mouthful; as much as can be swallowed at once; originally a morsel, a small quantity of any thing.

A littl sour-dow apireith all the goblet.
Wicliffe, Galat. v. 9.
He saide, he hadde a gobbet of the sayl
That seinte Peter hadde. Chaucer, C. T. Prol.
Therewith she spew'd out of her filthy maw
A flood of poison, horrible and black,
Full of great lumps of flesh and goblets raw. Spenser, F. Q.

By devilish policy art thou grown great,
And, like ambitious Sylla, overgorg'd
With goblets of thy mother's bleeding heart.

Shakespeare, Hen. VI.
The cooks, slicing it into little goblets, prick it on a prong of iron, and hang it in a furnace.

Sandys, Travels.
The giant gorg'd with flesh, and wine, and blood,

Lay stretch'd at length, and snoring in his den,
Belching raw goblets from his maw, o'ercharg'd
With purple wine and crudd'd gore confus'd.
Addison.

To GO'BLET. v. a. [from the noun.] To swallow at a mouthful. A low word.

Down comes a kite powdering upon them, and goblets up both together. L'Estrange.

GO'BLETLY.* adv. [from goblet.] In pieces. Obsolete. Huolto.

To GO'BBLE.† v. a. [from gob; whence gober, to swallow, old Fr. See GAB and GOB.] To swallow hastily with tumult and noise.

The sheep were so keen upon the acorns, that they gobbled up now and then a piece of the coat along with them. L'Estrange.

The time too precious now to waste,
And supper gobbled up in haste,
Again afresh to cards they run. Swift.

To GO'BBLE.* v. n. To make a noise in the throat, as the turkey does. Dr. Johnson confounds this word with the verb active.

Of last year's corn in barn great store;
Fat turkies gobbling at the door. Prior.
As a male turkey straggling on the green—
Urg'd by enkindling wrath he gobbling goes. Crabbe.

GO'BBLEGUT.* n. s. [gobble and gut.] A greedy feeder. A low expression.

GO'BBLER. n. s. [from gobble.] One that devours in haste; a gormand; a greedy eater.

GO'BETWEEN.† n. s. [go and between.] One that transacts business by running between two parties. Commonly in an ill sense.

Even as you came into me, her assistant, or go-between, parted from me: I say, I shall be with her between ten and eleven.

Shakespeare, Merry W. of Windsor.
They only are the internuncios, or the gobetweens, of this trim devised mummery.

Milton, Animadv. Rem. Def.
The broker has his countenance ready to laugh with the merchant, though the abuse is to fall on himself, because he knows that, as a gobetween, he shall find his account in being in the good graces of a man of wealth. Tatler, No. 225.

GO'BLET.† n. s. [gobelet, Fr.; from the Gr. κύπελλον, a sort of cup; Lat. cupellum; hence cupelet, as it were; and so gobelet, goblet.] A bowl, or cup, that holds a large draught.

Like a round goblet, which wanteth not liquor.

Cantic. vii. 2.
My figur'd goblets for a dish of wood.

We love not loaded boards, and goblets crown'd;
But free from surfeits our repose is found. Denh.
Crown high the goblets with a cheerful draught;
Enjoy the present hour, adjourn the future thought. Dryden.

GO'BLIN.† n. s. [French, gobelin, which Spenser has once retained; writing it in three syllables. This word some derive from the Gibellines, a faction in Italy; so that elfe and goblin is Guelph and Gibelline, because the children of either party were terrified by their nurses with the name of the other; but it appears that elfe is Welsh, and much older than those factions. Eilff wilhon are phantoms of the night; and the Germans likewise have long had spirits among them named Goboldi, from which gobelin might be derived. Dr. Johnson.—The word is probably from the Gr. κόβλαος, a kind of demon, according to the scholiast on the Plutus of Aristophanes; whence also the low Latin gobelinus. "Dæmon enim, quem de Dianæ phano expulit, adhuc in eadem urbe degit, et in variis frequenter formis apparet neminem lædit. Hunc vulgus gobelinum appellat." Orderic. Vitalis, lib. 5. p. 556. Du Cange represents the goblin as delighting more in mockery than mischief. V. GOBELINUS.]

1. An evil spirit; a walking spirit; a frightful phantom.

Angels and ministers of grace defend us!
Be thou a spirit of health, or goblin damn'd,
Bring with thee airs from heav'n, or blasts from hell?

Shakespeare.
To whom the goblin, full of wrath, reply'd,
Art thou that traitor angel?

Milton, P. L.
Always, whilst he is young, be sure to preserve his tender mind from all impressions and notions of spirits and goblins, or any fearful apprehensions in the dark. Locke.

2. A fairy; an elf.

His son was Elfinel, who overcame
The wicked gobelines in bloody field;
But Elfant was of most renowned fame,
Who of all crystal did Panthea build. Spens. F. Q.
Go, charge my goblins that they grind their joints

With dry convulsions; shorten up their sinews
With aged cramps. Shakespeare, Tempest.

Mean time the village rouses up the fire,
While well attested, and as well believ'd,
Heard solemn goes the goblin story round. Thoms.

GOD. n. s. [308, Saxon, which likewise signifies good. The same word passes in both senses with only accidental variations through all the Teutonick dialects.]

1. The Supreme Being.

God is a spirit, and they that worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth. St. John, iv. 24.

God above
Deal between thee and me. Shakespeare, Macb.
All the churches of God are united into one by the unity of discipline and government, by virtue whereof the same Christ ruleth in them all. Pears.
The Supreme Being, whom we call God, is necessary, self-existent, eternal, immense, omnipotent, omniscient, and best being; and therefore also a being who is and ought to be esteemed most sacred or holy. Grew, Cosmol. Sacra.

2. A false god; an idol.

He that sacrificeth unto any god, save unto the Lord only, he shall be utterly destroyed.

Exod. xxii. 20.
As flies to wanton boys are we to the gods,
They kill us for their sport. Shakespeare, K. Lear.
Strong god of arms, whose iron sceptre sways
The freezing north, and Hyperborean seas,
And Scythian colds, and Thracia's winter coast,
Where stand thy steeds, and thou art honour'd most. Dryden.

3. Any person or thing deified or too much honoured.

Whose end is destruction, whose god is their belly. Phil.

I am not Licio,
But one that scorns to live in this disguise,
For such a one as leaves a gentleman,
And makes a god of such a cullion. Shakespeare.
To GOD. v. a. [from the noun.] To deify; to exalt to divine honours.

This last old man,
Lov'd me above the measure of a father;
Nay, goddied me, indeed. Shakespeare, Coriol.

GOD'S PENNY.* An old expression for an earnest-penny; and used in the north of England.

Young, Lo. Come, strike me luck with earnest, and draw the writings.

Mure. There's a God's penny for thee.

Beaum. and Fl. Scornful Lady.
GO'DCHILD. n. s. [god and child.] A term of spiritual relation; one for whom one became sponsor at baptism, and promised to see educated as a Christian.

GO'DDAUGHTER.† n. s. [god and daughter.] A girl for whom one became sponsor in baptism. A term of spiritual relation.

How doth my cousin, your bedfellow? and your fairest daughter, and mine, my god-daughter Ellen? Shakespeare, K. Hen. IV. p. 11.

GO'DDESS. n. s. [from god.] A female divinity.

Hear, nature, hear; dear goddess, hear a father!

Shakespeare.
A woman I forswore; but I will prove,
Thou being a goddess, I forswore not thee:
My vow was earthly, thou a heav'nly love. Shaks.
I long have waited in the temple high,
Built to the gracious goddess Clemency;
But rev'rence thou the pow'r. Dryden, Fob.
From his seat the goddess born arose,
And thus undaunted spoke. Dryden, Fob.

When the daughter of Jupiter presented herself among a crowd of goddesses, she was distinguished by her graceful stature and superior beauty.

Addison.
Modesty with-held the goddess' train.

Pope, Odyssey.
GO'DDESS-LIKE.† adj. [goddess and like.] Resembling a goddess. Mr. Malone thinks this epithet not common, and Dr. Johnson has cited only an example from Pope. The following examples will prove the frequency and the propriety of its use.

Your high self,
The gracious mark o' the land, you have obscur'd
With a swain's wearing; and me, poor lowly maid,
Most goddess-like prank'd up. Shaks. Wint. Tule.
More goddess-like than wife-like. Shaks. Cymb.
She sings like one immortal, and she dances
As goddess-like to her admired lays. Shaks. Peric.
In comely garments, like some virgin maid
Of Dian's troupe, she trimlike was arraid;
Save, goddess-like, her globe-like head around
With verdant wreath of sacred bay was crown'd.
Mir. for Mag. p. 782.
With goddess-like demaunour forth she went.
Milton, P. L.

She — Delia's self
In gait surpass'd and goddess-like deport.
Milton, P. L.
Th'n female voices from the shore I heard;
A maid amidst them goddess-like appear'd.
Pope, Odyssey.

GO'DFATHER.† n. s. [god and father. Sax. godæþer. See also GODMOTHER.] The sponsor at the font.

He had a son by her, and the king did him the honour as to stand godfæther to his child.

Bacon, Hen. VII.
Confirmation, a profitable usage of the church, transcribed from the apostles, consists in the child's undertaking in his own name the baptismal vow; and, that he may more solemnly enter this obligation, bringing some godfather with him, not now, as in baptism, as his procurator. Hammond.

GO'DHEAD.† n. s. [from god.]

1. Godship; deity; divinity; divine nature. It is used both of idols and of the true God.

The Godhead of the Father, of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, is all one; the glory equal, the majesty coeternal. Athanas. Creed.

Be content;
Your low-laid son our godhead will uplift.
Shakspeare, Cymb.
At the holy mound
Of heaven's high-seated top, the imperial throne
Of Godhead, fix'd for ever firm and sure,
The filial pow'r arriv'd. Milton, P. L.

So may thy godhead be confest,
So the returning year be blest. Prior.

2. A deity in person; a god or goddess.

Forasmuch then as we are the offspring of God, we ought not to think that the Godhead is like unto gold, or silver, or stone, graven by art and man's device. Acts, xvi. 29.

Were your godheads to borrow of men, men would forsake the gods. Shakspeare, Timon.

Adoring first the genius of the place,
The nymphs and native godheads yet unknown. Dryden, Æn.

GO'DLESS.† adj. [Sax. goblear.] Without sense of duty to God; atheistical; wicked; irreligious; impious.

Of these two sorts of men, both godless, the one has utterly no knowledge of God, and the other studies how to persuade themselves that there is no such thing to be known. Hooker.

My lords, he bade me say, that you may know
How much he scorns, and (as good prices ought)
Defies base, indirect, and godless treacheries.

Beaumont, and Fl. Laws of Candy.
That godless crew
Rebellious. Milton, P. L.

For faults not his, for guilty and crimes
Of godless men, and of rebellious times,
Him his ungrateful country sent,
Their best Camillus, into banishment. Dryden.

GO'DLESSNESS.* n. s. [from godless.] The state of being wicked.

The sinner gives himself over to a wild and loose profaneness; to a lawless course of godlessness.
By. Hall, Rem. p. 87.

GO'DLIKE. adj. [god and like.] Divine; resembling a divinity; supremely excellent.

Thus Adam his illustrious guest besought,
And thus the godlike angel answer'd mild.
Milton, P. L.

Musing and much revolving in his breast,
How best the mighty work he might begin
Of saviour to mankind, and which way first Publish his godlike office now mature. Milt. P. R.

That prince shall be so wise and godlike, as, by established laws of liberty, to secure protection and encouragement to the honest industry of mankind. Locke.

GO'DLILY.* adv. [from godly.] This is the true word, though the repetition of the syllable is certainly harsh. See the adverb GODLY.] Righteously; piously.

Enjoining them upon the severest penalties to live godlily, holly, and righteously in this present world. Hen. Wharton, Sermon. (1697), i. 114.

GO'DLING.† n. s. [from god.] A little divinity; a diminutive god.

Thy puny godlings of inferior race,
Whose humble statues are content with brass. Dryden, Juv.

He preserved a young plump godling called Bacchus, after the death of his mother Semele. Gayton on D. Quix. p. 241.

GO'DLINESS.† n. s. [from godly.]

1. Piety to God.

Add to your faith virtue, and to virtue knowledge, and to knowledge temperance, and to temperance patience, and to patience godliness, and to godliness brotherly kindness. 2 Pet. i. 5, 6, 7.

2. General observation of all the duties prescribed by religion.

Virtue and godliness of life are required at the hands of the minister of God. Hooker.

GO'DLY.† adj. [Sax. golic.]

1. Pious towards God.

Grant that we may hereafter live a godly, righteous, and sober life. Common Prayer.

2. Good; righteous; religious.

Help, Lord, for the godly man ceaseth, for the faithful fail among the children of men. Ps. xii. 1.

The same church is really holy in this world, in relation to all godly persons contained in it, by a real infused sanctity. Pearson.

GO'DLY. adv. Piously; righteously. By analogy it should be godlily, but the repetition of the syllable is too harsh.

The apostle St. Paul teacheth, that every one which will live godly in Christ Jesus must suffer persecution. Hooker.

GO'DLYHEAD.† n. s. [from godly.] Goodness; righteousness. An old word, Dr. Johnson says, citing an example from Spenser, in which, however, the true word is goodlyhead. See GOODLYHEAD.

GO'DMOTHER.† n. s. [god and mother. Sax. godbæþer.] A woman who has undertaken sponsorship in baptism. A term of spiritual relation.

There shall be for every male child to be baptized two godfathers and one godmother; and for every female, two godmothers, and one godfather. Rubrick, Comm. Prayer.

The duchess of Norfolk, godmother, bearing the child [the princess Elizabeth] richly habited in a mantle; the marchioness of Dorset, the other godmother, and ladies. Shakspeare, K. Hen. VIII.

GO'DSHIP.† n. s. [from god.] The rank or character of a god; deity; divinity. Perhaps not used in a serious sense.

Discussing largely on this theme,
O'er hills and dales their godships came. Prior.

Venus —
Trudg'd it away to Jove's high court,
And there his godship did entreat
To look out for his best receipt. Swift, ed. Barret, p. 95.

GO'DSIB.* See GOSSIP.

GO'DSMITH.* n. s. [god and smith.] A maker of idols.

Gods they had tried of every shape and size,
That godsmiths could produce, or priests devise. Dryden, Abs. and Achil.

GO'DSON.† n. s. [god and son. Sax. gob-junna.] One for whom one has been sponsor at the font.

What, did my father's godson seek your life?
He whom my father named? your Edgar? Shakspeare.

GO'DWARD.† adv. To Godward is toward God. So we read, Hæc Arethusa tenus, for hactenus Arethusa.

And such trust have we through Christ to Godward. 2 Cor.

What the eye of a bat is to the sun, the same is all human understanding to the Godwards. Howell, Lett. ii. 11.

GO'DWIT.† n. s. [gob, good, and wit, an animal. Dr. Johnson. — From the Icel. god, good, and veide, prey taken in hunting, or vist, food. Serenius.] A bird of particular delicacy.

My foot-boy shall eat pheasants, calver'd salmon, Knots, lampreys, godwits. B. Jonson, Alchemist.

Nor ortelans nor godwits crown'd his board. Cowley.

GO'DYELD. } adv. [corrupted from God
GO'DYELD. } shield or protect.] A term of thanks. Now not used.

Herein I teach you,
How you should bid godlyd us for your pains,
And thank us for your trouble. Shakspeare, Mac.

GOEL.† adj. [Sax. geolepe, yellow; Su. Goth. gul.] This word must be pronounced goel; and is of the same family as gold. Goel or gole is used in Suffolk and Essex for yellow.] Yellow. An old word.

In March at the furthest, dry season or wet,
Hop-roots so well chosen let skilful go set;
The goel and younger, the better I love;
Well gutted and pared, the better they prove. Tusser.

GO'EN.* part. preter. of go; formerly so written, and indeed rightly.

GO'ER.† n. s. [from go.]

1. One that goes; a runner.

I would they were in Africk both together,
Myself by with a needle, that I might prick
The goer back. Shakspeare, Cymbeline.

Such a man
Might be a copy to these younger times;
Which, follow'd well, would now demonstrate them But goes backward. Shakspeare, All's well.

Nothing could hurt either of us so much as the intervening officious impertinence of those goers between us, who in England pretend to intimacies with you, and in Ireland to intimacies with me. Pope to Swift.

2. A walker; one that has a gait or manner of walking good or bad.

The earl was so far from being a good dancer, that he was no graceful goer. Wotton.

3. One that transacts business between two parties. In an ill sense. See GO-BETWEEN.

Let all pitiful goers-between be called to the world's end after my name, call them all Pandars.

Shakespeare, Tr. and Cress.

4. A term often applied to a horse; as, he is a good goer, a safe goer.
Is the rough French horse brought to the door? They say he is a high goer. I shall soon try his mettle.

Beaum. and Fl. Cupid's Revenge

5. The foot. Obsolete.

A double mantle, cast

Athwart his shoulders, his faire goers grac't
With fitted shoes.

Chapman.

- GO'ETY.* n. s. [Fr. goetie; Gr. γοητεια, enchantment.] A kind of magic; an invocation of evil spirits.

Porphyry and some others did distinguish these two sorts, so as to condemn indeed the grosser, which they called magic or goety.

Hallivell, Melanyp. (1681), p. 51.

- GOFF.* n. s. [old French, goffe, rude, blockish, clownish.]

1. A foolish clown. North. Grose. Sometimes pronounced guff.

2. A game. See GOLF.

3. A mow of hay or corn. Essex. Grose. Of uncertain etymology.

He was in his labour stacking up a goff of corn.

Fox, cited by Wood, Ath. Ox. i. 592.

- GO'FISH.* adj. [from goff.] Foolish; indiscreet.

Beware of gofshe peplis speche,

That dremen thingis, which that never were.

Chaucer, Tr. and Cress. iii. 585.

- GOG.* n. s. [perhaps from the Goth. gagg, the way. See AGOG.] Haste; desire to go.

You have put me into such a gog of going, I would not stay for all the world.

Beaum. and Fl. Wit without Money.

- TO GO'GGLE.† v. n. [Dr. Johnson offers no etymology; Junius derives it from the Lat. coctes, having one eye only; and Wicliffe uses gogil yghed for having one eye, St. Mark, ix. 47. Serenius offers the Icel. gagr, prominent, which is not improbable, the meaning of goggle being not to look askint, which is the definition given of the word by Dr. Johnson; but rather to have full eyes, a kind of prominent look. See both the substantive and adjective.] To strain the eyes; to roll the eyes.

A hugey giant stiff and starke,

All fowle of limbe and lere,

Two goggling eyen like fire.

Sir Cuthbert, Percy's Rel. of Anc. Poetry.

Such sight have they that see with goggling eyes.

Sidney, Arcad. b. ii.

Inflam'd all over with disgrace,

To be seen by her in such a place,

Which made him hang his head, and scowl,

And wink and goggle like an owl.

Hudibras.

Nor sighs, nor groans, nor goggling eyes did want.

Dryden.

- GO'GGLE.* n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A stare; a bold or strained look.

Do ye stare goggles? I hope to make winter boots of thy hide yet. Beaum. & Fl. Kn. of Malta.

Others will have such a divided face between a devout goggle and an inviting glance, that the unnatural mixture will make the best look to be at that time ridiculous.

Lord Halifax.

2. In the plural only, both blinds for horses that are apt to take fright, and glasses worn by persons to defend the eyes from dust or the heat of the sun. Both these senses are modern, and rather vulgar.

- GO'GGLE.* adj. Staring; having full eyes.

Frowning he enters —

And louting on me with the goggle eye.

Mir. for Mag. p. 427.

Give him admonition to forsake his sawcy glaving grace, and his goggle eye.

B. Jonson, Poetaster.

That rolls one goggle eye in its vast brow,
Like a grim Cyclop. Fenshau, Past. Fid. p. 113.

- GO'GGLE-EYED † adj. [from goggle and eye. See the etym. of To GOGGLE.]

Having eyes ready to start, as it were, out of the head.

They are deformed, unnatural, or lame; and very unseemly to look upon, except to men that be goggle-eyed themselves. Ascham, Schoolmaster.

Every lover admires his mistress, though she be very deformed, — bald, goggle-eyed, blear-eyed, or with staring eyes, heavy, dull, hollow-eyed, black or yellow about the eyes, or squint-eyed.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 524.

- GO'GGLED.* adj. [from goggle.] Prominent; staring.

Ugly faced, with long black hair, goggled eyes, wide-mouthed.

Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 50.

- GO'ING.* n. s. [from go.]

1. The act of walking.

When nobles are their taylors' tutors,

Nor heretics burnt, but wenchers' suitors,

Then comes the time, who lives to see't,

That going shall be us'd with feet.

Shakespeare, K. Lear.

2. Pregnancy.

The time of death has a far greater latitude than that of our birth; most women coming, according to their reckoning, within the compass of a fortnight; that is, the twentieth part of their going.

Grew, Cosmol. Sacr.

3. Departure.

Thy going is not lonely; with thee goes

Thy husband; him to follow thou art bound.

Milton, P. L.

4. Proceeding; series of conduct. In colloquial language we say, goings-on.

His eyes are upon the ways of man, and he seeth all his goings.

Job, xxxiv. 21.

- TO GOKK.* To stupify. See TO GOWK.

- GO'LA.* n. s. The same with CYMATIUM.

In a cornice the gola, or cymatium of the corona, the coping, the modillions or dentelli make a noble show.

Addison, Spect. No. 415.

- GOLD.† n. s. [gold, Saxon; golud, riches, Welsh. It is called gold in our English tongue, either of geel, as Scaliger says, which is in Dutch to shine; or of another Dutch word, which is gellen, and signifies in Latin valere, in English to be of price or value: hence cometh their ordinary word gelt, for money. Peacham on Drawing. Dr. Johnson. — Others, noticing the Icel. guld, gold, consider gul, yellow, as the origin. See GOEL. Serenius and Wachter deduce it from the Icel. gilde, value, price.]

1. Gold is the most valuable of all metals, more malleable and ductile than any other, exceeding all in weight except platina, and of a bright yellowish colour; assuming, when melted, that of a bluish-green.

Gold hath these natures: greatness of weight, closeness of parts, fixation, plianthness or softness, immunity from rust, and the colour or tincture of yellow.

Ah! Buckingham, now do I ply the touch,
To try if thou be current gold indeed.

Shakespeare, Rich. III.

We readily say this is gold, and that a silver goblet, only by the different figures and colours represented to the eye by the pencil.

Locke.
